MISRULE, want of rule, disorder. (Hybrid; E. and F., -L.) Gower has it as a verb. 'That any king himself misreule;' C. A. iii. 170, l. 5. Stow mentions 'the lord of misrule' under the date a F. word. From Mis- (1) and Rule.

MISS (1), to fail to hit, omit, feel the want of. (E.) M. E. missen, Will. of Palerne, 1016. Rather a Scand. than an E. word, but the prefix mis-, which is closely connected with it, is sufficiently common in A. S. – A. S. missan or missian (rare). <sup>b</sup> by læs be him misse,' lest aught escape his notice, or, go wrong with him; Canons under King Edgar, 32; in Thorpe, Ancient Laws, ii. 250. A weak verb, formed from an old sb. signifying 'change,' or 'error,' or 'failure,' or 'lack,' preserved in A. S. only as the prefix mis-, signifying amiss or wrongly. + Du. missen, to miss; from mis, sb., an error, mistake. Cf. mis, adv., amiss; mis-, as prefix, amiss. + Icel. missa, to miss, lose; mis, or a mis, adv., amiss; mis-, prefix. + Dan. misse (for misse), to lose; mis-, prefix. + Swed. missa (for missa), to lose; misse, adv., wrongly, amiss; miss-, prefix. + Goth. misso, adv., reciprocally, interchangeably; missa-, prefix, wrongly. + M. H. G. missen, O. H. G. missan, to

M. H. G. misse, an error. β. The general Teutonic types are MISSYA, verb, to miss, MISSA, adv., reciprocally; from MISSA, change, lack, failure, error (Fick, iii. 238). The last stands for mid-sa, by assimilation (answering to Aryan mit-sa), formed with the suffix -sa from the base MID (Aryan MIT). Y. This base appears in A. S. midan, to conceal, avoid, dissimulate, escape notice (Grein, ii. 250); O.H.G. midan, G. meiden, to avoid (a strong verb). Allied to Skt. mith-as, reciprocally (= Goth. misso), mith yá, falsely, untruly, wrongly, amiss; from the root MITH, which in Vedic Skt. means 'to rival' (Benfey), p. 706. See further in Fick, i. 722, 723. Der. miss, sb., M. E. misse, a fault ; 'to mende my misse' = to repair my fault, Will. of Palerne, l. 532; this sb. is, theoretically, older than the verb, but does not appear in A.S. Also miss-ing.

MISS (1), a young woman, a girl.  $(F_{.,-}L_{.})$ Merely a contraction from Mistress, q.v. One of the earliest instances in dramatic writing occurs in the introduction of Miss Prue as a character in Congreve's Love for Love. The earliest example appears to be the following : 'she being taken to be the Earle of Oxford's misse, as at this time they began to call lewd women; 'Evelyn's Diary, Jan. 9, 1662. Thus Shak. has: 'this is Mistress Anne Page,' where we should now say 'Miss Anne Page;' Merry Wives, i. 1. 197. MISSAL, a mass-book. (L.) Not in early use; the old term was mass-book, M. E. messebok, Havelok, 186. In Minsheu, ed. 1627. In Sherwood's Index to Cotgrave we find E. missal, given as equivalent to O.F. messel, missel; but Cotgrave himself explains the O.F. words as 'masse book.' The E. word is rather taken directly from the familiar Latin term than borrowed from O. F. - Low Lat. missale, a missal. - Low Lat. missa, the mass. See further under Mass (2)

MISSEL-THRUSH, MISTLE-THRUSH, the name of a kind of thrush. (E.) So called because it feeds on the berries of the mistle-toe. The name is prob. old, though not early recorded. 'We meet in Aristotle with one kind of thrush [εξοβόρον] called the misel:hrush, or feeder upon miseltoe;' Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. ii. c. 6. § 21 (part 3). + C. mistel-drossel, a mistle-thrush; from mistlet, mistletoe, and drossel, a thrush. See Mistletoe and Thrush.

MISSHAPE, to shape amiss. (E.) Chiefly in the pp. misskaped, 3 Hen. VI, iii. 2. 170; or misskapen, Temp. v. 268. M.E. misskapen, pp., spelt mysskape (with loss of final n), P. Plowman, B. vil. 95. From Mils- (1) and Shape. + O. Du. misscheppen, to misshape, used by Vondel; Oudemans. + G. misschaffen, to misshape (rare).

MISSILE, that may be thrown; a missile weapon. (L.) Properly an adj., now chiefly used as a sb. Taken directly from Lat. rather than through the F. Cotgrave gives 'feu missile, a squib or other firework thrown,' but the word is not in Littre, and probably not common. 'His missile weapon was a lying tongue;' P. Fletcher, The Purple Island (R.) - Lat. missilis, adj., that can be thrown; the neut. missile is used to mean a missile weapon (telum being understood). – Lat. missus, pp. of millere, to throw.  $\beta$ . The orig. sense is thought to be 'to whirl;' cf. Lithuan. mèsti, to throw, to wind yarn, pres. t. metu, I throw ; Russ. metate, to throw, cast, cast lots. -✓MAT, to whirl, to throw; cf. Skt. math, to churn, to agitate. We may particularly note the O. Celtic word mataris or matara, a javelin, preserved in Livy, vii. 24; Cæsar, Bell. Gall. i. 26. See Fick, iii. 710. Der. From Lat. mittere are also derived ad-mit, com-mit, e-mit, im-mit, inter-mit, manu-mit, o-mit, per-mit, re-mit, sub-mit, trans-mit, with their derivatives; from the pp. miss-us are also miss-ion, q. v., miss-ive, q.v., dis-miss, e-miss-ar-y, pro-miss-or-y; com-pro-mise, de-mise, pre-mise, pre-mises, pro-mise ; &c.

MISSION, a sending, an embassy. (L.) In Shak. Troil. iii. 3. 189. [The O. F. mission merely means 'expence, disbursement; [Internet] Formed, by analogy with F. words in -ion, from Lat. missionem, acc. of missio, a sending. - Lat. missus, pp. of mittere, to send. See Missile. Der. mission-er, a missionary, Dryden, Hind and Panther, ii. 565; later mission-ar-y, Tatler, no. 270, Dec. 30, 1710. MISSIVE, a thing sent.  $(F_{.,-}L_{.})$  Used by Shak. to mean 'a messenger;' Macb. i. 5. 7. – O. F. mission, 'a letter missive, a letter sent;' Cot. Coined, with suffix -iwe (= Lat. -iwus), from Lat, minum of miture to send, see Missila. missus, pp. of mittere, to send ; see Missile.

MISSPEND, to spend ill, to squander. (Hybrid; E. and L.) The pres. t. misspene (for misspende) occurs as early as in Layamon, l. 13483, later text. From A.S. mis-, prefix, wrongly, amiss; and A.S. spendan, occurring in the compounds aspendan, forspendan; see Sweet's A. S. Reader. But the A. S. spendan is not a true E. word; it is only borrowed from Lat. expendere. See Mis-(1) and Spend.

MIBT, watery vapour, fine rain. (E.) M. E. mist, P. Plowman, A. prol. 88; B. prol. 214. - A. S. mist, gloom, darkness; Grein, ii. mistr, mist. + Swed. mist, foggy weather at sea. + Du.

All from MIGH (Teutonic Might), to sprinkle, sprinkle, to urine; appearing in Skt. mik (for migk), to sprinkle, Lat. ming-ere, metere, Du. miggen, Icel. miga, A.S. migan, all with the sense of Lat. mingere. See Fick, iii. 239. Der. mist-y, A.S. mist-ig (Grein); mist-i-ness; also mizzle, q. v. [+] MISTAKE, to take amiss, err. (Scand.) M.E. mistahen, Rom.

contraction Mr. occurs on the title-page of the first folio edition of Shakespeare (1623); but it is probably to be read as Master. Cot-grave explains monsieur by 'sir, or master.' It is difficult to trace the first use of mister, but it does not appear to be at all of early use, and is certainly nothing but a corruption of master or maister, due to the influence of the corresponding title of mistress. See Master, β. Richardson's supposition that it is connected with Mistress. M. E. mister, a trade, is as absurd as it is needless; notwithstanding the oft-quoted 'what mister wight,' Spenser, F. Q. i. 9. 23. ¶ It may be remarked that M. E. mister is from O. F. mestier (F. métier), Lat. ministerium, and is therefore a doublet of ministry. Also that mistery, in the sense of trade or occupation, also answers to ministry, though usually misspelt mystery. See Mystery (2). MISTERM, to term or name amiss. (Hybrid; E. and F., -L.) In Shak. Romeo, iii. 3. 21. From Mis-(2) and Term.

MISTIME, to time amiss. (E.) M.E. mistimen, to happen amiss, Ancren Riwle, p. 200, note e. - A.S. mistiman, to happen amiss, turn out ill (Lye). From Mis- (1) and Time.

MISTLETOE, a parasitic plant. (E.) In Shak. Titus, ii. 3. 95. Scarcely to be found in M. E., but it must have existed. – A. S. misteltán. 'Viscarago, misteltan' (sic); Ælfric's Gloss., Nomina Herbarum; in Wright's Vocab. i. 31, col. 2. [The a is of course long; cf. E. stone with A. S. stán, &c.] This should have produced misiletone, but the final n (ne) was dropped, probably because the M. E. tone (better toon) meant ' toes,' which gave a false impression that the final n was a plural-ending, and unnecessary. + Icel. mistel-teinn, the mistletoe.  $\beta$ . The final element is the easier to explain; it simply means 'twig.' Cf. A. S. tán, a twig (Grein), Icel. teinn, Du. teen, M. H. G. zain, Goth. tains, a twig, Dan. teen, Swed. ten, a prindle, all form a Trutt the TAINA spindle; all from a Teut. type TAINA, a twig, rod, which Fick (iii. 121) thinks may be connected with Tin, q.v. y. The former element is A.S. mistel, which could be used alone to mean 'mistletoe,' though it was also called ác-mistel (oak-mistle), to distinguish it from sorto-mistel (earth-mistle), a name sometimes given to wild basil or calamint; see Cockayne's A. S. Leechdoms. In Danish, the mistletoe is called either mistel or mistelteen. In Swed. and G. the mistletoe is simply mistel. 8. The word mist-el is clearly a mere dimin. of mist, which in E. means 'vapour' or fog, in A. S. 'gloom,' but in G. has the sense of 'dung.' The reason for the name is not quite clear; it may be because the seed is deposited by birds that eat the berries, or it may rather refer to the slime or bird-lime in the berries ; cf. 'mistel, glew' [glue], Hexham's Du. Dict.; O. Du. mistel, bird-lime. See further under Mist. ¶ Since mist-el may take also ¶ Since mist-el may take also the sense of 'gloom,' we see why Balder, the sun-god, was fabled to have been slain by a twig of the mistletoe. The sun, at mid-winter, is obscured; and we still connect mistletoe with Christmas. This sense of the word originated the legend; we must not reverse the order by deriving the sense from the story to which it gave rise. Dor. missel-thrush, q. v.

Der. missel-tarusa, q. v. MISTRESS, a lady at the head of a household. (F., -L.) Also With Mar. and called Missie In Shak. Macb. iii. 5. 6. M. E. written Mrs., and called Missis. In Shak. 6142. - A. S. mile. 'Tomus, mada, mite;' Ælfric's Gloss., Nom. Insectorum, in Wright's Vocab. i. 24. + Low G. mite, a mite. + O. H. G. mita, a mite, midge, fly. B. The word means 'cutter' or 'biter,' from the Teut. root MIT, to cut small; whence Goth. maitan, to cut, Icel. meita, to cut, also Icel. meitill, G. meissel, a chisel, G. messer, a knife. This appears to be a secondary root from MI, to diminish; Fick, iii. 239. See Minish. Der. mit-y.

MITE (2), a very small portion. (O. Du.) M. E. mite; 'not worth a mite;' Chaucer, C. T. 1558. 'A myte [small coin] that he offrep;' P. Plowman, C. xiv. 97.-O. Du. mit, a small coin, the sixth part of a doit; mite, myte, a small coin, worth a third of a penning, according to some, or a penning and a half, according to others; anything small; niet ener myte, not worth a mite (Oude-mans). From the Teut. base MIT, to cut small; see Mite (1).

MTTRE, a head-dress, esp. for a bishop. (F., -L., -Gk.) 'Thy mytrede bisshopes' = thy mitred bishops; P. Plowman, C. v. 193. 'On his mittere,' referring to a bishop; Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 302, l. 2. - O. F. mitre, 'a bishop's miter;' Cot. - Lat. mira, a cap. - Gk. µirpa, a belt, girdle, head-band, fillet, turban. B. Perhaps allied to Gk. µiros, a thread of the woof, from A MAT, to whirl; cf. Skt. math, to churn; see Fick, i. 710.

MITTEN, a covering for the hand. (F., -G.?) M. E. mitaine; spelt mitaine, Chaucer, C. T. 12307; myteyne, P. Plowman's Crede, M.E. mitaine: ed. Skeat, I. 428.-0. F. mitaine; Cot. gives: 'mitaines, mittains, winter-gloves.'  $\beta$ . Of disputed origin; if the orig. sense be 'halfwinter-gloves.'  $\beta$ . Of disputed origin; if the orig. sense be 'half-glove,' it may be connected with M. H. G. mittemo, mittamo, sb., the middle, orig. 'mid-most,' a superlative form from mitte, adj., mid, middle; see Mid, Middle. Y. On the other hand, it may have middle; see Mid, Middle. y. On the other hand, it may have been of Celtic origin. We find Gael. miotog, Irish miotog, a mitten; Gael. and Irish mutan, a muff, a thick glove. Also Irish mutog, a stump, a hand or glove without fingers; Gael. mutach, short, thick, and blunt; which reminds us of Lat. mutilus.

MIX, to mingle, confuse. (E.) In Shak. 2 Hen. IV, v. 2. 46. Rich. cites 'mized with faith' from the Bible of 1561, Heb. iv. 2. But in earlier books it is extremely rare; Stratmann cites the pp. mixid from Songs and Carols, ed. Wright, no. VI. Mix is a corruption of misk (just as an is another form of ask); this appears in the A.S. miscan, to misk or mix, not a common word. 'And bonan miscap and metgap ælcum be his gewyrhtum' = and thence He [God] mixes and metes out to each according to his deserts; Ælfred, tr. of Boethius, cap. xxix. § 9, last line (lib. iv. pr. 6). Notwithstanding the close similarity to Lat. miscere, we may consider it as merely cognate with it, not borrowed, the word being very widely spread. (But the derived word mixture is of course of Lat. origin.) That the word is really E. is supported by the derivative mask; see Mash. + G. mischen, to mix; O. H. G. miskan. + W. mysgu, to mix; cymmysgu, to mix together. + Gael. measg, to mingle, mix, stir; Irish measgaim, I mix, mingle, stir, move. + Russ. mieskate, to mix. + Lithuan. maiszyti, to mix (Nesselmann). + Lat. miscere. + Gk. μίσγειν. β. All from a base MIKSH, to mingle. Cf. Skt. migra, mixed. which is obviously an extension (perhaps an inchoative form) of  $\sqrt{MIK}$  which is obviously an extension (perhaps an inchoative form) of  $\sqrt{MIK}$ , to mingle, appearing in Gk.  $\mu'\gamma \cdot \nu\mu$  (for  $\mu'k \cdot \nu\mu\mu$ ), I mix. See Curtius, i. 417; Fick, i. 725. Des. mix-er, com-mix; also mix-ture, Romeo, iv. 3. 21, Sir T. More, Works, p. 83 a, from Lat. mixtura, a mixing, mixture, formed like mixturus, fut, part. of miscere.

MIZEN, MIZZEN, the hindmost of the fore and aft sails, in a three-masted vessel. (F.,-Ital.,-L.) Spelt misen in Minsheu, ed. 1617, and in Florio, ed. 1598. - O. F. misaine, which Cotgrave defines as 'the foresaile of a ship.' - Ital. mezzana, 'a saile in a ship called the poope or misen-saile;' Florio, ed. 1598. Cf. mezzano, 'a meane or countertenour in singing, a meane man, betweene great and little; ' id.  $\beta$ . Perhaps the sense was 'middling-sized,' with respect to the old make of it; or from its mid position between bowsprit and main-mast, for it was once a fore-sail. The reason for the name is uncertain, but the etymology is clear. - Low Lat. me-dianus, middle, of middle size; whence also F. moyen, and E. mean (3). Extended from Lat. medius, middle; see Mid. Doublet, mean (3). Der. mizen-mast or mizzen-mast. [†] MIZZLE, to rain in fine drops. (E.) 'As the miseling vpon the herbes, and as the droppes vpon the grasse; ' Deut. xxxii. a, in the pression 'mobil people' occurs, according to Richardson, in The

MITE (1), a very small insect. (E.) M. E. mite. Chaucer, C. T. of mist; i. e. the sense is 'to form vapour constantly.' For the cost of mist; i.e. the sense is 'to form vapour constantly.' For the tos of t, cf. our pronunciation of listen, glisten, whistle, gristle, &c. [†] MNEMONICS, the science of assisting the memory. (Gk.)

MOAN, a complaint, a low sound of pain. (E.) M. E. mone, Chaucer, C. T. 11232. This corresponds to an A. S. form mán, which does not appear with the modern sense; but the derived verb manan, to moan, to lament, is common; see exx. in Grein, ii. 222. B. This A.S. verb passed into the M.E. menen, to moan; whence mened hire = bemoaned herself, made her complaint, P. Plowman, B. iii. 169. After a time this verb fell into disuse, and its place was supplied by the sb. form, used verbally. 'Than they of the towne began to mone;' Berners, tr. of Froissart, vol. i. c. 348. y. Stratmann and others identify A. S. ménan, to man, with A. S. ménan, to mean; see Mean (1). I doubt this identification; Grein records the verbs separately. Ettmüller refers A. S. ménan in both senses to A. S. mán, adj., evil, wicked, sb. evil, wickedness. δ. It seems right to refer A.S. manan. to moan, to A.S. man, wickedness ; the difficulty is in the remarkable change of sense. Note, however, that the Icel. mein (cognate with A.S. man, wickedness), means a hurt, harm, disease, sore, whence there is but a step to a moan as the expression of pain. Cf. Dan. meen, defect, blemish, harm, damage. e. Fick refers A.S. mán, from a supposed Teut. type MAINA, to ✓ MI, to change, deceive ; iii. 237. Der. moan, verb, as explained above ; also be-moan, q. v.

MOAT, a trench round a fort, filled with water. (F., - Teut.) M. E. mole, P. Plowman, B. v. 595.-O. F. mole, chaussee, levée, digue, i. e. a causeway, embankment, dike; Roquefort. Just as in the case of dike and ditch. the word most originally meant either the trench dug out, or the embankment thrown up; and in O. F. the usual sense was certainly an embankment, hill. It is therefore the same word as mod. F. motte, a mound, also a clod, or piece of turf. Motte, a clod, lumpe, round sodd, or turfe of earth; also, a little hill or high place; a fit seat for a fort or strong house; hence, also, such a fort, or house of earth; ... a butt to shoot at;' Cotgrave. The orig. sense is clearly a sod or turf, such as is dug out, and thrown up into a mound; and the word is associated with earthen fortifications, whence it was transferred to such a trench as was used in fortification. Thus Shak, speaks of 'a most defensive to a house;' Rich. II, ii. 1. 48; and in P. Plowman, the 'mote' is described as being 'the manere aboute,' i.e. all round the manor-house. Cf. also: Mole, a little earthen fortresse, or strong house, built on a hill; ' Cotgrave.  $\beta$ . Of Teut. origin, but rarely found; it occurs, how-Cotgrave. ever, in the Bavarian mott, peat, esp. peat such as was dug up, burnt, and used for manure; whence motien, to burn peat; Schmeller, Bavarian Dict., col. 1693. This Bavarian word is perhaps related to E. mud; see Mud. Cf. Du. mot, dust of turf; Ital. mota, mire, motta, a heap of earth, also a hollow; Span. mota, a mound; Irish, mota, a mound, moat. Der. moat-ed, Meas. for Meas. iii. 1. 277. [+]

MOB (1), a disorderly crowd. (L.) Used by Dryden, in pref. to Cleomenes, 1692; as cited in Nares. A contraction from mobile unlgus. 'I may note that the rabble first changed their title, and were called 'the mob' in the assemblies of this [The Green Ribbon] Club. It was their beast of burden, and called first mobile vulgus, but fell naturally into the contraction of one syllable, and ever since is become proper English; ' North's Examen (1740), p. 574; cited in Trench, Study of Words. In the Hatton Corre-spondence, ed. E. M. Thompson (Camden Soc.), the editor remarks that mob is always used in its full form mobile throughout the volumes (see ii. 40, 99, 124, 156); but, as Mr. Thompson kindly pointed out to me, he has since noted that it occurs once in the short form mob, viz. at p. 216 of vol. ii. Thus, under the date 1690, we read that 'Lord Torrington is most miserably reproached by the mobile' (ii. 156); and under the date 1605, that 'a great mob have been up in Holborn and Drury Lane' (ii. 216). And see Spectator, no. 135. Lat. mobile, neut. of mobilis, moveable, fickle; mobile uulgus, the fickle multitude. See Mobile and Vulgar. Der. mob, verb.

MOB (2), a kind of cap. (Dutch.) 'Mob, a woman's night-cap;' Bailey's Dict., vol. ii. ed. 1731. We also say mob-cap. Du. mop-muts, a woman's night-cap; where muts means 'cap; 'O. Du. mop, a woman's coif (Sewel). Cf. prov. E. mop, to muffle up (Halliwell). Probably connected with Muffle.

MOBILE, easily moved, moveable. (F., -L.) 'Fyxt or els mobyll;' Skelton, Why Come Ye Nat to Courte, 1. 522. The ex.De mobili-ty, from F. mobilité, which from Lat. acc. mobilitatem ; also mobil-ise, from mod. F. mobiliser; hence mobil-is-at-ion.

MOCCASIN, MOCCASSIN, MOCASSIN, a shoe of deerskin, &c. (N. American Indian.) Spelt mocassin in Fenimore Cooper, The Pioneers, ch. i. A North-American Indian word. Webster gives : 'Algonquin makisin.'

MOCK, to deride. (F., - Teut.) M. E. mokken, Prompt. Parv. -O. F. mocquer, later moquer. 'Se moquer, to mock, flowt, frumpe, scoffe;' Cot. From a Teutonic source, of which we have ample evidence in G. mucken, to mumble, mutter, grumble; O. Swed. enucka, to mumble (Ihre); Low G. mukken, to put the mouth in a position for speaking, to mumble (Bremen Wörterbuch); O. Du. mocken, to mumble (Kilian), 'to move one's cheeks in chawing' (Hexham). From the sense of moving the mouth in grumbling to that of mocking is an easy step; cf. Ital. mocca, 'a mowing mouth,'  $\beta$ . All from the imitative root moccare, ' to mocke ;' Florio. MUK, an extension of MU, to make a muttered sound. This root MUK also appears as MAK, to make derisive sounds with the lips, whence Lat. maccus, a buffoon; Gk. µŵros, mockery; Gael. mag, to scoff, deride; Irish magairs, a scoffer, jester; W. mocio, to mimic. y. The word Mogul is only another form of Mongol; the Great Mogul was the emperor of the Moguls in India. 'The Mogul dynasty in India began with Baber in 1525;' Haydn, Dict. of Dates. Cf. Pers. MogAd, a Mogul; Rich. Pers. Dict. p. 1460. MOHAIR, cloth made of fine hair. (F., - Arab.) The E. spelling is a sophisticated one, from a ridiculous attempt to connect it with E. Mair; just as in the case of eray-fish, cause-way; see those words. Spelt mohaire in Skinner, ed. 1691. - O. F. monäire, cited by Skinner; the mod. F. is moire. Other O. F. forms are modere, mouhaire, cited by Scheler. The name was given to a stuff made from the hair of the Angora goat (Asia Minor). - Arab. mukhayyar, 'a kind of coarse camelot or hair-cloth; Rich. Dict. p. 1369, col. a. See Devic, in Supp. to Littré. Doublet, moire, from F. moire.

MOHAMMEDAN, a follower of Mohammed. (Arab.) From the well-known name. - Arab. mukammad, praiseworthy; Rich. Dict. p. 1358. - Arab. root hamada, he praised; id. p. 581.

MOHUR, a gold coin current in India. (Pers.) From Pers. muhr, muhur, 'a gold coin current in India for about £1 16s.;' Rich.

MOIDORE, a Portuguese gold coin. (Port., -L.) 'Moidore, a Portugal gold coin, in value 27 shillings sterling; 'Bailey's Dict., vol. ii. ed. 1731. - Port. moeda d'ouro or moeda de ouro, a moidore, £1 7s. Lit. 'money of gold.' - Lat. moneta, money; de, of; aurum, gold. See Money and Aureate.

MOLETY, half, a portion. (F., -L.) See K. Lear, i. 1. 7, where it means 'a part' merely. It means 'a half' in All's Well, iii. 2. 69. - F. moitié, 'an half, or half part;' Cot. - Lat. medieta-tem, acc. of medietas, a middle course, a half. - Lat. medius, middle;

Moliate. [+] MOIL, to toil, to drudge. (F., -L.) Skinner, ed. 1691, explains moil by 'impigre laborare,' i. e. to toil, drudge. But it is prob. nothing but a peculiar use of the word moile, given in Minsheu, ed. 1627, with the sense 'to defile, to pollute;' cf. moil, 'to drudge, to dawb with dirt;' Phillips, ed. 1706. As Mr. Wedgwood suggests, moil, to drudge, is probably 'only a secondary application from the laborious efforts of one struggling through wet and mud; or simply, from the dirty state in which hard labour often leaves one.  $\beta$ . The scone the unity state in which hard labour often leaves one.  $\beta$ . The sense seems to have been affected by confusion with prov. E. moil, a mule, and again with I at making to make the sense of the se mule, and again, with Lat. moliri, to use effort, to toil. The latter, in particular, may easily have been present to the mind of early writers. But we must not derive the word from these; for (1) we never meet with a verb to mule; and (2) the Lat. moliri would only have given a form to mole; see Mole (3). Y. We find earlier quotations for both senses; Halliwell cites 'we moyle and toyle' from the Marriage of Wit and Humour, A. p. 1579. Rich. quotes from Gascoigne: 'A simple soule much like myself did once a serpent find, Which, almost dead with cold, lay moyling in the myre; i.e. wallowing in the dirt. So also Spenser uses moyle for ' to wal-low;' see his Hymn of Heavenly Love, st. 32. Still earlier, the sense is simply to wet or moisten. M. E. moillen, to wet. 'A monk ... moillid al hir patis,' i. e. moistened all their heads by sprinkling them with holy water; Introd. to Tale of Beryn, ed. Furnivall, p. 6. 1. 130. = O. F. moiller, moiler (Littré), moillier (Burguy), later moviller, 'to wet, moisten, soake; 'Cot. The orig. sense was 'to soften,' which is effected, in the case of clay, &c., by wetting it. The O.F. moiler answers to a Low Lat. form molliare +, to soften (not found), formed directly from Lat. molli-, stem of mollis (O. F. mol), soft. See Mollify. MOIRE, watered silk. (F., - Arab.) A later form of Mohair,

q. v. ; in a slightly altered sense.

MOIST, damp, humid. (F., -L.) M. E. moiste ; 'a moiste fruit with-alle ; ' P. Plowman, B. xvi. 68. The peculiar use of M. E. with-alle; 'P. Flowman, B. xvi. 68. The peculiar use of M. E. moiste is decisive as to the derivation of the F. word. It means 'fresh' or 'new;' thus the Wife of Bath's shoes were 'ful moiste and newe;' Chaucer, C. T. 459. The Host liked to drink 'moiste and corny ale;' id. 12249. And again 'moisty ale' is opposed to old ale; id. 17009. -O. F. moiste (Littré), later moiste, 'moist, liquid, humid, wet;' Cot. But the old sense of F. moiste must have agreed Mode and Fact. Der. modification; modificaties; modification = F. modification, 'modification' (Cot.), from Lat. acc. modifica-tionem. MODULATE, to regulate, vary. (L.) 'To modulate the sounds; 'Grew, Cosmographia Sacra (1701), b. i. c. 5. sect. 16 (R.) as musicus cassus, new cheese (Pliny), - Lat. musicum, new wine; a neut. form from mustws, adj., young, fresh, new. origin; but if mustus be for mud-tus, a connection with Skt. mud, to rejoice, is not improbable. Der. moist-ly, moist-ness ; moist-en, Spenser, F. O. iii. 6. 34, where the final -en is really of comparatively late addition (by analogy with other verbs in -en), since Wyclif has bigan to moiste hise feet with teeris,' Luke, vii. 38; moist-ure, Gower, C. A. iii. 109, L. 8, from O. F. moisteur, moistour, mod. F.

MOILAR, used for grinding. (L.) 'Molar teeth or grinders;' - Lat. mola, a mill. - V MAR (later form MAL), to grind; see Mar. Mill.

MOLASSES, syrup made from sugar. (Port., -L.) Also molosses; in Phillips, ed. 1706. It ought rather to be melasses. As it came to us from the West Indies, where the sugar is made, it is either a Port. or a Span. word. However, the Span. spelling is melaza, where the z (sounded like th in bath) would hardly give the E. ss. We may consider it to be from Port. melago, molasses; E. ss. where the q is sounded like E. ss. [We also find Span. melaza, Ital. melassa, F. mélasse, ] - Lat. mellaceus, made with honey, hence honey-like; cf. Port. melado, mixed with honey. Formed with ending -ac-e-us from mel, honey. See Mellifluous (with which cf. also marmalade, another decoction).

MOLE (1), a spot or mark on the body. (E.) M. E. mole. 'Many moles and spottes; ' P. Plowman, B. xiii. 315. [As usual, the M. E. o answers to A.S.  $\dot{a}$ .] - A.S. mail, also written maal (where  $aa = \dot{a}$ ). Stigmentum, ful maal on rægel' = a foul spot on a garment ; Ælfric's Gloss., in Wright's Vocab. i. 26, col. 1. + Dan. maal, a goal, end, butt; properly, a mark. + Swed. mdl, a mark, butt. + O. H. G. meil, a spot; G. maal, a mole. + Goth. mail, a spot, blemish. β. All from a base MAH, answering to  $\checkmark$  MAK, to pound, whence Lat. mac-ula, a spot, orig. a bruise. See Fick, iii. 226, i. 737. And see Maculate, Mackerel.

MOLE (2), a small animal that burrows. (E.) Mole is merely a shortened form of the older name moldwarp. Shak, has both forms, viz. mole, Temp. iv. 194; and moldwarp, 1 Hen. IV, iii. 1. 149. Palsgrave has mole. Earlier, we find M. E. moldwerp, Wyclif, Levit. xi. 30.  $\beta$ . The sense is 'the animal that casts up mould or earth,' in allusion to mole-hills. From M.E. molde, mould; and werpen, to throw up, mod. E. to warp. See Mould and Warp. So also Du. mol, 'a mole or want' (Hexham; cf. prov. E. wont, a mole; from O. Du, molworp (Kilian). So also Icel. moldwarpa, a mole, similarly formed. Der. mole-Aill, Cor. v. 3. 30. [†] MOLE (3), a breakwater. (F., -L.) 'Mole or peer' [pier]; Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. - F. mole, 'a peer, a bank, or causey on the sea-side;' Cot. - Lat. molem, acc. of moles, a great heap, vast will A wood of doubtful origin. pile. A word of doubtful origin. Der. From Lat. moles we also have molecule, q. v., molest, q. v., and e-mol-u-ment.

MOLECULE, an atom, small particle. (L.) Formerly written molecula. 'Molecula, in physicks, a little mass or part of anything; Bailey's Dict. vol. ii. ed. 1751. A coined word ; formed with double dimin. suffix -c-ul- (in imitation of particula, a particle) from Lat. moles, a heap. A Roman would have said molicula. See Mole (3). Der. molecul-ar.

MOLLEST, to disturb, annoy. (F., - L.) M. E. molesten, Chaucer, Troilus, b. iv. 1. 880. - F. molester, 'to molest;' Cot. - Lat. molestare, to annoy. - Lat. molestus, adj., troublesome, burdensome. B. Formed (with suffix -tus = Aryan -ta) from a stem moles-, which again is from moli-, crude form of moles, a heap. See Mole (3). Der. molest-er, molest-at-ion, Oth. ii. 1. 16.

MOLUIFY, to soften. (F., -L.) In Isa. i. 6. (A. V.) 'It [borage] molly/yeth the body; 'Sir T. Elyot, Castel of Helth, b. ii. c. 9. [The sb. mollification is in Chaucer, C. T. 16322.] - O. F. mollifier, 'to mollifie;' Cot. - Lat. mollificare, to soften. - Lat. molli-, crude form of mollis, soft; and -fic-, put for facere, to make. B. Lat. mollis is akin to Gk. µalanós, soft, and dµalós, tender; the lit. sense is 'ground to powder,' hence soft ; from AL, weakened form of MAR, to grind. See Mar. Der. mollifi-able, mollifi-er; also mollific-at-ion, regularly formed from mollificatus, pp. of molli-ficare. And see moil, mollusc.

MOLLUSC, an invertebrate animal, with a soft fleshy body, as a snail. (F.,-L.) Modern. Not in Todd's Johnson. - F. mollusque, a mollusc (Littré). - Lat. mollusca, a kind of nut with a soft shell, which some molluscs were supposed to resemble. - Lat. molluscus, softish; allied to molleccere, to become soft. - Lat. mollis, soft; see Mollify.

MOLTEN, melted. (E.) In Exod. xxxii. 4; &c. The old pp. of malt ; see Melt.

MOLY, the name of a certain plant. (L.,-Gk.) In Spenser, Sonnet 26. - Lat. moly. - Gk. μῶλυ; Homer, Od. x. 305. MOMEINT, importance, value, instant of time. (F., - L.) 'In See Mingle, Monger. [†]

B. Of uncertain & a moment; Wyclif, J Cor. xv. 52. - F. moment, 'a moment, a minute, a jot of time; also moment, importance, weight; ' Cot. -Lat. momentum, a movement, hence an instant of time; also moving force, weight. 8. MONAD, a unit, &c. (L., - Gk.) The pl. monades was formerly used as synonymous with digits. 'Monades, a term in arithmetick, the same as digits;' Phillips, ed. 1706. - Lat. monad-, stem of monas, a unit. - Gk. µorás, a unit. - Gk. µóros, alone, sole. See Mono-.

MONARCHY, sole government, a kingdom. (F.-L.,-Gk.) The word monarchy is much older than monarch in English. Sir David Lyndsay's book entitled 'The Monarche,' written in 1552, treats of monarchies, not of monarchs; see l. 1979 of the poem. M.E. monarchie, Gower, C. A. i. 27, l. 11. - F. monarchie, 'a monarchie, a kingdom;' Cot. - Lat. monarchia. - Gk. µorapxia, a kingdom. - Gk. μόναρχοs, adj., ruling alone - Gk. μον-, for μόνοs, alone ; and apxeur, to be first. See Mono- and Arch-. Der. monarch, Hamlet, ii. 2. 270, from F. monarque - Lat. monarcha, from Gk. μοτάρχης, a sovereign; monarch-al, Milton, P. MONASTERY, a house for monks, convent. (L., - Gk.) The older word was minster, q.v. Sir T. More has monastery, Works, p. 135 e. Englished from Lat. monasterium, a minster. - Gk. poragrippior, a minster. - Gk. poragrifs, dwelling alone; hence, a monk. - Gk. µoráfeir, to be alone. - Gk. µoros, alone. See Mono-. Der. From Gk. povaorthe we also have monast-ie, As You Like It, iii. 2. 441 = Gk. µoragrinos, living in solitude; hence monast-ic-al, monastic-ism. Doublet, minster.

MONDAY, the second day of the week. (E.) M. E. monenday, Rob. of Glouc. p. 495, l. 13; later Monaday, Monday. - A. S. Monan dag, Monday; rubric to John, vii. 32. The lit. sense is 'day of the Moon.'-A.S. monan, gen. of mona, the moon (a masc. sb. with gen. in -an); and dag, a day. See Moon and Day.

MONETARY, relating to money. (L.) Modern; not in Todd's Johnson. Imitated from Lat. monetarius, which properly means 'belonging to a mint,' or a mint-master. - Lat. moneta, (1) a mint, (2) money; see Money.

MONEY, current coin, wealth. (F., -L.) M. E. moneie; Chau-cer, C. T. 705.-O. F. moneie; mod. F. moneae: - Lat. moneta, (1) a mint, (2) money. See further under Mint (1). Der. money-bag, Merch. Ven. ii. 5. 18; money-ed, Merry Wives, iv. 4. 88; money-

Acharger; money-less. Also monetary, q. v. MONGER, a dealer, trader. (E.) Generally used in composition. M. E. wol-monger, a wool-monger; Rob. of Glouc. p. 539, l. 20. – A. S. mangere, a dealer, merchant; the dat. case mangere occurs in Matt. xiii. 45. Formed with suffix ere (= mod. E. er) from mang-ican, to traffic, barter, gain by trading, Luke, xix. 15. Cf. mangung, merchandise, Matt. xxii. 5.  $\beta$ . The form mangian is phonetically equivalent to mangan, in which the i is lost after a change of a to e; and the derivation of mangian is the same as that of mengan, to mingle, already treated of under Mingle, q.v. But I may here further observe that mangian is 'to deal in a mixture of things,' i.e. in miscellaneous articles. - A.S. mang, a mixture, preserved in the forms go-mang, go-mang, a mixture, crowd, assembly, Grein, i. 425. Mang may be taken as allied to manig, many; see Many. y. Similarly, Vigfusson derives the Icel. mangari, a monger, from manga, to trade, which again is from mang, barter, so named ' from traffic in mingled, miscellaneous things; as manga is used in Kormak, and even in a derived sense, it need not be borrowed from the A.S., but may be a genuine Norse word formed from margr [many] at a time when the n had not yet changed into an r' (for the Icel. marger stands for manger). 5. Compare also Du. mangelen, to barter. The relationship to the Lat. mango, a dealer in slaves, is not clear; but the E. word does not appear to have been borrowed from it. Dor. cheese-monger, fell-monger, fish-monger, iron-monger, &c.

MONGREL, an animal of a mixed breed. (E.) In Macbeth, iii. 1. 93. Spelt mungrel, mungril in Levins, ed. 1570. The exact history of the word fails, for want of early quotations; but we may consider it as short for mong-er-el, with double dimin. suffixes as in cock-er-el, pick-er-el (a small pike), so that it was doubtless orig. applied to pupples and young animals. B. As to the stem mong-, this we may refer to A.S. mangins *, old form of mengan, to mingle; cf. mong-er, a-mong, which are from the same A.S. base mang, a mixture. The sense is 'a small animal of mingled breed.'

MONITION, a warning. notice. (F.,-L.) monicion; Sir T. More, Works, p. 245 g. - F. monition, 'a monition, admonition :' Cot. - Lat. monitionem. acc. of monitio, a reminding. -Lat. monitus, pp. of monere, to remind; lit. to bring to mind or make to think - / MAN, to think; see Man. Der. monil-or, from Lat. monitor, an adviser, from monit-us, pp. of monere; hence monit-or-y, Bacon, Henry VII, ed. Lumby, p. 73, l. 6; monit-or-ship; monit-ress (with fem. suffix -ess = F. -esse, Lat. -issa, Gk. -1000); monit-or-i-al. And see Admonish. The doublet of monitor is mentor

MONK, a religious recluse. (L.,-Gk.) M.E. monk, Chaucer, C. T. 165. - A. S. munec, Grein, ii. 269; also munuc, Sweet's A. S. Reader. - Lat. monachus. - Gk. µovaxos, adj. solitary; sb. a monk. Extended from Gk. µovos, alone; see Mono-. Der. monk-ich; monk's-hood. Also (from Lat. monachus) monach-ism. And see Monastery, minster. MONKEY, an ape. (Ital., -L.) Spelt munkie in Levins, monkey, munkey, in Palsgrave; perhaps not found earlier. Corrupted from O. Ital. moniechio, 'a pugge, a munkie, an ape;' Florio, ed. 1598. Dimin. from O. Ital. mona, 'an ape, a munkie, a pug, a kitlin [kitten], a munkie-face; also a nickname for women, as we say gammer, goodie, good-wife such an one; 'Florio. He notes that mona is also spelt monna; cf. mod. Ital. monna, mistress, dame, ape, monkey (Meadows). Cf. also Span. mona, Port. mona, a she-monkey; Span. and Port. mono, a monkey. The order of ideas is: mistress, dame, old woman, monkey, by that degradation of meaning so common in all languages.  $\beta$ . The orig. sense of Ital. monna was 'mistress,' and languages. it was used as a title; Scott introduces Monna Paula as a character in the Fortunes of Nigel. As Diez remarks, it is a familiar corruption of madonna, i.e. my lady. hence, mistress or madam; see Madonna, Madam. The Span. and Port. mona were, apparently, borrowed from Italian; being feminine sbs., the masc. sb. mono was coined to accompany them.

MONO-, profix, single, sole. (Gk.) From Gk. µóro-, crude form of µóros, single. Perhaps allied to Skt. manák, adv., a little. Shortened to mon- in mon-arch, mon-ocular, mon-ody; see also mon-ad, mon-astery, mon-k. MONOCHORD, a musical instrument with one chord. (Gk.) In Hall's Chron. Hen. VII, an. I (R.)-Gk. µovo-; and xopon, the string of a musical instrument. See Mono- and Chord.

MONOCOTYLEDON, a plant with one cotyledon. (Gk.) Modern and botanical. See Mono- and Cotyledon.

MONOCULAB, with one eye. (Hybrid; Gk. and Lat) A coined word; used by Howell (R.). From Gk.  $\mu or$ , for  $\mu oro$ , from  $\mu oros$ , sole; and Lat. oculus, an eye. See Mono- and Ocular.

MONODY, a kind of mournful poem. (Gk.) 'In this monody,' &c.; Milton, Introd. to Lycidas. So called because sung by a single person. - Gk. µoredía, a solo, a lament. - Gk. µor., for µoro, crude form of µoros, alone; and eidh, a song, ode, lay. See Mono- and Ode. Der. monod-ist.

MONOGAMY, marriage to one wife only. (L., -Gk.) Spelt monogamis in Minsheu, ed. 1627. Used by Bp. Hall, Honour of the Maried Clergie, sect. 19, in speaking of a book by Tertullian.-Lat. monogamia, monogamy, on which Tertullian wrote a treatise. - Gk. μονογαμία, monogamy; μονόγαμος, adj., marrying but once. -Gk. μόνο-, crude form of μόνος, alone, sole; and γαμείν, to marry, yaµos, marriage. But Minsheu, ed. 1627, distinguishes between monologue, a sole talker, and monologie, 'a long tale of little matter.'-F. monologue, given by Cotgrave only in the sense 'one that loves to hear himselfe talke;' but, as in dia-logue, the last syllable was also used in the sense of 'speech.'-Gk. μονόλογοs, adj. speaking alone. - Gk. μόνο-, alone ; and λέγειν, to speak. See Mono- and Logic.

MONOMANIA, mania on a single subject. (Gk.) A coined word; from Mono- and Mania.

MONOPOLY, exclusive dealing in the sale of an article. (L.,-Gk.) 'Monopolies were formerly so numerous in England that parliament petitioned against them, and many were abolished, about 1601-2. They were further suppressed by 21 Jas. I, 1624; 'Haydn, Dict. of Dates. 'Thou hast a monopoly thereof;' Sir T. More,

Der. monopol-ise, spelt monopol-ize in Bacon, Hist. Hen. VII, ed. Lumby, p. 147, is spelt word of word for the self word bare to be the self word for the self wor 1. 33; a coined word, formed by analogy, since the O. F. word was simply monopoler (Cotgrave). MONOSVILLABLE, a word of one syllable. (F.,-L.,-Gk.)

In Minsheu, ed. 1627; he makes it an adjective. Altered from F. monosyllabs, adj. 'of one syllable;' Cot. – Lat. monosyllabus, adj. – Gk. µorosúλλaβos, adj. of one syllable. See Mono- and Syllable. Der. monosyllab-ic.

MONOTONY, sameness of tone. (Gk.) Bailey, vol. ii. ed. 1731, gives it in the form monotonia. - Gk. µorororia, sameness of tone.-Gk. µorórovos, adj., of the same tone, monotonous. See Mono- and Tone. Der. monoton-ous, formed from Gk. porororor by change of -os into -oss; this is rare, but the change of Lat. -os into E. -ous (as in ardu-ous, &c.) is very common. Also monotone, a late term. Also monoton-ous-ly, -ness, MONSOON, a periodical wind. (Ital., - Malay, - Arab.) Spelt monson in Hackluyt's Voyages, ii. 278. Sir T. Herbert speaks of the monzoones; Travels, ed. 1665, pp. 409, 413. Ray speaks of 'the monicons and trade-winds;' On the Creation, pt. 1 (R.) It is not quite certain whence the word reached us, but monsoon agrees more closely with Ital. monsone than with Span. monzon, Port. monção, or F. mouseon. [The Span. z is not sounded as E. z, but more as th.] -Malay músim, 'a season, monsoon, year:' cf. also awal músim, 'beginning of the season, setting in of the monsoon;' Marsden, Malay Dict. pp. 340, 24. – Arab. mawsim, a time, a scason; Rich. Dict. p. 1525. – Arab. wasm (root wasama), marking; id.

MONSTER, a prodigy, unusual production of nature. (F., -L.) M. E. monstre, Chaucer, C. T. 11656. - F. monstre, 'a monster; 'Cot. - Lat. monstrum, a divine omen, portent, monster. To be resolved into mon-es-tru-m (with Aryan suffixes -as- and -tar, for which see Schleicher's Compendium) from mon-ere, to warn, lit. to make to think. - MAN, to think; see Man, Mind. Der. monstr-ous, formerly monstru-ous, as in Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. iv. met. 3, 1. 3502, from O. F. monstrüeux, 'monstrous' (Cot.), which from Lat. monstruosus (also monstrosus), monstrous; monstrous-ly, monstrousness; monstros-i-ty, spelt monstruosity, Troilus, iii. 2. 87. Also demonstrate, re-monstrate. Doublet, muster.

MONTH, the period of the moon's revolution. (E.) Properly 28 days; afterwards so altered as to divide the year into 12 parts. M. E. moneth (of two syllables), Rob. of Glouc., p. 59, l. 16. Sometimes shortened to month. - A. S. mónað, sometimes mónð, a month; Grein, ii. 262; properly 'a lunation.' - A. S. móna, moon; see Moon. + Du. maand; from maan. + Icel. mánuor, mánaor, mánoor, from mani.+ Dan. maaned; from maane.+ Swed. manad; from mane. Goth. menoths; from mena. + G. monat; from mond (O. H. G. máno). Cf. also Lithuan. menesis, a month, from mens, moon; Russ. missiants, a month, also the moon; Lat. mensis, a month; Irish and W. mis, Gael. mios, a month; Gk.  $\mu\eta\nu$ , month.  $\mu\eta\nu\eta$ , moon; Skt. masa, a month. Der. month-ly, adj., K. Lear, i. I. 134; month-ly, adv., Romeo, ii. 2. 110.

MONUMENT, a record, memorial. (F.,-L.) Tyndall speaks of 'reliques and monumentes;' Works, p. 283, col. 1. - F. monument, a monument;' Cot. - Lat. monumentum, a monument.  $\beta$ . Formed, with suffix -ment, from mon-u- = mon-i-, seen in moni-tus, pp. of monere, to remind, cause to think. - ~ MAN, to think; see Monition.

Der. monsument al, All's Well, iv. 3. 20. MOOD (1), disposition of mind, temper. (E.) It is probable that the sense of the word has been influenced by confusion with mood (2), and with mode. The old sense is simply 'mind,' or sometimes 'wrath.' M. E. mood; 'aslaked was his mood' - his wrath was appeased; Chaucer, C. T. 1762. - A.S. mód, mind, feeling, heart (very common); Grein, ii. 257. + Du. moed, courage, heart, spirit, mind. + Icel. moil, wrath, moodiness. + Dan. and Swed. mod, courage, mettle. + Goth. mods, wrath. + G. muth, courage. B. All from a Teut. type MODA, courage, wrath; Fick, iii. 242. Cf. Gk.  $\mu i - \mu a - a$ , I strive after,  $\mu a \mu a \mu a$ , I seek after. Perhaps from  $\checkmark$  MA, shorter form of  $\checkmark$  MAN, to think; see Mind. Der. mood-y, A.S.

módig, Grein, ii. 260; mood-i-ly, mood-i-ness. MOOD (2), manner, grammatical form. (F.,-L.) A variant of mode, in the particular sense of 'grammatical form of a verb.' Spelt mode in Palsgrave. 'Mood, or Mode, manner, measure, or rule. In Grammar there are 6 moods, well known;' Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. See Mode. ¶ Perhaps it has often been confused with Mood (1); see Mood in Trench, Select Glossary.

MOON, the planet which revolves round the earth. (E.) M. E.

mone, of two syllables; Chaucer, C. T. 9759. - A. S. mona, a masc. whilst the latter was due to nappe. sb.; Grein, ii. 262. + Du. maan. + Icel. máni, masc. sb. + Dan. maane. + Swed. mane, masc. + Goth. mena, masc. + G. mond, masc. ; O. H. G. mano. + Lithuan. menu, masc. + Gk. µhyn. Cl. Skt. masa, a month, which Benfey refers to mant, pres. pt. of ma, to measure. - VMA, to measure, as it is a chief measurer of time. See also Month. Der. moon-beam, moon-light, moon-shine; moon-calf, Temp. ii. 2. 111; moon-ish, As You Like It, iii. 2. 430.

MOOR (1), a heath, extensive waste ground. (E.) M. E. more, King Alisaunder, 6074 - A.S. mór, a moor, morass, bog; Grein, ii. 262. + Icel. mor, a moor, also peat. + O. Du. moer, 'mire, dirt, mud;' moerlandt, 'moorish land, or turfie land of which turfe is made;' Hexham. + Dan. mor. + M. H.G. muor, G. moor. β. An adjectival form, derived from this sb., occurs in O. Du. moerasch, y. The account later moeras, whence E. morass; see Morass. in Fick, iii. 224, is not satisfactory; it is plain that morass is an adjectival form from moor; and it would seem that the Icel. mýrlendi, Swed. myra, a moorland, as well as the sense of Du, moer, link the word to mire and moss. If this be so, we must be careful to separate morass (allied to moor and moss) from the words marsh and marisk (allied to mere). See Mire, MOSS. Der. moor-ich, moorland, moor-cock; moor-hen, M. E. mor-hen, Polit. Songs, ed. Wright,

MOOR (2), to fasten a ship by cable and anchor. (Du.) In Minsheu, ed. 1627; Milton, P. L. i. 207. Like many sea-terms, it is borrowed from Dutch. - Du. marren, to tie, to moor a ship; O. Dy. marren, maren, to bind, or tie knots (Hexham). The Du. marren also means to tarry, loiter, O. Du. marren, merren, to stay, retard (Hexham). Cognate with A. S. merran, whence the compound amerran, which signifies not only to mar, but also to hinder, obstruct; see Bosworth and Grein. Hence moor is a doublet of mar; see Mar. The successive senses are: to pound, mar, spoil, mar; see mar. In e successive senses are: to pound, mar, spoil, obstruct, fasten. Der. moor-ing, moor-age; and see marline.

 MOOR (3), a native of North Africa. (F., - L., - Gk.) 'A Moore, or one of Mauritania, a blacke moore, or neger; 'Minsheu, ed. 1627.
 O. F. More, 'a Moor, Maurian, blackamore;' Cot. - Lat. Maurus. β. Apparently - Gk. Maupos, a Moor; see Smith's Class. Dict. the same word as Gk. µaupos, dµaupos, dark ; on which see Curtius, ii. 189. Der. Moor-isk ; and see morris, morocco. Also black-a-moor, spelt blackamore, in Cotgrave, as above; a corruption of black moor in Minsheu, as above; also spelt blackmoor in Beaum. and Fletcher, Mons. Thomas, v. 2. [†]

MOOSE, the American elk. (W. Indian.) The native West Indian name; 'Knisteneaux mouswah, Algonquin monse [mouse?], Mackenzie;' cited in Mahn's Webster.

MOOT, to discuss or argue a case. (E.) Little used, except in the phr. 'a most point.' 'To moste, a tearme vsed in the innes of the Court, it is the handling of a case, as in the Vniuersitie, their disputations, problemes, sophismes, and such other like acts ; ' Minsheu, ed. 1627. The true sense is 'to discuss in or at a meeting,' and the verb is unoriginal, being due to A. S. mot, M. E. mote, later moot, an assembly or meeting, whence also moot-hall, i. e. a hall of assembly, occurring in P. Plowman, B. iv. 135; cf. also ward-mote, i. e. meet-ing of a ward, id. prol. 94. M. E. motien, moten, to moot, discuss, also to cite, plead, P. Plowman, B. i. 174. - A. S. motian, to cite, summon (to an assembly or court); 'gif man ... pane mannan mote' = if one summon (or cite) the man; Laws of Hlothhære, sect. 8; see Thorpe, Ancient Laws, i. 31. - A. S. mót, a meeting, an assembly; usually spelt gemot, a word familiar in the phrase witena gemot, an assembly of wise men, a parliament. + Icel. mot, a meeting, court of law. + M. H. G. muoz, moz, a meeting.  $\beta$ . From a Teutonic type law. + M. H. G. muoz, múz, a meeting.  $\beta$ . From a Teutonic type MÔTA or MÔTI, Fick, iii. 242. Fick takes the ô to stand for an, as in gos for gans (goose); this gives an orig. form MAN-TA, which he thinks is 'obviously' from the AMAN, to remain, which appears in Lat. man-ere, Gk. µev-eiv. Der. moot-able, moot-case, i. c. case for discussion; moot-point, i.e. point for discussion; moot-kall, a hall of assembly, law court. Also meet, q. v. ¶ Observe that meet is a mere derivative of moot, as shewn by the vowel-change; to derive most from meet would involve an impossible inversion of A.S. phonetic laws.

MOP(1), an implement for washing floors, &c. (F., -L.?) Mr. Wedgwood says that, in a late edition of Florio's Ital. Dict., the word pannatore is explained by 'a maulkin, a map of rags or clouts to rub withal.' It is not in the 1st ed., 1598. Halliwell gives prov. E. mop, a napkin, as a Glouc. word. B. Of uncertain origin; but E. mop, a napkin, as a Glouc. word.  $\beta$ . Of uncertain origin; but most likely borrowed from O. F. mappe, a napkin, though this word is almost invariably corrupted to mappe. See Nappe in Littre, who cites the spelling mappe as known in the 15th century, though the corrupt form with initial n was already known in the 13th century. Both mappe and nappe are from Lat. mappa, a napkin; whence also Map and Napkin, the former being taken from the form mappe, nate with G. mehr, more, Goth. mais, more, adv., Lat. magis, more,

MOP (a), a grimace; to grimace. (Du.) Obsolete. 'With mop and mow;' Temp. iv. 47. Also as a verbal sb.; 'mopping and mowing;' K. Lear, iv. 64. The verb to mop is the same as Mope,

q. v. MOPE, to be dull or dispirited. (Du.) In Shak. Temp. v. 240. The same word as mop, to grimace; see Mop(2). Cf. in the mops, sulky; 'Halliwell. - Du. moppen, to pout; whence to grimace, or to sulk. Cf. prov. G. muffen, to sulk (Flügel). This verb to mop is a mere variant of to mock, and has a like imitative origin; see Mook. And see Mow (3). Der. mop-ish. mop-ish-ness.

MORAINE, a line of stones at the edges of a glacier. (F.,-Teut.) Modern; well known from books of Swiss travel. - F. moraine, a moraine; Littré. Cf. Port. morraria, a ridge of shelves of sand, from morra, a great rock, a shelf of sand; Ital. mora, a pile of rocks. (But not Span. moron, a hillock.)  $\beta$ . Of Teut. origin; cf. Bavarian mur, sand and broken stones, fallen from rocks into a bavailar mar, said and block stones, hind in rocks into a valley; Schmeller, Bayerisches Wörterbuch, col. 1642. Schmeller notes the name moraine as used by the peasants of Chamouni, according to Saussure.  $\gamma$ . The radical sense is 'mould' or ' crumbled material;' hence fallen rocks, sand, &c.; cf. G. mürbe, soft, O. H. G. murswi, soft, brittle, A. S. mearn, tender.  $-\sqrt{MAR}$ , to pound, bruise, crumble; whence also Lat. mola, a mill, E. meal, &cc. See Mould (1), Meal.

MORAL, virtuous, excellent in conduct. (F., - L.) 'O moral Gower;' Chaucer, Troilus, b. v, last stanza but one. - F. moral, of moral; 'Cot. - Lat. moralis, relating to conduct. - Lat. moral, sem of mos, a manner, custom. Root uncertain. Der. moral, sb., morals, sb. pl.; moral-er, i.e. one who moralises, Oth. ii. 3. 301; moral-ly; morale (a mod. word, borrowed from F. morale, morality, good conduct); moralise, As You Like It, ii. 1. 44; moral-ist; moral-i-ty, Meas. for Meas. i. 2. 138, from F. moralité, 'morality," Cot. From the same source, de-mure.

MORASS, a swamp, bog. (Du.) 'Morass, a moorish ground, a marsh, fen, or bog;' Phillips, ed. 1706. Todd says that P. Heylin, marsh, ich, or bog; Finlings, ed. 1760. Todd says that F. Heylin, in 1656, noted the word as being 'new and uncouth;' but he omits the reference. – Du. moeras, marsh, fen (Sewel). The older Du. form is moerasch, adj., 'moorish' (Hexham); from the sb. moer, 'mire, dirt, or mud' (id.) But this Du. moer also means a moor, since Hexham also gives 'moerland, moorish land, or turfie land of which turfe is made;' and is plainly cognate with E. moor; see Moor (1).  $\beta$ . The suffix -as, older form -asch, is adjectival, and an older form of the common suffix -i.4; it is due to the Aryan suffixes -as- and -ka- (for which see Schleicher, Compend. \$\$ 230, 231). It occurs again in various cognate words, viz. in G. morast (corrupted from morask), a morass; Swed. moras; Dan. morads (a corrupt form). ¶ The words marsh, marish, are to be referred to a different base, viz. to Mere (1). [†] MORBID, sickly, unhealthy. (F.,-L.) 'Morbid (in painting), a term used of very fat flesh very strongly expressed ;' Bailey's Dict., vol. ii. ed. 1731. - F. morbide, sometimes similarly used as a term in painting (Littré). - Lat. morbidus, sickly (which has determined the present sense of the E. word). - Lat. morbus, disease. Allied to mor-i, to die, mors, death ; see Mortal. Der. morbid-ly, morbid-ness ; also morbi-fic, causing disease, a coined word, from morbi- (= morbo-), crude form of morbus, and Lat. suffix -fic-us, due to facere, to make.

MORDACITY, sarcasm. (F.,-L.) Little used. It occurs in. Cotgrave. - F. mordacité, 'mordacity, easie detraction, bitter tearms;' Cot. - Lat. acc. mordacitatem, from nom. mordacitas, power to bite. -Lat. mordaci-, crude form of mordax, biting; with suffix -tas (= Aryan -ta). = Lat. mordere, to bite.  $\beta$ . Prob. from the same root as E. Smart, q.v. Der. mordaci-ous, little used, from the crude form mordaci-; mordaci-ous-ly.

MORE, additional, greater. (E.) The mod. E. more does duty for two M. E. words which were, generally, well distinguished, viz. mo and more, the former relating to number, the latter to size. 1. M. E. mo, more in number, additional. 'Mo than thries ten' = more than thirty in number; Chaucer, C. T. 578. – A. S. má, both as adj. and adv., Grein. ii. 201. Thus 'bær byö wundra má' = there are wonders more in number, lit. more of wonders (Grein). This A.S. má seems to have been originally an adverbial form ; it is cogmore, larger in size, bigger; 'more and lesse' = greater and smaller, Chaucer, C. T. 6516. [The distinction between mo and more is not always observed in old authors, but very often it appears clearly enough.] = A. S. mara, greater, larger; Grein, il. 212. Cognate with Icel. meiri, greater; Goth. maiza (stem maizan-), greater. This is really a double comparative, with the additional comp. suffix -ra, the orig. base being MAG-YANS-RA; for the Aryan suffix -ra see Schleicher, Compend. § 233. It is therefore an extension of the ¶ It deserves to be noted that some grammarians, former word. perceiving that mo-re has one comparative suffix more than mo, have rushed to the conclusion that mo is a positive form. This is false; the positive forms are mickle, much, and (practically) many. Der. more-over.

MOST, the superl. form, answers to M.E. most, Chaucer, C.T. 2200, also spelt meste, maste, measte, in earlier authors (see Strat-mann). - A.S. mést, most; Grein, ii. 226. Cognate with Icel. mestr, G. meist, Goth. maists; from an orig. form MAG-YANS-TA, where -ta is a superl. suffix. See above, MORGANATIC, used with reference to a marriage of a man with a woman of inferior rank. (Low Lat., -G.) When the left with a woman of inferior rank. (Low Lat., -G.) hand is given instead of the right, between a man of superior and a woman of inferior rank, in which it is stipulated that the latter and her children shall not inherit the rank or inherit the possessions of the former. The children are legitimate. Such marriages are frequently contracted in Germany by royalty and the higher nobility. Our George I. was thus married;' Haydn, Dict. of Dates. - Low Lat. morganatica. Ducange explains that a man of rank contracting a morganatic marriage was said 'accipere uxorem ad morganaticam.' This Lat. word was coined, with suffix -atica, from the G. morgen, morning, which was in this case understood as an abbreviation for M. H. G. morgengabe, morning-gift, a term used to denote the present which, according to the old usage, a husband used to make to his wife on the morning after the marriage-night. This G. morgen is cognate with E. morn; see Morn.

MORION, an open helmet, without visor. (F., -Span.) In Spenser, Muiopotmos, l. 322. - F. morion, 'a murrian, or head-peece;' Cot. Cf. Span. morriow, Port. morrião, Ital. morione, a morion. The word is Spanish, if we may accept the very probable derivation of Span. morrion from morra, the crown of the head. The latter word has no cognate form in Ital. or Port. Cf. Span. morro, anything round; moron, a hillock. Perhaps from Basque murwa, a hill, heap (Diez)

MORMONITE, one of a sect of the Latter-day Saints. (E. ; but a pure invention). The Mormonites are the followers of Joseph Smith, called the prophet, who announced in 1823, at Palmyra, New York, that he had had a vision of the angel Moroni. In 1827 he said that he found the book of Mormon, written on gold plates in Egyptian characters; Haydn, Dict. of Dates, q. v. We may call the word E., as used by English-speaking people; but it is really a pure invention.

Der. Mormon.ism. [†] MORN, the first part of the day. (E.) M. E. morn, a North E. form. 'On the morn' = on the morrow; Barbour's Bruce, i. doublets; the former being contracted from M.E. more, and the latter standing for M.E. more, the same word with loss of final n. The form morve is in Chaucer, C. T. 1492; the older form morven is in the Ancren Riwle, p. 22, l. 16. – A. S. morgen, morn, morrow, Grein, ii. 264; whence morn by mere contraction, and morwen by the common change of g to w + Du. morgen, + Icel. morgina, morguna. + Dan. morgen. + Swed. morgon. + G. morgen. + Goth. mourgins.  $\beta$ . Fick compares Lithuan. merkti, to blink; iii. 243. Perhaps we shall not be wrong in referring these words to an extension of the & MAR, to glimmer, shine, appearing in Gk. µap palpeuv, to glitter, Lat. marmor, marble, Skt. marichi, a ray of light. That the original sense was 'dawn' is probable from the deriv.

morn-ing, q. v. MORNING, dawn, morn. (E.) M.E. morning, P. Plowman, B. prol. 5; contracted from the fuller form morewring, Chaucer, C.T. tode. Morewring signifies 'a dawning,' or 'a becoming morn;' formed with the substantival (not participial) suffix ing (A.S. -ung) from M. E. morwen = A.S. morgen, morn; see Morn. Der. morming-

MOROCCO, a fine kind of leather. (Morocco.) Added by Todd to Johnson's Dict. Named from Morocco, in N. Africa; whence also F. maroquin, morocco leather. Dor. moor (3), morris. MOROSE, ill-tempered, gloomy, severe. (L.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. See Trench, Select Gloss., who shews that the word was 878 MORGANATIC. The full form of the orig. base is MAG-YANS, formed with the Aryan compar. suffix -yans (Schleicher, Compend. § 332) from the Scrupulous, fastidious, (1) self-will, (2) usage, custom, character. See Moral. stem of mos, (1) self-will, (2) usage, custom, character. See Moral. Stem of mos, (1) self-will, (2) usage, custom, character. See Moral. stem of mos, (*/ morose.es, Also moros-i-ty, in Minsheu, ed. 1627, from O. F. moroselie, "morosity, frowardnesse," Cot.; but now obsolete.

MORPHIA, MORPHINE, the narcotic principle of opium. (Gk.) Modern; coined words from Gk. Morpheus (Moppern), the god of sleep and dreams, lit, 'the shaper,' i. e. creator of shapes seen in dreams. - Gk. μορφή, a shape, form; prob. from Gk. μάρπτειτ, to grasp, seize, clasp. MORRIS, MORRIS-DANCE, an old dance on festive occasions. In Shak. Hen. V, ii. 4. 25. See Nares' Glossary. The dance was also called a morisco, as in Beaum. and Fletcher, Wild Goose Chase, v. 2. 7. A morris-dancer was also called a moviseo, 2 Hen. VI, iii. 1. 365; and it is clear that the word meant ' Moorish dance,' though the reason for it is not quite certain, unless it was from the use of the tabor as an accompaniment to it. - Span. Morisco, from the use of the tabor as an accompaniment to it. - Span. Morseo, Moorish. Formed with suffix -isco (= Lat. -iscus, E. -isk) from Span. Moro, a Moor; see Moor (3). We also find morris-pike, i.e. Moorish pike, Com. Errors, iv. 3. 38. [†] MOREOW, morning, morn. (E.) A doublet of morn. From M. E. moruse by the change of final -use to -ous, as in arr-ous, sparr-ous, sorr-ous, &c. 'A moruse'= on the morrow, Chaucer, C. T. 824.

Again, morue is from the older moruen, by loss of final s; and moruen = mod. E. morn. See Morn. Der. to-morrow = A.S. 46 morgene, where to = mod. E. to; the sense is 'for the morrow;' see Grein, ii. 264.

MORSE, a walrus. (Russ.) Spelt morsse, Hackluyt's Voyages, 5 (margin). 'The tooth of a morse or sea-horse;' Sir T. Browne. Vulg. Errors, b. iii. c. 23. § 5. A Russ. word; walruses being found in the White Sea, as described in Ohthere's Voyage. - Russ. morj', a walrus; where the j is sounded as French j. As another Russ. name for the walrus is morskaia korova, i.e. sea.cow, I suppose we may derive Russ. morj' from moré, the sea, cognate with E. Mere (1), q. v.

MORSEL, a mouthful, small piece. (F., -L.) M. E. morsel, Chaucer, C. T. 128. Also mossel, Rob. of Glouc. p. 342, L 6; thys mossel bred '= this morsel of bread. The corrupt form mossel is still in common use in prov. E. -O. F. morsel, morcel, mod. F. morseau, 'a morsell, bit,' Cot. (And see Barguy.) Cf. Ital. morsello. Dimin. from Lat. morsum, a bit. - Lat. morsus, pp. of mordere, to bite; see Mordacity.

HORTAL, deadly. (F., -L.) See Trench, Select Glossary. M. E. mortal, Chaucer, C. T. 61, 1590. -O. F. mortal (Burguy), later mortel (Cot.) = Lat. mortalis, mortal. = Lat. mort, stem of mors, death. The crude form morti- contains the Aryan suffix -ta. =  $\checkmark$  MAR, to die, intrans. form from  $\checkmark$  MAR, to grind, rub, pound (hence bruise to death); cf. Skt. mri, to die, pp. mrita, dead; Lat. mori, to die. Der. mortal-ly; mortal-i-ty, from F. mortalité, 'mortality' (Cot.), from Lat. acc mortalitatem; morti-fer-ous, Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674, from Lat. fer-re, to bring, cause. And see mort-rage, morti-fy, mort-main, mort-u-ary. MORTAR (1), MORTER, a vessel in which substances are pounded with a pestle. (L.) [A certain kind of ordnance was also called a mortar, from its orig. resemblance in shape to the mortar for pounding substances in. This is a French word.] M. E. morter, P. Plowman, B. xiii. 44; King Alisaunder, I. 332. – A.S. morter, a mortar; A.S. Leechdons, ed. Cockayne, i. 142. [Cf. O. F. mortier, 'a morter to bray [pound] things in, also, the short and wide-mouthed piece of ordnance called a morter,' &cc; Cot.] – Lat. mortarium, a mortar. Cf. Lat. martulus, marculus, a hammer. - 4/ MAR. to pound, bruise; see Mar. See mortar (2).

MORTAB (2), cement of lime, sand, and water. (F., -L.) M. E. mortier, Rob. of Glouc., p. 128, l. 6.-O. F. mortier, 'morter used by dawbers;' Cot. - Lat. mortarium, mortar; lit. stuff pounded by dawbers; Cot. - Lat. mortarium, mortar; iii. stui pounded together; a different sense of the word above; see Mortar (1). MORTGAGE, a kind of security for debt.  $(F_{.}-L.)$  M.E. mortgage, spelt morgage in Gower, C.A. iii. 234, 1.6. = O.F. mor-gage, mortgaige, 'a morgage, or mortgage;' Cot. 'It was called a mortgage, or dead pledge, because, whatever profit it might yield, it did not thereby redeem itself, but became lost or dead to the mor-gagee on breach of the condition; 'Webster. - F. mort, dead, from Lat. mortuus, pp. of mori, to die; and F. gage, a pledge. See Mortal and Gage (1). Der. mortgag-er; mortgag-se, where the final -se answers to the F. -s of the pp.

MORTIFY, to destroy the vital functions, vex, humble. (F., -L.) M. E. mortifien, used as a term of alchemy, Chaucer, C. T. 16594.-O. F. mortifier, 'to mortifie,' Cot. - Lat. mortificare, to cause death. -Lat. morni-, crude form of mors, death ; and fic-, for fac-ere, to once used as if it owed its derivation to Lat. mora, delay; but this make, cause; see Mortal and Fact. MORTISE, a hole in a piece of timber to receive the tenon, or a piece made to fit it. (F.) Spelt mortesse in Palsgrave; mortaise in Cot. Shak. has mortise as a sb., Oth. ii. 1.9; and the pp. mortised, joined together, Hamlet, iii. 3. 20. M.E. mortesy, Prompt. Parv. – F. mortaise, 'a mortaise in a piece of timber;' Cot. Cf. Span. mortaja, a mortise.  $\beta$ . Of unknown origin; it cannot be from Lat. mordere, to bite, which could not have given the t. Devic (in a supplement to Ducange) thinks the Span. word may be of Arabic origin; cf. Arab. mwrtazz, fixed in the mark (said of an arrow), immoveably tenacious (said of a miser); Rich. Dict. p. 1386. Der. mortise, verb.

MORTMAIN, the transfer of property to a corporation. (F., -L.) 'Agaynst all mortmayn;' Sir T. More, Works, p. 333 h. The Statute of Mortmain was passed A.D. 1279 (7 Edw. I). Property transferred to the church was said to pass into main most or mort main, i. e. into a dead hand, because it could not be alienated. - F. mort, dead; and main, a hand (Lat. manus). See Mortgage and Manual.

MORTUARY, belonging to the burial of the dead. (L.) The old use of mortuary was in the sense of a fee paid to the parson of a parish on the death of a parishioner. 'And [pore over] Linwode, a booke of constitutions to gather tithes, mortuaries, offeringes, customes,'&c.; Tyndall's Works, p. 2, col. I. Lyndwode, to whom Tyndall here refers, died A. D. 1446. Englished from Low Lat. mortnarium, a mortuary; neut. of Lat. mortuarius, belonging to the dead. -Lat. mortu-us, dead, pp. of mori, to die; see Mortal. [†] MOSAIC, MOSAIC-WORK, ornamental work made with

MOSAIC, MOSAIC-WORK, ornamental work made with small pieces of marble, &c. (F., -L., -Gk.) Spelt mosaick, Milton, P. L. iv. 703. 'Mosaicall-worke, a worke of small inlayed peeces;' Minsheu's Dict., ed. 1627. -O. F. mosaīque, 'mosaicall work', 'Cot. Cf. Ital. mosaico, mosaic; Span. mosaica obra, mosaic work. Formed from a Low Lat. musaicus\*, adj., an extended form from Lat. musaicus opus (also called musiuum opus), mosaic work. The Low Lat. form musaicus answers to a late Gk.  $\mu ovoraīkos$ \*, an extended form from late Gk.  $\mu oureiov$ , mosaic work; neut. of  $\mu ovorios$ , of or belonging to the Muses (hence artistic, ornamental). -Gk.  $\mu ovora, a$  Muse; see Muse (a).

MOSLEM, a Mussulman or Mohammedan; as adj., Mahommedan. (Arab.) 'This low salam Replies of Moslem faith I am;' Byron, The Giaour (see note 29). – Arab. muslim, 'a musulman, a true believer in the Muhammedan faith;' Rich. Dict. p. 1418. Allied to Arab. musulim, 'one who submits to, and acquiesces in the decision of another;' id. A musulman is one who professes islim, i.e. 'obedience to the will of God, submission, the true or orthodox faith;' id. p. 91. Derived from the 4th conjugation of salama, to submit (whence salm, submitting, id. p. 845). The words moslem, mussulman, islam, and salaam are all from the same root salama. Doublet, mussulman. [†]

MOSQUE, a Mahommedan temple or church. (F., -Span., -Arab.) 'Mosche or Mosque, a temple or church among the Turks and Saracens;' Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. - F. mosquée, 'a temple or church among the Turks;' Cot. - Span. mezquita, a mosque. - Arab. masjad, masjid, a mosque, temple; Rich. Dict. p. 1415. Cf. Arab. sajjuidak, 'a carpet, &c., place of adoration, mosque;' also sijdat, sajdat, 'adoring, adoration;' id. p. 812. - Arab. root sajada, to adore, prostrate oneself.

prostrate oneself. MOSQUITO, a kind of gnat. (Span., -L.) Spelt muskitto in Sir T. Herbert. Travels, ed. 1065, p. 128. – Span. mosquito, a little gnat; dimin. of mosca, a fly. – Lat. musca, a fly. Cf. Gk.  $\mu vca$ , a fly; Lithuan. musca, a fly. ¶ It can hardly be related to midge, unless we may refer it to the same  $\sqrt{MU}$ , to murmur, buzz. [+] unless we may refer it to the same  $\checkmark$  MU, to murnur, buzz. [+] MOSS, a cryptogamic plant. (E) M. E. mos, P. Plowman, C. xviii. 14; mosse (dat.), id. B. xv. 282. – A. S. meds, Deut. xxviii. 42. + Dū. mos. + Icel. mosi, moss; also, a moss, moorland. + Dan. mos. + Swed. mossa. + G. moos, M. H. G. mos, moss; also a moss, swamp; allied to which is M. H. G. miss, O. H. G. miss, moss.  $\beta$ . Further allied to Russ. moki, moss; Lat. muscus, moss; perhaps also to Gk.  $\mu \delta \sigma \chi os$ , a young, fresh shoot of a plant, a scion, sucker (though the last seems to me doubtful). ¶ We may note the E. use of moss in the sense of bog or soft moorland, as in Solway Moss, Chat Moss; this sense comes out again in E. mire, which is certainly related to moss, being cognate with O. H. G. mios; see Mire. Der. moss-land, moss-rose; moss-trooper, i. e. a trooper or bandit who rode over the mosses on the Scottish border; moss-ed, As You Like It, iv. 3. 105; moss-grown, 1 Hen. IV, iii. I. 33; moss-y, moss-inness. Also mire.

MOST, greatest ; see under More.

MOTTE, a particle of dust, speck, spot. (E.) M. E. mot, mote; Chancer has the pl. motes, C. T. 6450. - A.S. mot, Matt. vii. 3. Root unknown.

MOTET, a short piece of sacred music. (F., -Ital., -L.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. - F. motet, 'a verse in musick, or of a song, a poesie, a short lay;' Cot. -O. Ital. mottetto, 'a dittie, a verse, a iigge, a short song; a wittie saying;' Florio. Dimin. of Ital. motto, a motto, a witty saying; see Motto. [7] MOTH, a lepidopterous insect. (E.) M.E. motke, Chaucer, MOTH, a lepidopterous insect. (E.) M. E. motke, Chaucer, C. T. 6142; also spelt mobbe, mosthe, mosthe, Polymman, C. xiii. 217. – A. S. motte, Grein, ii. 261; also motte, P. Plowman, C. xiii. 217. – A. S. motte, Grein, ii. 261; also motte, Matt. vi. 20, latest text; O. Northumbrian motte, motte, a motte, a mot. + Icel. motti. + Swed. mdtt, a mite. + G. motte, a moth.  $\beta$ . It is remarkable that there is a second form of the word, which can hardly be otherwise than closely related. This appears as A. S. mator, a maggot, bug; 'Cimex, mator,' Allfric's Gloss., Nomina Insectorum, in Wright's Vocab. i. 24; cognate forms being Du. and G. mode, a maggot, Goth. matha, a worm; also the dimin. forms Icel. mathr, Dan. maddik, a maggot, whence is derived the prov. E. mask, a maggot, discussed above in a note to Maggot, q. v. A late example of M. E. mathe, a maggot, occurs in Caston's tr. of Reynard the Fox, ed. Arber, p. 69; 'a dede hare, full of mathes and wormes.'  $\gamma$ . It is probable that both words mean 'a biter' or 'eater;' Fick refers A. S. mator to the root of E. more, to cut grass. Der. motheaten, M. E. moth-eten, P. Plowman, B. x. 362. [+] refers A. S. madia to the root of E. moor, to cut grass. Der. motheaten, M. E. moth-eten, P. Plowman, B. x. 362. [+] MOTHER (1), a female parent. (E.) M. E. moder, Chaucer, C. T. 5261, where Tyrwhitt prints mother; but all the six MSS. of the Six-text ed. have moder or mooder, Group B. 1.841. [The M. E. spelling is almost invariably moder, and it is difficult to see how mother came to be the present standard form; perhaps it is due to Scand. influence, as the Icel. form has the tk.] – A. S. moder, moder, modur; Grein, ii. 261. + Du. mooder. + Icel. moder, + Dan. and Swed. moder. + G. mutter, O. H. G. muotar. + Irish and Gael. mathair. + Russ. mate. + Lithuan. mode (Schleicher). + Lat. mater. + Gk.  $\mu irnp.$  + Skt. mata, matri. B. All formed with Aryan suffix -tar (denoting the agent) from  $\checkmark$  MA, orig. to measure; cf. Skt. mai, to measure. It is not certain in what sense ma is here to be taken; but most likely in the sense to 'regulate' or 'manage; 'in which case the mother may be regarded as 'manager' of the household. Some explain it as ' producer,'but there is little evidence for such a sense. Der. mother-ly, mother-lieness, mother-hood, mother-leus.

MOTHER (2), the hysterical passion. (E.) In K. Lear, ii. 4. 56. Spelt moder in Palsgrave; the same word as the above. So also Du. moder means 'mother, womb, hysterical passion;' cf. G. mutterbeschwerung, mother-fit, hysterical passion; mutterbolik, hysterical passion.

MOTHER (3), lees, sediment. (E.) 'As touching the mother or lees of oile oliue;' Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xxiii. c. 3. It is prob. an E. word, though there is no early authority for it. The form should really be mudder, as it is nothing but an extension of the word Mud, q. W. But it has been confused with M. E. moder, a mother, and the very common word has affected the very rare one.  $\beta$ . This phenomenon is not confined to English. Cf. O. Du. modder, 'mudd or mire in which swine and hoggs wallow' (Hexham); whence O. Du. modder, moyer, ofte grond-sop, the lees, dreggs, or the mother of wine or beere;' id. But in mod. Du. we have most signifying both sediment or dregs, also a matrix or female screw, by a confusion of moor (short for modder) with moor (short for moder).  $\gamma$ . So again, G. moder, mud, mould, mouldering decay (whence moderig, mouldy, exactly like prov. E. mothery, mouldy) also appears as matter, mother, sediment in wine or other liquids. Der. mother-y.

MOTION, movement.  $(F_{..} - L_{.})$  'Of that moryon his cardynalles were sore abashed; 'Berners, tr. of Froissart, vol. i. c. 326. -F. motion, omitted in Cotgrave, but used by Froissart in this very passage, as quoted by Littré.-Lat. motionem, acc. of motio, a movement.-Lat. motion, pp. of moure, to move; see Move. Der. motion-less, Hen. V, iv. 2. 50. MOTIVE, an inducement.  $(F_{..}-L_{.})$  Properly an adj., but first introduced as a sb. M. E. motif, a motive, Chaucer, C. T. 5048, MOTIVE, an inducement. (F., -L.) Properly an adj., but first introduced as a sb. M. E. motif, a motive, Chaucer, C. T. 5048, 9365. - O. F. motif, 'a motive, a moving reason; 'Cot. - Low Lat. motinum, a motive; found A. D. 1452; but certainly earlier. - Low Lat. motinus, moving, animating; found A. D. 1369. Formed with Lat. suffix - issue from mot, stem of motus, pp. of mourer; see MOVE. Der. motiv-i-ty (modern). Also motor, i. e. a mover, Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. ii. c. 2. § 2, borrowed from Lat. motor, a mover.

MOTLEY, of different colours. (F., -G.) M. E. mottelee, Chaucer, C. T. 273. So called because spotted; orig. applied to curdled milk, &c. -O. F. mattelé, 'clotted, knotted, curdled, or curd-like;' Cot. Cf. O. F. mattené, in the expression ciel mattened, 'a curdled [i. e. mottled] skie, or a skie full of small curdled clowds;' id. The O. F. mattelé answers to a pp. of a verb matteler ', representing an O. H. G. mattels ', a frequentative verb regularly formed from Bavarian matte, curds; Schmeller's Bayerisches Wörterbuch, col. 1685. Root unknown. Der. motteled, Drayton, Muses' Elysium, Nymph, 6

MOTTO, a sentence added to a device. (Ital.,-L.) In Shak. Per. ii. 2. 38. - Ital. motto, 'a word, a mot, a saying, a posie or briefe in any shield, ring, or emprese' [device]; Florio.-Lat. muttum, a mutter, a grunt, a muttered sound ; cf. mutire, muttire, to mutter, mumble. Formed from MU, to make a low sound; cf. Gk. μῦ, a muttered sound. Sce Mutter. Der. mot-et.

MOULD (1), earth, soil, crumbling ground. (E) M. E. molde, P. Plowman, B. prol. 67, iii. 80. - A.S. molde, dust, soil, earth, country: Grein, il. 261. + Du. mul, dust, dirt, refuse; cf. molm, mould. + Icel. mold, mould, earth. + Dan. muld. + Swed. mull (for muld). + Goth. mulda, dust; Mk. vii. 11. + G. mull; prov. G. molt,  $\beta$ . All from a Teut. type molten, garden mould (Flügel). MOLDA, Fick, iii. 235. - MAL, to grind, bruise, crumble; see Meal (1). Der. mould-warp, the old name for a mole (see mole); mouldy (see Addenda); also mould-er, a frequentative verb, 'to crumble often,' hence. to decay, cf. 'in the mouldering of earth in frosts and sunne,' Bacon, Nat. Hist. § 337. [†]

MOULD (2), a model, pattern, form, fashion. (F.,-L.) M.E. molde, P. Plowman, B. xi. 341. Formed (with excrescent d, like the d after l in boul-d er) from O. F. molle. mole, mod. F. moule, a mould. Littré gives molle as the spelling of the 14th century; a still earlier form was motile, in the 13th cent. - Lat. modulum, acc. of modulus, a measure, standard, size. See Model. ¶ It is far more likely that M.E. molde is from the form molle than from modle, whence it might, however, have been formed by transposition. But the Span. molde, on the other hand, is from modulus, by transposition. Der. mod-el, a dimin. form. Also mould, vb., Mids. Nt. Dr. iii. 2. 211; mould-er, mould-ing.

MOULT, to cast feathers, as birds do. (L.) The l is intrusive, MOULT, to cast feathers, as birds do. (L.) The l is intrusive, just as in fault from M. E. faule; see Fault. M. E. mouten; 'his haire moutes,' i. e. falls off, Pricke of Conscience, 1, 781. 'Mowtyn, as fowlys, Plumeo, deplumeo;' Prompt. Parv. 'Mowter, moulter, quando anium pennæ decidunt;' Gouldman, cited by Way to illustrate 'Mowtare, or mowtard [i.e. moulter, moulting bird], byrde, Plutor;' Prompt. Parv. - Lat. mutare, to change; whence F. muer, to moult; see Mew (3). So also O. H. G. muzón, to moult, is merely borrowed from Lat. mutare; now spelt mausen in mod. G. Der. moulting; also mews; and see mutable.

MOUND, an earthen defence, a hillock. (E.) 'Compast with a mound;' Spenser, F. Q. ii. 7. 56. The sense of 'hillock' is due to confusion with the commoner word mount; but the two words are not at all nearly connected, though possibly from the same root. The older sense of mound was 'protection,' and it was even used of a body-guard or band of soldiers. M. E. mound, a protection, guard. 'Sir Jakes de Seint Poul herde how it was, Sixtene hundred of horsmen assemblede o the gras; He wende toward Bruges pas pur pas, With swithe gret mounds' = Sir J. de S. P. heard how it was, he assembled 1600 horsemen on the grass; He went towards B. step by step, with a very great body of men; Polit. Songs, ed. Wright, p. 189; - A. S. mund, protection, chiefly used as a law-term; see Bosworth. Grein, ii. 268, gives mund (1) the hand, (2) protection. We may note also the comp. mund-bearg, lit. a protecting mountain, as giving something of the sense of the mod. E. mound. + O. Fries. mund, sontector, hand: whence G. wormund, a guardian. B. The sense of protection' is more radical than that of 'hand,' and should be put first; the contrary order is due to a supposed connection with Lat. manus, which I hold to be a mistake. y. Fick (iii. 231) gives the Teutonic type as MONDI; and refers it to  $\checkmark$  MAN, to jut out, as seen in Lat. e-min-ere, to jut out. This I believe to be right, as we may fairly deduce both promontory and mount from the same root as mound. The successive senses seem to be 'jutting out,' 'mountain,' protection, 'hand.' See Mount. MOUNT (t), a hill, rising ground. (L.) M. E. munt, O. Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, i. 11, l. 14. - A. S. munt, Grein, ii. 269. [Immediately from Latin, not through the F. mont.] - Lat. montem, acc. of mons, a mountain; stem mon-ti-. Formed (with suffix -ta) from ✔ MAN, to project, seen in Lat. e-min-ere, to jut out; cf. E. promont-or-y. See Eminent, and Menace. Der. mount-ain, q. v.;

MOUNT (2), q. v. MOUNT (2), to ascend. (F., -L.) M. E. mounten, P. Plowman, King Alisaunder, 784. - F. monter, B. prol. 67; older form monten, King Alisaunder, 784. - F. monter, 'to mount;' Cot. - F. mont, a mountain, hill. [The verb is due to the use of the O.F. adverb a mont, up-hill; so also the adv. a val, down-hill, produced F. avaler, to swallow, and avalanche.] = Lat. montem, acc. of mons, a hill. See Mount (1). Der. mount-er, mount-ing; also mount-e-bank, q.v. Also a-mount, q.v. MOUNTAIN, a hill (F., -L.) In carly use. M.E. montaine, F. mattele, with E. -ed for  $\hat{p}$  mountain.  $= 10^{10}$  kt. montanea, montana, a mountain; Ducange. =mountain. - Locut It. montanea, montana, a mountain; Ducange. -Lat. montana, pl., mountainous regions; from montanus, adj., Lat. montand, pl., mountainous regions; from montanus, adj., hilly.-Lat. most, stem of mons, a mountain. See Mount (1). hilly. Lat. ""out of mons, a mountain. See mount (1). Der. mountain-out, Cor. ii. 3. 127, from O. F. montaigneux, 'moun-tainous,' Cot.; mountain-ser, Temp. iii. 3. 44, with suffix -ser = F. -ier.

MOUNTEBANK, a charlatan, quack doctor. (Ital.,-L. and G.) Lit. one who mounts on a bench, to proclaim his nostrums. See Trench, Select Glossary. In Shak, Hamlet, iv. 7, 142. 'Fellows, to mount a bank! Did your instructor In the dear tongues, never discourse to you Of the Italian mountebanks?' Ben Jonson, Volpone, i. 2 (Sir Politick). - Ital. montambanco, a mountebank; O. Ital. monta in banco, 'a mountibanke,' montar' in banco, 'to plaie the mountibanke; Florio.  $\beta$  Hence the e stands for older i, which is short for in; the mod. Ital. must be divided monta-m-banco, where -m- (put for in) has become m before the following b. - Ital. montare, to mount, cognate with F. monter, to mount ; in = Lat. in, in, on ; and Ital. banco, from O. H. G. banc, a bench, money-table. See

Mount (2), In, and Bank (2). MOURN, to grieve, be sad. (E.) M. E. murnen, mournen, mornen; Chaucer, C. T. 3704. – A. S. murnan, to grieve; Grein, ü. 269. Also meornan, id. ii. 240. + Icel. morna. + Goth. maurnan. + O.H.G. mornés.  $\beta$ . The Goth. n- before on is a mere suffix, giving the verb an intransitive character, and as au is from older u, the base is simply MUR, to make a low moaning sound, which occurs also (reduplicated) in Murmur, q. v. This is accurately preserved in G. murren, 'to murmur, mutter, grumble, growl, snarl ; Icel. marre, to murmur. Der. mourn-ful, Spenser, F. Q. i. 1. 54; mourn-ful-ly, mourn-ful-ness; mourn-ing, sb., A. S. murnung. MOUSE, a small rodent quadruped. (E.)

F. movoir, mod. F. muvoir. - Lat. mouere, to move; pp. motus. -✓ MU, to push; whence also Skt. miv, to push (with pp. múta. moved, corresponding to Lat. motus; also Gk. dµeύωµa, Doric form of aueiBouas, I change, change place. Der. mov-er, Chaucer, C. T. 2989; mov-able, of which the M. E. form was meble or moeble, P. Plowman, B. iii. 267, borrowed from F. meuble, Lat. mobilis, movable; mov-abl-y, mov-able-ness; move-ment, Gower, C. A. iii. 107, 1. 12, from O. F. movement (Burguy); moving, moving-ly. Also mobile, from Lat. mobilis, moveable, often contracted to mob; see Mob. Also mot-ion, q. v., mot-ive, q. v., mot-or; from Lat. pp. motus. Also mo-ment, com-mot-ion, e-mot-ion, pro-mote, re-move.

MOW (1), to cut down with a scythe. (E.) M. E. mowen; 'Monoe other mowen' (other MSS. mowwen), i. c. mow (hay) or stack (in a mow); P. Plowman, C. vi. 14. The old pt. t. was mew, still com-mon in Cambridgeshire; see Layamon, 1942. - A. S. máwan, Grein, ii. 213. (The vowel-change from A. S. a to E. o is perfectly regular; cf. stan, stone, ban, bone.) + Du. maaijen. + Dan. meie. + G. mähen, O. H. G. májan, mán.  $\beta$ . All from a base MA, to mow, reap; whence also Gk.  $d \cdot \mu d \cdot \omega$ , I reap, Lat. me-s-ers, to reap. Dor. mow-er, mow-ing; also mea-d, mea-d-ow, ofter-ma-th, and (perhaps) MOW (2), a heap, pile of hay or corn. (E.) M. E. mowe (mowe to pollute, render turbid, whence Gk. mainer (= µF-ar-yeir), to of scheues' = heap of sheaves, given as a various reading in Wyclif, Ruth iii. 7 (later iext). = A. S. muga, a mow, Exod. xxii. 6, where the Vulgate has aceruus frugum. + Icel. múga, múgi, a swathe in mowing, also a crowd of people, a mob. mowing, also a crowd of people, a mob.  $\beta$ . The change from A. S. g to M. E. w is common; so also in M. E. morwe (morrow) from A.S. morgen. y. Perhaps from /MU, to bind; cf. Skt. mú, may, to bind.

MOW (3), a grimace; obsolete. (F., -O. Du.) 'With mop and mow; 'Temp. iv. 47. 'Mopping and mowing;' K. Lear, iv. 1. 64. "I mowe, I mocke one; he useth to mocke and mowe;' Palsgrave. -F. moue, 'a moe, or mouth, an ill-favoured extension or thrusting out of the lips ;' Cot. - O. Du. mouwe, the protruded underlip ; see Oudemans, who cites the phrase maken die mouwe = to make a grimace, deride, in two passages. Cf. O. Du. mocken, or moelen, 'to move ones cheeks in chawing; ' Hexham. Allied to Mock, q. v. The The Word mop, its companion, is also Dutch; see Mop (2). MUCH, great in quantity. (Scand.) M. E. moche, muche, m.che. Formerly also used with respect of size. 'A moche man' = a tall man; P. Plowman, B. viii. 70; where one MS. reads mykil. 'Mocke and lite' = great and small; Chaucer, C. T. 496 (Six-text, A. 494), where other MSS. have muche, miche, meche. B. When we compare M. E. miche, moche, muche, with the corresponding forms michel, mochel, muchel, all variants of mickel or mickle (A.S. mycel, micel), we see at once that the mod. E. muck and mickle only differ by the suffix at the end of the latter. Muche occurs in Layamon, 10350; but not in A. S. - Icel. mjök, adv., much. Muck answers to Gk. μέγαs just as mickle dces to Gk. μεγάλοs *, appearing in the fem. form μεγάλη. See further under Mickle. And see More, Most. ¶ Just as we have both muck and mickle, we find A.S. lyt and lytel; see Little.

MUCILLAGE, a slimy substance, gum. (F., -L.) Richardson cites the word from Bacon's Philosophical Remains. The adj. muci-laginous is in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. - F. mucilage, 'slime, clammy sap, glewy juice ; ' Cot. - Lat. mucilago (stem mucilagin-), mouldy moisture; not in White's Lat. Dict., but used by Theodorus Priscianus (iv. 1), a physician of the 4th century. Extended from mucilus*, an adj. formed from mucus; see Mucus. Der. mucilagin-ous (from the stem).

MUCK, filth, dung, dirt. (Scand.) M. E. muck; spelt muck, Gower, C. A. ii. 290, l. 3; muc, Genesis and Exodus, ed. Morris, 2557. (Stratmann also refers to Havelok, 2301, but the ref. is wrong.) - Icel. myki, dung ; whence myki-reka, a muck-rake, dungshovel; cf. moka, to shovel dung out of a stable. + Dan. mög, dung. Cf. Swed. mocka, to throw dung out of a stable, like prov. E. to much out. ¶ Not allied to A.S. meox, dung, whence prov. E. missen, a dung-heap, which seems to go with A. S. migan, Icel. miga, the same as Lat. mingere, Skt. mik. See Mist. Dor. muck-y, mucki-ness ; muck-keap, muck-rake (Bunyan's Pilg. Progress).

MUCK, AMUCK, a term applied to malicious rage. (Malay.) Only in the phrase 'to run amuch;' the word has been absurdly turned into a much. Dryden goes further, and inserts an adjective between muck and the supposed article ! 'And runs an Indian muck at all he meets;' Hind and Panther, iii. 1188. To run amuck is to run about in a mad rage. - Malay ámuk, 'engaging furiously in battle, attacking with desperate resolution, rushing in a state of frenzy to the commission of indiscriminate murder, running amuck. It is applied to any animal in a state of vicious rage;' Marsden, Malay Dict. p. 16.

MUCUB, slimy fluid. (L.) The adj. mucous is in older use, the sb. being modern. Sir T. Browne says the chameleon's tongue has 'a mucous and slimy extremity ;' Vulg. Errors, b. iii. c. 21. § 7. - Lat. mucus, muccus, slime from the nose; whence the adj. mucosus, Englished by mucous. + Gk. µûnos, a rare word, allied to µûfa, the discharge from the nose, µburys, snuff of a wick; cf. Gk. anoµbooew  $(=d\pi o \mu u \kappa \cdot y \epsilon w)$ , to wipe the nose; Lat. mungere.  $- \checkmark MUK$ , to cast away; appearing in Skt. muck. to let loose, dismiss, cast, effuse; muk-taka, a missile weapon; Fick, i. 727. Der. muc-ous; and see mucilage, match (2).

MUD, wet, soft earth, mire. (O Low G.) M. E. mud; the dat. mudde occurs in Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, B. 407; see Spec. of Eng., ed. Morris and Skeat, p. 156, l. 407. Not found in A.S. Of Old Low G. origin. - O. Low G. mudde, mud; whence the adj. muddig, muddy, Bremen Wörterbuch; cf. O. Swed. modd, mud (Ihre), Commoner in an extended form ; cf. Du. modder, mud, Swed. modder, mother, lees of wine; Dan. mudder, mud; see Mother (3). 6. The cognate High German form is found in the Bavarian mott, peat, already mentioned as the origin of E. moat; see Moat. This establishes it y. Prob. further related to Icel. móor, muddy as a Teut. word. snowbanks, heaps of snow and ice; to Icel. móda, (1) a large river, (2) mud, as in ' af leiri ok af móðu ' = of earth and mud; and to Icel. mod, refuse of hay.

pollute; Russ. mytite, to disturb, render muddy, whence myte, a muddy place (in water). Der. mudd-y, mudd-i-ly, mudd-i-ness, mudd-le. MUDDLLE, to confuse. (O. Low G.) 'Muddle, to rout with the bill, as geese and ducks do; also, to make tipsy and unfit for business: Kersey, ed. 1715. A frequentative verb, formed with the usual suffix -le, from the sb. mud. Thus to mudd-le is to go often in mud, to dabble in mud; hence, to render water turbid, and, generally, to confuse. Similarly, Dan. muddre, to stir up mud in water, said of a ship, from Dan. mudder, mud. (The G. muddern has the same sense, but is merely borrowed from Low G. or Danish.) See Mud.

MUEZZIN, a Mohammedan crier of the hour of prayer. (Arab.) Spelt muezin in Sir T. Herbert, Travels, ed. 1665, p. 330. - Arab. mu-zin, mu-azzin, 'the public crier, who assembles people to prayers by proclamation from a minaret;' Rich. Dict. p. 1523; mu'azzin, 'the crier of a mosque;' Palmer's Pers. Dict. col. 617. Connected with Arab. azan, the call to prayers, Palmer, col. 17; uzn, the ear, Rich. p. 48, Palmer, col. 17; zzina, he listened, Rich. p. 48. MUFF (1), a warm, soft cover for the hands. (Scand.) Spelt muffe in Minsheu, ed. 1627. Of Scand. origin. - O. Swed. muff, a muff (Ihre); Dan. muffe. + Du. mof. a muff; O. Du. mowe, a sleeve (Hexham) + G. muff, a muff; M. H. G. mouwe, mowe, a s'eeve, esp. a wide-hanging woman's s'eeve (Wackernagel). + O. Fries. mouse, a hanging sleeve; Low G. mouse, a sleeve (Bremen Wörter-buch). B. The old sense is 'a sleeve,' esp. a long hanging sleeve such as was worn by women, in which the hands could be wrapped in cold weather. Fick gives the Teut. type as MOWA, a sleeve, iii. 225; and cites Lithuan. uz.mowd, a muff, derived from Lith. mauti, to strip, whence uz-mauti, to strip up, tuck up; see Nesselmann, Y. He further compares Lith. manti with Lat. mourre, If this be right, the word is derived from the verb which p. 389. to move. appears in E. as move; see Move. But the connection is hard to perceive. Der. muff-le, q. v. MUFF (2), a silly fellow, simpleton. (E.) A prov. E. word, of imitative origin. It simply means 'a numbler' or indistinct speaker. Cf. prov. E. muff, muffle, to mumble (Halliwell); muffle, to do any-thing ineffectually; id. So also prov. E. muffle, to speak indistinctly. an old word, occurring in Richard the Redeles, ed. Skeat, iv. 63: 'And somme maffiel with the mouth, and nyst [knew not] what they mente." A muff knows not what he means. Cf. Du. muffen, to dote; prov. G. muffen, to be sulky (Flügel). See Mumble.

MUFFLE, to cover up warmly. (F.,-O. Low G.) Levins, ed. 1570, gives: 'A muffle, focale [i.e. a neck-cloth]; to muffle the face, velare; to muffle the mouth, obturare;' col. 184. 'I muffyll, je emmouffle;' Palsgrave. Only the verb is now used, but it is derived, from the sb. here given. -O. F. moste, most (13th cent., Littré); the same as mouffle, which Cot. explains by 'a winter mittaine.'-O. Du. moffel, 'a muff, or muffe lined with furre; 'Hexham. Cf. Norweg. β. It is clear that muff-le, sb., muffel, a half-glove, mitten; Aasen. is a mere dimin. of muff, with the common Teut. dimin. suffix -el (-le). The Low Lat. muffula, a winter glove (whence F. moufle, Span. mufla), is a mere borrowing from Teutonic. Y. From the sb. muffle came the verb to muffle, in common use owing to analogy with the B. To numerous frequentative verbs ending in -le. See Muff (1). muffle a bell is to wrap a cloth round the clapper; a muffled peal is a peal rung with such bells, rung on the 31st of December. At mid-night, the muffles are taken off, and the New Year is rung in. Hence the phrase 'a muffled sound ;' the sense of which approaches that of prov. E. muffle, to mamble, from a different source, as explained

MUFTI, an expounder of the law, magistrate. (Arab.) In Sir T. Herbert's Travels, ed. 1665, pp. 175, 285; spelt mufici, Howell, Directions for Travel, ed. Arber, p. 85. - Arab. mufti, 'a magistrate' (Palmer, col. 590); 'wise, one whose sentence has the authority of the law, an expounder of the Muhammedan law, the mufti or head law-officer amongst the Turks;' Rich. Dict. p. 1462. Connected with fotwá, 'a judicious or religious decree pronounced by a mufti, a judgment, sentence;' id. p. 1070. The phrase 'in mufti' means in civilian costume, as opposed to military dress, MUG, a kind of cup for liquor. (C.) 'A mugge, potte, Ollula;' Levins, 184. 24. Household utensils are sometimes Celtic, as noggin, piggin (sometimes shortened to pig); and the like. Probably of Celtic origin; cf. Irish mugan, a mug; mucog, a cup.  $\beta$ . On the other hand, a Swed, mugg, a mug, is given in the Tauchnitz Swed. B. On the Dict., but not in Widegren or Ihre; perhaps that also is of Celtic origin. It is difficult to decide, for want of materials.

MUGGY, damp and close, said of weather. (Scand.) Both a low and ice; to Icel. mode, (1) a large river, muggy and muggisk are in Ash's Dict., ed. 1775. – Icel. mugga, soft drizzling mist; whence mugguvedr, muggy, misty weather. Cf. MUGWORT, the name of a wild flower. (E.) Spelt mogworts in Palsgrave. A.S. mucgwyri, the Artemisia ; see numerous examples of the word in Cockayne's A.S. Leechdoms, iii. 339. It plainly means 'midge-wort;' see Midge. Perhaps regarded as being good against midges; cf. floo-bane. MULBERRY, the fruit of a certain tree. (Hybrid; L. and E.) NULBERRY, the fruit of a certain tree. (Hybrid; L. and E.) 1. 4. Here the l, as is so often the case, stands for an older r; the A.S. name for the tree was mor-beam; see Cockayne's A.S. Leechdoms, iii. 339. Morus, vel rubus, morbeam; "Ælfric's Gloss., Nomins Arborum, in Wright's Vocab. i. 32, col. 2. [The A.S. beam, a tree, is mod. E. beam.] β. Berry is an E. word; mul = M.E. mool = A.S. mor-. The A.S. mor- is from Lat. morus, a mulberry-\beta. Berry is an E. word; mul = M.E. tree. The Gk. µŵpor, µópor, a mulberry, µopía, a mulberry-tree, are rather cognate than the orig. of the Lat. word. Y. Root unknown. The G. maulbeers is similarly compounded, from Lat. morus and G. beere. See Sycamore. Der. murrey.

MULCT, a fine, penalty. (L.) Given as a sb. in Minsheu, ed. 1627.-Lat. muleta, a fine, penalty; whence also O. F. multe (Cotgrave). The older and better Lat. form is multa. Root unknown. Der. mulct. vb.

MULE, the offspring of the horse and ass. (L.) M.E. mule, Rob. of Glouc. p. 189, l. 3. - A. S. mul; 'Mulus, mul,' Ælfric's Gloss., Nomina Ferarum, in Wright's Voc. i. 23. - Lat. mūlus. B. The long " points to a loss of c; the word is cognate with Gk. uverlos, an ass, μύχλοs, a stallion ass; we also find μύκλα, μύκλοs, a black stripe on the neck and feet of the ass. Perhaps allied to Gk. µáxλos, lewd. Der. mul-isk; mul-et-eer, spelt muleter in old edd. of Shakespeare, 1 Hen. VI, iii. 2. 68, from F. muletier, 'a muletor' (Cot.), which from F. mulet, 'a moyle, mulet, or great mule' (id.), formed with suffix -et from F. mule = Lat. mulum, acc. of mulus. Also mul-atto, one of mixed breed, the offspring of black and white parents, in Sir T. Herbert, Travels, ed. 1665, p. 116, from Span. mulato, by-form of muleto, a young mule, a mulatto, cognate with F. mulet.

MULLED, a term applied to sweetened ale or wine. (E.) Corrupted from mould, as will appear. From this term has been evolved the verb to mull, to sweeten ale or wine; but this is modern, and due to a total loss of the orig. sense of the word. The older term is mulled ale, a corruption of muld-ale, or mold-ale, lit. a funeral ale or banquet. [It must be remembered that M. E. ale meant a feast or banquet; see Bridal.] M.E. 'mold-ale, mold ale, Potacio funerosa vel funeralis;' Prompt. Parv. p. 341; see the account of funeral entertainments in Brand's Popular Antiquities. Cf. Lowland Sc. mulde-mete, lit. mould meat, a funeral banquet; Jamieson. For further proof that mulde = mould, cf. Lowland Sc. muldes, mools, pulverised earth, esp. the earth of the grave; mule, mool, to crumble; Jamieson. Note also Icel. mold, earth, pl. moldar, a funeral. See Mould. B. It is easy to see how the word took up a new sense, viz. by confusion with M.E. mullen, to break to powder, crumble (Prompt. Parv. p. 348), and the sb. mullen, to break to powder, crumble (Prompt. Parv. p. 348), and the sb. mull, powder, the sense of which was transferred (as Way suggests) to the 'powdered condi-ments' which the ale contained, esp. grated spices, and the like. C. It is remarkable that this confusion did not much affect the transference of the first sense. etymology; for the M.E. mull, powder, is only another form of mould, which is still spelt mull in Swedish.

MULLLEIN, a kind of wild flower. (E.) The great mullein is Verbassum thapsus. Spelt mullein in Minsheu, ed. 1627. M.E. moleys, Prompt. Parv. – A.S. molegn, mullen; in Cockanne's A.S. Leechdoms, iii. 339; cf. Wright's Voc. i. 290, l. 34.  $\beta$ . The suffix egn (=ign) is due to a combination of the Aryan suffixes -ka and -na. It occurs again in holegn, holly; and the prov. E. hollen or bollin (holly) is formed from holegn (with loss of g) just as mullein or mullen is formed from molegn. The weakening of g explains the i in the form mullein. Thus the word is certainly E., and the F. molène is borrowed from it. Y. One kind of mullein is called moth-mullein (Verbascum blattaria, from blatta, a moth), from a notion that it was good against moths; cf. "Herbe aux mites, mothmullein;' Cot This renders very plausible the suggestion (in Diefenbach) of a derivation from the old Teutonic word preserved in Goth. malo, a moth (Matt. vi. 29), and in Dan. möl, a moth. Cf. G.

mottenkraut, moth-mullein (Wedgwood). MULILET (1), a kind of fish. (F., - L.) M. E. molet; 'Molet, fysche, Mullus;' Prompt. Parv. Older form mulet, occurring as a gloss to Lat. mulus in a list of fishes of the 12th cent.; see Wright's Vocab. i. 98, 1. 1. - O. F. mulet, 'the mullet-fish;' Cot. Formed, with dimin. suffix -et, from Lat. mullus, late Lat. mulus, the red mullet. Root unknown. [+]

A terry We find also Dan. muggen, musty, mouldy, mugne, to grow musty. ed. 1674. A row in heraldry. = O.F. molette, a rowel; 'molette Not improbably allied to Muck; cf. prov. E. moky, misty (Lincoln-bire) Halliwell. Day, mugginess. Cf. O. Ital. molette, head of a wind cf. O. Ital. molette 'mullets, nippers, or fire-tongs,' Florio; dimin. of molla, 'a wheel of "mullets, nipped and the rest, "id. Again, Ital. molia is another a clock that most all the rest, id. Again, Ital. motta is another form of Ital. moda, 'a mill-stone, grinding-stone, wheel;' id. - Lat. mola, a mill. See Molar, Mill. The transference of sense was from 'wheel of a water-mill' to any wheel, including the spur-rowel, which the mullet resembled. Perhaps the F. word was borrowed from the Ital. instead of directly from the Latin.

MULLION, an upright division between the lights of windows. (F., -L.) A corruption of munnion, with the same sense, which is still in use in Dorsetshire; Halliwell. It occurs in some edd. of Florio; see below. - F. moignon, 'a stump, or the blunt end of a thing; moignon des ailes, the stumps, or pinions of the wings; moignon du bras, the brawn, or brawny part of the arm; 'Cot. β. Hence munnion, just as O. F. troignon gives E. trunnion. Cf. O. Ital. mugnone, B. Hence a carpenter's munnion or trunnion, Florio (as cited by Wedgwood); it is not in the ed. of 1598. As Wedgwood well observes, 'the munnion or mullion of a window is the stump of the division before it breaks off into the tracery of the window.' It clearly took its name from the likeness to the stump of a lopped tree, which is one of the senses of F. moignon; see Littré. The word also occurs as Span. munion, the brawn or muscle of the arm, the stump of an arm or leg cut off; Port. munkões, pl. of munkão, the trunnions of a gun. Further allied to Span. muñeca, the wrist, Port. munheca. Y. From O. F. moing, maimed (Diez, 4th ed. p. 725). Diez cites only the Breton moni, mon, mutilated in the hand or arm. But Legonidec, in his Breton Dict., says that the forms mank, monk, and mons occur in the same sense; and it seems to me likely that the Bret. mank, clearly the oldest form, is cognate with Lat. mancus, maimed, mutilated. And when Diez rightly derives trunnion (O. F. troignon) from O. F. tronc ( = Ital. tranco), we can hardly be wrong in connecting munnion (O. F. moignon) with Ital. monco, maimed, which of course is the Lat. mancus. 8. Whatever irregularities there may be in the one case are the same as in the other, with the exception of the vowel. But this need not prevent us from identifying Ital. monco with mancus, though the more usual form is manco. The fact is that the nasal n is apt to turn a into o. as in E. long, from A.S. lang, corresponding to which is Lat. longue. For the change from n to l, cf. Boulogne from Bononia, and Ital. alma from Lat. anima.

MULTANGULAR, having many angles. (L.) In Kersey, ed. 1715. - Lat. mult-, stem of multus, many; and angularis, angular. See Multitude and Angular. ¶ Similarly, multi-lateral, from See Multitude and Angular. multi = multo-, crude form of multus, and E. lateral, q.v. So also multi-form.

MULTIFARIOUS, manifold, diversified. (L.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674; he says it occurs in Bacon. Englished (by change of -us to -ous, as in ardu-ous, &cc.) from Lat. multifarius, manifold, various. The orig. sense appears to be ' many-speaking,' i. e. speaking on many subjects. - Lat. multi- multo-, crude form of multas, much; and -farius, prob. connected with fari, to speak. Cf. the rare word fariari, to speak. See Multitude and Fate.

MULTIFILE, repeated many times. (L.) In Kersey, ed. 1715. A coined word, analogous to tri-ple, quadru-ple, &c., the suffix being due to the Lat. suffix -plen; see Multiply.

MULTIPLY, to increase many times, make more numerous. (F., -L.) M.E. multiplien, Chaucer, C. T. 16303. He also has multiplying, sb., C. T. 12308; and multiplication, C. T. 16317. - F. multiplier, 'to multiply;' Cot. - Lat. multiplicare, to render manifold. - Lat. multiplic-, stem of multiplex, manifold. - Lat. multi- = multo-, stem of multus, much; and the suffix plex, answering to E. fold. See Multitude and Complex, Plait, Fold. Der. multiplic-and, from the fut. pass. part. multiplicandus; multiplic-at-ion, from F. multiplication = Lat. acc. multiplicationem; multiplic-at-ive; multiplier; multiplic-i-ty, Drayton, The Mooncalf (R.)

MULTITUDE, a great number, a crowd. (F,-L.) M.E. multitude, Gower, C. A. i. 220. - F. multitude, 'a multitude ;' Cot. -Lat. multitudinem, acc. of multitudo, a multitude. Formed (with suffix -tudo) from multi- = multo-, crude form of multus, many, much. Root unknown. Der. multitudin-ous, Macb. ii. 2. 62, from the stem multitudin-MUM, an interjection, impressing silence. (E.) In Shak. Temp. iii. 2. 59. M.E. mom, mum, expressive of the least possible sound with the lips; P. Plowman, B. prol. 215; Lydgate, London Lyck-peny, st. 4, in Spec. of. Eng. ed. Skeat, p. 24. So also Lat. ms, Gk.  $\mu\hat{\nu}$ , the least sound made with the lips; Skt. man, to murmur. Evidently of imitative origin. Der. mum-ble; and see mummer. Compare mew, murmur. mutter, myth.

MUMBLE, to speak indistinctly, to chew inefficiently. (E.) The b is excrescent, and due to emphasis; the final -le is the usual fre-MULLET (2), a five-pointed star. (F.,-L.) In Blount's Gloss. | quentative ending. M. E. momelen, mameles, to speak indistinctly or

Du. ficence and munificent are in Minsheu, ed. 1627. The sb. is the more mommelen, G. mummeln, to mutter, mumble; similarly formed. Also MOMMER, C. Mummer, to mutter, mumble; similarly formed. Also Dan. mumle, Swed. mumla, to mumble. Der. mumbl-er, mumbl-ing. MUMMER, a masker, buffoon. (F., -Du.) 'That goeth a mummynge;'Tyndall, Works, p. 13, col. 2, l. 1. 'As though he came in in a mummary;'Sir T. More, Works, p. 975 b. 'Made prouysyon for a dysguysynge or a mummynge;' Fabyan's Chron. an. 1399-1400. 'Mommery, mommerie;' Palsgrave. This early use of the F. form mummery shews that we took the word through the French, though it was orige a Dutch or Platt denisch word. Cotorave gives though it was orig. a Dutch or Platt-deutsch word. Cotgrave gives, however, no verb; but this was easily developed. - O. F. mommeur, 'a mummer, one that goes a mumming;' also mommerie, 'a mum-mery, a mumming;' Cot. - O. Du. mommen, 'to goe a moming, or in a maske; 'also mom, mommer, or mommeraus, 'a mommer, or a masker;' also mommerye, 'momming, or masking' (with F. suffix); Hexham. He also gives mom-aensicht, 'a vizard, or a mommers vizard.' Cf. Low G. mummeln, bemummeln, to mask, mumme, a mask; Bremen Wörterbuch. (Hence G. vermummen, to mask.)  $\beta$ , The origin is imitative, from the sound mum or mom, used by nurses to frighten children, like the E. bo / See Wedgwood, who refers to the habit of nurses who wish to frighten or amuse children, and for this purpose cover their faces and say mum! or bol whence the notion of masking to give amusement. Cf. G. mummel, a bugbear. Thus the origin is much the same as in the case of mum, mumble; see Mum. Der. mummer-y.

MUMMY, an embalmed human body. (F., - Ital., - Pers.) Formerly used of stuff derived from mummies. Mumy, Mummy, a thing like pitch sold by the apothecaries ; . . one [kind] is digged out of the graves, in Arabia and Syria, of those bodies that were embalmed, and is called Arabian Mummy; 'Blount's Gloss...ed. 1674. 'Mummy hath great force in stanching blood; 'Bacon, Nat. Hist. § 980. - O. F. mumie, 'mummy; man's flesh imbalmed; or rather the third measurement is back by the standard of the standar the stuffe wherewith it hath been long imbalmed;' Cot. - Ital. mummia (cf. Span. momia). - Pers. mumáyin, a mummy. - Pers. múm, mom, wax (much used in embalming); Rich. Dict. p. 1529. [†] MUMP, to mumble, sulk, whine, beg. (Du.) A mumper was an old cant term for a beggar; and to mump was to beg, also to be sulky; see Nares, ed. Halliwell and Wright. The original notion was to mumble, hence to mutter, be sulky, to beg; used derisively with various senses. 'How he mumps and bridles!' where the sense appears to be 'grimaces;' Beaum. and Fletcher, iii. 2 (Pedro). - Du. mompen, to mump, to cheat (Sewel). Cf. O. Du. mompelen, to mumble (Sewel); mommelen, mompelen, to mumble (Hexham). B. The form mompelen is nothing but an emphasised form of mommelen, and mompen of mommen, to say mum, to mask. That is, mump is merely a strengthened form of the imitative word mum; see Mum, Mumble. Mummer. The curious Goth. verb bi-mamp-jan, to deride, mock at, Luke, xvi. 14, has a similar origin. Der. mump-er, mumpisk (sullen); mumps, q. v.

MUMPS, a swelling of the glands of the neck. (Du.) This troublesome disease renders speaking and eating difficult, and gives the patient the appearance of being sullen or sulky. To have the mumps' or 'to be in the mumps' was, originally, to be sullen; the sense was easily transferred to the disease which gave such an appearance. It is derived from the verb Mump, q.v. We find mumps used as a term of derision. 'Not such another as I was, mumps!' Beaum. and Fletcher, Sconful Lady, v. 1 (Elder Loveless). 'Sick o' the mumps,' i.e. sulky; B. and F., Bonduca, i. a (Petillins), near the end. MUNCH, to chew, masticate. (E.) In Macb. i. 3. 5 (where old edd. have mounch'd). M. E. monchen, Chaucer, Troil, i. 915. Monch-answers to an older form mank-, evidently an imitative word parallel to the base mam- in M. E. mamelen, to mumble; see Mumble. ¶ We cannot deduce it from F. manger, for phonetic reasons; yet it is quite possible that this common F. word may have helped to suggest the special sense. The F. manger is from Lat. manducare, to chew, extended from manducus, a glutton, which is from mandere, to chew; see Mandible. Der. munch-er.

MUNDANE, worldly. (F.,-L.) Taken from F., but now spelt as if from Latin. 'For folowinge of his pleasaunce mondayne;' Skelton, Book of Three Fooles, ed. Dyce, i. 205. - F. mondain, 'mundane;' Cot.-Lat. mundanus, worldly.-Lat. mundus, the world (lit. order, like Gk. κόσμος). - Lat. mundus, clean. adorned. - MAND, to adorn; preserved in Skt. mand, to dress, adorn.

MUNICIPAL, pertaining to a township or corporation. (F., -L.) In Cotgrave. - F. municipal, 'municipall;' Cot. - Lat. municipalis, belonging to a municipium, i.e. a township which received the rights of Roman citizenship, whilst retaining its own laws.-Lat. municipi-, crude form of municeps, a free citizen, lit. one who takes office or undertakes duties. - Lat. muni- (see Munificence) and sapers, to take; see Capture. Der. municipal-i-iy.

orig. word. - F. munificence, 'munificence;' Cot. - Lat. munificentia, bounty, bountifulness. Formed as if from a pres. pt. munificent.*; from a verb munificere *; but the only related word found is the adj. munificus, bountiful, liberal, formed upon mun-, base of munus, a duty, a present. and facere, to make ; so that mani-ficus = present-making. [The verb munificare is a mere derivative of munificus.] 8. For the verb facere, see Fact. The Lat. munus signifies orig. 'obligation;' from ~ MU, to bind, whence also E. munition, muniment, com-mon, com-mune, com-muni-c-ate, im-muni-ty, re-muner-ate. See below. Der. munificent, coined to suit the sb.; muni-ficent-ly.

MUNIMENT, a defence, a record of a claim, title-deed. (F.,-L.) In Shak. muniments means expedients or instruments; Cor. i. 1. 122. - F. muniment, 'a fortifying; also used in the sense of munition; Cot. - Lat. munimentum, a defence, safeguard. Formed with suffix -mentum from muni-re, to fortify, put for moenire, lit. to furnish with a wall. - Lat. moenia, neut. pl., ramparts, walls, defences. - & MU, to bind, hence, to protect ; cf. Skt. mu, mav, to bind. See munition.

MUNITION, materials used in war; also, a fortress. (F.,-L In Isaiah, xxix. 7, xxxiii. 16; and in Shak. K. John, v. 2. 98.-F. munition, 'munition, store, provision, provant or victuals for an army;' Cot. - Lat. munitionem, acc. of munitio, a blockading, defending, securing. - Lat. munitus, pp. of munire, to fortify. See Muniment. Der. am-munition.

MUNNION, the older and correct form of Mullion, q. v.

MURAL, belonging to a wall. (F., - L.) 'He [Manlius Capitolinus]... was honoured with a murall crown of gold;' Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. vii. c. 28. - F. mural, 'murall, of or belonging to a wall;' Cot. - Lat. muralis, mural. - Lat. murus, a wall; O. Lat. β. Probably akin to moenia, walls; from  $\checkmark$  MU, moerns, moirus. to bind; hence, to protect. See Muniment. Der. im-mure. MURDER, MURTHER, wilful killing of another man. (E.)

M. E. mordre, morder; Chaucer, C. T. 15057. Also morthre, Rob. of Glouc, p. 560, 1.9. - A. S. mordor, mordur, Grein, ii. 263. + Goth. B. The word appears without a suffix in A.S. and maurthr. O. Sax. moro, O. Friesic mor.k, mord, G. mord, Icel. mord, death, murder, cognate with Lat. mors (stem mort-), death; see Mortal. Der. murder, vb., M. E. mortAeren, P. Plowman, B. xvii. 278; murder-er; murder-ess, spelt mordrice in Gower, C. A. i. 351, last line; murder-ous or murther-ous, Macb. ii. 3. 147; murder-ous-ly.

MURIATIC, briny, pertaining to brine. (L.) In Johnson. -Lat. muriaticus, pickled or lying in brine. - Lat. muria, salt liquor, brine, pickle. β. Prob. related to Lat. mare, the sea; see Mere (1)

MURICATED, prickly. (L.) 'Muricated, in botany, prickly, full of sharp points; Ash's Dict., ed. 1775. - Lat. muricatus, adj. of the form of a pp. formed from muric-, stem of mures, a fish having MURKY, MIRKY, dark, obscure, gloomy. (E.) The -y is a modern addition. 'Hell is murky;' Macb. v. I. 41. M. E. mirke, merke. 'The merke dale;' P. Plowman, B. i. I. 'The mirke nith' (night]; Havelok, 404.-A.S. murc, murce, murce, murky, dark; Grein, ii. 269, 271.+O. Sax. murki, dark.+ Icel. murky, dark; Swed. mörk. B. The form of the word, according to Fick, iii. 234, is such as to remind us of Lithuan. margas, striped, variegated, which is certainly related to E. mark; in which case, the orig, sense was covered with marks, streaky, parti-coloured. See Mark (1). y. But we can hardly overlook the Russ. mrake, gloom, mrachite, to darken, obscure; though the final letters of the stem do not quite snit. 8. The form of the root appears to be MARG; it is remarkable that the shorter form MAR, to rub, grind, is the root of Skt. malas, dirty, Gk.  $\mu i$  as, black, Skt. malas, obscure, Lithuan. milinas, livid blue, &c. These certainly seem to be related words; and even E. mark is of the same family. •. Otherwise, from ✓ MAR, to glimmer; see Morn. Der. murki-ly, murki-ness.

MURMUR, a low muttering sound; to mutter, complain in a low voice. (F., - L.) M. E. murmur, sb., Chaucer, C. T. Pers. Tale, De Invidia; murmuren, vb., id. 10518. - F. murmure, 'a murmure;' also murmurer, 'to murmure;' Cot. - Lat. murmur, a murmur; whence the verb murmurare. + Gk. μορμύρειν, to rush and roar as water. + Skt. marmara, the rustling sound of the wind. B. Evidently a reduplicated form from the imitative ~MAR or MUR, expressive of a rustling noise; as in Icel. murra, G. murren, to murmur. Der. murmur-ous, Pope, tr. of Odyssey, b. xx. 1. 19. MURRAIN, an infectious disease among cattle. (F., -L.) M.E. moreyne, moreine, P. Plowman, C. iv. 97.-O. F. moreine*, not found; closely allied to O.F. morine, a carcase of a beast, a malady or murrain among cattle. See Roquefort, who cites an O.F. translation of Levit. xi. 8; 'tu eschiveras mortes morines '= thou shalt eschew dead carcases.' Cf. Span. morrina, Port. morrinha, murrain.=O.F. Mortal MURREY, dark red; obsolete. (F., -L.) 'The leaves of some trees turn a little murray or reddish;' Bacon, Nat. Hist. § 512. Spelt murrey ; Palsgrave. - O. F. morée, 'a kind of murrey, or dark red colour;' Cot. This O. F. morée answers to a Low Lat. more and of moratus. We actually find Low Lat. moratum in the sense of moratus. We actually find Low Lat. moratum in the sense of moratus. a kind of drink, made of thin wine coloured with mulberries; see Ducange. Cf. Ital. morato, mulberry-coloured, from Ital. mora, a mulberry; Span. morado, mulberry-coloured, from Span. mora. Hence the derivation is from Lat. morus, a mulberry; and the sense is properly 'mulberry-coloured.' See Mulberry; MURRION, another spelling of Morion, q. v. MUSCADEL, MUSCATEL, MUSCADINE, a rich, fragrant wine, a fragrant pear. (F., - Ital., - L., - Pers., - Skt.) Shak. has muscodel, a wine, Tam. Shrew. iii. 2. 174. 'Muscodell, mulsum apianum;' Levins. Spelt muscadine, Beaum. and Fletcher, Loyal Subject, iii. 4, last line. And see Nares. - O. F. muscadel, 'the wine muscadell or muscadine;' Cot. - O. Ital. moscadello, moscatello, 'the wine muscadine; 'moscardino, 'a kinde of muska comfets, the name of a kind of grapes and peares;' moscadini, 'certaine grapes, peares, and apricocks, so called;' Florio. Dimin. forms from O. Ital. moscato, 'sweetened or perfumed with muske; also the wine muskadine;' id. -O. Ital. muschio, musco, 'muske; also, a muske or civet cat;' id.-Lat. muscus, musk ; see Musk.

MUSCLE (1), the fleshy parts of the body by which an animal moves.  $(F_{\cdot,-}-L)$  Sir T. Elyot has the pl. muscules; Castel of Helth, b. ii. c. 33. But this is a Latinised form. Spenser has muscles, Astrophel, 120. – F. muscle. – Lat. musculum, acc. of musculus, (1) a little mouse, (2) a muscle, from its creeping appearance. Dimin. of mus, a mouse, cognate with E. mouse; see Mouse. Der. muscul-ar, in Kersey, ed. 1715, substituted for the older term musculous (Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674), from Lat. musculosus, muscular.

MUSCLE (2), MUSSEL, a shell-fish. (L.) Really the same word as the above, but borrowed at a much earlier period, and directly from Latin. M. E. muscle, Chaucer, C. T. 7682; P. Plow-man, C. x. 94; which follows the F. spelling. – A.S. muzle; 'Mus-cula, muzle;' and again, 'Geniscula, muzzle;' Wright's Vocab. i. 65. 77. [Here the * (or c*) stands for cs. by metathesis for sc, just as in A. S. áxian for áscian; see Ask.] – Lat. musculus, a small fish, sea-muscle; the same word as musculus, a little mouse; see Muscle (1). ¶ The double spelling of this word can be accounted for; the Lat. musculus became A. S. muscle, early turned into musle, whence E. mussel, the final -el being regarded as the A.S. dimin. suffix. The spelling muscle is French. ( The remarkable change of sense in Lat. musculus from 'little mouse' to 'muscle' has its counterpart in Dan. mus-ling, a muscle (the fish), lit. 'mouse-ling.' Cf. Swed. mus, a mouse; mussla, a muscle (fish); Gk. µŵs, (1) mouse, (2) muscle, in both E. senses. We even find, as Mr. Wedgwood points out, F. souris, ' a mouse, also, the sinewy brawn of the arm ;' Cot. [+] MUSCOID, moss-like. (Hybrid; L., with Gk. suffix.) Botanical. Coined from Lat. musco-, crude form of muscus, moss ; and the Gk. suffix -cions, like, from closs, form. See Moss.

MUSE (1), to meditate, be pensive. (F., -L.) M.E. musen, Chaucer, C. T. 5453; P. Plowman, B. x. 181. [We also find M.E. mosard, musard, a dreamer, Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, pp. 229, ab6; from F. musard, sb. 'a muser, dreamer,' also as adj. 'musarg, dreaming,' &c.; Cot.]-F. muser, 'to muse, dreame, study, pause, linger about a matter;' Cot.-O. F. muse\*, the mouth, snout of an animal; only preserved in the dimin. musel, later museau, whence E. muzzle; see Muzzle.  $\beta$ . Strange as it may seem, this etymology, β. Strange as it may seem, this etymology, given by Diez, is the right one; it is amply borne out by Florio's Ital. Dict., where we find : 'Musars, to muse, to thinke, to surmise, also to muzle, to muffle, to mocke, to iest, to gape idlie about, to hould ones muzle or snout in the aire.' This is plainly from Ital. muso, 'a musle, a snout, a face.' The image is that of a dog snuffing idly about, and musing which direction to take; and may have arisen as a hunting term.  $[+] \gamma$ . Other derivations, such as from Lat. musinari, to meditate, or from O. H. G. muazón, to have leisure, or from Lat. mussare, to mutter, are (phonetically) incorrect. Der. mus-er, a-muse.

MUSE (a), one of the nine fabled goddesses who presided over the arts.  $(F_{.,-}L_{.,-}Gk.)$  In Shak. Hen. V, prol. I. – F. muse. – Lat. musa, a muse. – Gk.  $\mu o \partial \sigma a$ , a muse. Root uncertain. Der.

Merry Wives, ii. 2, 68. - F. muse, 'musk; Cot. - Lat. muscum, acc. of muscus, musk. - Pers. musk, misk, musk; Rich. Dict. p. 1417; whence also late Gk. µόσχοs, musk.-Skt. mushka, a testicle; because obtained from a bag behind the deer's navel. The orig. sense of Skt. mushka is thief; from mush, to steal. See Mouse. Der. musc-adel, q. v., nut-meg, q. v.; musk-apple, muskrose (from the scent); musk-y. MUSKET, a small hawk; a hand-gun. (F., - Ital., - L.) a. The old guns had often rather fanciful names. One was called the falconet, a dimin. of falcon; another a safer, which was also the name of a hawk; another a basilisk; another a culverin, i.e. snakelike; see Culverin. So also the musket was called after a small hawk of the same name.  $\beta$ . Shak. has musket, a hand-gun; All's Well, iii. 2.111. M. E. musket, spelt muskytte in Prompt. Parv., and explained as a 'byrde.' 'Musket, a lytell hauke, mouchet;' Palsgrave. See Way's note, who remarks that 'the most ancient names of fire-arms were derived from monsters, dragons, or serpents, or from birds of prey, in allusion to velocity of movement.'-O.F. mousquet, 'a musket (hawke, or piece); 'Cot. [Here piece = gun.] [Cotgrave also gives O.F. mouchet, mouschet, 'a musket, the tassel of a sparhauke; also the little singing-bird that resembles the friquet, [which is] a kind of sparrow that keeps altogether about walnut-trees.] -Ital. mosquetto, 'a musket; also, a musket-hawke;' Florio. Y. Just as O. F. mouchet, mouschet, is related to O. F. mouche, mousche, a fly, so Ital. mosquetto is related to Ital. mosca, a fly. The connection is not very obvious, but see the remarks in Scheler, who shews that small birds were sometimes called flies; a clear example is in G. gras-mücke, a hedge-sparrow, lit. a 'grass-midge.' The particular hawk here spoken of was so named from his small size. 5. And this, mere smallness of size, may be the reason for the name of 'fly,' not because of their speckled plumage, as some have supposed; the F. monchester, to speckle, is a longer form than monchest, not the original of it. Ample proofs of this appear in Florio, in the forms of file, the name of a birde; moschetti, 'a kind of sparowes in India, so little, as with feathers and all one is no bigger then [than] a little walnut;' all of which words are derived from mosca. [We may also compare the Span. and E. mosquito.]-Lat. musca, a fly; see Mosquito, Dor. musket-eer, spelt musqueteer in Hudibras, pt. i. c. 2, 1. 567, from O. F. mousquetaire, 'a musketeer, a souldier that serves with a musket;' Cot.; musket-oon, 'a short gun, with a very large bore,' Kersey, ed. 1715, from Ital. moschettone, a blunderbuss : musket-r-y

The Arab. name of the city is Mawsil; Rich. Dict. p. 1526.

MUSSULMAN, a true believer in the Mohammedan faith. Pers., - Arab.) 'The full fed Mussulman;' Dryden, Hind and (Pers., = Arab.) Panther, i. 377. In Richardson's Arab. and Pers. Dict., p. 1418, the form musulmán, an orthodox believer, is marked as Persian. The Arab. form is muslim, answering to E. moslem; see Moslem.

MUST (1), part of a verb implying 'obligation.' (E.) This verb is extremely defective; nothing remains of it but the past tense, which does duty both for past and present. The infinitive (mote) is obsolete; even in A.S. the infin. (motan) is not found. But the present tense is common in the Middle-English period. M. E. mot, moot, pres. t., I am able, I can, I may, I am free to, very seldom with the sense of obligation; pt. t. moste (properly dissyllabic), I could, I might, I In Shak. ought. 'As cuer moot I drinken wyn or ale'= as sure as I can (or bope to be free to) drink wine or ale; Chaucer, C. T. 834. In Ch. & MUTE (1), dumb. (F.,-L.) M. E. muet, Chaucer, Troilus, v. C. T. 734, 737, 740, 742, Tyrwhitt has wrongly changed moot into 194.-F. muet, 'dumbe;' Cot.-Lat. mutum. acc. of mutus, dumb. C. T. 734, 737, 740, 742, Tyrwhith has wrongly changed moot into moote, against both the MSS. and the metre. The right readings are: 'He moot reherse' - he is bound to relate; 'he moot telle' = he will be sure to tell; 'He moot as wel' = he is bound as well; 'The moote against both the moot action of the moot telle' = he will wordes more be' = the words should be. The pt. t. moste, muste occurs in 1. 712; 'He muste preche '= he will have to preach; where many MSS. have the spelling moste. - A.S. mo:an*, not used in the infinitive; pres. t. ie mot, I am able, I may, can, am free to, seldom with the sense of obligation; pt. t. ic moste; see Grein, ii. 265. + O. Fries. pres. t. ik mot; pt. t. ik moste. + Du. moeten, to be obliged; pres. t. ik moet, pt. t. ik moest. + Swed. maste, I must, both as pres. and pt. tense; so that the similar use in E. may be partly due to Scand. influence. + G. müssen, M. H. G. muezen, O. H. G. mozan, of which the old sense was ' to be free to do' a thing, to be allowed ; pres. t. ich muss ; pt. t. ich musste. + Goth. motan*, not found ; pres. t. ik mot, pt. t. ik mosta. B. Root uncertain; it may be connected with meet, moot; but this is not at all made out.

MUST (2), new wine. (L.) In early use. M. E. must, most; P. Plowman, B. xviii. 368; Layamon, 8723.-A.S. must, in a gloss (Bosworth). - Lat. mustum, new wine ; neut. of mustus, young, fresh, new : whence also E. moist. See Moist. Der. must-ard.

MUSTACHE, MUSTACHIO; see Moustache.

MUSTARD, a condiment made from a plant with a pungent taste. (F., - L. : with Teut. suffix.) M. E. mustard, Prompt. Parv.; mostard, Ayenbite of Inwyt, ed. Morris, p. 143, l. 30.-O.F. mostards (a spelling evidenced by the occurrence of a related word mostaige in Roquefort), later moustarde (Cotgrave), mod. F. moutarde. Cf. Ital. and Port. mostarda, Span. mostaza (with a different suffix). β. The suffix -arde is of Teut. origin ; see Brachet, Introd. to Etym. Dict. § 196. The condiment took its name from the fact that it was made by mixing the pounded seeds of the mustard-plant with must or vinegar (Littre). The name was afterwards given to the plant Y. From O. F. most *, only found in the form itself (Lat. sinapi). moust, mod. F. moult, must. Cf. Ital., Span., and Port. mosto. - Lat. mustwm, must, new wine; see Must (2).

MUSTER, an assembling in force, display, a fair show. (F.,-L.) The E. sb. is older than the verb, and is nearly a doublet of monster. M.E. moustre. 'And the moustre was thretti thousandis of men; Wyclif, 3 Kings, v. 13, earlier version; the later version has summe [sum]. 'And made a gode moustre' = and made a fair show; P. Plowman, B. xiii. 362.-O. F. mostre (13th cent.), another form of O. F. monstre, 'a pattern, also a muster, view, shew, or sight;' Cot. Mod. F. montre, which see in Littré. Cf. Port. mostra, a pattern, sample, muster, review of soldiers, mostrar, to shew; Ital. mostra, a show, review, display, mostrare, to shew. - Low Lat. monstra, a review of troops, show, sample. - Lat. monstrare, to shew. MUSTY, mouldy, sour, spoiled by damp. (L.?) 'Men shall find little fine flowre in them, but all very mustie branne, not worthy so muche as to fede either horse or hogges;' Sir T. More, Works, p. 649 h (not p. 694, as in Richardson). See Hamlet, iii. 2. 359. Of disputed origin; but it is evident that the final -y is the usual E. adjectival suffix, and equally evident that the sb. could only have been must. I see no reason why this may not be the usual E. must in the sense of new wine. This sb. was in very early use (as shewn) and was once common. All that is missing is sufficient historical evidence to shew how the new sense was acquired.  $\beta$ . We know (1) that Chaucer has moisty with respect to ale, C.T. 17000, where he really means musty ale, i. e. new ale; also (2) that moisty and musty are mere doublets from the same source. If moisty may have the sense of musty, there can be no reason why musty should not have the sense of moisty, i. e. damp; whence the senses of mouldy, &c. would easily result. We can further understand that a vessel once filled with must and afterwards emptied might easily leave a scent behind it such as y. Until we have further evidence, I conwe should call musty. fidently reject all other interpretations; though admitting that some confusion with O.F. moisi, explained by Cotgrave as 'mouldy, musty, fusty,' may have taken place. But to derive the word from ¶ It may be added that O. F. moisi is, phonetically, impossible. moisty is used (in the sense of moist) by other authors; Rich. quotes from Brende, Quintus Curtius, fol. 87; and see Ascham, Toxophilus, ed. Arber, p. 156, l. 23. See Moist. Der. must-i-ly, -ness.

MUTABLE, subject to change. (L.) M. E. mutable, Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. iv. pr. 6, l. 3945. - Lat. mutabilis, subject to change. -Lat. mutare, to change; see Moult. Der. mutabili-ty, Chaucer, Troilus, i. 846. Also mut-at-ion, M. E. mutacioun, Chaucer, Boeth. b. i. pr. 6, 1. 689, from F. mutation (Cot.), from Lat. acc. mutationem. Also (from mutare) com-mute, per-mute, trans-mute.

β. The form is that of a pp. from MU, to bind; cf. Skt. mú, mav, to bind, Gk. µveiv, to close; and esp. Skt. muka, dumb, Gk. µvoor. y. Some derive it from the notion of attempting to dumb. mutter low sounds; from the imitative Lat. mu, Gk. µû, a muttered sound. This also may be right, since  $\checkmark$  MU, to bind, may have been of imitative origin, with the notion of speaking with closed lips, muttering. See Mumble, Mutter, Mum. See Curtius, i. 419. Dor. mute-ly, mute-ness; also mutter.

MUTE (2), to dung; used of birds. (F., -O. Low G.) In Tobit, ii. 10 (A.V.)-O.F. mutir, 'to mute, as a hawke;' Cot. A clipped form of O. F. esmeutir, 'to mute, as birds doe;' id. Spelt esmeltir in the 13th cent. (Littré, who strangely fails to give the etymology, which is to be found in Scheler) .- O. Du. smelten, also smilten, to smelt, to liquefy; also used of liquid animal discharge, as very plainly expressed in Hexham. See Smelt. [+]

MUTLATE, to main. (L) Formerly a pp. 'Imperfect or mutilate,' i. e. mutilated; Frith, Works, p. 90, col. 1. – Lat. muti-latus, pp. of mutilare, to main. – Lat. mutilus, maimed. + Gk. µ/ruto diminish, whence also Minish, q. v. Der. mutilation from  $\mathbb{F}$

MUTINY, a rebellion, insurrection, tumult. (F.,-L.) Mutin-y is formed from the old verb to mutine. 'If thou canst mutine in a Is to method the other of mattine. If there were also formed mattine, constructions, the mattine of the standard mattine, construction of the standard mattine, construction of the standard mattine of the standard matchine of the standard mat form O. F. meute, a sedition (Burguy), better known by the mod. F. derivative émeute. The mod. F. meute, though the same word, is only used in the sense of 'a pack of hounds;' answering to Low Lat. mota canum (Ducange). - Low Lat. mota, a pack of hounds, contracted form of movita, a movement, contention, strife. - Lat. mota, fem. of motus (= movitus), pp. of mouere, to move; see Move. y. Thus the orig: sense is 'movement,' well expressed by our 'com-motion.' Parallel forms are O. Ital. mutimo, 'a mutinie' (Florio), mutimare, 'to mutinie' (id.), whence mod. Ital. ammutimarsi, to mutiny; also Span. motim, a mutiny, sedition, Port. motim, a mutiny, mutiny and part forms are important for cheming the vowel-sound. Der. mutiny, verb, As You Like It, i. 1. 24; mutin-er (as above), mutin-ter (as above), mutin-ous (as above), mutin-ous-ly, mutin-ous-ness. MUTTER, to murmur, speak in a low voice. (E.) M. E. muttren, Chaucer, Troil. i. 542. Also moteren, whence the pres. part. moteringe, used to tr. Lat. mussitantes, Wyclif, 2 Kings, xii. 19. The word is rather E. than borrowed from Lat. mutire, to mutter. To be divided as mot-er-en, where -er is the usual frequentative verbal suffix, and mol- or mut- is an imitative sound, to express inar-ticulate mumbling; see Mum. Cf. prov. G. mustern, to whisper, similarly formed from a base must-; Lat. mut-ire, muts-ire, muss-are, to mutter, muttum, a muttered sound ; &c.

MUTTON, the flesh of sheep. (F., -C.) M. E. motoun (with one t), spelt motous in Prompt. Parv. In P. Plowman, B. iii. 24, the word motour means a coin of gold, so called because stamped with the image of a sheep. The older spelling molton is in Gower, C. . A. i. 39. - O. F. moton (mod. F. mouton), a sheep; a still older spelling is molion (Burguy). - Low Lat. mulionem, acc. of mulio, a sheep, also a gold coin (as in P. Plowman). Cf. Ital. montone, 'a ram, a mutton,' Florio ; where n is substituted for l, preserved in the Venetian form molecone, cited by Diez. β. Of Celtic origin; as shewn by Irish and Manx mole, Gael. mult, W. molle, Bret. moout, ment (for mole?), a wether, sheep. Root unknown. Y. Diez cites mod. Prov. mout, Como mot, Grisons mutt, castrated, which he thinks are corruptions from Lat. mutilus, mutilated, imperfect, which would be cut down to mutlus, and would then pass into multus. See Mutilate. Compare (says Diez) mod. Prov. cabro mouto, a goat deprived of its horns, which in old Prov. would have been cabra mouta, exactly answering to capra mutila in Columella, and to the Swiss form muttli, with the same sense. ¶ The Celtic solution is surely the simpler. Der. mutton-chop. [+] MUTUAL, reciprocal, given and received. (F., -L.) 'Conspyracy and mutuall promise; Sir T. More, Works, p. 1019 c. - O. F. mutuël, 'mutuall, reciprocal;' Cot. Extended from Lat. mutu-us, mutual, by help of the suffix -el (= Lat. -alis).  $\beta$ . The orig. sense is 'exchanged;' from Lat. mutare, to change; see Mutable, Cf. mort-u-us, from the base mort-. MUZZLE, the snout of an animal. (F.,-L.) M. E. mosel, Chaucer, C. T. 2153. - O. F. mosel\*, not found; later form musel (Burguy), whence museau, 'the muzzle, snout, or nose of a beast;' Cc

O. French; but (as Diez shews) a still older form morsel is indicated by the Bret. morzeel, which (like Bret. muzel) means 'muzzle,' and is merely a borrowed word from O. French. β. Again, the Pro-vençal (according to Diez) not only has the form mus, but also mursel, in which the r is again preserved; but it is lost in Ital. muso, the muzzle, and in the E. MIUSO (1).  $\gamma$ . The O. F. morsel thus indicated is a dimin. (with suffix -el) from a form mors; cf. Ital. muso, standing for an older morso, which must have meant 'muzzle' as well as 'bit, bridle, or snaffle for a horse' (Florio). Cf. F. mors, 'a bitt, or biting;' Cot. - Low Lat. morsus, (1) a morsel, (2) a buckle, (3) remorse, (4) a beak, snout, in which sense it is found A. D. 1309; Lat. morsus, a bite, a tooth, clasp of a buckle, grasp, fluke of an anchor. Mupudores, a warlike people of Thessaly, formerly in Ægina (Homer). There was a fable (to account for the name) that the Myrmidons were ants changed into men; Ovid, Met. vii. 635-654. Cf. Gk. μυρμηδών, an ant's nest; μύρμηξ, an ant, cognate with Pers. múr, Lat. formica.

MYRRH, a bitter aromatic gum. (F., - L., - Gk., - Arab.) M. E. mirre, Ancren Riwle, p. 372, I. 7; now adapted to the Lat. spelling. - O. F. mirre (11th cent.); mod. Englished from Lat. mysterium, Rom. xvi. 25 (Vulgate). = Gk. μυστήριον, Rom. xvi. 25. - Gk. μύστηs, one who is initiated. - Gk. pueir, to initiate into mysteries. - Gk. pueir, to close the eyes. -Gk. µû, a slight sound with closed lips; answering to 4/ MU, to bind, which appears to be of imitative origin. See Mute, Der. mysteri-ous, from F. mysterieus, 'mysterious,' Cot.; Mum.

mysteri-ous-ly, -ness. And see mystic, mystify. MYSTERY (2), MISTERY, a trade, handicraft. (F., -L.) Cotgrave translates O. F. mestier by 'a trade, occupation. mystery, handicraft.' Spenser, Mother Hubbard's Tale, 221, speaks of the soldier's occupation as being ' the noblest mysterie.' And we read of 'mystery plays,' so called because acted by craftsmen. This is a totally different word from the above, but sadly confused with it. It should rather be spelt mistery. Indeed, it owes to the word above not only the former y, but the addition of the latter one; being a corruption of M. E. mistere, a trade, craft, Chaucer, C. T. 615. -O. F. mestier (as above); mod. F. métier. [Cognate with Span. menester, want, need, employment, trade; Ital. mestiere, with same sense.] - Lat. ministerium, service, employment. - Lat. minister, a servant; see Minister. [†]

MYSTIC, secret, allegorical. (F., -L., -Gk.) Milton has mystick, P. L. v. 178, ix. 442; also mystical, P. L. v. 620. - F. mystique, 'mysticall;' Cot. - Lat. mysticus. - Gk. μυστικόs, mystic. - Gk. μυστικόs, fem. puorus, one who is initiated into mysteries; see Mystery. The Gk.  $\mu \tilde{\nu} \theta \sigma_{s}$  is from  $\mu \tilde{\nu}$ , a slight sound, hence a word, saying, speech, tale; which is from  $\sqrt{MU}$ , to utter a low sound, of imita-tive origin; see Mum. Cf. Skt. md, to sound, mim, to sound, max, to sound, murmur. Der. mytholog-ic, mytholog-ic-al, mytholog-ist.

N.

N. A few remarks upon this letter are necessary. An initial a. in English, is very liable to 1 e prefixed to a word which properly begins with a vowel; and again, on the other hand, an original initial n is sometimes dropped.  $\triangle$ . In the former case, the n is probably due to the final letter of an or mine; thus an eut becomes a newt, mine uncle becomes my nuncle, and hence newt and nuncle, used independently. Other examples occur in nickname for eke-name. and nugget, formerly niggot = ningot, for ingot. In Middle-English, numerous similar examples occur, such as a noise for an ole, an oak (cf. John Nokes = John an-oaks, i. e. John of the oaks); a noye = ca aye, an egg; thi nye = thin ye, thine eye; thi nynon = thin ynon, thine eyes ; examples of all these are given in Halliwell, under noke, noye, nye, and nynon respectively. In the case of for the nonce, the = belongs to the old dat. case of the article, the older phrase being for then ones; see Nonce. B. On the other hand, an original m is lost in auger for nauger, in the sense of a carpenter's tool; in umpire for numpire, adder for nadder, orange for norange, oprom for napron, ouch for nouch. See my note to P. Plowman, C.

xx. 306. NAB, to seize. (Scand.) A cant word, prob. introduced by NAB, to seize. (Scand.) A cant word, prob. introduced by MAB, to serve. (Schul) A can word, prov. Introduce of sailors, but of perfectly respectable origin. Added by Todd to Johnson's Dict. = Swed, nappa, Dan. nappa, to catch, snatch at. Prob. allied to Nip, q. v. ¶ Rich. cites the word nob-cheasts from Beaum, and Fletcher, Beggar's Bush, ii. 1, with the sense of caps. This is a totally different word; here nab = knob, the head; cheat = a thing, in the cant language; and nab-cheat = head-thing, cheat = a thing, in the cant language; and nan-cheat = head-thing, cap; see Harman's Caveat, ed. Furnivall, p. 82. NABOB, an Indian prince, very rich man. (Hindi, – Arab.) See Burke, Speech on the Nabob of Arcot's debts. The word signifies 'deputy' or vice-roy, esp. applied to a governor of a province of the Mogul empire (Webster). Also nobobb, a nobleman; so spelt by Sir T. Herbert, Travels, ed. 1665, p. 104, who assigns it that meaning 'in the language of the Mogul's kingdom, which hath mixt with it much of the kersian' - Hindi anguage hole of a fully 'incorporate definition. of the Persian.' - Hindi nauwab (pl. of naib), 'vice-gerents, deputies ; vulg. nabob; ' Bate's Dict., p. 367. But the word is merely borrowed from Arabic; Devic notes that Hindi often employs Arab. plurals as sing. - Arab. nauvoib, a nabob. Properly a plural form, signifying vice-gerents, deputies ; pl. of noib, a vice-gerent, lieutenant, deputy. Cf. Arab. nawo, supplying the place of another. See Rich. Dict. pp. 1606, 1557, 1608. Palmer's Pers. Dict. col. 665, has: Arab. navnib. 'a viceroy, governor; in Peria, this title is given to princes of the blood; 'cf. col. 639. Cf. Port. nababo, a nabob. NADIR, the point of the sky opposite the zenith. (Arab.)

Chaucer uses madir to signify the point of the zodiac opposite to that in which the sun is situate; Treatise on the Astrolabe, pt. ii. sect. 6, 1. 1. - Arab. naziru's 'samt (or simply nazir), the point of the sky opposite the zenith. - Arab. nazir, alike, corresponding to; and as samt, the azimuth, or rather an abbreviation of samts'r'ras, the zenith. Rich. Dict. pp. 1586, 848. See Azimuth, Zonith. The Arab. z here used is the 17th letter of the Arab. alphabet, an unusual letter with a difficult sound, which came to be rendered by d in Low Lat. and E.

in Low Lat. and E. NAG (1), a small horse. (O. Low G.) In Minsheu, ed. 1627. M.E. nagge. 'Nagge, or lytylle beest, bestula, equillus;' Prompt. Parv. Du. neyen (for older negen), to neigh (Hexham, Oude-mans). And compare prov. G. nickel, a nag, with North E. nicker, to neigh. The sense is 'neigher.' See Neigh. Der. hack-ney, q. v. Temp. iv. 128. - # a trace of it remains in Russ. znamenić, a sign, token (from znate, to Lat. naiad, stem of naias, a water-nymph. - Gk. vaids (gen. vaido-oe), a water-nymph. - Gk. vaev, to flow ; Æolic form vaiver (=váfer). SNU, to flow; cf. Skt. swe, to distil, flow. NAIL, the horny scale at the end of the human fingers and toes;

a spike of metal. (E.) M. E. nail, nayl; the pl. nayles, used of the human nails, is in Havelok. 2163; the pl. nailes, i. e. iron spikes, is in Chancer, C. T. 6351. - A. S. nægel, in both senses, Grein, ii. 274. [The loss of g is regular, and occurs in kail, sail, &c.] + Du. magel, in both senses. + Icel. magl, the human nail; magli, a spike, peg. + Dan, nagle, in both senses. + Swed, nagel, in both senses. + Goth. nagls \*, only in the derived verb ganaglian, to nail. + G. nagel, in both senses.  $\beta$ . All from a Teut. type NAGLA or NAGLI, a nail (Fick, iii. 159); to be divided as nag-la, nag-li, the suffix denoting the agent. The sense is 'gnawer,' i. e. in the case of the finger-nails, 'scratcher,' and, in the case of the peg, 'piercer.' All from the Teut. base NAG, to gnaw, scratch, pierce, appearing in G. nagen, to gnaw, and in the E. nag, g-naw; see Nag (2), Gnaw.  $\gamma$ . It is difficult to explain fully the allied words in other languages, in which only the sense of finger-nail or toe-nail survives. Still we may certainly connect Lithuan. nagas, a claw, nail, Russ. nogote, a nail, Skt. nakha (for magha), a nail of the finger or toe; all from a / NAGH, to gnaw or pierce, which is lost in these languages, except in so far as it is represented by Skt. nikik, to pierce. 8. The Gk. first, a nail, claw, Lat. unguis, Gael. and Irish ionga, W. owin, go back to a ANGH, which appears to be a transposed (and earlier) form of the √ NAGH; see Curtius, 1. 400. Der. nail, vb., A.S. næglian, whence the pp. næglad, in Grein; nail-er. Gr The remarkable variation of Lat. ungula from A.S. nægel throws doubt on the above solution.

NAIVE, artless, simple, ingenuous. (F., -L.) A late word; the adv. naively is used by Pope in a letter; see the quotation in Richardson. - F. naive, fem. of naif, which Cot. explains by ' lively, quick, naturall, kindly, ... no way counterfeit." - Lat. natisus, native, natural; see Native. The fem. form noise was chosen, be-cause it appears in the adv. naivement, and in the sb. naiveté; and, in fact, it is nearer the Latin original than the masc. naif. Der. naive-ly, put for F. naive-ment; and naive-té, sb., directly from the French. Doublet, native.

MAKED, bare, uncovered, exposed. (E.) Always dissyllabic. M. E. naked, Chaucer, C. T. 2068. - A. S. nacod (-nac-od), which is plainly an old pp., with the pp. suffix -od; Grein, ii. 272.+O. Fries. nahod, nahen. + Du. naakt. + Icel. nakir, nakinn, nökviör. + Dan. nögen. + Swed. nahen. + G. mackt, M. H. G. nacket, O. H. G. nackot, wake. + Goth. nakwaths (where -aths is the usual pp. suffix).  $\beta$ . All these forms point to an old pp. form; the Du. -t, Icel. -tr, -dr, G. -t, Goth. -aths, are all pp. suffixes of a used verb, and lead us back to the orig. Teut. type NAKW-ATHA, from a base NAKW, NAK; Fick, y. But it is not a little remarkable that some of the forms, iii. 157. viz. Icel. nak-inn, Dan. nög-en, Swed. nak-en, O. Fries. nak-en, present the pp. suffixes of a strong verb from the base NAK, answering to an Aryan  $\checkmark$  NAG, to strip, lay bare; whence are obviously the derived Skt. nagna, naked, Russ. nagoi, naked, Lith. nigas, naked (Schleicher), Lat. nūdus (= nugdus, for nogdus, nagdus). Further allied words are the Irish and Gael. norkd, naked, bare, exposed, desolate, 8. Lastly, it is remarkable that English W. noeth, Bret. noaz. alone has preserved the verb, which appears in M.E. naken. The following are examples. 'He makide the hous of the pore man,' Wyclif, Job, xx. 19, early version; the later version has 'he made makid the hows.' 'O nice men, whi nake ye youre bakkes' = O foolish men, why do ye expose your backs (to the enemy, by turning to flee); Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. iv. met. 7, l. 4288. It is also found much later. 'Lus. Come, be ready, nake your swords, Think of your wrongs; 'Tourneur, The Revenger's Tragedy, Act v (R.) We even find a derived verb naknen; 'Al nu nacnes mon mi lef'=Aht now men strip my beloved; O. Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, i. 283, l. 10. ¶ The sense of the Aryan √ NAG is somewhat doubtful; but the English use fairly assigns to it the sense ' to strip.' Hence also the secondary Skt, verb naj, to be ashamed, as the result of stripping. Der. naked-ly, M. E. nakedlicke, Ancren Riwle, p. 316; naked-ness, M. E. nakednesse, Wyclif, Rev. iii. 19. We also say 'to be caught napping,' where it is a sb. formed from a verb. It was formerly a verb, though napping, where it is a sb. formed from a verb. It was formerly a verb, though napping was also used. M.E. nappen, to doze. 'Sel how he nappeth;' Chaucer, C. T. 16958. – A.S. Anappian, to nap; hnappan is a gloss upon dormit, Ps. xl. 9, ed. Spelman. The orig. sense is 'to nod,' or 'droop,' or 'bend forwards;' allied to A. S. Anipian, to bend oneself, Grein, ii. 91; also to Icel. Anipna, to droop, despond. Cf. Bavarian Anappen, to nod with the head, Anipfen, to hobble (Schmeller); G.

nicken, to nod, doze. Der. napp-ing, A. S. Anappung, Grein, ii. 00. NAP (2), the roughish surface of cloth. (C.) In Spenser, Muio-potmos, l. 333. Shak. has napless = threadbare; Cor. ii. 1. 250. potmos, l. 333. Shak. has napless = threadbare; Cor. ii. 1. 250. The older form is nop. M. E. noppe; 'noppe of a cloth, willus;' Prompt. Parv. See Way's note, where he cites passages to shew that moppe 'denotes those little knots, which, after cloth has passed through the fulling-mill, are removed by women with little nippers; a process termed burling cloth.' He cites: 'noppy, as cloth is that hath a gross woffe [woof].' Also: 'Clarisse the nopster (esbourysse) can well her craft, syth whan she lerned it, cloth for to noppe; Caxton, Book for Travellers. We now apply the term, not to the knoppy or knobby (i. e. knotty) surface, but to the skeared surface, by a natural change in the sense, due to our not seeing the cloth till the a natural change in the sense, due to one hot seeing the cloth in the the process is completed. - A. S. Anoppa, nap of cloth; an unauthorised form given by Somner, but prob. correct. It is plainly a mere variant of A. S. energ, a top, a knop, knob; see Knop, Knob. + Du. nop; O. Du. noppen, 'the nap of wooll or cloath,' Hexham; cf. O. Du. noppen, 'to sheare of [off] the nap,'id. Allied to Du. knoop, a knot, knob, knop, a knob. + Dan. soppe, frizzed nap of cloth ; cf. NAPE, the joint of the neck behind. (C.) In Shak. Cor. ii. 1. 43. M. E. nape, Prompt. Parv. 'Dedly woundid through the nape;' King Alisaunder, I. 1347. The orig. sense is projection or 'knob;' and the term must have been first applied to the slight knob at the back of the head, felt on passing the finger upwards from the neck. It is, in fact, a mere variant of M. E. knappe, a knob, button, P. Plowman, B. vi. 272. Cf. Icel. Anappr, Imappr, W. snap, a knob, stud, button. See Nap (2), Knop, and Neok.

NARBOW, of little breadth or extent. (E.) M. E. narowe, narewe, narwe (with one r); Chaucer has narwe (=narrowly) as an adv., C. T. 3224; also as an adj., C. T. 627. – A. S. nearu, nearo, adj.; nearwe, adv., Grein, ii. 287, 288. + O. Sax. naru, adj., narawo, adv.  $\beta$ . There seems at first sight to be some connection with near; but this is an unoriginal word derived from nigh (see Near), and nigh γ. We and narrow have nothing in common but the letter n. Y. We also find Du. nauw, O. Du. nauw (Hexham), narrow, close; this appears to be O. Sax. narn, with loss of r. 8. Connected by Curtius (i. 392) with nerve and snare; see Narcotic and Snare. Der. narrow-ly, narrow-ness, narrow-mind-ed. NARWHAL, the sea-unicorn. (Scand.)

In Ash's Dict., ed. 1775. - Dan. and Swed. narhval; Icel. nohvalr, a narwhale. B. The latter part of the word is the same as E. whale. As to the sense of the prefix, the lit. sense of Icel. ná-hvalr is 'corpse-whale,' from Icel. nár (in compounds ná-), a corpse; and the fish is often of a pallid colour. Such is the usual explanation. y. We should rather expect the prefix to stand for Icel. nas- (=nose), as in nas-hyrningar, a 'nose-homed' animal, a rhinoceros, from Icel.  $n\bar{os}$  (stem na.-), the nose. The long hom projects like a nose from the upper jaw. The change from s to r is quite regular and common; cf. E. iron from A. S. isen, E. hare = G. hase. But this guess does not explain Icel. d.

NASAL, belonging to the nose. (F., -L.) In Kersey, ed. 1715. NASTY, dirty, filthy, unpleasant. (Scand.) In Hamlet, iii. 4. 94. Formerly also (as Wedgwood points out) written nasky. 'Maular', ill-washed, slubbered, naskie, nasty, foul; 'Cot. In such cases, the form with k is the older. Of Scand. origin; preserved in Swed. dial. naskug, nasty, dirty, foul (used of weather); we also find the form naskei, dirty, sullied (Rietz). The word has lost an initial s (which occasionally drops off before n, as in Lat. nix beside E. snow). Cf. Swed. dial. snaskig, nasty, swinelike; Swed. snuskig, slovenly, nasty. - Swed. dial. snaska, to eat like a pig, to eat greedily and noisily, to be slovenly (Rietz); Dan. snaske, to champ one's food with a smacking noise. These words are of imitative origin, like various other suggestive words of a like character, such as Swed. snattra, to chatter, E. snap, snatch; see Snatch. The word appears also in Low G. nask, nasty, Bremen Wörterbuch ; and in Norweg. nask, greedy, naska, to eat noisily. Dor. nasti-ly, nasti-ness. NATAL, belonging to one's birth. (F., -L.) 'B

NAVE (1), the central portion or hub of a wheel, through which the axle passes. (E.) M. E. naue (with u = v), Chaucer, C. T. 7848 [not 7938].-A.S. nafu, nafa; Ælfred, tr. of Boethius, b. iv. pr. 6, cap. xxxix, § 7. + Du. naaf. + Icel. nof. + Dan. nav. + Swed. naf. + G. nabe. + Skt. nabki, the navel, the nave of a wheel, the centre.  $\beta$ . The Skt. word is supposed to be derived from nabk, to burst; hence the sense of swelling or projection easily results; similarly breast is connected with E. burst. NAVE (2), the middle or body of a church.  $(F, -L_{*})$  In Phillips, World of Words, ed. 1706. We find nave used for navel, Mach. i. 2. 22; and conversely nauels (= navels) for the naves of a wheel, Bible, ed. 1551, 3 Kings, vii. 33. M.E. nauel (= navel), Chaucer, C.T. 1959. = A.S. nafela, Alfred, tr. of Orosius, b. iv. c. 1. § 3. + Du. navel, from naaf, a nave. + Icel. nafli, from nöf. + Dan. navle, from nav. + Swed. nafle, from naf. + G. nabel, from nabe. NAY, no, a form of denial. (Scand.) There was a difference in usage between nay and no formerly; the former answered simple questions, the latter was used when the form of the question involved a negative expression. Besides this, nay was the simple, no the emphatic form, often accompanied by an oath. The distinction went out of use in the time of Henry VIII; see Skeat, Spec. of Eng. p. 192, l. 22, and the note; Student's Manual of the Eng. Language, ed. Smith, pp. 414, 422. Moreover, nay is of Scand. origin, whilst no is E. M. E. nay, Chaucer, C. T. 1667, 8603; spelt næi, nai, Layamon, 13132. – Icel. nei, no, Dan. nei, Swed. nei; cognate with E. no; see No. Opposed to Aye.

NAZARITE, a jew who made vows of abstinence, &c. (Heb.; with Gk. suffix.) 'To vowe a vowe of a Nazarite to separate [himself] vnto the Lorde;' Geneva Bible, 1561, Numb. vi. 5 (R.); [rather, vi. 2]. Formed with suffix -ite (= Lat. -ita, from Gk. -4778) from Heb. mázar, to separate oneself, consecrate oneself, vow, abstain. Der. Nazarit-ism.

NEAP, scanty, very low; said of a tide. (E.) M. E. neep, very rare. 'In the neep-seons,' i.e. in the neap-tide seasons, when boats cannot come to the quay; Eng. Gilds, ed. Toulmin Smith, p. 425.-A.S. nép, in the term nép-fiéd, as opposed to keák-fiéd = high flood; Wright's Vocab. i. 57, col. I. The word has lost an initial k, and nép stands for knép, the orig. sense being 'scanty.' + Icel. neppr, kneppr, scanty. + Dan. knap, scanty, strait, narrow; cf. adv. knap, neppe, scarcely.  $\beta$ . The orig. sense is 'pinched, narrow. scanty;' the derivation being from the verb to nip; see Nip.  $\P$  Quite a distinct word from ebb. Der. neap-tide. [+] distinct word from ebb. Der. neap-tide. [+] NEAR, nigh, close at hand. (E.) By a singular grammatical confusion, this word, orig. used as the comparative of nigh, came to be used as a positive, from which the new comparative nearer was evolved. In Schmidt's Shakespeare Lexicon, the explanation is given wrongly; he says that near is put by contraction for nearer, whereas it is the old form of the word. Shak. uses both near and nearer as comparatives; both forms occur together, Macb. ii. 3. 146; cf. 'nor near nor farther off;' Rich. II, iii. 2. 64; 'being ne'er the near,' id. v. 1. 88. The form near-er is late, not found in the 14th cent., perhaps not in the 15th. Dr. Morris (Outlines of E. Accidence) observes that 'near, for nigh, first came into use in the phrase far and near, in which near is an adverb.' [He goes on to cite an A.S. neorran, not given in the dictionaries.] It is clear that the precise form was first of all adverbial; the M.E. form of nigher was nerre, whilst the adv. was ner, or neer. 'Cometh neer' = come near; Chaucer, C. T. 841. - A.S. near, comp. adverb from neak, nigh; Grein, ii. 283. + Icel. ner, adv.; both pos. and comp. See Nigh. NEAT (1), black cattle, an ox, cow. (E.) M.E. neet, both sing. and pl.; used as pl. in Chaucer, C. T. 599. – A.S. neet, both sing. unchanged in the plural (like sheep, deer, also neuters); Grein, ii. 288. + Icel. nout, neut. sb., unchanged in the plural, and gen. used to mean cattle, oxen. + M. H. G. noz, nois, neut. sb., cattle.  $\beta$ . So named from their usefulness and employment. – A.S. neotan, noidan, to use, employ; Grein, ii. 292. + Icel. njóta, to use, enjoy. + M. H. G. niezen, O. H. G. niozan, G. geniessen, to enjoy, have the use of. + Goth. niutan, to receive joy (or benefit) from.  $\gamma$ . All from Teut. base NUT (Fick, iii. 104<sup>1</sup>, answering to an Aryan base NUD, whence Lithuan. naudà, usefulness, naudingas, useful (Nesselmann). Cf. Skt. nand, to be pleased, to be pleased with, nandaya, to gladden; Gk. boinnµ., I profit, help, support, bripsupor, useful, boryrós, profitable. NEÀT (2), tidy, unadulterated. (F., -L.) 'Neat and fine;' Two Gent. of Verona, i. 2. 10. Also spelt nett; Spenser, F. Q. iii. 12. 20. -F. net, masc., nette, fem., 'neat, clean, pure;' Cot. [Cf. beast from O. F. beste.] - Lat. nitidum, acc. of nitidus, shining, clear, handsome, neat, elegant. - Lat. nitere, to shine. Prob. allied to Icel. graisti, a spark; see Gnoiss. Der. neat-ly, neat-ness. Doublet, net (2).

NEB, the beak of a bird, the nose. (E.)

183. M. E. neb. 'Ostende miki faciem, scheau thi neb to me' = shew me thy face; Ancren Riwle, p. 90. - A.S. nebb, the face, John, xi. 44. + Du. neb, bill, beak, nib, mouth. + Icel. nef, the nose. + Dan. næb, beak, bill. + Swed. nöbb, beak, bill. B. The word has lost an initial s; we also find Du. sneb, a bill, beak; G. schnabel, a bill, beak, nib; schneppe, a nozzle. The M. H.G. snabel, a bill, is derived from M. H. G. snaben, to snap; and the E. sb. nipple (dimin. of nib) is spelt with p. Hence sneb stands for snep, derived from the verb to snap; see Snap. Der. See nib, nipple, snipe.

INEBULA, a little cloud; a cluster of very faintly shining stars. (L.) Modern and scientific. - Lat. nebula, a mist, little cloud; allied to nubes, a cloud, nimbus, cloud. + Gk. ve $\phi \lambda \eta$ , a cloud; dimin. of vé $\phi os$ , cloud, mist. + G. nebel, mist, fog.  $\beta$ . The Gk. vé $\phi os$  is cognate with Skt. nabkas, sky, atmosphere, æther. -  $\sqrt{NABH}$ , to swell, burst; Skt. nabk, to burst, injure; from the 'bursting' of rain-clouds and storms. See Nave (1). Der. nebul-ar, nebul-os. nebul-os.-i-ty.

NECEBSARY, needful, requisite. (F., -L.) M. E. necessarie, Chaucer, C. T. 12615.-O. F. necessaire, 'necessary;' Cot. - Lat. necessarius, needful. - Lat. necesse, neut. adj., unavoidable, necessary.  $\beta$ . The usual derivation from ne, not, and cedere, to give way, is not satisfactory; it is more probably connected with Lat. nancinci (pp. nac-tus), to get, obtain, come upon; which would give to nec-esse the orig. sense of 'coming in one's way,' or nigh. See Nigh. Der. necessari-ly; also necessity, M. E. necessitee, Chaucer, C. T. 3044, from O.F. necessit-ale, necessit-ar-ian.

necessit-ate, necessit-ar-an. NECK, the part of the body joining the head to the trunk. (E.) M.E. nekke (dissyllabic), Chaucer, C. T. 5859. – A.S. hnecca, Deut. xxviii. 35. + Du. nek, the nape of the neck. + Icel. knakki, the nape of the neck, back of the head. + Dan. nakke, the same. + Swed. nacke, the same. + G. nacken, O.H.G. knack, the same.  $\beta$ . Frequently derived from A.S. knigan, to bend, which is impossible; we cannot derive k from g. The evidence shews that the orig. sense is rather the 'nape of the neck,' or back of the head; and nack and naps are nearly parallel forms with much the same sense. Just as naps is a mere variant of knop, so neck is allied to knag, knuck-le. Cf. Norweg. nakk, a knoll, nakke, nape, neck; G. knocken, a knot, knag. The O. Du. knoke, 'the knobb or knot of a tree' (Hexham), explains both E. knuckle and F. nuque, the nape of the neck. See Knuckle. Der. neck-lots, neck-risef (for neck-kerckief, see Korchief), neck-band, neck-tics; neck-lace, Winter's Tale, iv. 4. 244. compounded of neck and lace; neck-lace, Tyndall's Works, p. 112, col. 1, on which see my note to P. Plowman, C. xv. 129.

NECROLOGY, a register of deaths. (Gk.) Added by Todd to Johnson. From Gk.  $\nu\epsilon\kappa\rho\delta$ , stem of  $\nu\epsilon\kappa\rho\delta$ , a corpse; and  $\lambda\sigma\gamma\kappa$ , due to  $\lambda\delta\gamma\sigma$ , discourse, from  $\lambda\epsilon\gamma\epsilon\nu$ , to speak. See Neoromancy. NECROMANCY, divination by communion with the dead.  $(F_{.,}-L_{.,}-Gk_{.})$  The history of the word is somewhat concealed by our modern knowledge of Gk., which enables us to spell the word correctly. But the M.E. forms are nigromaunce, nigromancie, and the like. Precisely the same 'correction' of the spelling has been made in modern French. Spelt nygremauncye in King Alisaunder, l. 138; nigromancye in P. Plowman, A. xi. 158, on which see my Notes to P. Pl., p. 246. Trench rightly remarks, in his Eng. Past and Present, that 'the Latin medizeval writers, whose Greek was either little or none, spelt the word nigromantia, as if its first syllables had been Latin.' - O.F. nigromance, 'nigromancy, conjuring, the black art ;' Cot. Spelt nygromancye in the 15th cent. ; see Littré. -Low Lat. nigromantia, corrupt form of necromantia. - Gk. venpo- $\mu a \nu \tau \epsilon i a$ , necromancy. – Gk.  $\nu \epsilon \kappa \rho \delta$ , crude form of  $\nu \epsilon \kappa \rho \delta i$ , a corpse; and  $\mu a \nu \tau \epsilon i a$ , prophetic power, power of divination.  $\beta$ . The Gk. verpos is extended from verve, a corpse. dead body. - VNAK, to perish, to kill; whence Skt. naç, to perish, naçaya, to destroy, Lat. necare, to kill, and E. inter-nec-ine, q. v.  $\gamma$ . The Gk. µarrela is from µarres, a prophet, seer, inspired one, from  $\checkmark$  MAN, to think, whence also E. man-ia, men-tor. Der. necromanc-er, Deut. xviii. 11 (A. V.); necromantic, from Gk. vespo, and µarrusós, prophetic; necromantic-al. From the singular confusion with Lat. niger, black, above mentioned, the art of necromancy came to be called the black art!

NEOTAB, a delicious beverage. (L, -Gk.) In Spenser, Sonnet 39, 1. 13. – Lat. neclar. – Gk. visrap, the drink of the gods; Homer, Il. xix. 38, Od. v. 93. Root unknown. Der. nectar-s-an, nectar-sous, nectar-ous, nectar-y; also nectar-ine, the name given to a variety of the peach, orig. an adj., as in Nectarine fruits,' Milton, P. L. iv. 332.

 M. E. neod/ul, Ancren Riwle, p. 260, l. 10; need-less, need-less-ly, need-less-ness; need-y, M. E. nedy, P. Plowman, xx. 40, 41, 47, 48, 49, needi-ly, need-i-ness. Also need-s, adv., M. E. needes, nedes, Chaucer, C. T. 1171, where the final -es is an adverbial ending, orig. due to A.S. gen. cases in -es; but in this case nedes supplanted an older form nede, Layamon, l. 1051, which originated in A.S. nyde, gen. case of nýd, which was a fem. sb. with gen. in -e.

NEEDLE, a sharp pointed steel implement, for sewing with. (E.) M.E. nodle, medel, also spelt nelde, needle; P. Plowman, C. xx. 56, and various readings. - A.S. néedl, Grein, ii, 274. + Du. naald (for naadl), + Icel. nál (by contraction). + Dan. naal. + Swed. nál. + G. nadel, O. H. G. nádela. + Goth. nethla. β. The Teut. type is NÅ-THLA (Fick, iii. 156), from a base NA, to sew, fasten with thread, preserved in O. H. G. nahen, G. naken, to sew, and also in Lat. nere, Gk. rhour, véen, to spin. The suffix = Aryan -lar, denoting the agent.  $\gamma$ . This is clearly one of the rather numerous cases in which an initial s has dropped off; the orig. root is  $\sqrt{SNA}$ , prob. to bind; see Curtius, i. 393. The initial s appears in Irish snatkad, a needle, snatkaim, I thread, or string together, snaidks, thread, Gael. snathad, a needle, snath, thread, yarn; also G. schnur, a noose, and E. snare. From the same root is nerve. See Nerve, Snare. Der.

E. nesen, vb., nesing, sb.; see Prompt. Parv., and Way's note. Somner gives an A.S. form niesan, but it is unauthorised. Still the word must be E., being known to all the Teut. languages. + Du. niezen. to sneeze. + O. Icel. Anjósa; mod. Icel. Anerra. + Dan. nyse. + Swed. nysa. + G. niesen, O. H. G. niusan. β. From Dan. nyse. + Swed. nysa. + G. niesen, O. H. G. niusan.  $\beta$ . From a Teut. base HNUS, to succes; Fick, iii. 82. The word, like the ¶ In the parallel form sueze, is doubtless of imitative origin. later version of Wyclif, Job, xli. 18, the reading is fnesynge; this is not quite the same word, though of similar formation. The sense of fuesynge is 'violent blowing,' but it also means sneezing; cf. A.S. fueosung, sneezing, fnæst, a puff, Du. fniezen, to sneeze. Cf. 'And fueseing, sneezing, frazsi, a puff, Du. friezen, to sneeze. Cf. 'And fneseik laste' - and puffs hard, Chaucer, C. T. Six-text ed., Group H, 1.62. It reminds us of Gk. avéer, to blow. Der. nees-ing, neez-ing, as above

NEFARIOUS, unlawful, very wicked. (L.) In Butler, To the Memory of Du-Val, 1. 20. Englished from Lat. nefarius, impious. very wicked; by change of -us to -ous, as in arduous, &cc.-Lat, nefas, that which is contrary to divine law, impiety, great wickedspoken, from fari, to speak; see No and Fate. NEGATION, denial. (F., -L.) In Shak. Troilus, v. 2. 127.-F. negation, 'a negation; 'Cot. - Lat. acc. negationem, from nom. negatio. - Lat. negatus, pp. of negare, to deny. B. Negare is opposed to aiere, to affirm; and though the mode of its formation is not clear, it may be taken as due to ne, not, and aiere, to say. y. This verb aiere is allied to Gk. nui, I say, and to Skt. ak, to say, to speak. The Skt. at stands for older agh; and all are from √ AGH, to say, speak, affirm. For the prefix ne, see No. Der. negative, adj., Wint. Tale, i. 2. 274, M.E. negatif (to be found, according to Richardson, in b. iii of the Testament of Love), from F. negatif = Lat. negatives; negative-ly, negative-ness; also negative, sb., Twelfth Nt. v. 24. From the same Lat. negare we have de-ny,

M.E. negligence, Chau-cer, C.T. 1883. - F. negligence, 'negligence;' Cot. - Lat. negligenia, carelesaness. - Lat. negligent, stem of pres. part. of negligere, to neglect; see Nogloot. Dor. negligent, M. E. negligent, Chaucer, C. T. 7398, from F. negligent (Cot.) - Lat. negligentem, acc. of pres.

S. d-nýdan, to repel, drive away, force. The base is NU, appearing in O. H. G. ninwan, M. H. G. ninwan, núm, to pound, to crush (orig. to drive, force), Wackernagel; and again, in Skt. nud (=nu-d), to push on, push away, drive. Cf. Russ. nydite, to force; nyjda, need. Der. meed-ful, M. H. G. ninwan, to for for fully the push of force in the fully for the state of the push of the negotiat-or-y. The right (historical) spelling is negotiate for the verb, negociation for the sb.; but this is seldom attended to.

NEGRO, one of the black race of mankind. (Span., -L.) In Shak. Merch. Ven. iii. 5. 42. – Span. negro, a black man. – Lat. si-grum, acc. of niger, black ; see Nigrescent. ¶ Minsheu gives ¶ Minsheu gives the form neger; this is from the O.F. negre (mod. Anefi, the fist; Swed. nöfve; Dan. nave. The sense is the closed hand, with 'bent' fingers; as explained by the allied Gk. form sváµsres, yváµsresv, to crook, bend, yvaµsrós, bent, curved. These are nasalised forms from sáµsresv, to bend.

NEIGH, to make a noise as a horse. (E.) M. E. negen, Wyclif, Isa. xxiv. 14, earlier version. - A. S. Andgan, to neigh; Ælfric's Grammar, 22. 30; whence the sb. Chaucer, C. T. 9423. - A. S. neihgebúr, a neighbour, John, ix. 8; so that the trisyllabic form neigh-e-bour in Chaucer is easily explained. The A.S. form neáhbúr also occurs, but more rarely. - A.S. neáh, nigh; and gebur, a husbandman, for which see the Laws of Ine, sect. vi, in Thorpe's Ancient Laws, i. 106. The A.S. gebur or bur is cognate with Du. boer, a boor (the prefix ge-making no difference). + M. H. G. náckgebúr, náchbúr; mod. G. nachbar. See Nigh and BOOT. Der. neighbour, adj., Jerem. See No and Pathos.

NEPHEW, a brother's or sister's son. (F, -L.) The old meaning is 'grandson,' as in 1 Tim. v. 4, &c. The pk is a substitute for the older v. often written u. M. NERVE, physical strength, firmness, a fibre in the body conveying sensation. (F., -L.) M. E. nerfe, Chaucer, Troilus, b. ii. 1. 642. – F. nerf, 'a sinew, might;' Cot. – Lat. nernum, acc. of neruss, a sinew. + Gk. veipov, a sinew, string; cf. Gk. veupá, a string. B. The Lat. and Gk. forms have lost an initial s, which appears in G. schwar, a string, cord, line, lace, and in E. snare. The form of the root is SNA, to tie (?); hence also Irish snaidke, thread, snaitkaim, I thread together, and E. needle. See Needle, Snare. Der. nerve, verb, not in early use; nerv-ous, formerly used in the sense of 'sinewy' (Phillips), from F. nervenx, 'sinewy' (Cot.), which from Lat. nervosus, full of nerve; nervous-ly, nervous-s; also nervey, i. e. sinewy (obsolete), in Shak. Cor. ii. 1. 177; nerve-less; neur-algia.

INEEHI, tender, soft. (E.) Still in use in prov. E. M. E. nesk;
tendre and nesk;' Court of Love, l. 1092 (15th cent.); 'That tendre was, and swithe [very] nesk;' Havelok, 2743. A.S. Anæse, Soft; Grein, ii. 91. + Goth. Anashuwe, soft, tender, delicate, Matt. xi. 8. [+]

NESS, a promontory. (E.) Preserved in place-names, as Tot-ness, Sheer-ness. – A.S. nas, nes, (1) the ground, (2) a promontory, headland, as in Beowulf, ed. Grein, L 1360; the form nassa also occurs, Grein, ii. 277. + Icel. nes; Dan. nas; Swed. näs.  $\beta$ . The sense of 'promontory' is due to some confusion with nose; but it is not quite certain that the words are related.

MEST, the bed formed by a bird for her young. (E.) M. E. nest, P. Plowman, B. xi. 336. – A. S. nest, a nest; Grein, ii. 282. + Du. nest. + Swed. näute. + G. nest. + Bret. neiz. + Gael. and Irish nead. + Lat. nidus (for nisdus). + Lithuan. lizdas (for nizdas); Nesselmann. + Skt. nida, a nest, a den.  $\beta$ . All from  $\sqrt{NAS}$ , to go to, join oneself to, visit; cf. Skt. nas, to go to, join (Vedic); Gk. vioµaı, vioσoµaı, I go, vioros, a return home, valew (= vao-yew), to dwell. Thus the orig. sense is 'a place to go to,' a home, den, nest. Fick, iii. to1; Curtius, i. 391. Der. nest, vb.; nest-le, a frequentative form, orig. 'to frequent a nest;' nest-ling, with double dimin. suffix (= -l-ig), as in gos-ling, duck-ling.

NET (1), as in got-ling, dwck-ling, NET (1), as in got-ling, dwck-ling. NET (1), an implement made of knitted or knotted twine for catching fish, &c. (E.) M. E. net, nett, Wyclif, John, xxi. 6. – A.S. set, nett, Grein, ii. 282. + Du. net. + Icel. and Dan. net. + Swed. mät. + Goth. nati. + G. netz.  $\beta$ . Root uncertain; some consider it to be related to Goth. natjan, to wet, netzen, to wet, to steep; these are rather related words than original verbs, as shewn by their form. Probably named from their employment in rivers; cf. Skt. nada, a river. ¶ Certainly not connected with knit, which has initial k. Doer. net, verb, (1) to use a net, (2) to make a net; nett-ing, net-work.

NETHER, lower. (E.) M. E. nethere; 'the ouere lippe and the nethere'=the upper lip and the lower one, Wright's Vocab. i. 146, l. 14. - A. S. neovera, neovera, Ps. lxxxvii. 6, ed. Spelman. A comparative adj. due to the compar. adv. nider, nidor, downward; Grein, ii. 294. Related forms are nide, adv. below, neodan, adv. below, Grein, ii. 294, 290; but these are really forms suggested by nider,  $\beta$ . In fact, the word is to be divided as and not original ones. ne-ther, the suffix -ther being comparative, as in o-ther, and answering to the -ter in af-ter, and the Skt. -tara (Gk. -repos). + Icel. nedri, nether, lower; nebarr, adv. lower; cf. neban, from below. + Dan. neder-, in comp. nederdeel, the lower part of a thing; cf. neden, adv. below, nede, ned, down. + Swed. nedre, nether, as in nedre läppen, the nether lip; cf. nedre, below, neder, ned, down. + G. nieder, nether, lower. Y. As said above, the base is ni-, and the orig. Teut. form is NI-THAR. This is shewn at once by the Skt. nitaram, adv. used in the sense of 'excessively, continually,' but grammatically a comparative form (with suffix -tara) from ni, downward, into. Cf. also Russ. nije, lower. Der. nethermost, I Kings, vi. 6; a false form, due to a popular etymology which connected the ending with most (as if the sense were 'most more down,' an absurd expression); it is really a corruption of A.S. nidemesta, in Ælfred, tr. of Boethius, b. ii. pr. 2 (cap. vii. § 3); and A.S. ni-de-m-est- is from ni, down, with the Aryan suffixes ta-ma- (as in Lat. op-ti-mus, best) and the usual A.S. superl. suffix -est. For a further account of these double superl. forms, see After, Aftermost. Also be-neath.

DETTLE, a well-known stinging plant. (E.) M. E. netle, netle (better with one t); 'Nettle in, dock out;' Chancer, Troil. iv. 461.

NEURALGIA, pain in the nerves. (Gk.) Modern; not in Todd's Johnson. Coined from Gk. vewp-, stem of *vewp*ov, a nerve, cognate with Lat. meruws; and Gk.  $\delta\lambda\gamma$ -, stem of  $\delta\lambda\gamma\sigma$ , pain (root uncertain); with Gk. suffix ia (-a). See NFOVE. Der. neuralg-is. NEUTER, neither, sexless, taking neither part. (L.) 'The duke . . abode as neuter and helde with none of both parties;' Berners, tr. of Froissart, vol. i. c. 252 (R.)-Lat. neuter, neither. Compounded of ne, not; and mer, whether of the two (put for quoter), cognate with E. Whether, q.v. Cf. Skt. katara, whether of two. Thus neuter=no-whether; which is the exact force of E. neutralis; neutr-al-ly, neutral-ise, neutral-i-cling; neutral-i-ty = F. neutralité (Cotgrave), from Lat. acc. neutralitatem.

NEVER, not ever, at no time. (E.) M.E. neuer (with w for v), Chaucer, C.T. 1135. = A.S. nafre; compounded of ne, not, and afre, ever; Grein, ii. 275. See NO and EVOF. DOF. never-the-less, M.E. newerpeles, Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 9, l. 16, substituted for the earlier form napeles = A.S. ná þé læs (=no-the-less, not the less). In this phrase, the A.S. þé, also written þ, is the instrumental case of the def. article se, seo, þæt, and is cognate with Goth. thé, on that account, instrum. case of sa, so, thata; for examples, see læs in Grein, ii. 164. See The.

NEW, recent, fresh. (E.) M. E. newe (dissyllabic), Chaucer, C. T. 459, 8733. – A.S. niwe, neowe, niowe, Grein, ii. 298. + Du. nieuw. + Icel. nýr. + Dan. and Swed. ny. + Goth. niujis. + G. neu, O. H. G. niuwi. + Lat. nouus. + W. neuydd. + Irish nua, nuadk, Gael. nuadk. + Lithuan. naujas; of which an older form was perhaps nawas (Nesselmann). + Russ. nounii. + Gk. véos. + Skt. nava, new. We also find Skt. niutana, new, fresh.  $\beta$ . All formed from a base NU, which is no other than E. now; cf. Skt. nu, nú, now; see Now. Thus new means 'that which is now,' recent. Der. new-ly, = A.S. niwlice, Grein, ii. 299; new-ness, used by Sir T. More, Works, p. 1328 g; new-ish, new-fashioned; and see newfangled, news, re-new; also nov-el, nov-ice.

NEWEL, the upright column about which a circular staircase winds. (F., -L.) 'The staires, ... let them bee upon a faire open neuell, and finely raild in;' Bacon, Essay 45, Of Building. Cotgrave, s.v. noyau, spells it nuell, which is an older and better spelling. The right sense is much the same as that of nucleus, with which word it is closely connected. The form shews that the word was borrowed early, prob. not later than A.D. 1400. - O.F. nual (12th cent., see Littré), later F. noyau, 'the stone of a plumme, also, the nuell or spindle of a winding staire;' Cot. So called because it is the centre or nucleus of the staircase, round which the steps are ranged. - Lat. nucale, neut. of nucalis, lit. belonging to a nut; hence applied to the kernel of a nut or the stone of a plum. - Lat. nuc-, stem of nux, a nut; with suffix -alis. See Nucleus.

NEWFANGLED, fond of what is new, novel. (E.) The old sense is 'fond of what is new; ' see Shak. L. L. L. i. I. 106, As You Like It, iv. 1. 152; and in Palsgrave. The final -d is a late addition to the word, due to a loss of a sense of the old force of -le (see below); the M. E. form is newefangel (4 syllables), fond of novelty, Chaucer, C. T. 10932. So also Gower, C. A. ii. 273: 'But every newe love quemeth To him, that newefangel is '= but every new love pleases him who is fond of what is new. β. Compounded of newe, new; and fangel, ready to seize, snatching at, not found in A.S., but formed with perfect regularity from the base fange, to take (occurring in A.S. fang-en, pp. of fon, contracted form of fangan, to take), with the suffix -el (=A.S. -ol) used to form adjectives descriptive of an agent. y. This suffix is preserved in mod. E. witt-ol = one who knows, sarcastically used to mean an idiot; cf. A.S. sprec-ol, fond of talking, talkative; wac-ol, vigilant; and see Nimble. So also fangel = fond of taking, readily adopting, and new-fangle = fond of taking up what is new; whence new-fangle d, by later addition of d. 8. The suffix -ol, by the usual interchange of l and r, is nothing but another form of the familiar suffix -er, expressive of the agent. Thus newfangle = new-fang er. See Fang. Der. newfangled-ness, a corruption of M. E. newefangelnes, fangel. NEWS, what is new, tidings. (E.) Formerly newes, which does not seem to be older than about A. D. 1500. 'Desyrous to here newes;' Berners, tr. of Froissart, vol. i. c. 66. 'What newes he brought;' Surrey, tr. of Virgil, Æn. ii. l. 95. It is nothing but a plural, formed from new treated as a sb.; so also tidings. It is a translation of F. nonvelles, news, pl. of nonvelle, new (Corgrave); so also Lat. nous = new things, i. e. news. See Now. Der. news-boy, -monger, INEWT, a kind of lizard. (E.) This is one of the words which has taken to itself an initial n, borrowed from the indef. art. an; see remarks on the letter N. A newt = an ewt. M. E. newte, ewte. "Newte, or ewte, wyrme, lacerius; 'Prompt. Parv. p. 355. Ewte is a contraction of the older form evete (=evete). The O. F. lesard, a lizard, is glossed by evete (the MS. prob. has evete), in Walter de Biblesworth; see Wright's Vocab. i. 159. – A.S. efeta; 'Lacerta, efeta,' in a gloss; Wright's Voc. i. 78, col. 2.  $\beta$ . The word is efeta,' in a gloss; Wright's Voc. i. 78, col. 2. B. The word is to be divided as ef-eta, where -eta is a suffix due to Aryan suffix -ta; see March, A. S. Grammar, p. 120. The base ef., for af., answers to Aryan AP, signifying 'river; cf. Skt. ap, water (whence apchara, living in water), Lithuan. uppis, a stream. Y. The Lithuanian has the parallel form uppetakis, adj., that which goes in the water, which was used as a sb. to mean 'a trout' (Nesselmann). Hence a newt or eft is a 'water-animal,' or inhabitant of a stream, a name due to its ¶ The mod. prov. E. eft is a contraction of amphibious nature. A.S. sfeta. For further references, see King Alisaunder, 1. 6027, Mandeville's Travels, p. 61, &c.; see Stratmann.

NEXT, nighest, nearest. (E.) Next is a doublet of nighest, of which it is an older spelling. 'When he bale is hest, henne is he bote next' = when the sorrow is highest, then is the remedy nighest; Proverbs of Hendyng, st. 23. This is often cited in the form : 'When bale is heat, then bote is next;' and just as heat or hest is a contraction of M. E. hehest (highest), so is next or nest a contraction of M. E. nehest (nighest). See Stratmann, s. v. neh. The A.S. forms are neases (nignest). See Stratmann, S. V. nea. Ine A. S. forms are neaket, nekst, nyhat, nikst, niekst; 'Grein, ii. 283. See Nigh. NIB, the point of a pen. (E.) Another form of neb, which is the older spelling. The spelling nib is in Johnson's Dict., but does not seem to be old. See Nob. Der. nipp-le, q. v. NIBBLE, to eat in small portions. (E.) In Shak. Temp. iv. 1. 62. Not connected with nib, or neb, but with nip, of which it is the frequentative form, and means 'to nip often.' In fact, it has lost an initial k and stands for knibble. just as nip does for knib Low G. an initial k, and stands for knibble, just as nip does for knip. + Low G. nibbeln, knibbeln, to nibble, gnaw slightly; Bremen Wört. Cf. also Du. knibbelen, to cavil, haggle; the same word, differently employed. See Nip. Der. nibbl-er.

NICE, hard to please, fastidious, dainty, delicious. (F.,-L.) M.E. nice, foolish, simple; later, it took the sense of fastidious; and lastly, that of delicious. In Chaucer, C.T. 5508, 6520; in the latter passage 'wise and nothing nice' = wise and not simple at all. So also in P. Plowman, B. xvi. 33. 'For he was nyce, and kowpe no wisdom '= for he was foolish, and knew no wisdom ; Rob. of Glouc. p. 106, last line. - O. F. nice, 'lazy, slothful, idle, faint, slack, dull, simple;' Cot. The orig. sense was 'ignorant.'- Lat. nescium, acc. of nessius, ignorant. - Lat. ne, not; and sci., related to scire, to know. See No and Science. ¶ The remarkable changes in the sense may have been due to confusion with E. nesh, which sometimes meant 'delicate ' as well as 'soft.' Der. nice-ty, M. E. nicetee, Chaucer, C. T. 4044, from O. F. nicete, 'sloth, simplicity' (Cot.); nice-ness NICHE, a recess in a wall, for a statue. (F., - Ital., - L.) In Minsheu, ed. 1627. - F. nicke, 'a niche;' Cot. - Ital. nicchia, a niche; closely allied to nicchio, a shell, hence a shell-like recess in a wall, so called (probably) from the early shape of it. Florio explains micekio as 'the shell of any shell-fish, a nooke or corner, also such little cubboords in churches as they put images in or as images stand in.'- Lat. mitulum, mytilum, acc. of muulus, mytilus, a sea-muscle. 'Derived in the same way as Ital. secchia from situla, a bucket, and Ital. vecchio from Lat. uetulus, old; as to the change of initial, cf. Ital. nespola with Lat. mespilum, a medlar; ' Diez. similar change of initial occurs in E. napkin, due to Lat. mappa. β. Referred by some to Gk. μντίλοs, a muscle; but the Gk. word may be of Lat. origin. The Lat. mytilus is also found in the form mūtulus, and is allied to musculus, a little mouse, also a sea-muscle; ct. UK.  $\mu var, a$  sea-muscle. for mus, a mouse. See Muscle, Mouse. ¶ The similarity to E. wick is availant. E. nick is accidental.

MICK (1), a small notch. (O. Low G.) 'Though but a stick with a nick;' Fotherby, Atheom., p. 62, ed. 1622 (Todd's Johnson). 'To nick, to hit the time right; I nick'd it, I came in the nick of time. just in time. Nick and notch, i. e. crena, are synonymous words, and to attain, Lat. nancisci, to acquire. Thus the sense of nigh is 'that 892 NEWS. Chaucer, C. T. 10924; formed by adding -nes (-ness) to M. E. news-fangel. NEWS, what is new, tidings. (E.) Formerly news, which does NEWS, what is new, tidings. (E.) Formerly news, which does of notch, and the a little notch; so also tip from top. See Notch. B. Hence nick, a score on a tally, a reckoning; 'out of all nick' = past all counting. Two Gent. iv. 2. 76. Der. nick, to notch slightly. Com. Errors, V. 175.

NICK (2), the devil. (E.) In the phrase 'Old Nick.' A name taken from the old Northern mythology. A. S. sicor, a water-sprite; Beowulf, ed. Grein, II. 422, 575, 845, 1427. + Icel. nykr, a fabulous water-goblin. + Dan. nök, nisse. + Swed. näcken, a sea-god. + O. H. G. nichus, a water-sprite, fem. nichessa; G. nin, fem. nine. Root unknown; cf. Fick, iii. 163.

NICKEL, a grayish white metal. (G., -Gk.?) One of the few G. words in E. Added by Todd to Johnson's Dict. – G. nickel, nickel; kupfernickel, nickel of copper.  $\beta$ . In Mahn's Webster we are told that nickel is an abbreviation of kupfer-nickel, i.e. 'copper of Nick, or Nicholas, a name given in derision, as it was thought to be a base ore of copper.' The Swed. form kopparnickel is added. which I fail to trace, though nickel was first described by Cronstedt, a Swede, in 1751. γ. If this be right, the word is not a true G. word, but borrowed from Gk. Νικόλαου; cf. Acts, vi. 5.

NICKNACK, the same as Knickknack, q. v. NICKNAME, a sumame, soubriquet. (E.) In Shak. Romeo, ii. I. 13. One of the words which has acquired an unoriginal initial n; see remarks on the letter N. M.E. nekename, corruption of ekename, an additional name; in later times changed to nicknow from a popular etymology which connected the word with the verb nick, which properly means 'to notch,' not 'to clip.' It may further be remarked that a nickname is not so much a docking of the name, as an addition to it, a sur-name. 'Neke-name, or eke-name, agnomen Prompt. Parv. p. 352. Way cites in his note similar glosses, such as: 'Agnomen, an ekename, or a surename (sic),' Medulla; 'An ekname, agnomen;' Catholicon. Spelt ekename, Testament of Love; Chaucer's Works, ed. 1561, p. 295 back, col. 2, l. 9. There can be no doubt as to the purely E. origin of the word, which has just the sense of Lat. agnomen, and is a mere variation of M. E. toname, a to-name, additional name, surname (cognate with G. zumame, a nickname), for which see P. Plowman, C. xiii. 211, Layamon, 9383. Thus the word is simply compounded of eke and name; see Eke, Name. + Icel. auknafn, a nickname; from auka, to eke, and nafn, a name. + Swed. öknamn, from öka, to eke, and namn, a name. + Dan. ögenann, from öge, to eke. Der. nichtame, verb, Hamlet, iii. 1. 151. NICOTIAN, belonging to tobacco. (F.) 'Your Nicotian [tobacco] is good too;' Ben Jonson, Every Man, ed. Wheatley, A. iii. sc. 5, l. 89. - O. F. Nicotiane, 'Nicotian, tobacco, first sent into France by Nicot in 1560; ' Cot. Coined, with fem. suffix -iane France by Nicol in 1500; Col. Control, and (= Lat. -iana), from the name Nicol. Der. Hence also nicol-ine.

NIECE, the daughter of a brother or sister. (F.,-L.) fem. form of nephew. M. E. nece, Rob. of Glouc. p. 353, I. 9; spelt neyce, King Alisaunder, I. 1713. - O. F. niece, mod. F. niece. Cf. Prov. nepta, a niece, in Bartsch, Chrestomathie Provençale. - Low Lat. neptia, which occurs A. D. 809 (Brachet). - Lat. neptis, a granddaughter, a nicce; used as fem. of nepos (stem nepol-); see Nophew. NIGGARD, a miser. (Scand.) M. E. nigard (with one g). Chaucer, C. T. 5015; whence the sb. nigardie, id. 13102. The suffix -ard is of F. origin, as usual; and the F. -ard is of O. H. G. origin; see Brachet, Introd. to F. Etym. Dict. § 196. But this suffix was freely added to E. words, as in drunk-ard; and we find a parallel form in M. E. nygun. '[He was] a nygun and auarous' = he was a niggard and an avaricious man; Rob. of Brunne, Handlyng Synne, 1. 5578. We also find an adj. niggish; Richardson. Of Scand. origin. - Icel. These forms answer to a Teut. type HNAWA, sparing; Fick, iii. 81. The form of the root is KNU (= Teut. NIGHTINGALE, the bird that sings by night. (E.) The # before g is excrescent, as in messenger for messager, passenger for passager, &c. M. E. nightingale, Chaucer, C. T. 98; earlier form mistegale, Reliquiæ Antiquæ, i. 241 (Stratmann). – A. S. niktegale, Wright's Vocab. i. 62, col. 2. Lit. 'singer of the night.' – A. T. 6414; it is cognate with Dan. gale, Swed. gala, to crow as a cock, O. H. G. halan, to sing; and is closely related to E. yell. See Yell.

NIGHTMARE, an incubus, a dream at night accompanied by pressure on the breast. (E.) M. E. nightemare. 'Nyghte mare, or mare, or wytche, Epialtes, vel effialtes' [ephialtes]; Prompt. Parv. [Tyrwhitt's reading of nightes more in Chaucer, C. T. 3485, is unauthorised.] - A. S. mahi, nihi, night; and mara, a night-mare, a rare word, occurring in Cockayne's A. S. Leechdoms, ii. 306, 1. 12. + Du. nachtmerrie, a night-mare; an accommodated spelling, due to confusion with Du. merrie, a mare, with which the word has no connexion. A like confusion is probably common in modern English, though the A.S. forms are distinct. + Icel. mara, the nightmare, an ogress. + Swed. mara. + Dan. mare. + Low G. moor, nagt-moor; Bremen Wörterbuch, iii. 184, where the editor, against the evidence, confuses moor with Low L. märe, a mare. + O. Compounded of niki, night, and scadu, shade; perhaps because thought to be evil, and loving the shade of night. See Night, Shade. [+] NIGRISSCENT, growing black. (L.) In Todd's Johnson.

Lat. nigrescent-, stem. of pres. pt. of nigrescere, to become black, inceptive form of nigrere, to be black.—Lat. nigr., stem of niger, black.  $\beta$ . Niger has the crude form nigro-=nic-ro-, formed from nic, allied to Skt. nio, night, which is an attenuated form of nakta, night. Thus the sense of niger is 'night-like.' See Night, Negro. Der. nigritude, from Lat. nigritudo, blackness; see Hood's Poems, A Black Job, last line but one.

NIMBLE, active. (E.) The b is excressent. M. E. nimel, nimil; see 'Nymyl, capax' in Prompt. Parv., and Way's note. Formed from A.S. nim an, to take, catch, seize, with the A.S. suffix -ol, still preserved in E. witt-ol, lit. a wise man, used sarcastically to mean a simpleton. We find the parallel A.S. forms numol, numul, numul, numul, occurring in the compounds scears numul, lit. 'sharp-taking,' i. e. effi-cacious, and teart numul, also lit. 'tart-taking,' i. e. efficacious; Cockayne's A. S. Leechdoms, i. 134, l. 10, 152, l. 3, and footnotes; these are formed from nume, the base of the past tense pl. and pp. of the same verb niman. The sense is 'quick at seizing,' hence active, nimble. So also Icel. næma, keen, quick at learning, from nema, to take; Dan. nem, quick, apprehensive, adroit, from nemme, to apprehead, learn. β. The A. S. niman, to seize, is cognate with Icel. nema, Dan. nemme, G. nehmen, Goth. niman, to take; a strong verb, with A.S. and Goth. pt. t. nam. The orig. sense is 'to take as one's share.'  $\rightarrow$  NAM, to apportion, distribute, allot; whence also Gk. répeur, to distribute, Lat. num-erus, a number, &c. Der. nimbl-y, nimble-ness. NINNY, a simpleton. (Ital.) 'What a pied ninny's this!' Temp. iii. 2. 71. – Ital. ninno, a child, a dialectal form cited by Diez, not given in Florio nor in Meadows' Dict., but the same word with Span, niño, a child, infant, one of little experience. Of imitative origin; cf. Ital. ninna, a lullaby, nurse's song to rock a child to sleep, ninnare, to lull to sleep, nanna, 'a word that women use to still their children with' (Florio). From the repetition of the syllables nl. ni, or na, na, in humming or singing children to sleep. See Nun.

NIP, to pinch, break off the edge or end. (E.) M. E. nippen; "nyppyng his lyppes' = biting his lips, pressing them with his teeth, P. Plowman, C. vii. 104. Put for knip; see G. Douglas, Prol. to XII Book of the Æneid, l. 94. Not found in A. S., though the derivative cnif, a knife, occurs; see Knife. + Du. knijpen, to pinch; knippen, to fillip, crack, snap, entrap. + Dan. knibe, to pinch, nip. + Swed. knipa, to pinch. squeeze, catch. + G. kneifen, to pinch, nip; kneipen, to pinch, twitch. + Lithuan. żnybti, żnypti, to pinch, nip, as a crab with his claws, to bite as a goose with its beak (Nesselmann).  $\beta$ . NIT, the egg of a louse or small insect. (E.) M. E. nite, nyte, also used to mean a louse. 'Nyte, wyrme, Lens;' Prompt. Parv. -A.S. Cf. also Russ. gnida, a nit, Gk. köyis (stem köyið).  $\beta$ . The Teut. type is HNITI or HNITA; Fick, iii. 81; the sense is 'that which attacks' or 'stings' (orig. 'that which makes to itch'), from the Teut. base HNIT, to attack, thrust. This appears in A. S. Anitan, only used of an ox, meaning 'to gore,' Exod. xxi. 28, Icel. Anita, to attack, strike. The corresponding Aryan root is KNID, appearing in Gk. svilers (= svil-yew), to scrape, tease, make to itch; and KNID is another form of KNAD, which is the root of neitle; see Nettle. [†]

NO(1), a word of refusal or denial. (E.) M. E. no, Will. of Palerne, 2701, 3115. There is a clear distinction in M. E. between no and nay, the former being the stronger form ; see Nay, which is of Scand. origin. - A. S. ná, nó, adv., never, no. Compounded of ne, not, and d, ever. The form d became so in M.E., occurring in Genesis and Exodus, ed, Morris, l. 111; but this form was entirely superseded by the cognate word ai, ay, mod. E. ay, aye, which is of Scand. origin. See Aye, adv., ever. B. The neg. particle ne, signifying 'not,' is cognate with O. H.G. ni, M. H. G. ne, not; Goth. ni, not, Russ. ne, not, Irish, Gael., and W. ni, not; Lat. ne, in non-ne; Skt. na, not. The Skt. form na is the most original. C. In mod. E. this neg. particle is represented by the initial n- of n-ever, n-aught, n-one, n-sither, n-ay, n-or, and the like. If it is quite a mistake to suppose that the M.E. no, not, so common in Chaucer, is of F. origin. It is rather the A.S. ne, which happens to coincide in form with F. ne, of Lat. origin; and that is all. NO (2), none. (E.) Merely a shortened form of none, as a is of an; see None. Der. no-body, q. v.

NOBLE, illustrious, excellent, magnificent. (F., -L.) In early use. M.E. noble, O. Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, i. 273, l. 16. - F. noble. - Lat. nobilem, acc. of nobilis (= gno-bilis), well-known, notable, illustrious, noble. - Lat. gno-, base of noscere (= gnoccere), to know adv.; noble-man, in O. Eng. Homilies, as above; noble-ness (a hybrid word, with E. suffix), Wint. Tale, ii. 3. 12. Also nobil-i-ty, K. John, v. 2. 42, from O. F. nobilite, nobilitet – Lat. acc. nobilitatem. NOBODY, no one. (E.) In Shak. Merry Wives, i. 4. 14.

Compounded of no, short for none, and body; not in early use. It took the place of M. E. no man, which is now not much used. See None and Body.

NOCK, the old form of Notch, q. v.

NOCTURN, the name of a service of the church. (F.,-L.) See Palmer, Origines Liturgicæ, i. 202, ed. 1832. 'A nocturne of the Psalter ;' Lord Berners, tr. of Froissart, vol. ii, c. 26 (R.) M. E. nocturne, Ancren Riwle, p. 270, l. I. - F. nosturne, nocturnal; also, a nocturn. - Low Lat. nocturna, a nocturn ; orig. fem. of Lat. nocturnus,  $\beta$ . To be divided as noc-twr-nus, answering to belonging to night. Belonging to mgnt. p. 10 to united as notice many difference of the state of the st

Lat. nocturnalis, extended from nocturnus; nocturnal-ly. [†] NOD, to incline the head forward. (E.) M. E. nodden, Chaucer, C. T. 16996. Not found in A.S., and difficult to trace. But it answers to a G. form noticen\*, found in the frequentative form noticela, a prov. G. word, meaning to shake, wag, jog (Flügel). To nod is to shake the head by a sudden inclination forwards, as is done by a sleepy person; to make a butting movement with the head. Closely allied to M. H. G. nuolón, O. H. G. Anótón, to shake.  $\beta$ . A Davallel form occurs in prov. E. nog. to jog. to move on (Halliwell); Lowland Sc. noggan, 'walking steadily, and regularly nodding the head' (Jamieson). Cf. also Low Sc. nodge, to strike with the knuckles, modge, a push or stroke, properly with the knuckles (Jamieson); mod. E. sudge. The orig. notion seems to be that of butting or pushing; and there is a connection with Icel. knjóla, to hammer, clinch, rivet, hnydja, a rammer for beating turf. Fick (iii. 82) gives HNUD as the form of the Teut. base of the latter words. See also Knock, Nudge. ¶ Not connected with Lat. suere, to nod (base su). Der. sod, sb.

NODDLE, a name for the head. (E.) In Shak. Tam. Shrew, i 1. 64. Wedgwood well says: 'the noddle, noddock, or niddock is properly the projecting part at the back of the head, the nape of the neck, then ludicrously used for the head itself.' M. E. nodle, nodil. 'Nodyl, or nodle of the heed, or nolle, Occiput;' Prompt. Parv.  $\beta$ . It really stands for knoddel, and is the dimin. of knod, a word lost in Early E., but preserved in other languages; cf. O. Du. knodde, a knob (Hexham); Icel. kniddr, a knob, ball; G. knoten, a knot, a knob.  $\gamma$ . This knod is a mere variant of Knot, q.v. And see Node, below. [†]

NODE, a knot. (L.) 'Nodes, in astronomy, are the points of the intersection of the orbit of the sun or any other (I) planet with the ecliptick ; ' Phillips, ed. 1706. ' Nodus or Node, a knot, or noose, &c.; id.-Lat. nodus (= gnodus), a knot; cognate with E. Knot, q. v. Der. nod-ous, Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. iv. c. 4. § 1. Englished from Lat. nodosus; nod-os-i-ty, id. b. v. c. 5. § 2, from F. nodosité, 'knottiness' (Cot.) = Lat. acc. nodositatem ; nod-ule, Englished from Lat. nodulus, a little knot, dimin. of nodus.

NOGGIN, a wooden cup, small mug. (C.) 'Of drinking-cups... we have ... mazers, broad-mouthed dishes, noggins, whiskins, piggins, &c.; Heywood, Drunkard Opened, &c., ed. 1635, p. 45 (Todd). Also in Minsheu, ed. 1627. – Irish noigin, 'a noggin, a naggin, quarter of a pint, O'Reilly; Gael. noigean, a wooden cup. The The word has lost an initial c, appearing in Irish enagaire, 'a naggin; Gael. cnagan, a little knob, peg, pin, an earthen pipkin. B. All these words are from Gael. and Irish cnag, a knob, peg, also a knock; B. All note also Gael. enagaire, a knocker, a noggin, enagaidh, bunchy. Hence the noggin is named from its round form, or from its being made of a knotty piece of wood; cf. Irish enaig, a knot in wood. Y. Also the orig, sense of cnag was a knock, a blow, hence a bump, as being the effect of a blow. All from Irish and Gael. cnag, to ¶ Hence the spelling knoggin in knock; see Knag, Knock. Swift, cited by Richardson, is correct.

NOISE, a din, troublesome sound. (F., -L., -Gk.?) In early use. M. E. noise, Ancren Riwle, p. 66, l. 18. – F. noise, 'a brabble, brawle, debate, . . also a noise; ' Cot. B. The O. F. form is nose; and the Provencal has nausa, nauza, noisa, nueiza (Bartsch). The origin is uncertain; it is discussed by Diez, who decides that the Prov. form nauses could only have been derived from Lat. nauses, so that a noise is so called because nauseons; see Nauson. If this be right, the word is really of Greek origin. y. Others hold to a derivation from Lat. noxia, harm, as if a noise were nomious; see Noxious. This latter derivation, though at first sight more obvious, we with the Prov. nausa, and perhaps not even with O. F.

cognate with E. know : with suffix -bilis. See Know. Der. nobl-y, $Annus Mirabilis, st. 40; nois-i-ly, nois-i-ness; noise-less; -ly, -ness; also noise, verb, M. E. noisen, Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. iii. met, 6, 1. 217

NOISOME, annoying, troublesome. (F., -L.; with E. mfin.) Formed from M. E. noy, annoyance, injury; with E. suffix - some -formed from M. E. noy, annoyance, injury; with E. suffix - some -formerly, viz. noy-ous, Wyclif, 2 Thess. iii. 2; noy-ful, Sir T. More, Works, p. 481 e; and noy-some, id. p. 1389 h.  $\beta$ . Noy is a mere contraction of M. E. anoy, ano; see Romaunt of the Rose, 4404, &c. The derivation is from the Lat. phrase in odio habere, as explained s. v. Annoy, q. v. ¶ Not connected with Lat. nocere, to hurt.

NOMAD, wandering; one of a wandering tribe. (Gk.) 'The Numidian nomades, so named of changing their pasture ;' Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. v. c. 3. - Gk. vopáð-, stem of vopás, roaming, wandering, esp. in search of pasture. - Gk. voude, a pasture, allotted abode. -Gk. véµew, to assign, allot. - V NAM, to assign ; cf. Skt. nam, to bow to, bow, bend, upa-nam, to fall to one's share, upa-nata, due. Hence also nom-osis, nim-ble, num-ber; and the suffix -nomy in astronomy, auto-nomy, gauro-nomy, anti-nomi-an. Der. nomad-ic. NOMENCLATOR, one who gives names to things. (L.)

Skeat, p. 176, l. 316. This refers to the output the founder of famous dispute between the Nominalists and Realists; the founder of the former sect was condemned by a council at Soissons, A.D. 1092; Haydn, Dict. of Dates. - Lat. nominalis, nominal. - Lat. nomin-, stem Nominate, to name, (L.) In Shak. L. L. L. i. 2. 16. - Lat.

Der. nominations, Fryth's Works, p. 58, col. 2, from F. nomination, 'a nomination' (Cot); nomination, nominative, M.E. nominatif, Trevisa, i. 327, from O.F. nominatif, in use in the 13th century (Littré), from Lat. nominations. Also nomin-ee, a term of law, formed as if from a F, verb nominer, with a pp. nominé; but the real F. verb is nommer.

NON-, prefix, not. (L.) In compounds, such as non-appearance non-compliance. - Lat. non, not; orig. none, not one; compounded of Lat. ne, not, and oinum, old form of unum, neut. of unus, one. Thus

Lat. non is of parallel formation with E. None, q.v. NONAGE, minority. (L.; and F., -L.) In Shak. Rich. III, ii. 3.13. Compounded of Lat. non, not, and age; see Non-, Age. [+] NONCE, in phr. for the nonce. (E.) M. E. for the nones, Chaucer, C. T. 381. The sense is for the once, for the occasion or purpose. The older spelling is for then ones, still earlier for then anes, as in St. Juliana, ed. Cockayne, p. 71. Thus the n really belongs to the dat. case of the article, viz. A.S.  $\Im_{im}$ , later  $\Im_{im}$ , then, Ones = mod. E. once; see Once. We may note that ones was first a gen. case, then an adv., and was lastly used as a sb., as here.

NONCONFORMING, refusing to conform. (L.; and F.,-L.; with E. suffix.) The Act of Uniformity came into operation on 24 Aug. 1662; Haydn, Dict. of Dates. Added by Todd to Johnson's Dict. - Lat. non, non; and descriptus, pp. of describere, to describe; see Describe.

NONE, not one. (E.) M. E. noon, non; as in 'non other'-no other, Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 5. Before a consonant it commonly becomes no, as in mod. E.; but in very early authors we find now even before a consonant, as in 'none tonge;' Rob. of Glouc. p. 285, 1. 19. - A.S. nán, none; compounded of ne, not, and án, one; see No (1) 5 B, and One.

NONENTITY, a thing that does not exist. (L.) In Johnson. From Non- and Entity.

NONES, the ninth day before the ides. (L.) Also used of the old church service at the ninth hour, which is the older use in E. This ninth hour or nones was orig. 3 P. M., but was changed to midday; whence our noon. See further under Noon.

with the Prov. nausa, and perhaps not even with O. F. NONPLUS, a state of perplexity; to perplex. (L.) Most is-y, for which formerly moiss-ful was used, as in Dryden, commonly a verb. 'He has non-plus'd me;' Dryden, Kind Keeper,

Sii. 1. The orig. phrase was, probably, 'to be at a non-plus,' which <sup>a</sup> with which cf. prov. E. (Essex) gay, a painted picture in a child's occurs in Locke (Todd), and probably earlier. The Lowland Sc. form is newk (Jamieson); which leads us to the Celtic. = Irish and Gael. nine, new (Jamieson); which leads us to the Celtic. = Irish and Gael. nine, a nook, corner. Root unknown; nor is it at all certain that there is any connection with nock or notek.

NOON, midday. (L.) Orig. the ninth hour of the day, or 3 P.M., but afterwards the time of the church-service called nones was altered, and the term came to be applied to midday. M. Also nones, nun-chion. NOOSE, a slip-knot. (Unknown.) 'Caught in my own noose;'

Beaum. and Fletcher, Rule a Wife, iii. 4 (Perez). Perhaps not found earlier. Origin unknown; perhaps it is due to O. F. nows, pl. of now or new, mod. F. newd, a knot; which is from Lat. nodus, cognate with E. Knot. See Littré. Wedgwood cites Languedoc nous-courses, a running-knot; nouzelut, knotty. β. Mahn suggests W. nais, a band, tie; Gael. nasg, a tie-band, a wooden collar for a cow; Irish nase, masg, a tie, collar, chain, ring; Bret. mask, a cord used for tying up cows by their horns, either to fasten them to the stall, or to lead them about. Cf. Lat. nexus, a tie. fastening, noose. y. For a full account of the word, see Mätzner, Gramm. ii. 2. 352. See Neither.

NORMAL, according to rule. (L.) A late word; added by Todd to Johnson. - Lat. normalis, made according to a carpenter's square. - Lat. norma, a carpenter's square, rule, pattern. Contracted from a form genorima \*, and perhaps merely a borrowed word from Gk. The corresponding Gk. word is γrωρίμη, fem. of γrώριμοs, well-known, whence the sense of 'exact' in Latin; cf. Gk. γrώμαν, that which knows or indicates, an index, a carpenter's square. Both  $\gamma r \omega \mu a r \omega \rho \mu \rho a$  are from the  $\sqrt{GNA}$ , to know. See Gnomon and Know. Root unknown. The Skt. nára, water, does not help us; the suggestion that north meant 'rainy quarter' is a mere guess. Der. north-ern, Chaucer, C.T. 1989, A.S. nordern (Grein), cognate with O.H.G. norda-róni, where the suffix is from the verb to run, and means north-running, i.e. coming from the north (Fick, iii. 251). NOTATION, a system of symbols. (L.) In Ben Jonson's Eng. Grammar, cap. viii is on 'the notation of a word,' by which he means the etymology. The word was really taken directly from Latin, but was put into a French form, by analogy. Formed as if from a F. notation (not in Cotgrave); from Lat. notationem, acc. of notatio, a designating, also, etymology. - Lat. notatus, pp. of notare, to mark; from nota, a mark; see Note. Swed. nocka, a notch, incision (Ihre); Swed. dial. nokke, nokk, an incision or cut in timber (Rietz).  $\beta$ . Whether this is the same word with Dan. nok, a pin, peg, Icel. hnokki, a small metal hook on a distaff, is not clear; perhaps not, though both senses are given by Rietz under the same form nokk.  $\gamma$ . The O. Ital. mocca, 'the nocke of a bowe' (Florio), is merely a borrowed word from Teutonic; the E. mock is older than the period of our borrowings from Italian. Der. notch, verb, Cor. iv. 5. 199. NOVEL, new, strange. (F., - L.) In Shak. Sonnet 123. It seems to be far less old in the language than the sb. novelty, which is M.E. noveliee, Chaucer, C. T. 10933. But it follows the O. F. spelling of the sb. - O. F. novel (Burguy), later nouvel, mod. F. nouveau. - Lat. nouellus, new; dimin. form from nouus, which is cognate with E. New, q. v. The G. nu-n, Gk. νῦν, Lat. nu-n-c, are ex-tended forms from the same source; NU seems to be an old pronominal stem; cf. the pronom. stem NA, whence Gk. vŵi, we two, Lat. no-s, we. Der. now-a-days (= now on days), Mids. Nt. Dr. iii. 1. 148, Chaucer, C. T. 16864; see A- (2), prefix. Hence also new, novel.

'After the fire was quenched, they found in niggots of gold and silver mingled together, about a thousand talents;' North, tr. of Plutarch's Lives, p. 499; cited in Trench, Eng. Past and Present, without a statement of the edition used; it is not that of 1631. Another quotation from the same author is also cited. See No (1) and One. Der. null-i-ty, from F. nullité, 'a nullity' (Cot.), from Low Lat. acc. nulli-tatem ; nulli-fy, formed (as if from F. nullifier) from Lat. nullificare, to make void, from nulli- = nullo-, crude form of nullus, and -fic-, for facere, to make; also null, verb, Milton, Samson, 935. Also an-nul, dis-an-nul. [†] NUMB, deprived of sensation. (E.)

The b is excrescent; spelt numme in Shak. I Hen. VI, ii. 5. 13 (first folio). M. E. nome, a shortened form of nomen, which was orig. the pp. of M. E. nimen, to take. Thus nome = taken, seized, hence overpowered, and lastly, deprived of sensation. 'When this was said, into weping She fel, as she that was through-nome With love, and so fer overcome ' = when this was said, she fell a-weeping, as being thoroughly overcome by love,' &cc.; Gower, C. A. ii. 249. Gower uses the same word nome elsewhere in the ordinary sense of 'taken;' C. A. ii. 227, 1. 23, ii. 386, l. 4. - A. S. numen, pp. of niman, to take; see Nimble. So also Icel. numunn, the pp. of nema, to take, is similarly used; as in numinn máli, bereft of speech; fjörvi numna, life-bereft. Der. benumb, q.v.; also numb, verb, Spenser, F. Q. vi. 11. 45; numb-ness, Wint. Tale, v. 3. 102 (spelt numnesse in the first folio). Also numscull.

NUMERAL, a figure expressing a number. (L.) Orig. an adj. 'Numeral, of or belonging to number;' Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674.-Lat. numeralis, belonging to number.-Lat. numerus, a number; see NUN, a female celibate, living in seclusion. (L.) M. E. RORRE, Chaucer, C. T. 118; but this is an alteration to the F. spelling; cf. F. nonne, a nun. The mod. E. agrees with the A.S. spelling, and with M. E. nunne, as found in the Ancren Riwle, p. 316, last line. -A.S. nunna, a nun; Laws of Ælfred (political), sect. 8; in Thorpe's Ancient Laws, i. 66. - Low Lat. nunna, more commonly nonna, a nun, orig. a title of respect, esp. used in addressing an old maiden lady, or a widow who had devoted herself to sacred duties. The old sense is 'mother,' answering to Lat. nonnus, father, later, a monk ; a word of great antiquity. + Gk. rárry, rérra, an aunt ; rárras, rérros, an uncle. + Skt. nand, a familiar word for mother, used by children; see the St. Petersburg Dict. iv. 25; answering to Skt. tata, father. β. Formed by repetition of the syllable na, used by children to a father, mother, aunt, or nurse; just as we have ma-ma, da-da or addy, and the like. Compare Mamma, and Dad. Der. numer. M. E. nonnerie, Rob. of Glouc. p. 291, l. 13, from O.F. nonnerie, spelt nonerie in Roquefort, which was formed from O.F. nonne, a nun, from Lat. nonna.

NUNCHION, a luncheon. (Hybrid; L. and E.) In Butler, Hudibras, i. I. 346. Cotgrave explains O. F. ressie by 'an after-noon's nunchion, or drinking;' and rightly, for the old sense had relation to drinking, not to eating, as will appear. The M.E. spelling, in one instance at least, is nonechanche. We find that certain donations for drink to workmen are called in the [London] Letter-book G, fol. iv (27 Edw. III), nonechenche; see Riley, Memorials of London, p. 265, note 7; see my note to P. Plowman, C.  $\beta$ . The etymology ix. 146. It should rather be spelt noneschenche. is obvious, viz. from M.E. none, noon; and schenche, a pouring out or distribution of drink. The none-schenche or 'noon-drink' was the accompaniment to the none-mete or 'noon-meat.' for which see nunmete in the Frompt. Parv. p. 360, and Way's note upon it. Y. The M. E. none, noon, is from Lat. none, the ninth hour, as explained s. v. Noon. 8. M. E. schenche, a pouring out of drink, is a sb. made from M.E. schenchen, to pour out drink. 'Bachus the wyn hem schenchith al aboute'= Bacchus pours out the wine for them all round; Chaucer, C. T. (Harleian MS.) ed. Wright, 1. 9596. Tyr-whitt's ed. has skinketh, 1. 9596; the Six-text edition (E. 1722) has shynketh, shynketh, shenketh, as various readings. All these are various forms of the verb skenken, from A.S. scencan, to pour out drink, occurring in Beowulf, ed. Grein, l. 496. This A.S. verb is cognate with Du. schenken, to pour out, fill, give, present, Icel. skenkja, to serve drink, fill one's cup, Dan. skienke, G. schenken, einschenken. e. The derivation of A.S. scencan is very curious; it is a causal verb, derived with the usual vowel-change of a to e, from A.S. scane, usually written sceane, a shank; see Shank. The  $R. S. scale, usually written scale, at a shark, see binamic. The scale of the distribution is, that a skark also means a hollow bone, a bone of the skt.) M.E. sciemuge, Chaucer, C. T. 13693; later mainseger, Rom. leg, shin-bone, and hence 'a pipe; 'in particular, it denoted the pipe thrust into a cask to tap it and draw off the liquor. Thus prov. See Nut. <math>\beta$ . The latter half is from O. F. muge, musk, standing E. shark means 'a tunnel for a chimney' (Halliwell), i.e. a chimney for musge, which from Lat. muscum, acc. of muscus, musk; see Musk.

D. 60. last line : Chaucer, C. T. 718. - F. nombre : Norman F. numbre & pipe ; the O. Du. schenkkan means 'a pot with a pipe or a gullet to pour out,' Sewel. A precisely parallel interchange of sense occurs in G. rohr, a reed, tube, pipe; whence rohrbein, the hollow bone of a leg. shin bone ; röhrbrunnen, a jet of a fountain ; röhre, a pipe, also a funnel, shaft, or tunnel (like the use of prov. E. shank). ¶ It would be easy to add further proofs of this curious derivation of nuncheon from noon-shenk, and of shenk from shank. We can now understand the full force of the quotation in Way's note from Kennett's MS., viz. 'Nooning, beavre, drinking, or repast ad nonam, three in the afternoon, called ... in the North parts a noonchion, an afternoon's nunchion.' In many parts, the use of nuncheon was driven out by the use of bever (lit. a drinking) in the same sense, and in East Anglia by the more intelligible word nooning. Lastly, by a curious confusion with the prov. E. lunch, a lump of bread, nuncheon was turned into the modern luncheon; see Luncheon. The same change of initial n to l occurs in lilac, from Pers. nil, blue; see Lilao. The verb schenchen is used by Gower as well as Chaucer; see the quotation in Halliwell; it was afterwards turned into skink, and occurs in Shakespeare in the deriv. under-skinker, I Hen. IV, ii. 4. 26. The derivation of the verb from skank is given by Fick and Wackernagel, and is nothing new; but the complete history of nuncheon and luncheon is now (I believe) here given for the first time.

NUNCIO, a messenger, esp. a papal ambassador. (Ital., -L.) In Minsheu, ed. 1627; and in Shak. Tw. Nt. i. 4. 28. - Ital. numerio, nuntio, 'an ambassador;' Florio.-Lat. nuntium, acc. of nuntius, a bringer of tidings; see further under Announce. Cf. de-nounce, pro-nounce, e-nounce, re-nounce.

Fick (iii. 81) gives the Teutonic type as HNOTI, from the Teut. base HNAT, to bite, for which see Nottle. Cf. Lithuan. kandulas, a kennel (Schleicher), from the verb kandu, I bite (Nesselmann). ¶ It cannot be brought under the same form with Lat. nun. Dor. nut, verb, to gather nuts ; nut-shell, M. E. noteschale, Trevisa, iv. 141; nut-brown, M. E. nute-brun, Cursor Mundi, 18846; nut-cracker, nut-hatch, a bird also called the nutjobber or nutpecker, M. E. nuthake, Squire of Low Degree, 55, the sense being mut-hacker, the bird that hacks or pecks nuts, see Hatch (3) and Hack (1). And see nut-mag.

NUTMEG, the musk-nut. (Hybrid; E. and F.,-L.,-Pers,-

This O.F. maye occurs in a quotation cited by Littre from Ducange, $ [The Lat. stuppa means 'tow.] s. v. muscus. 'Que plus que muge ne que mente Flaira souef lor renomee' = that their renown will smell sweeter than musk or mint. The s of the form musge occurs in the dimin. form musgues (Burguy), the old form of mod. F. mugues, a lily of the valley, similarly named from its scent; the same s is represented by r in the dialectal F. murgust cited by Littre. Y. The identification is completely established by comparing O. F. muguette, 'a nutmeg,' Cot.; F. noin muscade, 'a nutmeg,' id.; Span. nuez moscada, a nutmeg, Ital. noce moscade, the same; Low Lat. muscate, a nutmeg, it. 'musk-like,' formed with suffix -ata from muse-, stem of muscus. The Lat. muscus

О.

O(1), OH, an interjection. (E.) M. E. o, Ancren Riwle, p. 54; Layamon, 17126. Not in A. S. + Du. o. + Dan. and Swed. o. + G. o. + Goth. o, Mk. ix. 19. + Lat. o. + Gk.  $\tilde{a}, \tilde{o}, \tilde{b}$ . A natural exclamatory sound, akin to Ah! There is no particular reason for the spelling a, which is not old. Some make a distinction

In use between o and ot; this is merely arbitrary. O (2), a circle. (E.) In Shak. Hen. V, prol. 13; Mids. Nt. Dr. iii. 2. 188. So called because the letter o is of a circular shape.

OAF, a simpleton. (Scand.) 'You af, you !' Dryden, Kind Keeper, i. 1; where the old ed. has aupk; see ed. 1763, vol. iv. p. 302. In Drayton's Nymphidia, 1. 79, the old ed. of 1627 has auf; Prof. Morley prints af. It is the same word as prov. E. auf, an elf (Halliwell). Again, and or any stands for and, a dialectal variety of E. elf. – Icel. d/r, an elf, contact with E. Elf. q. v.  $\beta$ . Thus oaf is the Northern or Scand. variant of elf; a similar loss of l is common in the North; cf. Lowland Sc. bank for balk, a' for all. &c.

OAK, the name of a tree. (E.) M. E. oke, better ook, Chaucer, C. T. 3019. - A. S. dc, Grein, i. 14; the long a changes into later oo, by rule. + Du. eik. + Icel. eik. + Dan. erg, eg. + Swed. ek. + G. eicke.  $\beta$ . All from the Teut. type AIKA; Fick, iii. 3. Cf. Lith. auzolas, an oak. Root unknown. Der. oak-en, adj., A. S. ácen (Bosworth), with adj. suffix -en as gold-en, beech-en, &cc. Also oak-apple, oak-leaf, oak-gall. [But not acorn, as often wrongly supposed.]

OAKUM, tow, old ropes teased into loose hemp. (E.) Splt oakam in Dampier's Voyages, v. i. p. 295, an. 1686 (R.)-A.S. ácumba, tow, in a gloss (Leo); cf. "Stuppa, deumbe,' Ælfric's Gloss., in Wright's Vocab. i. 40, col. 2.c; Cot. - Lct. obedient., stem of pres. pt. of obediers, to obey.

β. The sense is 'that which is combed out; ' the prefix is the usual A.S. d., cognate with G. er., Goth. w-; see A- (4), prefix. The rest of the word is related to A. S. cemban, to comb, and camb, a comb; see Comb. Mr. Wedg-wood says: 'O. H. G. ácambi, tow; M. H. G. kanef-ácamb, the combings or hards of hemp, tow, what is combed out in dressing it; as desine, the refuse swingled out in dressing flaz. "Suppa pecitien ferreis hamis, donec omnis membrana decorticatur;" Pliny, xix. 1. 3. cited by Aufrecht in Philological Transactions.' Holland's transla-tion of the passage is as follows: 'Now that part thereof which is vtmost and next to the pill [peel] or rind, is called tow or hurds, and it is the worst of the line or flaxe, good for little or nothing but to make lampe-match or candle-wick; and yet the same must be better kembed with hetchell teeth of yron, vntill it be cleased from all the grosse barke and rind among; ' vol. ii. p. 4. OAR, a light pole with a flat blade, for rowing boats. (E.) M.E. ore, Havelok, 1871; Northern form ar, Barbour's Bruce, iii. 576, 691. -A. S. dr, Grein, i. 34; the change from d to long o being quite regular. + Icel. dr. + Dan. aare. + Swed. dra.  $\beta$ . Further allied to Gk.  $d\mu\phi$ - $h\rho$ - $\eta e$ , double-oared,  $d\lambda_1$ - $h\rho$ - $\eta e$ , rowing through the sea. έρ-έτης, an oarsman, έρ-έσσειν, to row, έρ-ετμός, an oar = Lat. remme (for eretmus); also to Lithuan. ir-ti, to row, ir-klas, an oar; also to Skt. ar-itra, a rudder (orig. a paddle). Y. All from the AR, perhaps in the sense 'to drive; see Curtius, i. 427, Fick, i. 19, iii. 22. Der. oar, verb, Temp. ii. 1. 118; oar-ed; eight-oar, i. e. eight-oared boat, &c.; oar-s-man, formed like hunt-s-man; from the same root we have also row, rudder.

OASIS, a fertile spot in a desert. (L., - Gk., - Egyptian.) Quite modern, but now common; see Todd. - Lat. oasis. - Gk. baous, asassa, a name of the fertile islets in the Libyan desert; Herod. iii. 26. Of Egyptian origin; cf. Coptic onake, a dwelling-place, casis; outh, to dwell; from outh, to add; Peyron, Copt. Lexicon, 1835. рр. 159, 160.

OAST, OAST-HOUSE, a kiln for drying hops. (E.) Spelt oast or east in Ray's Collection of South-Country Words, ed. 1091. [The form east is from Du. eest.] M. E. ost, oste; for examples, see Pegge's Kenticisms (E. D. S.), s. v. oat. - A. S. dst, a kiln. 'Sicca-torium [i. e. a drying-house], cyln, vel dst; 'Wright's Vocab. i. 58, col. 1. Thus the word is purely E., the change from a to or being quite regular; cf. A. S. ds, an oak, dr, an oar. + Du. sest; O. Du. ast; 'een ast, a place where barley is dryed to make malt with;' β. Allied to A. S. ad, a funeral pile (Leo), M. H. G. Hexham. eit, a fire, oven ; just as Lat. ceshe, glow, is related to Lat. cedes, a hearth, house. Cf. Gk. aldos, a burning heat. - / IDH, to kindle; see Ether.

OATH, a solemn vow. (E.) M. E. ooth, oth; Chaucer, C. T. 120. - A.S. do, Grein, i. 17; the change from 4 to so being regular, as in de, oak, dr, oar, + Du. eed. + Icel. eidr. + Dan. and Swed. ed. +Goth. auks. + G. eid; O. H. G. eid.  $\beta$ . OATS, the name of a kind of grain. (E.) M.E. oter, s. pl., Chancer, C. T. 7545. The sing. form appears in mod. E. oat-caie, oat-meal, and the adj. oat-on. - A. S. sita; we find wilds at a as a gloss to zizania in the Northumb. gloss to Matt. xiii. 38; also accredit daw, an acre-seed of oats, A. S. Chron. an. 1124, where atem is for dam, gen. sing. of ata. B. Mr. Wedgwood compares A. S. da with Icel. dia, food to eat; but the A. S. word rightly answering to Icel. dta is dt, Grein, i. 73, which of course is from the verb stas, to eat. y. Instead of this, I should prefer to connect A. S. dts with Icel. eitill, a nodule in stone, Norweg. eitel, a gland, knot, nodule in stone, Russ. isdro, a kernel in fruit, bullet, ball, shot, Gk. oldos, a swelling. If this be right, the orig. meaning of out was grain, com, kernel, with reference to the manner of its growth, the grains being of bullet-like form ; and it is derived from  $\checkmark$  ID, to swell, not from AD, to eat. See Fick, i. 28, iii. 4. Der. oat-on, adj., with suffix -en as in gold-on, oak-en ; oat-meal, oat-cake.

In Minsheu, ed. 1627.-Lat. obliteratus, pp. of obliterare or oblitterare, to efface, smear out. - Lat. ob, over; and litera, littera, a letter; see Letter, Line. B. The etymology is generally given from litus, pp. of linere, to smear; which will not account for the syllable -er-; the fact is, that the orig. sense of litera is a smear, mark, stroke, and that it is litera which is connected with litus. Y. Hence the usual derivation is ultimately correct, but it passes over (without explanation) a stage in the word's history. Der. obliterat-ion.

F. ocre, 'painters' oker;' Cot.  $-Lat. ochra. -Gk. <math>\delta\chi\rho\sigma$ , yellow ochre, so called from its pale colour.  $-Gk. \delta\chi\rho\sigma$ , pale, wan, esp. pale-yellow. Root uncertain. Der. ochre-ous, ochr.y.

OCTAGON, a plane figure with eight sides and angles. (Gk.) In Phillips, ed. 1706. Coined from Gk. bará, for bará, eight, cognate with E. eight; and yawia, an angle, corner, derived from yorv, the knee. See Eight and Knee. Der. octagon-al.

OCTAHEDBON, a solid figure with eight equal triangular sides. (Gk.) Spelt aclaedron in Phillips, ed. 1706. The & represents the Gk. hard breathing. Coined from bará, for bará, eight, cognate with E. eight; and top a base, a seat, from the base heb, cognate with E. sit. See Eight and Sit. And see Decahedron. OCTANGULAR, having eight angles. (L.) In Blount's Gloss.

OCTANGULAR, having eight angles. (L.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. Formed with adj. suffix -ar (=Lat. -aris) from Lat. ectangulus, eight-angled. - Lat. oct., for octo, eight; and angulus, an angle. See Right and Angle.

OCTAVE, lit. eighth; hence eight days after a festival, eighth note in music. (F., -L., -Gk.) [The true old F. form of eight was oit, wit, whence M. OCTOGENARIAN, one who is eighty years old. (L.) Added OFF, away, away from. (E.) Merely another form of of; and in by Todd to Johnson. Coined from Lat. octogenarius, belonging to eighty.-Lat. octogeni, eighty each; distributive form belonging to ocloginta, eighty. - Lat. octo, eight; and -ginta = -cinta, short for de-cinta, a derivative from decem, ten, cognate with E. ten. See Eight and Ten.

OCULAR, pertaining to the eye. (L.) 'Ocular proof;' Oth. iii. 3. 360. - Lat. ocularis, adj., formed from oculus, the eye, a dimin. of oews *, the eye, a form not used, but cognate with E. eye; see Eye. Der. ocular-ly, bin-ocular, in-oculate; also ocul-ist, from Lat. oculus.

ODD, not even, strange, queer. (Scand.) M.E. odde. 'Olde or euen ; Gower, C. A. iii. 13, I. to. 'None odde zerez' = no odd years, Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, B. 426. 'None odde wedding = no irregular marriage; Myrc's Instructions for Parish Priests, ed. Peacock, l. 198. -Icel. oddi, a triangle, a point of land; metaph. from the triangle, an odd number, opp. to even; also used in the metaphorical phrase standask i odda, to stand at odds, be at odds, quarrel. In composition, we find Icel. oddamaor, the odd man, the third man, one who gives a casting vote; oddatala, an odd number. Hence it is clear that the notion of 'oddness' arose from the figure of a triangle, which has two angles at the base and an odd one at the vertex. Also oddi is closely related to oddr, a point of a weapon, which stands for ordr, by assimilation. + A.S. ord, point of a sword, point, beginning, chief. + Dan. od, a point; odde, a tongue of land. + Swed. udda, content of a point, acape, a congre of randing widd, a point, prick. + G. ort, a place, region, M. H. G. ort, an extreme point.  $\beta$ . The common Teut. type is USDA, Fick, iii. 36; and the orig. sense is sharp point or edge, esp. of a weapon.  $- \checkmark$  WAS, to cut; cf. Skt. vas, to cut. Perhaps Gk. invus, a plough-share, and Lat. somer, a plough-charge are also from this root. And of Skt scie, a concenter's adar share, are also from this root. And cf. Skt. vási, a carpenter's adze. The sense of 'strange,' or 'queer,' seems to be a mere develop-ment from that of uneven. The W. od, notable, excellent, odd, is prob. merely borrowed from E.; the sense of 'notable' is sometimes attached to A.S. ord. The phrase odds and ends means ' points and ends, hence, scraps; it is closely allied to the M. E. ord and ends = beginning and end; see Tyrwhitt's note to Chaucer, C.T. 14639, and my note to the same line in the Monkes Tale, Group B, I. 3911. Quite distinct from Orts, q. v. Der. odd-ly, odd-ness, odd-i-ty, odd-fellow; odds, Oth. ii. 3. 185

ODE, a song.  $(F_{..}-L_{.}-Gk.)$  In Shak. L. L. The base of deloeiv is  $dF_1\delta$ , where d is prosthetic, and  $f_i\delta$  is a weakened form of  $fa\delta = vad$ , cognate with Skt. vad, to sound, to speak; cf. Skt. vádaya, to cause to sound, to play, vádya, a musical instrument. - VWAD, to speak, call, sing. Der. ep-ode, com-ed-y (for com-od-y), trag-ed-y (for trag-od-y), mel-od-y, mon-od-y, palin-ode, par-od-y, psalm-od-y, pros-od-y, rhaps-od-y. ODIUM, hatred. (L.) In Phillips, ed. 1706. [The adj. odious is much older; in Henrysoun, Complaint of Creseide, st. 19, last line.]-Lat. odium, hatred. - Lat. odi, I hate; an old pt. t. used as a Inter, a Lilied to Gk.  $\& \partial e_{ir}^{ir}$ , to thrust, push; so that the orig. sense was 'to thrust away.' Also to Skt. vadh, to strike.  $-\checkmark$  WADH, to strike. See Curtius, i. 323. Der. odi-ous, Test. of Crescide, st. 33, from F. odieus, 'odious' (Cot.), which from Lat. odiosus, adj., formed from odirous and strong and the set on and form odium; odi-ous-ly, -uss. And see annoy. ODOUR, scent, perfume. (F., -L.) M.E. odour, Wyclif, Eph. v. 2.-F. odeur, 'an odor, sent;' Cot. - Lat. odorem, acc. of odor, a scent. -  $\sqrt{AD}$ , to smell; whence also Gk.  $\delta \zeta \epsilon i \nu (= \delta \delta - y \epsilon i \nu)$ , to smell; and Lithuan. udziu, I smell. Der. odor-ous, Mids. Nt. Dr. ii. 1. 110, from Lat. odorus, by change of -us to -ous, and throwing back the accent; odor-ous ly. Also odori-fer-ous, L. L. L. iv. 2. 128, coined from Lat. odori-fer, odour-bearing; which from odori-, crude form of odor, and -fer, bearing, from ferre, to bear; see Bear (1). And see Olfactory, Osmium, Ozone, Redolent.

OF, from, belonging to, among. (E.) M. E. of; passim. -A. S.of, of; Grein, ii. 308. + Du., Icel., Swed., Dan., and Goth. af. + G.  $a^{j_1} \cap H. From the same base we have the gen. case appearing in Gk.  $d\psi$ , back again, Lat. abs, away from; also the locative case appearing in Gk.  $t \neq i$ , Lat. ob, near to. Also Lat. apud, near, at.  $\gamma$ . The E. off is merely another spelling of of; see Off. 8. A comparative form occurs in E. after (=of ter); see After. And see A- (6), Ab-, Apo-, Ob-, Epi.

OFFAL, waste meat, refuse. (E.) See Trench, Select Glossary. M. E. offal; Offal, that ys bleuit of a thynge, as chyppys, or other lyke, Caducum; Prompt. Parv. OFFEND, to annoy, displease. (F., -L.) M. E. offenden, Chau-cer, C. T. 2396. - F. offendre, 'to offend, hurt;' Cot. - Lat. offendere (pp. offensus), to strike or dash against, hurt, injure. - Lat. of- (put for ob before f), against; and fendere *, to strike, only occurring in compounds. See Defend. Der. offence or offense, M. E. offence, Chaucer, C. T. 5558, from O. F. offence or offense (Cot.), from Lat. offensa, an offence, orig. fem. of pp. offensus; offensive, K. In very early use; found even in A.S. M.E. offren, Chancer, C. T. 12841; Rob. of Glouc. p. 14, l. 16. – A. S. offrian, to offer; see exx. in Sweet's A.S. OFFICE, duty, employment, act of worship, &c. (F.,-L.) In early use. M. E. offiz, office. 'On thin offiz' = in thy official position; Genesis and Exodus, ed. Morris, l. 2071. - F. office. - Lat. officium, duty, service, lit. the doing of a service; contracted from opificium. -Lat. opi-, crude form of opes, sb. pl. wealth, also aid, help; and facere, to do. See Opulent and Fact. ¶ We can hardly derive opificium from opus, work. Der. office-bearer; offic-er, M. E. officere, Chaucer, C. T. 8066, from F. officier = Low Lat. officiarius, one who performs an office; offic-i-al, P. Plowman, B. xx. 136, from O. F. official, 'an officiall' (Cot.), which from Lat. officialis; offic-ial-ly; offici-ate, in Milton, P. L. viii. 82, from Low Lat. officiatus, pp. of officiare, to perform an office, occurring A. Also offici-ous (see Trench, Select Glossary), used sometimes in a good sense, Titus Andron. v. 2. 202, from F. officieus, 'officious, dutifull, serviceable' (Cot.), which from Lat. officiosus, obliging; offici-ous-ly, offici-ous-ness.

Offin or Offing, the open sea, that part of it which is at a good dis-tance from the shore; 'Phillips, ed. 1706. Merely formed from off with the suffix ing. See Off. OFFSCOURLING, refuse. (E.) Lit, anything scoured off; hence, refuse. In 1 Cor. iv. 13 (A.V.) From Off and Seour. OFFSET, a young shoot, &c. (E.) Used in several senses. The sense 'shoot of a plant' occurs in Ray, as cited in Todd's Johnson (without a reference). From Off and Set.

son. From Off and Shoot. OFFSPRING, progeny, issue. (E.) M. E. ofsyring. Rob. of Glouc. p. 164, l. 14. The odd spelling oxspring occurs in Cursor Mundi, l. 11415.-A. S. ofspring. Gen. iii, 15.-A. S. of, off, from; and springan, to spring. See Off, Of, and Spring. OfT, OFTEN, frequently. (E.) Oft is the orig. form; this was lengthened into ofte (dissyllabic), because -e was a common adverbial ending in the M. E. period. Lastly, ofte was lengthened to often before a vowel or A in hadde, &c. Thus: 'Ful ofte tyme,' Chaucer, C. T. 358 (Group A, 356), where Tyrwhitt prints often unnecessarily, the best MSS having ofte. Again: 'That often hadd ben,' id. 312 (Group A, 310).-A. S. oft. Grein, ii. 300.+ Icel. oft. opt (pronounced oft).+ Dan. ofte.+ Swed. ofta.+ G. oft; O. H. G. opt (pronounced oft). + Dan. ofte. + Swed. ofta. + G. oft; O. H. G. ofto. + Goth. w/ta, adv. oft, Mk. v. 4; used as adj. in the phrase thizo ufta sauhte, frequent infimities, I Tim. v. 23.  $\beta$ . The common Teut. type is UFTA, adv., Fick, iii. 34. In form, the word answers to Gk.  $\psi$  sorrow, highest, best; and it is closely related to Gk. intep, Lat. super, E. over; see Over. From the notion of what is over' or superfluous, we pass to that of frequency. Der. often, adj., first found in the phr. ofte tyme or often-tyme, Chaucer, C.T. 52, 358; <sup>2</sup> a Scand. word from Icel. aldina, old, or perhaps the adj. suffix -en is We now say often-er. often-est ; the old forms were often-ness. oft-er, oft-est.

OGIEE, OGIVE, a double curve. (F., - Span., - Arab.) Sometime absurdly written OG, as if compounded of two letters of the alphabet. Ogee is another form of ogive (with i as in machine). 'An Ogiue or Ogee, a wreath, circlet, or round band in architecture;' Minsheu, ed. 1627. It is now generally used to mean a double curve ~, formed by the union of a convex and concave line. An ogee curve  $\checkmark$ , formed by the union of a convex and convex in the second state of the seco tion in É. Müller is certainly right; he compares the Span. auge, highest point. Excellent examples of the ogee curve are to be found in Moorish domes and arches, and we may derive the term from the pointed top of such domes, &c. Cf. Span. cimacio ogee, an ogee moulding, where cimacio is derived from cima, a summit, top; late Lat. cymatium, an ogee curve (Vitruvius). Similarly, the F. augive is derived from Span. auge, highest point, which curious word is also found in Port. and Italian. y. The Span. auge is obviously derived from Arab. awj, top, summit, vertex; Rich. Dict.

obviously derived from Arab. awy, top, summit, vertex; Rica. Dict. p. 200. Der. ogiv-al, adj., sometimes oddly corrupted to ogae-fall. OGLE, to look at sideways, glance at. (Du.) Not an old word in E. In Pope, Rape of the Lock, v. 23. Certainly of Du. origin; answering to a Du. verb oogelen* (not in the Dictt.), a regular fre-quentative of oogen, 'to cast sheeps eyes upon one; Hexham. Such frequentative verbs are extremely common in Dutch, and may be numbered by hundreds; and we actually find the Low G. osgela, to ogle, in the Bremen Wörterbuch, used as a frequentative of orgen, to look at; as well as O. Du. oogheler, a flatterer, eye-servant, i. e. ogler (Oudemans). - Du. ooge, the eye; cognate with E. Eye, q. v. [†]

OGRES, a monster, in fairy tales. (F., - Span., - L.) Late. Added by Todd to Johnson's Dict. The quotation in Todd is from the E. version of the Arabian Nights, which was taken from the F. version. It is pretty clear that the word came to us by means of that very book. - F. ogre, an ogre; by no means an early word; used by Voltaire in 1740 (Littre). Traced by Diez as borrowed from Span. ogro (not in Meadows), O. Span. Awargo, warco; cognate with Ital. orco, a hobgoblin, demon. - Lat. orcum, acc. of orcus, (1) the abode of the dead, (2) the god of the infernal regions, Orcus, Pluto. The O. Lat. form is said by Festus to have been uragus (White). Cf. A. S. ore, a demon; occurring in orcneas (perhaps better orcenas) = monsters, Beowulf, ed. Grein, 112. Dor. ogr-ess, from F. ogresse.

OH, a later spelling of O, q. v.

OIL, juice from the olive-tree, a greasy liquid. (F.,-L.,-Gk.) We find in A. S. the form ele, in Goth. alew, forms borrowed ultimately from the Gk., but at a very early period ; see Curtius, i. 448. The M.E. oile was borrowed from French; it occurs in Chaucer, C. T. 2963. - O. F. oile (Burguy), later Auile (Cotgrave). - Lat. oleum. -Gk. ¿λαιον, oil ; cf. ¿λαία, an olive-tree, also an olive. So named from its liquidity.  $-\checkmark$  LI, later form of  $\checkmark$  RI, to flow; see Liquid.  $\beta$ . With Benfey, ii. 120, Diefenbach, Wtb. i. 36, Hehn, 432, I now regard the words in all other languages as borrowed from  $i\lambda aia$ ; oliva is to itaía as Achivi to 'Axaioi; initial o for e as in elogium = exercior. We ought perhaps to consider as the root of Exacor (with Pott, i. 1. 208) the root LI, liquefacere. In Greek, the prefixing of a vowel is justified ; it would not be so in the other languages ; ' Curtius, i. 448. Der. oil, verb ; the pp. oyled occurs in Hall's Satires, b. iv. sat. 4, 1. 38. Also oil-y, K. Lear, i. I. 237; oil-i-ness. Also oil-bag, -cake, -clotk, -colour, -nut, -painting. And see Olive, Oleaginous, Oleaster.

OINTMENT, a greasy substance for anointing wounds, &c. F.,-L.) The t is due to confusion with verb to anoint; the M.E. form being oinement or oynement. '[They] bousten [bought] swete-smelling opnementis, to come and to anoynie Jesu; 'Wyclif, Mark, xvi. 1. Spelt oinement in Chaucer, C. T. 633. - O. F. oignement, an anointing, also an unguent, liniment; Burguy. Formed with suffix -ment (= Lat. -mentum) from O. F. ongier (Burguy), an-other form of O. F. (and mod. F.) oindre, to anoint. = Lat. ungere, to anoint; see Unguent, Anoint.

anoint; see Unguent, Anoint. OLD, aged, full of years, ancient. (E.) M. E. old, def. form and pl. olds; Chaucer, C. T. 5240, 10023. – A. S. sald, O. Northumb. ald, Luke, i. 18. + Du. oud (for old). + G. alt. + Goth. altheis. And cf. Lat. ad-ultus, an adult, one of full age.  $\beta$ . The common Tent. type is ALTHA, whence ALDA; Fick, iii. 26. Like the -ultus in Lat. adultus, it is a pp. form from the  $\sqrt{AL}$ , to nourish, as seen in Goth. alan, to nourish, Lat. alere, to nourish; cf. Goth. us-althan, to grow old. It means 'well nourished, grown up.' See further under Adult Adolement. Day olden Machen See further under old. It means 'well nourished, grown up.' See further under nautical term (Hamilton). That is, the omelet was named from its Adult. Adolescent. Der. old-en, Macbeth, iii. 4. 75, apparently & thin, flat, shape, and has nothing to do with F. oufe, eggs, as some merely tacked on; cf. gold-on. Also old-ness, K. Lear, i. 2. 50; cf. eldness, Wyclif, Rom. vii. 6. Also eld, sb., eld-or (1), eld-on. ald-er-mon

OLEAGINOUS, oily. (L., -Gk.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. - Lat. oleaginus, belonging to olive-oil; by change of -us to -ous, as in arduous, &c. An adj. form from oleum, oil. Not a true Lat. word, but borrowed from Gk. Exacor; see Oil.

OLEANDER, the rose-bay-tree (F., = Low Lat.) 'Oleander, rose-bay, rose-tree.' = O. F. oleandre, 'the rose-tree, rose-bay, rose-lawrell, rose-bay-tree;' Cot. The same as Ital. oleandro, Span. eloandro, 'the rose-bay-tree,' Minsheu (1623), Port. eloandro, Jonardro. All those forms are variously corrupted (it is supposed) from Low Lat. lorandrum, a word cited by Isidore of Seville. B. Again, it has been suggested that lorandrum is an attempt at rendering rhododendron. This is but a guess; and there is no very great resemblance between the shrubs. Perhaps we may rather guess lorandrum to represent laurodendron*, a quite conceivable com-pound from lauro, from Lat. laurus, laurel, and Gk. & iropor, a tree. y. The change from lorandrum to oleandrum is clearly due to confusion with oleaster.

OLEASTER, the wild olive. (L., -Gk.) In Phillips. ed. 1706. -Lat. oleaster, Rom. xi. 17 (Vulgate). Formed with suffix over (as in poeta-s-ter) from olea, an olive-tree. - Gk. ihala, an olive-tree. See Oil.

OLFACTORY, pertaining to smell. (L.) In Phillips, ed. 1706. - Lat. olfactorius, belonging to one that smells; only appearing in the fem. and neut. forms, olfactoria, olfactorium, a smelling-bottle. - Lat. olfactor, one who smells; (but only the fem, form olfactris occurs). - Lat. olfactus, a smelling, also pp. of olfacere, to smell, to scent ; of which a fuller form olefacere also occurs. - Lat. ole-re, to smell; and facere, to make; hence, to emit a scent. β. It is almost certain that olere stands for odere\*, whence odor, smell. The change of d to l is a peculiarity of Latin, as in Ulysses for Odysseus, lacruma for dacruma; see Tear (2). See Odour. OLIGARCHY, government by a few. (F., -L., -Gk.) Spett oligarchie in Minsheu, ed. 1627. - F. oligarchie, 'an oligarchie;' Cot. - Low Lat. oligarchia (Ducange). - Gk. δλιγαρχία, government in the hands of a few. - Gk. ohly-, for ohlyos, few, little; and -apyla, from doxeev, to rule.  $\beta$ . In the Gk.  $\delta - \lambda i \gamma - os$ , the  $\delta$ - is prosthetic ; the word is akin to Lithuan. lesas, thin, lean, and to Skt. lega, smallness, from lig, to become small. And see Arch-, prefix. Der. oligarchi-c-al; also oligarch, Gk. δλιγάρχη:; oligarch-al.

OLIO, a mixture, medley. (Span., -L.) A mistaken form of olia, which is an E. spelling of Span. olla, sounded very nearly as olia, the Span. ll answering to E. ly or to E. lli in million. The mistake occurs in Eikon Basilike, cap. xv, and is noticed by Milton. 'Not to tax him for want of elegance as a courtier in writing oglio for olla, the Span-ish word; ' Milton, Answer to Eikon Basilike, cap. 15. - Span. olla, 'a round earthen pot, an oglio' (sie); Meadows. Properly, the latter sense is due to the Span dish called olla podrida, a dish of various meats and vegetables, hence a mixture, medley, olio.-Lat. olla, a pot; from O. Lat. aula, a pot. Root uncertain.

OLIVE, the name of an oil-yielding tree. (F., -L., -Gk.) M.E. olius (with u for v), O. Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, ii. 89, 1. 5 from bottom. - F. olive. - Lat. oliva. - Gk. ¿λαία, an olive-tree. See further under Oil.

OMBRE, a game at cards. (F., -Span., -L.) In Pope, Rape of the Lock, i. 56. - F. hombre, ombre (Hamilton). - Span. juego del hombre, the game of ombre ; lit. ' game of the man ;' see Eng. Span. part of Meadows Dict. The Span. juego is from Lat. iocus; see Joke. The Span. kombre is from Lat. kominem, acc. of komo, a man; see Human. [†] OMEGA, the end. (Gk.) In Rev. i. 8. The sense 'end' is due to the fact that omega is the last letter of the Gk. alphabet. Its force is that of long o. - Gk. &, called & µέγa, i. e. great o or long o; where µlya is the neut. of µlyas, great, allied to E. mickle; see Mickle. ¶ Opposed to alpha, the first letter; see Alphabet. OMELET, a pancake made chiefly of eggs. (F., - L.) In Cot-grave. - F. omelette, 'an omelet or pancake of eggs;' Cot. An older form was aumelette; Cot. also gives: 'Aumelette d'œufs, an  $\beta$ . The forms of the word omelet, or pancake made of egges." are various; a very common old form, according to Scheler, was amelette, but this was preceded by the forms alemette, alemelle, and alumelle. It is clear that amelette is a corruption from the older alemette; and it seems that alemette, in its turn, took the place of alemelle. Y. Now the O. F. alemelle signified 'a thin plate,' esp. the blade of a knife, and is still preserved in the mod. F. alumelle (a corrupted spelling), with the sense of 'sheathing of a ship,' as a is quite correct, not tautological. See alemele, the blade of a knife, in Roquefort. 8. Lastly, alemelle (or alemele) is a mistaken form. 8. Lastly, alemelle (or alemele) is a mistaken form, due to confusion of la lemelle (the correct form) with l'alemelle, as if the article had been elided before a vowel. - Lat. lamella, a thin plate, properly of metal; dimin. of lamina, a thin, flat plate; see Lamina. ¶ There seems to be no rescon for doubling the rectness of this curious etymology, due to Littré ; see the articles in Littre and Scheler, under the words omelette and alumelle.

OMEN, a sign of a future event, prognostication. (L.) In Shak. Hamlet, i. 1. 123. - Lat. omen, an omen; O. Lat. osmen. β. Der. omen-ed, chiefly in ill-omened ; omin-ous (Minsheu), imitated from Lat. ominonus, adj., formed from omin-, stem of omen ; omin-ous-ly, omins-ness. Also ab-omin-ate.

OMIT, to leave out, neglect. (L.) 'Nor omitted no charitable meane; Sir T. More, Works, p. 887 e. - Lat. omitere, to omit; lit. 'to let go.' Put for ommittere, which stands (by assimilation) lit. 'to let go.' Put for ommittere, which stands (by assimilation) for obmittere. - Lat. ob (which often scarcely affects the sense); and mittere, to send, let go. See Ob- and Mission. Der. omiss-ion, Troil. iii. 3. 230, from F. omission, 'an omission' (Cot.), which from Lat. omissionem, acc. of omissio, from pp. omissus. Also omitt-ance,

ON, upon, at, near. (E.) M. E. on; passim. - A. S. on; passim. + Du. aan. + Icel. á (for an). + Dan. an, prep. and adv. + Swed. å, prep. ; an, adv. + G. an. + Goth. ana. to, upon, on + Gk. dvá. + Russ.  $\beta$ . All from ANA, pronom. base of the third person; ' drá is na. evidently a case-form of the demonstrative stem, which is preserved as and in Skt., as ands (= ille) in Lithuanian, and as and with the same meaning in Church-Slavonic; 'Curtius, i. 381. See In, which is a weakened form, or a different case; on is perhaps an instrumental case, and in a locative case. Der. on, adv.; on-set, on-slaught, on-ward, on-wards; and see anon.

ONCE, a single time, at a former time. (E.) M.E. ones, cones, ones, Chaucer, C. T. 5592, 5595; cf. at ones, id. 767. The final s was sharp, not pronounced as z; and this is why the word is now spelt with ce, which is an attempt to shew this. - A. S. anes, once ; times used adverbially, as in need-s, twi-es, thri-es. See One (1). Der. nonce, in the phr. for the nonce; see Nonce. ONCE, OUNCE, an animal; see Ounce (2).

ONE (1), single, undivided, sole. (E.) [The mod. pronunciation [wun] seems to have arisen in the W. of England; it is noticed by Jones, in 1701, as in use ' in Shropshire and some parts of Wales ; Ellis, On Early Eng. Pronunciation, p. 1012. It does not appear to be older in literature than about A. D. 1500; I believe the spelling non occurs in the Works of Tyndal (a Gloucestershire man), but I have lost the reference. At any rate, the M. E. pronunciation was like that of one in stone, bone, and is still preserved in al-one, at-one, an-ly; we never say unualy. We do, however, say unuas (with sharp one. B. 'The stem AI-NA for one is proved to be a common European form. The Skt. eka-s, the Zend ad-va [cf. Gk. olog] are other extensions of the same base AI; 'Curtius, i. 399. Y. The base AI appears to be a strengthened form from I, a pronominal base of the 3rd person, appearing in Skt. i-dam, this. Der. one-sided, supposed; so that the old expression in Cotgrave, viz. aumelette d'aufs, Querique, un-ite, un-ion, un-animous, uni-versal, on-ion; also none, non-ce, anon (=in one), an other. Doublet, an or a. source, but appears to be related to E. same; see Aco. [+]

CL 'One that moche wo wrougte, Sleuthe was his name' = one who wrought much wo, whose name was Sloth; P. Plowman, B. xx. 157. See Mätzner, Engl. Grammatik. 'The indefinite one, as in one says, is sometimes, but wrongly, derived from the F. on, Lat. homo. It is merely the use of the numeral one for the older man, men, or me; ' Morris, Hist. Outlines of Eng. Accidence, p. 143; which see for examples. The false explanation, that one stands for F. on, seems hard to kill; but the more Middle-English is studied, the sooner it will be disbelieved.

ONEROUS, burdensome. (F., -L.) In the Rom. of the Rose, 5636. - F. onereus, 'onerous; Cot. - Lat. onerosus, burdensome. -Lat. oner-, stem of onus, a burden. β. Benfey (Skt. Dict. p. 19) compares onus with Skt. anas, a cart. Der. onerous-ly, -ness; also ex-oner-ale.

At a later period contracted to ope; see Ope. - A.S. open, open, Grein, ii. 355. Also oper-ose, i.e. laborious, Blount's Gloss., from Lat. operosus ; oper-ose-ly, oper-ose-ness ; oper-osi-ty, Minsheu. From the same root we have co-operate, en-ure, in-ure, man-ure, man-auvre, of-fice. There is perhaps an ultimate connection with ap i, in-sp-i, op-tal-ive, op-tion. OPHICLEIDE, a musical instrument. (F.,-Gk.) Modern.-

F. ophicleide, 'an ophicleid, key-serpent;' Hamilton. An odd name; due to the old twining musical instrument called 'a serpent,' to which keys were added, thus turning it into a 'key-serpent.' – Gk.  $\delta \phi_{4}$ , crude form of  $\delta \phi_{4}$ s, a serpent; and  $\varkappa \lambda \epsilon_{4} \delta$ , stem of  $\varkappa \lambda \epsilon_{4}$ s, a key. See Ophidian and Clavicle.

OPHIDIAN, relating to serpents. (Gk.) Modern; formed with E. suffix -an (=Lat. -anus) from Gk. opicie-\*, an imaginary form wrongly supposed to be the crude form of  $\delta \phi \omega$ , a serpent. The true crude form is oper-, as seen in ophi-cleide and Ophi-uchus (Gk. όφιοῦχοι, serpent-holder, from έχειν, to hold), Milton, P. L. ii. 709.

OPHTHALMIA, inflammation of the eye. (Gk.) We also use the coined word opinion-at-ed, a clumsy formation. The verb opine is not much used, but is a perfectly correct word, from F, opiner, 'to opine' (Cot.), which from Lat. opinare, more commonly opinari, as above; it occurs in Pope, Moral Essays, iii. 9. The derivatives opin-able, opin-at-ive, opin-at-or (all in Blount) are obsolete.

Der. oracul-ar, due to Lat. oracularius, oracular ; oracul-ar-ly, -ness.

ORAL, spoken, uttered by the mouth. (L) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. A coined word; formed with suffix -al (= F. -al, -el, Lat. β. Allied to Skt. á.ya, -alis) from or-, stem of os, the mouth. the mouth, ánana, the mouth; the form ans, by loss of n, would give os, with long o. - AN, to breathe; whence also E. animal, animale; see Animate. Der. oral-ly; also or-ac-le, q.v., or-at-ion, q.v.,

ORANGE, the name of a fruit. (F.,-Ital.,-Pers.) The plane of the country, which whether in respect to domestication or cultivation; 'id. p. 364. [†]. ORANGE, the name of a fruit. (F.,-Ital.,-Pers.) The plane or engres is in Sir T. Elyot, Castel of Helth, b. ii. c. 7. 'Colour of orenge' occurs in 1. 7 of a 15th-century ballad beginning 'O mossie Quince,' pr. in Chaucer's Works, ed. 1561, fol. 344, back; and see Oronge in Prompt. Parv. - O. F. orange (14th century), Littré; later changed into orange, 'an orange;' Cot. The form should rather have been narenge, but the initial n was lost, and arenge became orenge under the influence of F. or (Lat. aurum), gold ; because the notion arose that the name denoted the golden colour of the fruit. -Ital. arancio, an orange, an orange-tree. Cf. Span. naranja, Port. laranja (put for naranja), an orange. – Pers. náranj, nárinj, also nárang, an orange; Rich. Pers. Dict. p. 1548. Cf. Pers. nár, a pomegranate.

pomegranate. [+] ORATION, a speech. (F., -L.) In Sir T. More, Works, p. 399 a. - F. oration, 'an oration, or harang;' Cot. - Lat. orationem, acc. of oratio, a speech. - Lat. oratus, pp. of orare, to speak, pray; see Oral.

ORATOR, a speaker. (F., -L.) Formerly oratour, but now conformed to the Lat. spelling. M.E. oratour, Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. 4. pr. 4, l. 3705. -F. orateur, 'an orator;' Cot. - Lat. oratorem, acc. of orator, a speaker. - Lat. oratus, pp. of orare; see Oration. Der. oratori c-al, oratori-c-al-ly; oratory, M. E. oratorie, Chaucer, C. T. 1907, from F. oratoire, 'an oratory' (Cot.), from Lat. oratorium, a place of prayer, neut. of oratorius, belonging to prayer; orator-i-o, from Ital. oratorio, an oratory, also an oratorio, from the same Lat. oratorius.

ORB, a sphere, celestial body, eye. (F., -L.) In Shak. Merch. Ven. v. 50; and prob. earlier. - F. orbe, an orb; omitted in Cotgrave, but given in Sherwood's Index, and in use in F. in the 13th ORDINAL, shewing order or succession. (L) In Phillips, ed.

Root unknown. Der. orb-ed, Haml. iii. 2. 166; orbi-c-ul-ar, Milton, P. L. iii. 718, from Lat. orbieularis, circular; orbi-e-ul-ar-ly; also orb-it, Phillips, ed. 1706, directly from Lat. orbita, a track, course, orbit, formed with suffix -ta from orbi-, crude form of orbis. Hence orbit-al.

ORCHARD, a garden of fruit-trees. (E.) M.E. orchard. Ancren Riwle, p. 378, l. 2 from bottom; orchard, Layamon, 12955. - A. S. orceard, usually spelt orcerd, Gen. ii. 8, 16; Wright, Popular Treatises on Science, p. 10, l. 3. The older form is ortgard, Ælfred, tr. of Gregory's Pastoral, c. 40; ed. Sweet, p. 292, l. 4. We also find wyrtgeard, to translate Lat. promptuarium, Ps. cxliii. 16, ed. Spelman. Ortgeard and wyrtgeard are mere variants, both signifying 'wortyard, i.e. yard of worts or vegetables; the form ort is due to a Teutonic type URTI, put for WARTI; and the form wyrt to a Teut. WORTI, also put for WARTI; see Fick, iii. 35. 295. See Wort and Yard. + Icel. jurtagardr, a garden of herbs; from jurt, later urt, herbs, and gardr, a yard, garden; but perhaps jurt is only a borrowed word in Icelandic, from E. or G. + Dan. urtgaard, herbgarden; from urt and gaard. + Swed. örtegård; from ört and gård. Goth. aurtigards, a garden, John, xviii. 1; cf. aurtja, a gardener, husbandman, Luke, xx. 10. ¶ It is singular that Lat. Aortus is related to the latter syllable yard; but of course not to the former. ORCHESTRA, the part of a theatre for the musicians. (L., -Gk.) In Holland, tr. of Suctonius, p. 242 (R.)-Lat. orchestra.-Gk. δρχήστρα, an orchestra; which, in the Attic theatre, was a

of Pliny, b. xxvi. c. 10; and in Swinburne, Trav. through Spain, (1779), p. 233, l. 1. - Lat. orchis (Pliny). - Gk. Spxis, a testicle; hence applied to a plant with roots of testicular shape. Der. orchidac-e-ous, a coined word, as if from orchid-, stem of orchis (but the Lat. orchis makes gen. orchis, and Gk. Spxis makes gen. Spxews); also A similar mis-coinage is seen in orchid, similarly coined. ophidian, for which see under Ophicleide.

ORDAIN, to set in order, arrange, regulate. (F., -L.) M. E. ordeynen; P. Plowman, B. prol. 119; Rob. of Glouc. p. 236, l. 10. -M. E. O. F. ordener, later ordonner, as in Cotgrave. - Lat. ordinare, to set in order. - Lat. ordin-, stem of ordo, order ; see Order. Der. ordinance, q. v.; ordin-ate, adj., M. E. ordinat, Chaucer, C. T. 9160, from Lat. pp. ordinatus; ordin-ate, sb. (in mathematics); ordin-ate-ly; ordin-al-ion, in Phillips, ed. 1706, formed, by analogy with F. words in -tion, from Lat. ordinatio, an ordinance, also ordination. And see ordin-al, ordin-ar-y, ord-nance.

ORDEAL, a severe trial, a judgment by test of fire, &c. (E.) Tt is most remarkable that this word (from complete ignorance of its etymology) is commonly pronounced orde-al in three syllables, though the deal is absolutely the same word as when we speak of dealing cards, or a deal of work. M. E. ordal, Chaucer, Troilus, iii. 1048, ed. Tyrwhitt. (In order to correspond with the mod. form, it should rather have been ordeel.) - A. S. ordel, ordel; the spelling ordel is rare, but occurs in the Laws of Edward and Guthrum, sect. ix, in Thorpe's Ancient Laws, i. 172; this form answers to mod. E. ordeal. The usual spelling is ordal, as in the Laws of Ethelred, sect. i (in Thorpe, i. 281), and sect. iv (id. i. 294), and see numerous references in Thorpe's Index; this form answers to Chaucer's ordal, and the latter part of the word (dal) answers to mod. E. dole. The orig. sense is 'a dealing out,' separation, or discrimination; hence, a judgment, decision. + O. Fries. ordel. + O. Sax. urdeli, a judgment, decision. + Du. oordeel, judgment. + G. wrtheil, O. H. G. wrtell, wrteili, judgment. B. The latter part of the word is the same as Deal (1) or Dole; as shewn by Du. deel, G. theil. The prefix is the Du. oor-, O. Sax. and G. ur-, answering to the O. H. G. prep. ur, Goth. us, out, out of; perhaps related to Skt. ava, away, off, down. It is not preserved in any other mod. E. word (except Ort, q.v.), but was common in A.S., in such words as or-mate, immense, ormód, despondent, or-sorg, free from care, or-trýwe, wanting in trust, or-wéna, wanting in hope, or-wige, unwarlike, &cc.; see Grein, ii. 356-360.

ORDER, arrangement, system. (F., -L.) M. E. ordre; occurring four times on p. 8 of the Ancren Riwle. - F. ordre, substituted for O. F. ordene, ordine by the not uncommon change of n to r; see Coffer. - Lat. ordinem, acc. of ordo, order, arrangement. β. Supposed to be connected with Lat. oriri, to arise, originate; though this is not very clear; see Origin. Der. order, verb, in Sir T. Wiat, Sat. ii. l. 87; order-less, K. John, iii. 1. 253; order-ly, adj., Cymb. ii. 3. 52; order-ly, adv., Two Gent. i. I. 130; order-li-ness, order-ing. Also dis-order, ordain, ordin-ance, ordn-ance, ordin-ate, ordin-at-ion, ordin-al, ordin-ar-y, in-ordin-ate, co-ordin-ate, sub-ordin-ate.

1706; chiefly in the phr. 'an ordinal number.' - Lat. ordinalis, in Palike to the same Lat. source. The Lat. word for 'oriole' is comorder, used of an ordinal number. - Lat. ordin-, stem of ordo, order; see Order. Der. ordinal, sb., 'a book of directions for bishops to give holy orders,' Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674, from Low Lat. ordinale. neut. of ordinalis.

ORDINANCE, an order, regulation. (F., -L.) M.E. ordenance, Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 83, last line. - O. F. ordenance, later ordonnance (Cotgrave). - Low Lat. ordinantia, a command. - Lat. ordinanti-, crude form of pres. part. of ordinare, to set in order ; see Ordain. Doublet, ordnance.

ORDINARY, usual, customary. (F., - L.) 'The ordinary manner;' Sir T. More, Works, p. 583 d. Ordinarily occurs on p. 583 h. - F. ordinairs, 'ordinary;' Cot. - Lat. ordinarius, regular, usual. - Lat. ordin-, stem of ordo, order ; see Order. Der. ordinary, sb., from F. ordinaire, 'an ordinary' (Cot.), Lat. ordinarius, an overordinari-ly. Also estra-ordinary. ORDINATE, ORDINATION; see Ordain. ORDNANCE, artillery. (F., -L.) The same word as ordinance, which is the old spelling; see K. John, ii. 218; Hen. V, ii. 4. 126. It orig. meant merely the bore or size of the cannon, and was thence transferred to the cannon itself, exactly as in the case of Caliver, q. v. 'Engin de telle ordonnance, of such a bulk, size, or bore;' Cotgrave.

ORDURE, excrement. (F., - L.) In Shak. Hen. V, ii. 4. 39. M. E. ordure, Chaucer, Pers. Tale, De Superbia (Six-text, Group I, 1. 418). = F. ordere, 'ordure; 'Cot. = O. F. ord (fem. orde), 'filthy, nasty, foule, ... ugly, or loathsom to behold; 'Cot. Cf. O. F. ordir, to foule, defile, soile; id. [So also Ital. ordura is from the adj. ordo, dirty, slovenly, soiled, deformed.] - Lat. horridus, rough, shaggy, wild, frightful; see Horrid. So also Ital. ordo answers to O. Ital. horrido, mod. Ital. orrido, which Florio explains by ' horride, hideous, . euill fauoured, ... lothesome to behold.

ORE, crude or unrefined metal. (E.) M.E. or, Ancren Riwle, p. 284, note b; the dat. ore is in Chaucer, C. T. 6646. - A.S. or; 'hit is eac berende on wecga orum ares and isernes,' it is fertile in ores of lumps of brass and iron ; Ælfred, tr. of Beda, lib. i. c. 1. The word or seems to be merely another form of ar, brass, occurring in the above quotation; the dat. case áre, meaning 'bronze,' occurs in Gregory's Pastoral, c. 37, ed. Sweet, p. 266. The change from A.S. á to long o is seen again in E. oar from A.S. ár. + Icel. eir, brass. + O.H.G. ér, brass. + Goth. aiz, ais, brass, coin, money, Matt. vi. 8; f aismiths a correspondent of the correspondence of the corres cf. aizasmiika, a copper-smith, 2 Tim. iv. 14. + Lat. as, ore, bronze. Cf. Skt. ayas, iron; Max Müller, Lect. ii. 256.

ORGAN, an instrument, esp. of music. (F., -L., -Gk.) In old books, the instrument of music is commonly called the organs or a pair of organs; the pl. organe or organs (answering to Lat. organa) occurs in P. Plowman, C. xxi. 7; Chaucer, C. T. 14857; the pl. organs is in Chaucer, C. T. 15603; see my note to P. Plowman, C. may be made or done;' Cot. - Lat. organum, an implement. - Gk. δργανον, an implement; allied to Gk. έοργα, I did, accomplished, and to Gk. έργον, a work; see Work. And see Orgies. Der. organ-ic, organ-ic-al, organ-ic-al-ly, organ-ism, organ-ist, organ-ise, organ-is-al-ion. ( The A. S. organan, sb. pl., used to translate Lat. organa in Ps. cxxxvi. 2 (ed. Spelman), can hardly be called an A.S. word.

ORGIES, sacred rites accompanied with revelry, revelry, drunkenness. (F., -L., -Gk.) In Milton, P. L. i. 415; Drayton, Polyol-bion, s. 6 (R.) - F. orgies, 'the sacrifices of Bacchus;' Cot. - Lat. orgia, sb. pl., a nocturnal festival in honour of Bacchus, orgies - Gk. όργια, sb. pl., orgies, rites; from sing. όργιον, a sacred act; closely connected with Epyor, work. See Organ and Work.

ORIEL, a recess (with a window) in a room. (F.,-L.) 'It may generally be described as a recess within a building; Blount has oriol, the little waste room next the hall in some houses and monasteries, where particular persons dined, and this is clearly an authorised and correct explanation;' Halliwell's Dict., which see. Spelt oryall in the Squire of Low Degree, l. 93; in Ritson's Metrical Romances, vol. iii. - O. F. oriol, a porch, alley, gallery, corridor; Roquefort. We find le oriol glossed by 'de la chambre,' i. e. the oriel of a chamber, in Wright's Vocab. i. 166, l. 9. The Low Lat. form is oriolum, explained as a small refectory or a portico in Matt. Paris, in Ducange; see the citations in Wedgwood and Halliwell. B. When we come to examine the matter more closely, there need be no doubt as to the etymology, though I am not aware that it has ever been pointed out. The passage from Walter de Biblesworth, in Wright's Vocab. i. 166 (as above), runs thus: 'Plus est delit en le oriol (glossed de la chambre) Escoter la note de l'oriol (glossed a wodewale);' i. e. it is very delightful in the recess of a chamber to listen to the note of the oriole. Thus the 'oriel' and 'oriole' are olus, golden; and the Low Lat. oriolums (oriel) is plainly for Lat. neuter arreolum, gilded or ornamented with gold; see further under Oriole. γ. This explains at once the varied use of the word; it meant any portico, recess, or small room, which was more private and better ornamented than the rest of the building. Hence its special application to the small apartment in which it was the privilege of sick monks to dine; 'ut non in infirmaria sed seorsim in oriolo monachi infirmi carnem comederent;' Matt. Paris, in Ducange. And hence, again, its special application to a lady's closet, or as we should now say, a boudoir, as in the Squire of Low Degree and in the Erl of Tolouse, 1. 307; Ritson, Met. Rom. vol. iii. Pliny speaks of 'laquearia, quæ nunc et in privatis domibus auro teguntur; 'or, in Holland's translation, 'now a daies you shall not see any good house of a privat man, but it is laid thicke and couered ouer with gold ; nay, the brauery of men hath not staid so, but they have proceeded to the arched and embowed routs [roots], to the walls likewise of their houses, which we may see everywhere as wel and thoroughly guilded as the siluer plate vpon their capbourds; tr. of Pliny, b. xxxiii. c. 3. This shews that the custom of gilding certain apartments was derived from the Romans; it was probably There is a good common enough elsewhere in early times. article on the senses of the word Oriel in the Archaeologia, vol. xxiii; but the etymology there proposed is ridiculous.

ORIENT, eastern. (F., -L.) M. E. orient, in Chaucer, C. T. 14320. - F. orient. - Lat. orient-, stem of oriens, the rising sun, the east; properly pres. part. of oriri, to rise. See Origin. Der. orient-al, Chaucer, On the Astrolabe, pt. i. sect. 5, l. 4, from F. oriental, Lat. orientalis; orient-al-ist.

ORLFICE, a small opening. (F., - L.) Spelt orifs in Spenser, F. Q. iv. 12. 22. - F. orifice, 'orifice;' Cot. - Lat. orificium, an open-ing, lit. 'the making of a mouth.' - Lat. ori-, crude form of es, a mouth; and -fic-, for facere, to make. See Oral and Fact. ORIFI.AMME, the old standard of France. (F., -L.) 'The oryflambe, a speciall relyke that the Frenshe kynges vse to bere before them in all battayles; 'Fabyan's Chron. an. 1335, ed. Ellis, p. 467.-F. oriflambe, 'the great and holy standard of France;' Cot. - Low Lat. awriflamma, the standard of the monastery of St. Denis in France. The lit. sense is 'golden flame,' hence 'a golden banner ;' so called because the banner was cut at the outermost edge into flame-shaped strips, and was carried on a gilt pole. Cf. Lat. flammula, a little flame, also a small banner used by cavalry. - Lat. auri-, for auro-, given in Webster's Dictionar

ORIGAN, ORIGANUM, wild marjoram. (F., -L., -Gk.) [An older name is organy, mentioned in Cotgrave; this is A. S. organe, for which see Cockayne's Leechdoms, iii. 340, borrowed directly from Lat. origanum.] In Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xx. c. 17; Spenser, F. Q. i. 2. 40. - F. origan, 'garden organy, wild marjerome;' Cot. - Lat. origanum (Pliny). - Gk. opigaror, opigaros, marjoram ; lit. 'mountainpride.' = Gk. όρι, for όρει, crude form of όροι, a mountain; and γάνοι, brightness, beauty, ornament, delight. β. Gk. όροι is allied to Russ. gora, Skt. giri, a mountain ; varos is perhaps from the same root as Lat. gaudere, to rejoice.

OBIGIN, source, beginning. (F., -L.) In Hamlet, i. 4. 26; the adj. original is much older, in Chaucer, C. T. 12434. - F. origine, 'an originall, beginning;' Cot. - Lat. originem, acc. of origo, a beginning. - Lat. oriri, to arise, begin. - AR, to arise; cf. Skt. n. to rise, Gk. брични, I stir up. ori-ent, prim-ordial. ORIOLE, the golden thrush. (F.,-L.) Called 'the golden oriole' in a translation of Buffon, London, 1702. The old names are golden thrush, witwall, wodewale, and heighaw. - O.F. oriol, 'a heighaw, or witwall;' Cot. (And see quotation under Oriel.) -Lat. aureolus, golden; a dimin. form of aureus, golden. - Lat. aureus, gold; see Aureate. And see Oriel.

ORISON, a prayer. (F., - L.) M. E. oryson, orisonn, Rob. of Glouc. p. 235; Chaucer, C. T. 5016. - O. F. orison, oreson, oreson (Burguy), later oraison, 'orison, prayer ;' Cot. - Lat. orationem, acc. of oratio, a speech, prayer. - Lat. oratus, pp. of orare, to pray. -Lat. or , stem of os, the month ; see Oral. ORNAMENT, that which beautifies, adornment. (F., - L.) M. E. ornament; the pl. ornamentes occurs in Chaucer, C. T. 8134 (Six-text, E, 258); where it is remarkable that the Ellesmere and Camb. MSS. have aornementes, and the Hengwrt MS. has aournementes. [These forms answer to O. F. aornement, an ornament, from the verb oorner ( = Lat. adornare), to adorn.] Also ornementes, pl., Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, B. 1799. - F. ornement, 'an ornament ;' Cot. -Lat. ornamentum, an ornament; formed with suffix -mentum from B. Allied to Skt. varna, colour, gold, beauty, ornare. to adom. embellishment, a derivative from vri, to cover. - VWAR, to cover; cf. Skt. vri, to cover. See Curtius, i. 323. Sprifo-, crude form of Spris, a bird; and - Noyia, allied to λόγοι, a discourse; see Logic. β. The Gk. δρrue is interesting as being cognate with A. S. earn, an eagle, Matt. xxiv. 28. A shorter form appears in Goth. ara, G. aar, an eagle; cf. also Russ. ord, an eagle. Named from its soaring; cf. Gk. δρυυμ, I stir up. -AR, to arise ; cf. Skt. ri, to rise ; see Origin. [This form supplanted the older F. form orphelin, used by Chancer, (Vulgate). – Gk. opparos, destitute, John, xiv. 18; A.V. 'comfortless.' Cf. Gk. δρφόs, with the same sense; whence δρφόβοτηs, one who brings up orphans. The shorter form δρφόs answers to Lat. orbus, deprived, bereft, destitute. Root uncertain. Parv. - F. orpin, 'orpin, or live-long; also orpine, orpiment, or arsenick; 'Cot. Merely a docked form of F. orpiment, orpiment; so called from its yellow flowers. See Orpiment.

ORRERY, an apparatus for illustrating the motions of the planets, &c. (Ireland.) 'Constructed at the expense of Charles planets, &c. (Ireland.) 'Constructed at the expense of Charles Boyle, [second] earl of Orrery, about 1715;' Haydn, Dict. of Dates. Orrery is the name of a barony in the county of Cork, in Ireland; the chief town in it is Bannevant. [†]

ORRIS, the name of a plant. (Ital., -L., -Gk.) 'The nature of the orriseroot is almost singular; Bacon, Nat. Hist. § 863. Spelt orice in Cotgrave, who explains F. iris by 'the rainbow, also, a flowerdeluce; iris de Florence, the flowerdeluce of Florence, whose root yields our orice-powder.' The Spanish term for orris-root is raiz de iris florentina = root of the Florentine iris. In Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xxi. c. 7, we read: but as for the flour-de-lis [commonly called irees, Holland's note], it is the root only therof that is comfortable for the odor.' It thus appears that orris, orice, and orrice, are English corruptions of the Ital. irios or ireos. - O. Ital. irios, 'a kinde of sweete white roote called oris-roote;' Florio, ed. 1598; cf. mod.  $\beta$ . The form of the Ital. ireos, corn-flag, sword-grass (Meadows). with Lat. iris, which is the very word in Pliny, b. xxi. c. 7; and this is borrowed from Gk. Ipis, 'the plant iris, a kind of lily with an other;' Sewel. - Du. over, cognate with E. over; and loopen, to run, Gories, sb. pl., spelt orius in the Prompt. Parv. p. 371, which has: "Ortus, releef of beestys mete,' i. e. orts, remnants of the food of found in O. Du., Low G., and Friesic. The Friesic is ort (Outzen); the Low G. is ort, esp. used of what is left by cattle in eating; cf. Low G. ortstro, refuse-straw; Bremen Wörterbuch, iii. 272. The word is completely solved by the fuller form found in O. Du., viz. oorete, corate, a piece left uncaten at a meal, also nausea due to over-eating; Oudemans, v. 403. β. This is a compound word, made up of O. Du. oor., cognate with A.S. or., O. H. G. w- (mod. C. er-), Goth. us, prep. signifying 'out' or 'without;' and Du. eten, cognate with E. eat. Thus the sense is 'what is left in eating,' an 'out-morsel,' if we may so express it. For the prefix, see further under Ordeal; and see Eat.  $\gamma$ . This solution, certainly the right one, is pointed out by Wedgwood, but with some hesitation. He adduces some parallel words, some of which are cognate, others mere chance resemblances. We may particularly note Swed. dial. or-äte, ur-äte, refuse fodder, orts, from ur-, or-, the prefix corresponding to Du. oor- above, and Swed. ata, to eat, also victuals, food (Rietz). Also Bavarian urässen, urezen, to cat wastefully, uräss, urez, refuse; where wr- is the O. H. G. form of the same prefix, and assen = G. essen, to eat; see Schmeller, Bav. Wort. i. 134. With such proof we may rest content. ¶ The A.S. oretton, to spoil, is pro-bably not related. But Lowland Sc. worts, refuse fodder, is E. orts with a prefixed unoriginal w.

ORTHODOX, of the right faith. (F.,-L.,-Gk.; or L.,-Gk.) Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674, has orthodox and orthodoxal; so also in Cotgrave. - F. orthodoxe, orthodoxe, orthodoxall. - Late Lat. orthodoxus (White). - Gk. dp8600600, of the right opinion. - Gk. dp80-, crude form of  $\delta\rho\theta\delta\sigma$ , upright, right, true; and  $\delta\delta\phi\sigma$ , opinion.  $\beta$ . For  $\delta\rho\theta\delta\sigma$ , there was a Doric form  $\beta\rho\rho\theta\delta\sigma$ ; Curtius, ii. 85. It answers to Skt. sirdsva, erect, upright, connected with orida, to grow, augment, from & WARDH, to raise; see Fick, i. 775. Y. Gk. dofa is from doweiv, to seem, allied to Lat. doest, it is fitting; see Decorum. Der. orthodox-y, Gk. opeobofia.

ORTHOEPY, correct pronunciation. (Gk.) The word occurs in Bp. Wilkins, Essay towards a Real Character, pt. iii. c. 1 (R.) This work appeared in 1668. Imitated from Gk. opportuna, correct pronunciation. - Gk. δρθό-, crude form of δρθόs, right, true; and έπ-os, a word. See Orthodox and Epic.

ORTHOGRAPHY, correct writing. (F., -L., -Gk.) In rather early use. 'Of this word the true ortographie;' Remedy of Love (15th cent.), st. 41, l. 6; pr. in Chaucer's Works, ed. 1561, fol. 323, back. The word was at first spelt orto-, as in French, but afterwards corrected. - O. F. ortographie; Cot. only gives the verb ortographier, 'to ortographise, to write or use true ortography.'- Lat. ortho-graphia (White). - Gk. optoypapia, a writing correctly. - Gk. opto-, crude form of opode, right; and ypaperv, to write; see Orthodox and Graphie. Der. orthographi-c, orthographi-c-al, -al-ly; orthograph-er, -ist.

ORTHOPTEROUS, lit. straight-winged; an order of insects. (Gk.) Modern and scientific: coined from oper, crude form of operation of operation of operation of operation of operation of the straight; and wrep-or, a wing. See Orthodox and Dipters. So also orthopters.

ORTOLAN, the name of a bird. (F.,-Ital.,-L.) See Trench, Select Glossary; the word means 'haunting gardens,' and Trench cites ortolan in the early sense of 'gardener' from the State Papers, an. 1536, vol. vi. p. 534.-O. F. hortolan, 'a delicate bird,' &c.; Cot. -O. Ital. hortolano, 'a gardiner; also a daintie bird so called;' Florio. - Lat. hortulanus, a gardener, belonging to a garden. - Lat. hortulus, a little garden, dimin. of hortus, a garden, cognate with E. garth; see Court, Garth, Yard. The change from u to o is common in Italian.

ORTS, the pl. of Ort, q. v. OSCILLATE, to swing. (L.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674.-Lat. oscillatus, pp. of oscillare, to swing, sway. - Lat. oscillum, a swing.  $\beta$ . Vaniček (with a reference to Corssen in Kuhn's Zeitschrift, xv. 156) identifies oscillum, a swing, with oscillum, a little mouth, a little cavity, a little image of the face, mask or head of Bacchus which was suspended on a tree (White); with the remark that it meant a puppet made to swing or dance. If so, oscillum is a dimin. of osculum, the mouth, itself a dimin. from os, the mouth; see Oral. Der. oscillat-ion, oscillat-or-y. And see osculate. OBCULATE, to kiss. (L.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. – Lat. osculatus, pp. of osculari, to kiss. – Lat. osculum, a little mouth, pretty mouth; double dimin. (with suffix -cw-lu-) from os, the mouth; see Oral. Der. osculat-or-y, osculat-ion.

OSIER, the water-willow. (F., -Gk.?) In Shak. L. L. L. iv. 2. oBT, a leaving, remnant, morsel left at a meal. (O. Low G.) Usually in the pl. ords, Troil. v. 2. 158; Timon iv. 3. 400. M.E. Littré cites the Berry forms oisi, oisis, oi

Burgundian oscire. Passing over the Low Lat. oseria, oserius, ozilium, & OTHER, second, different, not the same. (E.) as merely F. words Latinised, he draws attention to Low Lat. osaria, awariæ, osier-beds, forms found in the 9th century. The most likely derivation is from Gk. oloos, an osier; but it remains to be shewn by what route the Gk. word came into French. Y. Yet we may be pretty sure as to the root; the Gk. oloos is allied to Lat. vi-tex, wi-men, and to E. wi-thy, all from / WI, to bind, wind. So also the

Berry aid; Walloon woisir, point to the same root. See Withy. OSMIUM, a metal. (Gk.) Discovered in 1803 (Haydn). The oxide has a disagreeable smell; hence the name, coined from Gk.  $\delta\sigma\mu\eta$ , a smell; earlier form  $\delta\delta\mu\eta$ . Connected with  $\delta(\epsilon\nu) (= \delta\delta-\gamma\epsilon\nu)$ , OSPREY, the fish-hawk. (L.) In Shak. Cor. v. 7. 34; cf. Two

Noble Kinsmen, i. 1. 138. In the old texts, it is spelt aspray in both passages. Spelt osprey, ospreie, orfraie in Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. x. c. 3; all these forms are various corruptions of ossifrage, also occurring in the same chapter. The name signifies 'bone-breaker;' from the bird's strength.  $\beta$ . The form or fraie is from O. F. or fraye, the bird's strength. B. The form orfraie is from O. F. orfraye, 'the osprey;' Cot. The forms osprey and ossifrage are directly from Lat. ossifragus, ossifraga, the sea-eagle, osprey.-Lat. ossifragus, bone breaking. - Lat. ossi-, crude form of os, a bone; and frag-, base of frangere, to break, cognate with E. break. See Osseous and

Break. Doublet, ossifrage. OSSEOUS, bony. (L.) A late word; added by Todd to Johnson. - Lat. osseus, bony; by change of -us to -ous (common). - Lat. ass, stem of os, a bone.  $\beta$ . Allied to Gk.  $\delta\sigma\tau\delta\sigma\sigma$ , Skt. asthic asthic a bone. Pictet suggests  $\checkmark$  AS, to throw; cf. Skt. as, to throw. He supposes that the bones were thrown away, after the animals were eater; see Curtius, i. 258. Der. ossi-fy, to turn to bone, from ossi-, crude form of os, and F. -fier = Lat. -ficare (for facere), to make; ossific-at-ion; ossu-ar-y, Sir T. Browne, Um-burial, c. v. § 4, from Lat. ossuarium, a receptacle for the bones of the dead. Also ossi-frage, 05-

OSSIFRAGE, an osprey; also, the bearded vulture. (L.) In Levit. xi. 13; Deut. xiv. 12.-Lat. ossifraga, a bone-breaker; see Osprey. OSTENSIBLE, that may be shewn, apparent. (L.) Late; see Todd's Johnson. Coined by adding the suffix -ble (F. -ble, Lat. -bilis) to ostensi-, put for ostenso-, crude form of ostensus, pp. of ostendere, to shew.  $\beta$ . Ostendere is for ob-s-tendere, where the s appears to be a mere insertion for ease of pronunciation. - Lat. ob, near, before; and tenders, to stretch ; hence the sense is 'to spread before' one, to shew. See Ob- and Tend. Der. ostensi-bl-y, ostensi-bil-y; we also find ostens-ive = 'that serves to shew,' Phillips, ed. 1706, perhaps obsolete. And see ostent-at-ion.

OSTEINTATION, shew, pomp. (F., -L.) 'Ostentacion and shew;' Sir T. More, Works, p. 1191 c. - F. ostentation, 'ostentation;' 'Ostentacion and Cot. - Lat. ostentationem, acc. of ostentatio, display. - Lat. ostentatus, pp. of ostentare, intensive form of ostendere, to shew: see Ostonsible. Der. ostentati-ous, a late coinage; ostentati-ous-ly, -ness. We also find ostent, Merch. Ven. ii. 2. 205, from Lat. ostentus, display OSTEOLOGY, the science of the bones. (Gk.) Scientific. -Gk. borto-, crude form of bortion, a bone; and - hoyia, equivalent to λόγοs, discourse, from λίγειν, to speak. See Osseous and Logic. OSTLER, the same as Hostler, q. v. (F.,-L.) Wyclif has ostiler, an innkeeper, Luke, x. 35.

OSTRACISE, to banish by a vote written on a potsherd. (Gk.) 'And all that worth from thence did ostracise;' Marvel, Lachrym. Mus., A. D. 1650 (R.) [The sb. ostracisme is in Minsheu, ed. 1627. and the O. F. ostracisme is in Cotgrave.] - Gk. borpani(ev, to banish by potsherds, to ostracise. - Gk. borpanov, burnt clay, a tile, potsherd, tablet for voting; also, a shell, which appears to be the origination of the shell, which appears to be the origination of the shell, which appears to be the origination of the shell of ostracisme), from Gk. δστρακισμός.

OSTRICH, a very large bird. (F., -L. and Gk.) M.E. oystryche, Squire of Low Degree, I. 226; in Ritson, Met. Romances, vol. iii. Earlier ostrice, Ancren Riwle, p. 132, note e. Ostrice is a weakened form of ostruce. - O. F. ostrusce (12th cent.), ostruche, Palsgrave, ostruce, Cotgrave, mod. F. autruche; see Littre. Cf. Span. avestruz, Port. abestruz, an ostrich. B. All from Lat. auis struthio, i. e. ostrichbird. - Lat. auis. a bird; and struthio, an ostrich, borrowed from Gk. y. For the Lat. auis, see Aviary. The στρουθίων, an ostrich. Gk. στρουθίων is an extension from στρουθόs, a bird. 'It is extremely probable that στρούθοs or στρουθόs is identical in its root with the synonymous Goth. sparwa, and the -00 may perhaps be regarded as a dimin. suffix;' Curtius, ii. 361. See Sparrow. ¶ The Lat. dimin. suffix;' Curtius, ii. 361. See Sparrow. awis also occurs as a prefix in the singular word bustard (=awis tarda); see Bustard. N. B. We find also the spelling estridge, I Hen. IV. iv. r. 08.

A. The word second is the only ordinal number of F. origin, till we come to millionth; it has taken the place of other, which formerly frequently had the sense of 'second.' B. We constantly meet with thet on, thet other = the one, the other (lit. that one, that other); these phrases are often spelt the ton, the tother, the t being attached to the wrong word; and this explains the common prov. E. the tother, often used as tother, without the. It must be remembered that thet or that was orig. merely the neut. of the def. article. ' And euer whyl the on hire sorwe tolde That other wepte' = and ever, whilst the one told her sorrow, the other wept; Chaucer, C. T. 10809. - A. S. Her, other, second, Grein, ii. 305. The long  $\delta$  is due to loss of n, as in gos (goose) for gans, too (tooth) for tunth; hence over stands for ander. + Du. ander. + Icel. annarr (for antharr, by assimilation). + Dan. anden, neut. ander, + leet. ander, (tot antair, by assimilatio). +Dan. anden, neut. andet, pl. andre. + Swed. andra, next, second, other. + G. ander. + Goth. anthar. + Lithuan. antras, other, second (Nesselmann). + Lat. alter (for anter; cf. Lat. alius with Skt. anya). + Skt. antara, other.  $\beta$ . We also find Skt. anya, other; which at once shews the division of the word. [We must be careful, by the way, to separate Skt. antara, other, from Skt. antara, interior, connected with antar (Lat. inter), within.] In Skt. an-tara, Goth. an-thar, E. o-ther, the suffix is the usual comparative suffix appearing in Gk. oopw-rep-os, wiser, &c. ; seen also in E. whe ther, ei-ther, hi-Y. The base an is from ther, &c.; the Aryan form being -TAR. the Aryan pronominal base ANA, appearing as a base of some of the cases of Skt. idam, this; found also in Lithuan. an-as, that one (Nesselmann, p. 5), and in Russ. on', he. Thus the orig. sense is 'more than that,' or 'beyond that,' used in pointing out something more remote than that which was first contemplated; hence its use in the sense of 'second.' Der. other-wise, M.E. other wise = in another way, Will. of Palerne, l. 396; an-other. (FF Distinct from M. E. other = or, which is a form of either, as shewn under Or.

OTTER, the water-weasel. (E.) M. E. oter (with one t); Old Eng. Miscellany, ed. Morris, p. 70, 1. 358. – A. S. otor, as a gloss to Lat. lutria in Ælfric's Gloss., Nomina Ferarum; Wright, i. 222; spelt oter, id. i. 78. Hence the adj. yteren, by vowel-change ; Sweet's A. S. Reader. + Du. otter. + Icel. otr. + Dan. odder. + Swed. utter. + G. otter. + Russ. vuidra. + Lithuan. udra.+Gk. bopa, a water-snake, hydra. B. The common Teutonic type is UTRA, answering to Aryan UDRA, standing for orig. WADRA; it is closely related to water; cf. Gk. föpa, water.snake, with idop, water. The sense is 'water-animal.' See Water, Wet. Doublet, Aydra. OTTO, a bad spelling of ATTAR, q. v. (Arab.)

OTTOMAN, a low stuffed seat. (F., - Turk.) - F. ottomans, 'an ottoman, sofa ; 'Hamilton. - F. Ottoman, Turkish, Turk. So named from Olkman or Osman, the founder of the Ottoman or Turkish OUCH, NOUCH, the socket of a precious stone, an ornament. (F., = O. H. G.) The orig. sense is 'socket of a gem,' but it is com-monly used for gem or ornament. The true form is nouch, but the monry used for gem or ornament. The true form is mouch, but the initial n is often dropped; see remarks upon the letter N. Spelt ouches in Exod. xxviii, xxix; and in Shak. 2 Hen. IV, ii. 4. 53; ouches in Sir T. More, Works, p. 337 d. 'As a precious stone in a riche ouche;' Sir T. Elyot, The Governour, b. iii. c. 28. M. E. nouche. Chaucer, C. T. 8258 (after a word ending with a consonant); but an ouch (for a nouch) in C. T. 6325. 'Nouche, monile;' Prompt. Parv. p. 359, and see Way's note; he cites : 'Fermaglio, the hangeyng ouche, or flowre that women use to tye at the chaine or lace that they weare about their neckes,' W. Thomas, Ital. Grammar, 1548. So that one sense of the word is exactly mod. E. 'locket. A golden lase or noucke; Wyclif, I Macc. x, 89; where the A. V. has 'a buckle of gold.' = O. F. nouche, nosche, nusche, a buckle, clasp, bracelet, given by Burguy, s. v. nosche. [It is, indeed, obvious that the Low Lat. nouchia, which occurs in the Inventory of jewels of Blanche of Spain (cited in Way's note) is nothing but the F. nouche Latinised.] The more correct Low Lat. form is nusca (Ducange). -M.H.G. nusche, nuske, O.H.G. nusca, nuscha, a buckle, clasp, or brooch for a cloak. [+] OUGHT (1), past tense of Owe, q. v. (E.) OUGHT (2), another spelling of Aught, q. v. (E.) Spelt only in Wyclif, Luke, ix. 36.

OUNCE (1), the twelfth part of a pound. (F., - L.) M. E. sase, Chaucer, C. T. 16224, 16589, 16631. - O. F. sase (1ath cent.), mod. F. once (Littré). = Lat. uncia, (1) an ounce, (2) an inch.  $\beta$ . The orig. sense is 'a small weight; 'allied to Gk.  $\delta\gamma$  woe, bulk, mass, weight. Doublet, inch. OUNCE (2), ONCE, a kind of lynx. (F., - Pers.?) In Milton,

P. L. iv. 344; and in Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xxviii. c. 8, last section. -F. once, an ounce. Cf. Port. onça, Span. onza, Ital. lonza, an ounce.  $\beta$ . It is a question whether the Ital. shews the true form, or not; it is more probable that longa stands for longa in Ital. than OUTCRY, a crying out. clamour. (Hybrid; E. and F., - L.) that I has been dropped in the other languages. I believe this point admits of direct proof; for though lonza is an old word in Ital. (occurring in Dante, Inf. i. 32), it is certain that onza was also in use, a fact which the authorities have overlooked. Yet Florio, ed. 1598, records : 'Onza, an ounce weight, also a beast called an ounce y. A derivation from Lat. lynx is (I think) or cat of mountaine.' out of the question ; because we find Ital. lince, a lynx. It is most likely that all the forms are nasalised forms of the Pers. name for Interfy that all the forms are hasansed forms of the Pers. name for the animal. Cf. Pers. yúz, 'a panther, a pard, a lynx, those esp. used in hunting deer' [i.e. the ounce]; Rich. Dict. p. 1712. [+] OUR, possessive pronoun of the 1st pers. plural. (E.) M. E. oure, older form ure; Havelok, l. 13. – A. S. úre, gen. pl. of 1st personal pronoun; orig. meaning 'of us.' This gen. pl. was used as a pos-sessive pronoun, and regularly declined, with gen. úres, dat. úrum, &c.; see Grein, ii. 633. It then completely supplanted the older A. S. possess. pron. user, user (Grein, ii. 633), cognate with G. unser and Goth. unsar.  $\beta$ . Yet ure is itself a contracted form for unser and Goth. unsar. úsere (contracted to úsre, úrre, úre), which again stands for unsara, the Gothic form of the gen. pl. of the 1st pers. pronoun. Here -ara is the gen. pl. suffix, and a shorter form appears in Goth. uns, equivalent to E. us. Y. Briefly, our is the gen. pl. corresponding to the acc. pl. us; see UB. Der. our.s, M. E. oures, Chaucer, C. T. 13203, due to A. S. úres, gen. sing. of úre, when declined as above; also our-selves, or (in regal style) our-self; see Self. Gr As to the old dispute, whether we should write ours or our's, it cannot matter; we write day's for A.S. dages (gen. sing.), but days for A.S. dagas (nom. pl.), thus marking the omission, strangely enough, only where the weaker vowel is omitted. The apostrophe is merely conventional, and better omitted.

OURANG-OUTANG: see Orang-Outang. (Malay.) OUSEL, a kind of thrush. (E.) M. E. osel, Wright's Vocab. i. 164, l. 3; osul, Trevisa, tr. of Higden, i. 237. – A. S. osle, Wright's Vocab. i. 281, col. i, l. 17. Here, as in A. S. ober, other = Goth. anihar, the long ó stands for an or am; thus ósle = ósele = ansele or amsele.+G. amsel, O.H.G. amsala, a blackbird, ousel; we also find M. H. G. amelsá, O. H. G. amaslá. B. The orig. form is AMSALA; root unknown.

OUST, to eject. expel. (F., - L.) The word has come to us through Law French. 'Ousted, from the Fr. oster, to remove, or put out, as ousted of the possession (Pecks Case, Mich. 9 Car. 1. 3 Part Crokes Rep. fol. 349), that is, removed, or put out of possession; Blount's Nomolexicon, ed. 1691. - O. F. oster, 'to remove, with-draw, Cot.; mod. F. ôter. Cf. Prov. ostar, kostar (Bartsch). B. Of disputed origin; it has been proposed to derive it from Lat. obstare, to withstand, hinder, but this does not well suit the sense. The most likely solution is that of Diez, who derives it from haustare *, a supposed derivative of haurire, to draw water; we at any rate have the word exhaust in English, formed from Lat. exhaurire, which was used in the precise sense required, viz. 'to take away, remove '

(White). See Exhaust. Der. oust-er. [+] OUT, without, abroad, completely. (E.) M. E. oute, older form ute, adv., out. 'That his ne solde oute wende '= that they should not go out; Rob. of Glouc. p. 170, l. 16. -A. S. ite, itan, adv., out, without; Grein, i. 634. Formed with adv. suffix -e (or -an) from A. S. it, adv. 'Fleógan of húse it ' = to fly out of the house; ' it of earce '= out of the ark; Grein, ii. 633. (This shews the origin of the phrase out of = out from.)+Du. uit.+ Iccl. it.+Dan. ud.+Swed. ut.+G. aus, O.H.G. úz.+Goth. ut; whence uta, adv. (=A.S. úte); utana, adv. and prep. (= A. Ouum is cognate with Gk. dow, an egg; and both answer to a common base AWIA, from AWI, a bird, appearing in Lat. auis; see Aviary. The common Teutonic type is AGGWIA; the introduction of gg before w, in other cases chiefly confined to single dialects, appears in this word to be universally Teutonic;' Fick, iii. 13. From the Teut. type AGGWIA we have E. egg; see Egg. Der. (from Lat. own) ov-ar-y, Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. iii. c. 28, § 5, from Low Lat. owaria, the part of the body where eggs are formed in birds (Ducange); ou-ate, i. e. egg-shaped, a coined word, with suffix answering to Lat. -atus, the pp. suffix of the 1st conjugation; and see ovi-form.

OVATION, a lesser Roman triumph. (F., -L.) In Minshen, ed. 1627.-F. ovation, 'a small triumph granted to a commander;' Cot 1027. - F. ovation, 'a small trumpo granted to a commander, - Cot. - Lat. ouationem, acc. of ouatio, lit. shouting, exultation. - Lat. ouatus, pp. of ouare, to shout. + Gk. aber, to shout, call aloud. B. The verbs are of imitative origin, to denote the sound made by violent expulsion of breath. Cf. Skt. va, to blow; and E. wind. OVEN, a furnace, cavity for baking bread, &c. (E.) M. E. ouen (with s for v), Wyclif, Luke, xii. 28. - A. S. ofen, ofn. Grein, ii. 310. + Du. oven. + Icel. ofn, later omn; of which an earlier form ogn is found. + Swed. ugn. +G. of m. +Goth. aukas. B. It would appear that the common Teut. base is UHNA, for which some dialects substituted UFNA, putting the labial for the guttural sound, just as in the mod. pronunciation of E. laugh, cough; see Fick, iii. 32. Cf. Gk. Invos, an oven. Root unknown.

OVER, above, across, along the surface of. (E.) M. E. ouer (with u for v), Chaucer, C. T. 3920. – A. S. ofer (Grein). + Du. over. + Icel. yfir; also ofr, adv., exceedingly. + Dan. over. + Swed. öfver. + G. suber, O.H.G. ubar. + Goth. ufar. + Dat. outr. + Duct. Oper. + Skt. $upari, above. <math>\beta$ . The prefixed s in Lat. super has not yet been satisfactorily explained; see remarks in Curtius, i. 360; yet it clearly belongs to the set. The common Teut. type is UFAR, answering to Amount in the set of the set of the common Teut. type is UFAR, answering to Aryan UPARI, evidently the locative case of the Aryan adj. UPARA, upper, appearing in Skt. upara (Vedic, given under upari in Benfey), Lat. superus, A. S. sufera (Grein, ii. 614). Y. It is obvious that UPARA is a comparative form; the superlative takes a double shape, (1) with suffix -MA, as in Lat. summus (from s-upama), highest, A.S. ufema, highest (only found with an additional suffix -est in ufemyst, written for ufemest, in Gen. xl. 17); and (2) with suffix -TA, as in Gk. Unaros, highest, and in E. of; see Sum and Oft. 8. The positive form is UPA; this appears in Skt. upa, near, on, under, Gk. inó, under, Lat. sub, under, Goth. uf, under, M. H. G. obs, ob, O. H. G. oba, opa, upon, over. A closely related adverbial form occurs in Goth. ufan, above, G. oben, and E. -ove in above. The orig. sense was prob. 'near,' with esp. reference to things lying above one another. The Goth. form uf appears to be further related to E. up, and G. avf, upon; so that there are two parallel Teutonic types, viz. UF (Goth. uf, G. oben, E. ab-ove) and UP (E. up, G. avf); with the parallel comparative forms seen in over and upper. •. The senses of 'under' and 'over' are curiously mixed, as in Lat. sub, under, and super, above; perhaps we may explain this from the sense of nearness; if we draw two parallel horizontal lines, near together, we say that the under one is close up to the \*\*\* nd a ball thrown up to the ceiling is always Todd's Johnson. See Lap.

F. overt (later owvert), pp. of overir (later owvert), to open.  $\beta$ . The exact formation of the word is uncertain ; Diez cites Prov. obrir, ubrir, O. Ital. oprire (Florio), to open, which he distinguishes from Span. abrir, mod. Ital. aprire, derived directly from Lat. aperire, to open. y. As to owrir, open, words of three syllables, occurring in the Livre des Rois. These forms arose from Prov. adubrir (Raynouard, Lexique Roman, ii. 104), in which the prefixed a- ( = Lat. ad) does not alter the sense, but is added as in ablasmar, afranker; whilst dubrir is from the Lat. de-operire, to open wide, lit. 'uncover,' used by Celsus (White). He supports this by instancing mod. Prov. durbir, Piedmontese durvi, Walloon drowi, Lorraine deurvi, all corresponding to the same Lat. desperive. 8. On the other hand, Littré supposes an early confusion between Lat. aperire, to open, and operire, to cover; and looks upon corrir as a corruption of avrir (= aperire); whence dubrir might be explained as being formed with de used intensively, so that de-aperire would be to 'open completely' rather than to 'uncover.' See the whole discussion in Littre. e. Even if we can settle the question as to whether the word depends on Lat. aperirs or operirs, difficulties remain in these words also. Perhaps aperire-ab-perire, to uncover, and operire = ob-perire, to cover up; and -perire may be related to parare, to get ready, prepare; see Parade. 'Right at min owen cost, and be your gyde ;' Chaucer, C. T. 806. 'Thar owyn fre '= their own free property ; Barbour, Bruce, iii. 752. - A. S. agen, own, Grein, i. 20 ; orig. the pp. of the anomalous strong verb dgan, to owe, i.e. to possess; see Owe.+Icel. eigin, one's own; orig. the old pp. of eiga, to possess.+ Dan. and Swed. egen, one's own.+Goth. aigin, property, possessions; a neut. sb. formed from the adj. which was orig. the old pp. of aigan, to possess. Thus the orig. sense is 'possessed' or 'held.' Der. own, verb, to possess; see own (2). OWN (2), to possess. (E.) M. E. aynien, aknien, oknien, aknen, ohnen; see Layamon, 11864, 25359; Ormulum, 5649. – A.S. ágnian, to appropriate, claim as one's own; Grein, i. 22. Formed with causal suffix ian from ágn, contracted form of ágen, one's own; see Own (1). + Icel. eigna, to claim as one's own; from eigin, own.+ Goth. ga-aiginon, to make a gain of, lit. make one's own, 2 Cor. ii. 11; from aigin, one's own property. ¶ It is thus evident that the verb is a derivative from the adjective. Der. own-er, M.E. ogenere, Ayenbite of Inwyt, ed. Morris, p. 37, last line but one; ouner-ship. OWN (3), to grant, admit. (E.) This word is, in its origin, totally distinct from the preceding, though the words have been confused almost inextricably. 'You will not own it,' i. e. admit it, Winter's Tale, iii. 2. 60. The verb should rather be to own, but the influence of the commoner own has swept away all distinction. M. E. unnen, to grant. admit, be pleased with. 'Jif pu hit wel unnest' = if you are well pleased with it; Ancren Riwle, p. 282, l. 23. 'Ge nowen nout unnen ) et eni vuel word kome of ou ' = ye ought not to permit that any evil word should come from you; id. p. 380, 1. 5. 'Godd haueb burh his grace se much luue unned' = God hath, through his grace, granted so much love; Hali Meidenhad, ed. Cockayne, p. 13, 1, 27. See note on unran in Seinte Marharete, ed. Cockayne, p. 111. 3. The pres. tense singular, 1st and 3rd person, had the form an, on; as 'ich on wel that ye witen '= I fully own that ye know; St. Catharine, 1761; 'Jif god hit an' = if God will grant it, Layamon, 14851; 'he on' = he grants, allows, O. Eng. Miscellany, ed. Morris, p. 116, ll. 239, 241. See further as to this singular word in Stratmann, s. v. an, unnen. - A. S. unnan, to grant; old past tense used as present, ic an, Grein, ii. 625. + Icel. unna, pres. tense ek ann, to grant, allow, bestow (cognate with E. own, as noted in Icel. Dict.) + O. Sax. gi-unnan, to grant. + G. gönnen, to grant, M. H. G. gunnen, O. H. G. gi-unnan. See Fick, i. 17. ¶ It may be remarked that the true old sense was 'to grant as a favour;' hence the sense 'to grant as an admission,' to allow, admit. In the constant presence of the common verb to own, both the history and the true sense of the word have suffered. [†] OX, a ruminant quadruped. (E.) M. E. oz, pl. oxen, Chaucer, C. T. 889; oxis, Wyclif, Luke, xvii. 7. – A. S. oxa, pl. oxan, Grein, ii. 360. + Du. os. + Icel. uni, also oxi ; pl. ynn, önn. + Dan. one, pl. oner. + Swed. one. + G. ochie, ochs, pl. ochisen; O.H.G. ohso. + Goth. aukia, aukius. + W. ych, pl. ychen. + Skt. ukihan, an ox, bull; also. 'a Vedic epithet of the Maruts who, by bringing rain, i.e. by sprinkling, impregnate the earth like bulls; 'Benfey. The Maruts are storms; see Max Müller, Lectures, ii. 416. β. The etymology of Skt. see Max Müller, Lectures, ii. 416. ukshan is known, viz. from uksh, to sprinkle. Further, uksh stands for waksh, and is an extension of the root WAG, to wet, appearing in Spectator, no. 104.

to be able; whence isa, a proprietor, owner; the form of the root of Gk. ispos, moist, and in Lat. umidus (= ug-midus), moist, as well as in Icel. vökr, moist, prov. So named from its sourcess. - Gk.  $\delta_{i} \delta_{is}$ , sharp, keen, cutting, acid. - AKS, an extended form of AK, to pierce; see Axe, Aoid. Der. oxalie; cf. ox-ide, oxy-gen, oxy-mel, oxy-tone.

OXIDE, a compound of oxygen with a non-acid base. (Gk.) A coined word; from ox-, short for oxy-, part of the word oxy-gen; and -ide, which appears to be due to Gk. -uoha, like, and more commonly appears as -id, as in ellipso-id, sphero-id, ovo-id, and the like. See Oxygen. Dor. oxid-ise, oxid-is-er, oxid-is-able, oxid-at-ion; all coined words.

OXLIP, the greater cowslip. (E.) In Mids. Nt. Dr. ii. 1. 250; Wint. Ta. iv. 4. 125. - A. S. oxanslyppe; see Cockayne's Leechdoms, iii. 340. - A. S. onan, gen. case of ona, an ox; and slyppe, a slop, i.e. a piece of dung. [This word fully confirms the etymology of cousing already given; see Cowslip.] ¶ It should therefore be speit oxidip. Cf. M. E. cousioppe, cousiowpe, Wright's Voc. i. 162, 226.

OXYGEN, a gas often found in acid compounds. (Gk.) The sense is 'generator of acids;' and it is a coined word. The discovery of oxygen dates from 1744 (Haydn). - Gk. bfu- (written oxyin Roman characters), crude form of ofvs, sharp, keen, acid; and yer-, to produce, base of yi-yr-ouat (= yi-yer-ouat), I am produced or born. See Oxalis and Generate. Der. oxygen-ate, oxygen-ise,

F. oyer, mod. F. ouir, to hear. - Lat. audire, to hear. See Audience. Der. oyez. [+]

OYEZ, OYES, hear ye! (F.,-L.) The first word of every proclamation by a public crier; now corrupted into the unmeaning Ol yes! S. form ostre was borrowed from Latin; cf. 'ostrea, ostre' in Wright's Vocab. i. 65. The diphthong shews the mod. E. form to be from the French. M. E. oistre, Chaucer, C. T. 182.-O. F. oistre, in the 13th cent. (Littré); whence mod. F. huitre. - Lat. ostrea, more rarely ostreum. - Gk. borpeov, an oyster; so called from its shell. -Gk. borter, a bone, shell ; akin to Lat. os (gen. ossis), a bone. Osseous, Ostracise. [+]

'Pabulum or food;' Bp. Berkeley, PABULUM, food. (L.) Siris (1747), § 197 (Todd).-Lat. pabulum, food. Formed with suffix -buller from par, base of pascere, to feed (pt. t. pa-ui); see Pastor. Der. pabul-ous, Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. iii. c. 21.

516; pabular. PACE, a step, gait. (F., -L.) M. E. pas, paas, Rob. of Gloue. p. 149, l. 12; Chaucer, C. T. 825; 1032. - F. pas. - Lat. passum, acc. of passes, a step, pace, lit. a stretch, i.e. the distance between the feet in walking. - Lat. passus, pp. of panders, to stretch.  $\beta$ . Panders stands for panters, causal form from patters, to be open, spread out: see Patent. Der. pace, verb, the same word as Pass, q.v.; pac-er, PACHA, another spelling of Pasha, q. v. PACHYDERMATOUS, thick-skinned. (Gk.) Modern and scientific. - Gk. waxu-, crude form of waxus, thick; and depuar-, stem of dépua, a skin; with suffix -ous (= Lat. -osus). B. The Gk. waxve is lit. ' firm ;' allied to whyrum, I fix, Lat. pangere, and to E. Pact, q. v. y. Gk. dépua is a hide, ' that which is flayed off;' from Gk. dipeur, to flay, tear, cognate with E. Tear, verb, q. v. Der. pachyderm, an abbreviation for pachydermatous animal.

PACIFY, to appease, make peaceful. (F., -L.) Spelt pacifie, Sir T. More, Works, p. 871b. - F. pacifier, 'to pacifie;' Cot. - Lat. pacificare, pacificare, to make peace. - Lat. pacific, crude form of par, peace; and ficare, for facere, to make; see Peace and Fact. Der. pacifier, spelt pacyfor, Sir T. More, Works, p. 872 d; pacificat-ion, from F. pacification, 'a pacification' (Cot.), which from Lat. acc. pacificationem, due to pacificatus, pp. of pacificare; pacificator, Bacon, Life of Hen. VII, ed. Lumby, p. 52, l. 10, from Lat. pacificator; pacific, formerly pacifick, Milton, P. L. xi. 860, from F. pacifique, 'pacificous' (Cot.), which from Lat. adj. pacificus, peacemaking ; pacific-al. pacific-al-ly. PACK, a bundle, burden, set of cards or hounds, &c. (C.) M.E. pakte, P. Plowman, B. xiii. 201; pl. packes, Ancren Riwle, p. 166, last pakke, P. Plowman, B. xiii. 201; pl. packes, Ancren Kiwie, p. 100, last line. Cf. Icel. pakki, a pack, bundle; Dan. pakke; Swed. packa; Du. pak; G. pack.  $\beta$ . But it does not appear to be a true Tcutonic word; few Teutonic words begin with p. It is rather a survival of an O. Celtic pak, still preserved in Gael. pac, a pack, a mob (cf. E. pack of rascals), pac, verb, to pack up; Irish pac, pacadh, a pack, pacaigim, I pack up; Bret. pak, a pack; cf. W. baick, a burden.  $\gamma$ . And these words, in accordance with Grimm's law, may fairly be considered as allied to Lat the pack to fasten. Skt. fac. to bind. Skt. considered as allied to Lat. pangere, to fasten, Skt. pac, to bind, Skt. paga, a tie, band - PAK, to fasten; see Pact. Thus the orig. sense is 'that which is tied up.' Der. pack, verb, M. E. pakken, P. Plowman, B. xv. 184; pack-er, pack-horse, 2 Hen. IV, ii. 4. 177; pack-ing; pack-man; pack-needle or pack-ing-needle, M. E. pakkenedle or pakneedle, P. Plowman, B. v. 312; pack-saddle, Cor. ii. 1. 99; pack-thread, Romeo, v. I. 47. Also pack-age, q. v., pack-et, q. v. Gr Quite distinct from bag. [+]

PACKAGE, a packet, small bundle. (C.; with F. suffix.) A late and clumsy word; added by Todd to Johnson; formed by adding F. suffix -age (=Lat. -aticum) to E. pack; see Pack. Doublet, packet.

PACKET, a small pack, package. (F., -Low G., -C.) In Hamlet, v. 2. 15. -O. F. pacquet, paquet, 'a packet, bundle;' Cot. Formed with dimin. suffix -et from Low Lat. paceus, a bundle, used A. D. 1506; Ducange. -Low G. pakk, a pack (Bremen Wörterbuch); O. Du. pack, 'a pack' (Hexham); Icel. pakki. Of Celtic origin; see ¶ It does not seem to be an old word in G., so that the Pack. Low Lat. word is prob. from Low G. or Dutch. Der. packet-boat, a boat for carrying mail-bags, Evelyn's Diary, Oct. 10, 1641; now often shortened to packet. Doublet, package.

PACT, a contract. (L) In Bacon, Life of Hen. VII, ed. Lumby, p. 7, l. 19; and p. 27, l. 30.-Lat. pactum, an agreement.-Lat. pactus, pp. of pacisci, to stipulate, agree; inceptive form of O. Lat. facere, to agree, come to an agreement about anything. - ~ PAK, to bind; whence also Skt. pag, to bind, Gk. #/yvum, I fasten; as well as E. fadge ; see Fadge. Der. pact-ion, Fox's Martyrs, p. 272 (R.), from F. paction (Cot.) = Lat. pactionem, acc. of pactio, an agreement. Also com-pact, im-pact, im-pinge. From the same root we have fang, fee; also pack, peace, paci-fy, packy-dermatous, perhaps pag-an (with paynim), perhaps page (1), page (2), pale (1), palette, pallet (2), pay, pro-pag-ate, peasant, pec-uliar, pec-uniary. PAD (1), a soft cushion, &c. (Scand.? or C.?) 'He was kept in the bands, having under him but onely a pad of straw; 'Fox, Martyrs, p. 854 (R) Spelt padda, Gascoigne, Fruits of War, st. 177. A stuffed saddle was called a pad; hence: 'Padde, saddle,' in Levins, ed. 1570. It also occurs in the sense of 'bundle;' see Halliwell. It is merely another form of pod, the orig. sense being 'bag.' Pod is the better spelling, as the o represents an older u. See Pod. Der. pad, verb ; padd-ing.

PAD (2), a thief on the high road. (Du.) We now speak of a foot-pad. The old word is a padder, Massinger, A New Way, ii. I. 1. 15 from end; Butler, Hudibras, pt. iii. c. 1, l. 5 from end. This means 'one who goes upon the pad or foot-path.' A pad is also a 'roadster,' a horse for riding on roads; Gay's Fables, no. 46; also (more correctly) called a pad-nag, i.e. 'road-horse' (R.) - Du. pad, a path; O. Du. fadi (Hexham); cf. Low G. pad. Cognate with E. path; see Path. W Many cant words are of Du. origin; see Beaum. and Fletcher, Beggar's Bush. Der. pad, v., to tramp along. PADDLE (1), to finger; to dabble in water. (E.) 1. means 'to finger, handle; 'Hamlet, iii. 4. 185; Oth. ii. 1. 259. 1. It It stands for pattle, of which it is a weakened form, and is the | triumph. frequentative of pat. Thus the sense is 'to pat often,' to keep pan, to praise, honour. Der. peon-y, q. v.

handling; see Pat, verb. So also prov. G. padden, paddeln, to walk with short steps, i.e. to patter about, go with pattering steps; see Patter. 2. The sense 'to dabble in water' is in Palsgrave, who has: 'I paddyl in the myre;' and is perhaps due to O.F. patoniller, 'to slabber, to paddle or dable in with the feet, to stirre up and down and trouble;' Cot. This appears to be a derivative from F. patte, the foot; and patte appears to be a word of onomatopoetic origin, connected with G. patschen, to tap, pat, splash, dabble, walk awkwardly, which is also allied to E. pat. 3. Or again, it is shewn (s. v. Pat) that pat may stand for plat, so that paddle may be for pladdle, a form which may be compared with Low G. pladdera, to paddle, in the Bremen Wörterbuch. Either way, the ultimate origin is much the same. Der. paddle, sb., in the sense of broadbladed oar, but there is probably some confusion with the word below; paddl-er, Beaum. and Fletcher, Wit at Several Weapons, i.

1. 20; paddle-wheel. Doublet, patter. PADDLE (2), a little spade, esp. one to clean a plough with. (E.) In Deut. xxiii. 13 (A.V.) It has lost an initial s, and stands for spaddle, the dimin. of spade. 'Others destroy moles with a spaddle.' Mortimer's Husbandry (R.); and see spud and spittle-staff in Halli-well. Cf. also Irish and Gael. spadal, a plough-staff, paddle; words prob. borrowed from the O. English. ¶ In the sense of 'broad-bladed oar,' see Paddle (1). PADDOCK (1), a toad. (Scand.) In Hamlet, iii. 4. 190; Macb. i, 1. 9. M. E. paddak. King Alisaunder, 6126. Dimin. with suffix obs or -ock (as in kill-ock, bull-ock), from M. E. padde, a toad, frog; in Wyclif, Exod. viii. 9 (later version), one MS. has the pl. paddis for paddokis, which is the common reading. - Icel. padda, a toad. + Swed. padda, a toad, frog. + Dan. padde. + Du. padde, pad.  $\beta$ . As in many E. words beginning with p, an initial s has probably been lost. The form padd-a denotes an agent; cf. A.S. hunt-a, a hunter. The prob. sense is 'jerker,' i. e. the animal which moves by jerks; from Aryan / SPAD, to vibrate, jerk, &c.; cf. Gk.  $\sigma\phi objoints,$  we here ment, active,  $\sigma\phi e r \delta \sigma \eta$ , a sling, Skt. spand, to vibrate, throb. In accordance with this supposition, we actually find Skt. sparga-spanda, a frog.  $\P$  The supposed A.S. pada (in Bosworth) is due to a mistake; the true E. words are toad and frog. Der. paddock-stool, a toad-stool.

PADDOCK (2), a small enclosure. (E.) <sup>4</sup> Delectable countryseats and villas environed with parks, padaoch, plantations, &c.; Evelyn (Todd; no reference). Here park and paddock are conjoined; and it is tolerably certain that paddock is a corruption of parrock, another form of park. 'Parrocke, a lytell parke,' Palsgrave; cited in Way's note to Prompt. Parv. p. 384. He adds that 'a fenced enclosure of nine acres at Hawsted (Suffolk), in which deer were kept in pens for the course, was termed the Parrock;' Cullum's Hawsted, p. 210. See also parrock in Jamieson, and parrick in Halliwell. [The unusual change from r to d may have been due to Trainvent. [1 ne unusual change from r to a may have been due to some confusion with paddock, a toad, once a familiar word; cf. pod-disk for porridge.] = A. S. pearrue, pearroe, a small enclosure. On Sisum lyllum pearroes'= in this little enclosure; Ælfred, tr. of Boethius, c. xviii. § 2, b. ii. prosa 7. Formed, with dimin. Suffix -oc (=mod. E. -ock, as in padd-ock (1), hill-ock, bull-ock), from sparran, to shut, enclose; so that an initial s has been lost. We find 'ges-parrado dure' = thy door being shut, Matt. vi. 6 (Lindisfarme MS.) 9. This loss of a in cartified by the convergence of M E dense.  $\beta$ . This loss of s is certified by the occurrence of M. E. parron (for sparron), to enclose, confine, bar in; Havelok, 2439; Ywain and Gawain, 3227, ed. Ritson; and see the curious quotation in Halliwell, s. v. parred, where the words parred and speride (sparred) are used convertibly. Cf. G. sperren, to shut. y. The verb sparran is, literally, to fasten with a spar or bar, and is formed from the sb. spar; see Spar (1). Doublet, park, q.v. PADLOCK, a loose hanging lock. (E.?)

A padlock is a loose hanging lock with a staple, suitable for hampers, baskets, &c., when the case to which it is affixed is not made of a solid substance. It occurs in Pope's Dunciad, iv. 162. Todd quotes from Milton's Colasterion (1645): 'Let not such an unmerciful and more than legal yoke be padlocked upon the neck of any Christian.' Of uncertain origin; but perhaps formed by adding lock to prov. E. pad, a pannier (Halliwell), given as a Norfolk word. This word is more commonly written ped, M. E. pedde. 'Pedde, idem quod pamere;' Prompt. Parv. Of unknown origin; see further under Pedlar. [+] PÆAN, a hymn in honour of Apollo. (L., -Gk.) 'I have ever hung Elaborate pears on thy golden shrine;' Ben Jonson, Cynthia's Perla Revels, A. v. sc. 2; near the end. - Lat. pean, (1) a name of Apollo, (2) a religious hymn, esp. to Apollo. - Gk. Παιάν, Παιάν, (1) Pean, Pseon, the physician of the gods, who cures Hades and Ares, Homer, Il. v. 401, 899; cf. Od. iv. 232; also Apollo; also his son Æsculapius; a deliverer, saviour; (2) a choral song, hymn, chant, song of triumph.  $\beta$ . Perhaps 'praise' may be the old sense; cf. Skt.

PEDOBAPTISM; the same as Pedobaptism, q.v.

PAGAN, a countryman, hence, a heathen. (L.) In Shak. Rich. II, iv. 95. [The M. E. form is paien or payen. Chaucer, C. T. 4954, 4963, from O. F. paien (Burguy); which from Lat. paganus.] = Lat. paganus, (1) a villager, countryman, (2) a pagan, because the rustic people were supposed to be unconverted at a time when townsmen were converts. The same idea appears in E. heathen, q. v. = Lat. paganus, adj., rustic, belonging to a village. = Lat. pāgus, a district, canton.  $\beta$ . The etymology is supposed to be from Lat. pagare (pt. t. pēgi), to fasten, fix, set, as being marked out by fixed limits; see Pact. Dor. pagan-ish, pagan-ism, pagan-ise; and see paynim, peasant.

by fixed limits; see Facto. Loss. pagar-ass, pagar-ass, pagar-ass, and see paynim, prasant. PAGE (1), a boy attending a person of distinction. (F., -Low Lat., -L.?) M. E. page, King Alisaunder, 835; Havelok, 1730. – F. page, 'a page;' Cot. Cf. Span. page, Port. pagem, Ital. paggio. – Low Lat. pagium, acc. of pagius, a servant (Ducange). This word appears to be a mere variant of pagensis, constantly used in the sense of peasant, rustic, serf; and if so, the etymology is from Lat. pagus, a village; see Pagan, Peasant. ¶ See Littré, who does not admit the etymology suggested by Diez, viz. that Ital. paggio might have been formed from Gk. multion, a little boy, dimin. of wais, a boy, child; for which see Pedagogue. Littré argues that pages were, in the olden time, not particularly young; and thinks that Prov. pages (= pagensis), a peasant, may be a related word, though Diez admits no such relation. The Port. pagem (not noticed by the etymologists) seems to point directly to the form pagensis. The word remains doubtful, and something can be urged on both sides.

ginem. Dor. pagin-at-ion, a modern coined word. PAGEANT, an exhibition, spectacle, show. (Low Lat., - L.) A. The history of this curious word is completely known, by which means the etymology has been solved. It orig. meant 'a moveable scaffold,' such as was used in the representation of the old mysteries. A picture of such a scaffold will be found in Chambers, Book of Days, i. 634. The Chester plays 'were always acted in the open air, and consisted of 24 parts, each part or pageans being taken by one of the guilds of the city. . . Twenty-four large scaffolds or stages were made,' &c.; Chambers, as above; see the whole passage. Phillips, ed. 1706, well defines pageant as 'a triumphal chariot or arch, or other pompous device usually carried about in publick shows.' B. M. E. pagent. The entry 'pagent, pagina,' occurs in Prompt. Parv. p. 377; where there is nothing to shew whether a pageant is meant or a page of a book, the words being ultimately the same ; see Page (2). But Way's excellent note on this entry is full of information, and should be consulted. He says: 'the primary signification of pageant appears to have been a stage or scaffold, which was called pagina, it may be supposed, from its construction, being a machine compaginata, framed and compacted together. The curious extracts from the Coventry records given by Mr. Sharp, in his Dissertation on the Pageants or Mysteries performed there, afford definite information on this subject. The term is variously written, and occasionally pagyn, pagen, approaching closely the Lat. pagina. The various plays or pageants composing the Chester mysteries... are entitled Pagina prima, ... Pagina secunda, ... and so forth; see Chester Plays, ed. Wright. A curious contemporary account has been preserved of the construction of the pageanis [scaffolds] at Chester during the xvith century, "which pagiants were a high scafold with 2 rownes, a higher and a lower, upon 4 wheeles;" Sharp, Cov. Myst. p. 17. The term denoting the stage whereon the play was exhibited subsequently denoted also the play itself; but the primary sense . . is observed by several writers, as by Higins, in his version of Junius's Nomenclator, 1585: "Pegma, lignes machina in altum educta, tabulatis etiam in sublime crescentibus compaginata, de loco in locum portatilis, aut que vehi potest, ut in pompis fieri solet : Eschaffaut, a pageant, or scaffold." Palsgrave has: 'Pagiant in a playe, mystere;' and Cotgrave explains O. F. pegmate as 'a stage or frame whereon pageants be set or carried.' See further illustrations in Wedgwood. C. Thus we know that, just as M. E. pagent is used as a variant of pagine, in the sense of page of a book, so the M. E. pagent (or pagiant, &c.) pagen or pagin, which is nothing but an Anglicised form of Low Lat. pagina in the sense of scaffold or stage. For examples of excrescent 1, cf. ancient, margent, tyrant, pheasant. D. Though this sense of pagina is not given by Ducange, it was certainly in use, as shewn above, and a very clear instance is cited by Wedgwood from Munimenta Gildhallize Londoniensis, ed. Riley, iii. 459, where we find : ' parabatur machina satis pulcra... in eadem pagina erigebantur duo animalia vocata antelops;' shewing that machina and pagina were synony-mous. E. The true sense of pagina I take to have been simply 'stage' or ' platform;' since we find one sense of Lat. pagina to be a slab of marble or plank of wood (White). Cf. Lat. paginatus, planked, built, constructed (White); which is rather a derivative from pagina than the original of it, as seems to have been Way's F. Hence the derivation is (not from paginatus, but) supposition. from Lat. pangere (base pag-), to fasten, fix ; see Pact. G. Finally, we may note that another word for the old stage was pegma (stem pegmat-, whence O. F. pegmate in Cotgrave); this is the corresponding and cognate Greek name, from Gk. why was (stem wy year-), a platform, stage, derived from the base of Gk. thyrum, I fix, cognate with Lat. pangere. Indeed it is very probable that Low Lat. pagina, a stage, is a translation of Gk. nyyua, but it is not merely borrowed from it, being an independent formation from the same base Der. pageant, verb, to play, Shak. Herbert, Travels, ed. 1665, pp. 69, 393; pagod in Skinner, ed. 1671. – Port. pagoda, now generally pagods; but both forms are given in the Eng.-Port. part of Vieyra's Dict. Corrupted from Pers. but-kadak, an idol-temple; Rich. Dict. p. 241, col. 2; spelt but-kadak in Palmer, Pers. Dict. col. 70. – Pers. but, an idol, image, God, id. p. 241, col. 1; and kadak, a habitation, id. p. 1175. B. The singular perversion of the sounds may fairly be explained by supposing that the Portuguese connected it mentally with pagão, pagan (= Lat. pagenus); for which see Vieyra, in the Eng.-Port. division. It may be added that the initial Persian letter is sometimes rendered by p, as in Devic, Supplement to Littré. [†] PAIL, an open vessel of wood, &c. for holding liquids. (F., -L.) M. E. paile, payle. 'Payle, or mylk-stoppe [milk-stoup]; 'Prompt. Parv. = O. F. paele, so spelt in the 13th century (Littré, Burguy). Both aanum and patella are glossed by O. F. paele; Wright's Vocab. i. 97, l. 2. Later paella, 'a footlesse posnet [little pot] or skellet, having brimmes like a bason; a little pan ;' Cot. Cf. mod. F. posle, a frying-pan. = Lat. patella, a small pan or dish, a vessel used in cooking; dimin. of patera, a flat dish, saucer, which answers to Gk. wardwy, a flat dish. See Paten.  $\beta$ . There is a difficult here in the fact that the sense does not quite correspond. We may perhaps explain this by supposing that the O. F. paele as used in England took up the meaning of the older corresponding word of Celtic origin, viz. Irish padkal, a pail, ewer, Gael. padkal, an ewer. These words, like W. padell, a pan, are either cognate with or borrowed from the Lat. patella. " We may note that prov. E. peel, a fireshovel, is not the same word, though Cotgrave seems so to regard it; it is from O. F. pelle, Lat. pail, a shov as suggested under that word. PAIN, bodily suffering, anguish. (F., -L.) M. E. peine, peyne, King Alisaunder, 4522. - F. peine, 'a paine, penalty;' Cot. - Lat. peene, punishment, penalty, pain. + Gk. wowh, penalty:  $\beta$ . Some suppose the Lat. word was borrowed from the Gk. The root is not surely known; see Curtius, i. 349; Fick, i. 147. Der. pain, verb, M. E. peinen, Chaucer, C. T. 11946, 11949, 11951; but the word must have been in use in very early times, as we find the derived words peintange, painting, and peinture, a picture, in the Ancren Riwle, p. 392, 1. 16, p. 242; 1. 14. – O. F. peint, paint (mod. F. peint), pp. of peindre, paindre (mod. F. peindre), to paint. – Lat. pingers, to paint. Allied to Skt. piio, to dye, colour; pinjara, yellow, tawny.  $\beta$ . The form of the root is PIG, to colour; perhaps allied to 4/ PIK, to adorn, form, whence Skt. pig, to adorn, form, pegas, an ornament, and Gk. wouklos, variegated. See Fick, i. 145. Der. paint, sb. know that, just as M. E. pagent is used as a variant of pagine, in the sense of page of a book,'so the M. E. pagent (or pagiant, &c.) was formed, by the addition of an excrescent t after n, from an older to 'Painter, a rope employed to fasten a boat;' Hawkesworth's Voyages, 1773, vol. i. p. xxix. Corrupted (by assimilation to the ordi-mary sb. painter) from M. E. panter, a noose, esp. for catching birds; see Chancer, Legend of Good Women, 131; Prompt. I The Irish painteir, Gael. painnteer, a gin, snare, are forms of the same word; but may have been borrowed from French, as the M. E. word occurs as early as the reign of Edw. II. It is remarkable that, in America, a panther is also called a painter; see Cooper, The Pioneers, cap. xxviii.

is also called a painter; see Cooper, The Flomeers, cap. xxviii. PAIR, two equal or like things, a couple. (F., = L.) M. E. peire, peyre, applied to any number of like or equal things, and not limited, as now, to two only. Thus 'a peire of bedes' = a set of beads, Chaucer, C. T. 159. 'A pair of cards' = a pack of cards; Ben Jon-son, Masque of Christmas (Carol). 'A pair of organs' = a set of organ-pipes, i. e. an organ; see my note to P. Plowman, C. xxi, 7. 'A pair of stairs' = a flight of stairs. Yet we also find 'a peyre hose' = a pair of hose; Rob. of Glouc. p. 390, l. 4. - F. paire, 'a paire, or couple of;' Cot. - F. pair, 'like, alike, equall, matching, even, meet;' Cot. - Lat. parem, acc. of par, alike. The Collis Palatinus is supposed to have been guage, ii. 276. so called from Pales, a pastoral deity; see Max Müller, as above. Spelt palankee in Terry's Voyage to East India, 1655, p. 155 (Todd); palanquin in Skinner, ed. 1671. The spelling palanquin is French; in Portuguese Skinner, ed. 1671. The spelling palangum is French; in Portuguese it is palanguim. – Hind. palang, a bed, bedstead; Forbes, Hindustani Dict., 1857, p. 202. Cf. Pers. palank, palang, a bedstead; Rich. Dict. p. 335. (Littré cites Siamese baalangko, Pali pallangka; Col. Yule, as cited in Wedgwood, gives the Pali form as palanki, a litter or couch carried on poles. Mahn cites Javanese palangki, older form palangka; as well as Hindi palki, which is evidently a contracted form.) y. All from Skt. paryanka, (Prakrit pallanka), a couch-bed, a bed; the change from r to l being very common. Skt. pari, about, round (Gk. wepi); and aika, a hook, the flank, &c. Connected with Gk. whyler, to quiver, brandish, swing, &c.; and with owniper, to quiver. -SPAR, to struggle; preserved in E. spar, to box; see Spar (3).

Der. palestr-al, as above. PALETOT, a loose garment. (F., - Du.) Modern. Borrowed from mod. F. paletot, formerly palletoe, for which see below. However, the word is by no means new to English; the M. E. paltok is not an uncommon word; see numerous references in my note to P. Plowman, B. xviii. 25, where the word occurs; and see Prompt. Parv., and Way's note. This form was borrowed from O. F. palletoe, a long and thick pelt, or cassock, a garment like a short cloak with sleeves, or such a one as the most of our modern pages are attired in;' Cot. Borrowed, as Littré points out, from O. Dutch, but rather from the form paltroe (with loss of r) than from the fuller form paltsrock. -O. Du. paltroe, for which Oudemans gives a quotation. The same word as O. Du. palsrock, which Oudemans explains by a holidaydress, and cites the expression ' fluwcelen palsrock,' i. e. velvet dress, as in use A. D. 1521. Hexham gives: 'on palts-rock, a coate or a jacket.' β. Littré (if I understand him rightly) takes it to mean iacket.' a pilgrim's coat, and connects pals- with O. Du. pals-stock, contracted form of palster-stock, a pilgrim's staff (Hexham). This is certainly wrong; a very slight examination will shew that the coat was worn by soldiers, knights, and kings, and was made of silk or velvet. Way says that 'Sir Roger de Norwico bequeaths, in 1370, unum paltoke de ueluete, cum armis meis; '&c. Hexham evidently connects pals-rock with pals, 'a pretour,' i.e. a prætor. It is clear that the first rock with plat, 'a pictur, i.e. a pietor. It is clear that the inserving syllable is O. Du. pais, later written pais with intrusive i, answering to G. pfaiz; and this pais occurs in pais-grave, 'a count palatine' (Hexham), G. pfaizgraf, E. paisgrave or paigrave.  $\gamma$ . The G. pfaiz is a contraction of M. H. G. phalinze or phalanze, O. H. G. phalanza, palinza, a palace; a word due to Lat. palatime, a palace. Hence O. Du. pais = E. palace; and the sense is 'palace-coat,' i.e. court-dress. 3. The O. Du. row = G. rock, O. H. G. Arock, a cost from which some desire F. frack. See Palace and Phalace. a coat, from which some derive E. frock. See Palace and Frock. F Not connected with toque, a cap; for the paltok was not hooded; though the borrowed Breton word paltok was used of a booded mantle.

F. palefrei (13th cen-tury, Littré), palefroy, 'a palfrey' Cot.; mod. F. palefroi. Spelt palefreid in the 11th century; Littré. - Low Lat. paraveredus, a post-horse, lit. 'an extra post-horse' (White). Brachet gives quotations for the later forms paravredus, parafredus, and palafredus (10th century); and O. F. palefreid = Low Lat. acc. palafredum; every step being traced with certainty. β. The Low Lat. paraveredus is a hybrid formation from Gk. mapá, beside (hence extra); and late Lat. ueredus, a post-horse, courier's horse (White).  $\gamma$ . White gives the etymology of ueredus from Lat. uekere, to carry, draw; and rheda, a four-wheeled carried in the transformation of the transforma rheda, a four-wheeled carriage; if so, it means 'the drawer of a four-wheeled carriage.' 8. For wapd, see Para-; for uchere, see Vehicle. Rheda is said to be a Gaulish word; cf. W. rhedu, to run, to race, rhe, fleet, swift. ¶ The Low Lat. paraueredus is also the original of G. pferd, Du. paard, a palfrey, horse.

PALIMPSEST, a manuscript which has been twice written on, the first writing being partly erased. (Gk.) Modern in E., though found in Greek. - Gk. παλίμψηστον, a palimpsest (manuscript); neut. of παλίμψηστοι, lit. scraped again. - Gk. πάλιμ-, for πάλιν, again, before the following  $\psi$ ; and  $\psi \eta \sigma \tau \delta s$ , rubbed, scraped, verbal adj. from when, to rub, Ionic when.

PALINDROME, a word or sentence that reads the same backwards as forwards. (Gk.) Examples are Hannah, madam, Eve; Todd quotes subi dura a rudibus from Peacham, Experience in these Times (1638). 'Curious palindromes;' Ben Jonson, An Execration upon Vulcan, Underwoods, lxi. l. 34. = Gk. παλίνδρομοs, running back again. - Gk. πάλιν, back, again; and δρόμου, a running, from δραμείν, to run : see Dromedary.

PALINODE, a recontation, in song. (F., -L., -Gk.) 'You, two and two, singing a palinode;' Ben Jonson, Cynthia's Revels, last speech of Crites. - F. palinodie, 'a palinody, recantation, con-trary song, unsaying of what hath been said;' Cot. - Lat. palinodia.

(F., -L.) Shak. has the pl. palisadoes, 1 Hen. IV, ii. 3. 55; this is (I suppose) a Span. form, though the mod. Span. word is palizada. Dryden has palisades, tr. of Virgil, b. vii. l. 214. -F. palisade, 'a palisadoe;' Cot. -F. palisser, 'to inclose with pales,'id.; with suffix -ade - Lat. -ata. -F. palis, a 'pale, stake, pole,'id.; extended from pal, a pale. See further under Pale (1). Der. palisade, verb. PALL (1). a cloak mantle. archbishop's scarf, shroud. (L.)

PALL (1), a cloak, mantle, archbishop's scarf, shroud. (L.) M. E. pal, Layamon, 897, 1296; pl. palles, id. 2368. - A. S. pail, purple cloth; we find pallas and sidan = purple cloths and silks, as a gloss to Lat. purpuram et sericum in Alfric's Colloquy (the Merchant); see Thorpe, Analecta, p. 27.-Lat. palla, a mantle, losse dress, under garment, curtain; cf. pallium, a coverlet, pall, curtain, toga. β. Origin uncertain ; perhaps for panula, pannula, dimin. form from panus, pannus, cloth. We can hardly connect it with pellis, skin. Der. pall-i-ate, q. v.

PALL (2), to become vapid, lose taste or spirit. (C.) M. E. pallon. 'Pallyn, as ale and drynke, Emorier;' Prompt. Parv. Way, in the note on the passage, quotes from Lydgate's Order of Fools: Who forsakith wyne, and drynkithe ale pailid. Such foltisshe foolis, God lete hem never the' [prosper]; Harl. MS. 2251, fol. 303. He also cites from Palsgrave: 'I palle, as drinke or bloode dothe, by longe standyng in a thynge, ie appallys. This drink wyll pall (s'appallyra) if it stande vncouered all nyght. I palle, I fade of freshenesse in colour or beautye, ie flaitris.  $\beta$ . The word presents great difficulty; I incline to the belief that Palsgrave has here made an error in using the O. F. verb appallir as the equivalent of E. pall. This verb, like mod. F. pôlir, seems to be only used with respect to loss of colour or light. See apalir, palis, in Roquefort, paslir, pallir in Cotgrave, and pôlir in Littré. Palsgrave may have been thinking of M.E. appallen, which was a strange hybrid word, made by prefixing the F. a. (= Lat. ad) to the word pail which we are now discussing. This confusion appears in Chaucer, C. T. 13033, where we find · for ar lingell, tenon, slice, or flat tool wherewith chirurgians lay salve on \$ palled in place of olde appalled; Six-text, B. 1292. It is clear that the sense here implies loss of energy or vita power, and involves E. pall, not F. pâlir. Gower speaks of a drink 'bitter as the galle, Which maketh a mannes herte palle,' i.e. lose energy; C. A. iii. 13. Careful consideration of the use of the word shews that it is of Caltin origin but has been confined with E. Attin and E. Attin. Celtic origin, but has been confused with F. pâlir and E. pale. - W. pallu, to fail, to cease, to neglect; cf. pall, loss of energy, miss, failure ; pallder, fallibility, palliant, failure, neglect. Allied to Corn. palch, weak, sickly, amending poorly.  $\gamma$ . As no W. word begins with sp, we may readily admit a loss of initial s, and connect pall with Irish spaillead, a check, abuse, spailleadh, a fall, Gk. opallear, to make to totter, σφάλλεσθαι, to stumble, stagger, fall, fail. The s is also lost in Lat. fallere (whence E. fail), and in E. fall. 8 In fact pall is a mere doublet of fail or fall; all being from & SPAL, to fall, totter; cf. Skt. sphal, sphul, to tremble, sphalaya, to crush (lit. to fell). The Skt. phalgu, pithless, sapless, weak, is a related word, from the same root. Der. ap-pal, q. v. See Addenda. 1. The sense of 'flat hand' is the more original, the L.; 2.L.) tree being named from its flat spreading leaves, which bear some resemblance to the hand sprend out. Yet it is remarkable that the word was first known in England in the sense of palm-tree. To take the orig. sense first, we find M. E. paume, the palm of the hand, P. Plowman, B. xvii. 141, 147, 150, 153. - F. paume, 'the palme of the hand;' Cot. - Lat. palma, the palm of the hand. + Gk. radium. A.S. folm; Grein, i. 311. Root uncertain; see Fick, i. 671. Allied to A.S. folm is E. fumble; see Fumble. 2. We find A.S. palm, a palm-tree; borrowed directly from Latin. 'Palma, palm-twig, we palm; Wight's Vocab. i. 32, col. 2. ¶ We may note that the Lat. spelling has prevailed over the French, as in psalm, &c. Der. (from the former sense) palm-ate, from Lat. palmatus; palm-ist-r-y, used by Sir T. Browne in his Vulg. Errors, b. v. c. 24. pt. 1, and coined by adding the suffixes ist- (of Gk. origin), and -r-y (= F. -er-ie, Lat. -ar-iw-); also (from the latter sense) palm-er, M. E. palmere, Chaucer, C. T. 13, King Horn, ed. Lumby, 1027, i. e. one who bears a palm-branch in token of having been to the Holy Land; palm-er-worm, Joel, i. 4, ii. 25, a caterpillar supposed to be so called from its wandering about like a pilgrim, and also simply called palmer (see Eastwood and Wright's Bible Wordbook); Palm-sunday, M. E. palme-sunday, O. Eng. Miscellany, ed. Morris, p. 39, l. 65; palmey, Hamlet, i. 1. 113. Gr The palmer or palmer-worm may be named from prov. E. palm, the catkin of a willow; but we also find palmer in the sense of wood-louse, and in Holliband's for an olde appalled wight' = except it were Dict., ed. 1593, a palmer is described as 'a worme having a great vre; where 3 MSS. have the reading olde many feete;' see Halliwell. It makes no ultimate difference.

1. 40.-F. palpable, omitted by Cotgrave, but in use in the 15th century (Littré), and given by Palsgrave, who has : 'Palpable, apte or mete to be felte, palpable;' see Halliwell. – Lat. palpablis, that can be touched. – Lat. palpare, to feel, palpari, to feel, handle.  $\beta$ . An initial s has been lost, as shewn by the related Gk.  $\psi\eta\lambda a\phi d\omega$ , I feel, from the base SPAL; see Curtius, ii. 403. Moreover, the orig. sense of palpare was 'to quiver,' as shewn by the derivatives palp-ebra, that which quivers, the eye-lid, and palpitare, to quiver often, to throb. By comparing Skt. sphal, sphar, to quiver, tremble, palpitate, we derive all from  $\checkmark$  SPAR, to quiver. Fick, i. 831. Der. palpabl.y, (Scand.?) See Macb. v. 8. 20; Jul. Cæs. ii. 1. 126. Cotgrave, s. v. Aarceler, has: 'to haggle, hucke, hedge, or paulter long in the buying of a com-moditie.' It also means 'to babble,' as in: 'One whyle his tonge it ran and paltered of a cat, Another whyle he stammered styll upon a rat.' Gammar Gunton ii. 2. If we take the sense to be 'to a rat; 'Gammer Gurton, ii. 2. If we take the sense to be 'to haggle, we may esp. refer it to the haggling over worthless trash, or paltrie, as it is called in Lowland Scotch. This seems to be the most likely solution, as most of the dictionaries connect it with paltry, which is shewn below to be due to a Scand. word palter, signifying 'rags, refuse,' &c. ; see Paltry. More literally, it meant to deal in rags.' This seems to be confirmed by comparing it with Dan. pialtebod, a rag-shop, old clothes' shop; pialtebandel, dealing B. If this in rags; pialtekræmmer, a rag-dealer, rag-man; &c. be the right solution, the verb appears to have been coined in England from the old sb. palter, rags, which must have been in use here, though only the derived adj. paltry has been recorded. In other words, though we cannot well derive the verb to palter from the adj. paltry, nor vice versa paltry from to palter, we may refer them both alike to a common source.

PALTRY, mean, vile, worthless. (Scand.) In Shak. Merry Wives, ii. 1. 164; Marlowe, Edw. II, ib, 6. 57. Jamieson gives paltrie, peltrie, vile trash; Halliwel, Iaw, Ia, In O. 57. Januers and grees paltrie, peltrie, vile trash; Halliwell has poltring, a worthless trifle; Forby explains Norfolk paltry by 'rubbish, refuse, trash;' and Brockett gives palterly as the North. Eng. form of the adj. paltry. The word, being used in the North and Norfolk, is, presumably, of Scand. origin; and such is the case. The word stands for palter-y (North. E. palter-ly), formed with the adj. suffix -y (or -ly) from an old pl. pali-er (formed like M. E. child-er = children, breth-er = brethren), which is still preserved in Swed. and Danish. This account is verified by the G. forms; see below. The sense of palter is 'rags,' and that of paltr-y is 'ragged,' hence, vile, worthless, or, as a sb., trash or refuse. - Swed. paltor, rags, pl. of palta, a rag; Ihre gives O. Swed. paltor, old rags, with a reference to Jerem. xxxviii. 11. + Dan. pialter, rags, pl. of pialt, a rag, tatter; hence the adj. pialtet, ragged, tattered. + Low G. palte, pulle, a rag, a piece of cloth torn or cut off; whence the adj. palter, putter, a rag, a piece of Bremen Wörterb, iii. 287. + Prov. G. palter (pl. paltern), a rag; whence palterig, paltry (Flügel). Cf. also O. Du. palt, a piece, fragment, as, palt brods, a piece of bread (Oudemans, Kilian); Fries. palt, a rag (Outzen). B. The origin is by no means clear; Ihre connects Swed. paltor with O. Swed. palt, a kind of garment. See Rietz, s. v. palt. [The mod. F. pamphies is borrowed from English (Littré). Of unknown origin, but presumably French, as it occurs in the Test. of Love. ¶ Three theories concerning it may be mentioned. 1. Certainly not a Teutonic word, but borrowed by the English from the Britons; cf. Irish panna, W. pan (given in Spurrell Calific word, it was rather borrowed in the Eng.-W. division). See Paten; and compare Pen.  $\gamma$ . The Low Lat. panna was similarly formed; and the Lithuan. pana, a pan, was prob. borrowed from Latin. PANG, a violent pain, a three. (C.) In the Court of Love, l. 1150, we find: 'The prange of love so straineth them to crie;' altered, in modern editions, to 'The pange of love.' In Prompt. Parv. p. 493, we find : ' Throwe, womannys pronge, sekeness, Erumpna ; i.e. a three, a woman's pang. It is clear that the word has lost an r; for the etymology, see Prong.  $\beta$ . In Skelton, Philip Sparowe, l. 44, the word occurs as a verb : "What heupness did me pange;" it is also a sb., id. l. 62. Cf. also: 'For there be in us certayne affectionate pangues of nature;' Udall, Luke, c. 4 (R.) Both sb. and vb. are common in Shakespeare. The loss of r is due, I think, to confusion with prov. F. poigne, a common term for 'a grip,' or the strength exerted by the wrist. 'La poigne de cet homme-là, c'est un étau' = that man's grip is like a vice. In the 15th century, we find : 'Car tourmenté sont de la foigne De tous les maux qu'en enfer sont' = for they are tormented with the grip of all the evils that are in hell; La Passion de Nostre Seigneur. See Littré, whence the whole of the above is cited. Cf. also O. F. empoigner, 'to seise, gripe, catch, lay hands on, lay hold of;' Cot.  $\gamma$ . The prov. F. poigne is closely related to O. F. poin, poing, mod. F. poing, the fist; from Lat. pugnum, acc. of pugnus, the fist; see Pugnacious. 8. It is extremely likely that the E. word has also been influenced by O. F. poign-, the base of several parts of F. poindre, to prick; cf. O. F. poinct, a stitch in the side (Cot.); and see Poignant. ¶ The ¶ The word cannot be derived from A.S. pyngan (Lat. pungere), to prick; nor can it have any connection whatever with Du. pijnigen, to torture; words which have been needlessly adduced, and explain nothing.

'a Greek personal name ;' this is from warra-, prefix, wholly, and léan, a lion. Y. Littré says it stands for Pantelemone, which he explains as warr-elemone = all-pitiful; unless this rests on historical proof, it is very improbable, and one wonders why he did not at once write many-exemp = all-pitying. Of uncer-tain origin; it is obviously connected with F. panteler, to pant, O. F. pantiser, 'to breath very fast, to blow thick and short;' Cot. Also with O. F. pantois, 'short-winded, oft-breathing, or a difficult fathing of usind by the shortess of breath is in hawke we call it the fetching of wind by the shortness of breath; in hawks, we call it the pantais; Cot. In Sherwood's index to Cotrave we find: 'The pantais; Cot. In Sherwood's index to Cotrave we find: 'The pantasse or pantois in hawkes, le pantais.' This use of the term in hawking appears to be the oldest.  $\beta$ . It is difficult to tell whether the F. word is from the E., or vice versa; but as the E, word occurs in the shorter form panten both in the Prompt. Parv. and, according to Stratmann, in the Towneley Mysteries (Surtees Soc.), p. 217, we may perhaps consider the word as E. It is obviously equivalent to Devonshire pank, to pant; see the Exmoor Scolding, I. 48 (E.D.S.); and cf. Low G. pinkepank, the bang-bang of hammers, pinkepanken, to hammer; Bremen Wörterbuch; words of imitative origin. And we may also note the curious Swed. dial. park, exhausted, tired out, parkna, to be exhausted (Rietz); though there is no sure connecting link with this word.  $\gamma$ . Wedgwood suggests that it may be a nasalised form of the verb to pat, and cites from Skinner the remarkable Lincolnshire expression 'my heart went pintledy-pantledy,' where able Lincolnshire expression 'my heart went pintledy-pantledy,' where we now usually say pit-a-pat. 8. Diez derives the F. word from the W. pantu, which he supposes to mean 'to press;' this does not seem right, as such is hardly the meaning; I find W. pantu, 'to sink in, to form a hollow, to indent, to dimple; pant, a depression, hollow; pantog, having a hollow or concavity;' Spurrell. E. pappe is only found in the sense of 'breast;' we have, however, 'papmete for chylder, Prompt. Parv. p. 382. To be considered as an E. word, and perhaps of great antiquity, though seldom written down.  $\beta$ . Of onomatopoetic origin, due to a repetition of the syllable pa, <sup>4</sup> Words formed of the simplest articulations, ma and pa, are used to designate the objects in which the infant takes the earliest interest, the mother and father, the mother's breast, the act of taking or sucking food; Wedgwood. + Du. pap, 'pap sod with milke or flower; 'Hexham. + G. papp, pap, paste. + Lat. papa, pappa, the word with which infants call for food. Cf. Dan. pap, Swed. papp, pasteboard; also Span. papa, Ital. pappa, pap, from Lat. pappa. This is one of those words of expressive origin which are not affected by Grimm's law. See Pap (2), Papa.

PAP (2), a teat, breast. (Scand.) M. E. pappe, Havelok, 2132; Ormulum, 6441.-O. Swed. papp, the breast; which, as Ihre notes, was afterwards changed to patt. Friesic pap, pape, papke (Outzen); Lithuan. papas, the pap.  $\beta$ . Doubless ultimately the same word as the preceding; and due to the infant's cry for food. Such words do not suffer mutation according to Grimm's law.

PAPA, a child's word for father. (F.,-L.) Seldom written down; the earliest quotation for it seems to be one from Swift, in Todd's Johnson (without a reference, but it occurs in his Directions for Servants, 1745, p. 13): 'where there are little masters and misses for Servants, 1745, p. 13): 'where there are little masters and misses in a house, bribe them, that they may not tell tales to papa and mamma.' Whilst admitting that the word might easily have been coined from the repetition of the syllable pa by infants, and probably was so in the first instance, we have no proof that the word is truly summon. - O of native origin; the native word from this source took rather the Calendar.

may rather look upon it as merely borrowed. - F. papa, papa; in Molière, Malade Imaginaire, i. 5 (Littré). - Lat. papa, found as a Roman cognomen. Cf. Lat. pappas, a tutor, borrowed from Gk. wammas, papa. Nausicaa addresses her father as wamma oile = dear papa; Homer, Od. vi. 57. ¶ It is probable that the  $\checkmark$  PA, to nourish, whence Lat. pa-ter, and E. fa-ther, owes its origin to the same infantine sound. PARAQUITO, a little parrot. (Span.) In Shak. 1 Hen. IV, ii. 3. 88; pl. paraquitoes, Ford, Sun's Darling, A. i. sc. 1. – Span. periquito, a paroquet, small parrot; dimin. of perico, a parrot.  $\beta$ . The further etymology is uncertain; Diez says that Perico may mean 'little Peter,' as a dimin. from Pedro, Peter, which may also account for O. Span. perico, parillo, a little whelp (Minshu). See Parrot. PARASITE, one who frequents another's table, a hanger-on. (F.,-L.,-Gk.) In Shak. Rich. II, ii. 2. 70. - F. parasite, 'a parasite, a trencher-friend, smell-feast;' Cot. - Lat. parasitus. - Gk. rapásiros, eating beside another at his table, a parasite, toad-eater. - Gk. mapá, beside; and oiros, wheat, corn, grain, flour, bread, food, Der. parasit-ic, from Gk. mapagirinos; a word of unknown origin.

for a site  $i \in a$ . [†] PARASOL, a small umbrella used to keep off the heat of the sun. (F., - Port. ?, - L.) 'Upon another part of the wall is the like figure of another great man, over whose head one officer holds a parasol; Sir T. Herbert, Travels, ed. 1665, p. 153. – F. parasol, 'an nmbrello;' Cot. It can hardly be an orig. F. word, but more likely borrowed from Portuguese, who would be just the people to apply it to the umbrellas of Eastern lands. - Port. parasol, an umbrella. - Port. para-, for parar, to ward off, parry; and sol, the sun. See Parry and Solar. We find also Span. parasol, Ital. parasole. ¶ Of similar formation is F. para-pluie, a guard against rain, an umbrella, from pluie, rain, Lat. pluuia.

PARBOIL, to boil thoroughly. (F., -L.) It now means 'to boil in part,' or insufficiently, from a notion that it is made up of part and boil. Formerly, it meant 'to boil thoroughly,' as in Ben Jonson, Every Man, iv. 1. 16 (ed. Wheatley); on which see Wheat-ley's note. 'To parboyle, præcoquære; 'Levins. 'My liver's par-boil'd,' i. e. burnt up; Webster, White Devil, near the end. M. E. parboilen; 'Parboylyd, parbullitus; Parboylyn mete, semibullio, par-bullio.' Here the use of semibullio shews that the word was misunderstood at an early time. - O. F. parbouillir, to cook thoroughly (Roquefort); Cotgrave has: 'pourbouillir, to both throughly' - Low Lat. parbullire (as in the Prompt. Parv.); Lat. perbullire, to boil thoroughly. See Per- and Boil. For a somewhat similar change in sense, see Purblind.

PARCEL, a small part, share, division, small package. (F., -L.) M. E. parcel, P. Plowman, B. x. 63; parcelle, Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 135, l. 14. The old sense is 'portion.' = F. parcelle, 'a parcell, particle, piece, little part; 'Cot. Cf. Port. parcela, an article of an account. Formed from Low Lat. particella*, not recorded, but still preserved in Ital. particella, a small portion, a word given also in Florio; the true Lat. form is particula; see Particle. Der. parcel, vb.

PARCH, to scorch. (F., -L.) M.E. parchen, paarchen. 'Paarche pecyn or benys [= to parch peas or beans], frigo, ustillo;' Prompt. Parv. Of doubtful origin; hardly from a Celtic source, such as rary. Or doubtul origin; narity from a Cente source, such as Irish barg, burning, red hot; O. Gael. barg, red hot. (These words seem to be related to Skt. bhrajj, to boil, fry, from  $\checkmark$  BHARG, to fry, to parch. See Fry.)  $\beta$ . Koch (Engl. Gramm. vol. iii. pt. 2. 1939 suggests that parch is M. E. perchen, to pierce, an occasional form of percen, to pierce (F. percer); see Pierce. 'A knyghte..., perchede the syde of Jesu;' Religious Pieces, ed. Perry (E. E. T. S.), p. 42; see another example in Halliwell, s. v. perche; and cf.  $\Leftrightarrow$  the sun. (L., -Gk.) Spelt parkelem and parelium in Phillips, ed.

that 'piercing' was an epithet of sun-beams. As to the correctness of this solution, see Addenda. [+] PARCHMENT, the skin of a sheep or goat prepared for writ-ing on.  $(F_{..}-L_{..}-Gk_{..})$  The t is excressent. M. E. perchemin, -Lat. pergamina, pergamena, parchment; orig: fem. of Pergamenus, adj., belonging to Pergamos. [Parchment was invented by Eumenes, of Pergamus, the founder of the celebrated library at Pergamus, about 190 B.C.; Haydn.] - Gk. περγαμηνή, parchment ; from the city of Pergamos in Asia, where it was brought into use by Crates of Mallos, when Ptolemy cut off the supply of biblus from Egypt (Liddell and Scott). Crates flourished about B. c. 160. Either way, the etymology is clear. - Gk. Πέργαμοε, more commonly Πέργαμον, Pergamus, in Mysia of Asia Minor; now called Bergamo.

PARD, a panther, leopard, spotted wild beast. (L., -Gk.) M. E. pard, Wyclif, Rev. xiii. 2. - Lat. pardus, a male panther ; Rev. xiii. para, wychi, Kev. Xili. 2. – Lat. paraus, a male panther; Kev. Xili. 2 (Vulgate). – Gk.  $\pi d\rho \delta \sigma s$ , a pard; used for a leopard, panther, or ounce. An Eastern word; cf. Pers. pars, pars, a pard; pars, a panther, Rich. Dict. pp. 316, 325. Der. leo-pard, camelo-pard. [†] PARDON, to forgive. (F., – L.) Common in Shakespeare. Rich. quotes 'nor pardoned a riche man' from the Golden Boke, But the verb hardly appears in M.E., being formed (in c. 47. English) from the M. E. sb. pardoun, pardun, pardon, a common word, occurring in Chaucer, C. T. 12860. And see Chaucer's description of the Pardonere, 1. 689. - F. pardon, sb., due to pardonner, vb., to pardon. - Low Lat. perdonare, to remit a debt (used A.D. 819), to grant, indulge, pardon. - Lat. per, thoroughly; and donare, to give, from donum, a gift. See Per- and Donation. Der. pardon, sb. (but see above); pardon-er, pardon-able, pardon-abl-y. PARE, to cut or shave off. (F, -L.) M. E. paren. 'To wey pens with a peys and pare the heuvest' - to weigh pence with a weight, and pare down the heaviest; P. Plowman, B. v. 243. – F. parer, 'to deck, trimme, ... also to pare the hoofe of a horse;' Cot. - Lat. parare, to prepare.  $\beta$ . The form of the root is PAR, but the sense is uncertain; it may be related either to PAR, to pass through (whence E. fare), or to PAR, to fill (whence E. full); see Curtius, i. 338, Fick, i. 664. Dor. par-ing. From Lat. parare we have com-pare, pre-pare, re-pair (1), se-par-ate, em-per-or, im-per-ial, ap-par-at-us, sever, &c. And see Parry, Parade.

PAREGORIC, assuaging pain; a medicine that assuages pain. (L., -Gk.) 'Paregorica, medicines that comfort, mollify, and asswage;' Phillips, ed. 1700. – Lat. paregoricus, assuaging ; whence neut. pl. paregorica. – Gk. παρηγορικόs, addressing, encouraging, soothing. – Gk. maphyopos, addressing, encouraging; cf. mapnyopeiv, to address, exhort. - Gk. mapá, beside; and dyopevew, to speak in an assembly, from dyopá, an assembly. Ci. Gk. dyeipew, to assemble; from GAR, to assemble ; Fick, i. 73.

GAR, to assemble; Fick, i. 73. PARENT, a father or mother,  $(F_1, -L_2)$  In the Geneva Bible, 1561, Ephes. vi. 1 (R.) – F. parent, 'a cousin, kinsman, allie;' Cot. - Lat. parentem, acc. of parens, a parent, lit. one who produces, formed from parene, to produce, of which the usual pres. part. is pariens.  $-\sqrt{PAR}$ , to fill; whence also Skt. pri, to fill, pri, to bring over, protect, Gk. nopew \* (aor. E-nop-ov), to give, offer, allot. See Fick, i. 664. The same root appears in the latter syllable of E. Meifer; see Heifer. Der. parent-al, from Lat. parentalis; parent-al-ly, parent-less; also parent-age, in Levins, from F. parentage, 'parentage,' Cot. PARENTHESIS, a phrase inserted in another which would appear complete without it. (Gk.) In Cotgrave, to translate O. F. parenthese. - Gk. mapéroeous, a putting in beside, insertion, parenthesis. - Gk. map', for mapá, beside ; er, in ; and bious, a placing, from ✓DHA, to place, set. See Para-, In, and Thesis. Der. parenthet-ic, extended from Gk. mapéreeros, put in beside, parenthetic; parenthet-ic-al, -ly. PARGET, to plaister a wall. (L.?) Perhaps obsolete; once rather common. In Levins, Baret, Palsgrave, &c. M. E. pargein. 'Pargetyn walles, Gipso, linio (sic); Parget, or playster for wallys, Gipsum, litura;' Prompt. Parv., and see Way's note. It is frequently spelt perget.  $\beta$ . The word has lost an initial s, as it is also found in the fuller form. 'Spargetiyn or pargetite wallys, sparchyn dr par-getyn, Gipso, limo;' Prompt. Parv. p. 467. This suggests a deriva-tion from Low Lat. spargitare, to sprinkle frequently, a frequentative form of spargere, to sprinkle ; see Sparse. See examples in Halli-well and Prompt. Parv. of M. E. sparklen, to sprinkle. Cf. Sparkling, claying between the spars to cover the thatch of cottages; Norfolk; 'Halliwell. 'Spark, to splash with dirt; North;' id. The usual derivation is from Lat. parietem, acc. of paries, a wall. This does not account for initial s, nor does it seem to me to account for the g. Cf. O. F. paroy, 'a wall;' Cot. PARHELION, a mock sun, a bright light sometimes seen near neut. of waphlios, adj., beside the sun. - Gk. wap', for wapa, beside ; and files, the sun. See Para- and Heliacal.

PARIAN, belonging to Paros. (Gk.) Paros is an island in the Ægean sea.

PARITIAL, forming the sides or walls, esp. applied to two bones in the fore part of the scull. (L.) In Phillips, ed. 1706. - Lat. parietalis, belonging to a wall. - Lat. pariet-, stem of paries, a wall. B. Paries is supposed to mean that which goes round; from par-, equivalent to Gk. mepi, Skt. pari, round about ; and -i, base of ire, to go. Cf. Skt. paryanta, a boundary, which (however) is from pari, around, and anta, a limit = E. end. Der. pellitory (1), q. v.

PARISH, a district under one pastor, an ecclesiastical district. (F., -L., -Gk.) Orig. an ecclesiastical division. M. E. parische, Chaucer, C. T. 493. - F. paroisse, a parish. - Lat. paræcia, a parish, orig. an ecclesiastical district. - Gk. rapounía, an ecclesiastical district, lit. a neighbourhood. - Gk. #ápouros, neighbouring, living near together. - Gk. παρ', for παρά, beside, near; and olsos, a house, abode, cognate with Lat. uicus. See Para- and Vicinage. Der. parish-on-er, formed by adding -er to M. E. parishen, P. Plowman, B. xi. 67; this M. E. parisshen = O. F. paroissien = Low Lat. parochianus, with the same sense as (and a mere variant of) Lat. parochialis; see Parochial. Also paroch i-al. Gr It follows that parishioner should rather have been spelt parishiner or parishener; also that the suffix -er is quite unnecessary. Indeed Paroissien survives as a proper name; I find it in the Clergy List, 1873.

PARITY, equality, resemblance, analogy. (F., - L.) In Cotgrave. -F. parité, 'parity;' Cot. - Lat. paritatem, acc. of paritas, equality. -

Lat. parte, parter, i coll - Lat. partiatem, acc. of partials, cullify, Lat. part, crude form of par, equal; with suffix -tas. See Par. PARK, an enclosed ground. (E.) In early use; in Layamon, 1. 1432 (later text). Park=O. F. parc, is a F. spelling, and is found in F. as early as in the 12th century; but the word is E., being a con-rection of M F. barrah from A S. determent and and this is traction of M. E. parrok, from A.S. pearroc, a word which is now also spelt paddock. See further under Paddock (2). We find also Irish and Gaelic paire, W. park and parwg (the latter preserving the (an enclosure, sheepfold); also F. parc, Ital. parco, Span. parque. I suppose it to be of Teutonic origin, in which case the Celtic words are borrowed ones. Der. park-ed, I Hen. VI, ii. 4. 45; park-er, i. e. park-keeper (Levins); park-keeper; im-park.

PARLEY, a conference, treating with an enemy. (F., - I., - Gk.) Shak, has parley as a sb., Mach, ii. 3. 87; also as a verb, Haml, i.
 13. 123.-F. parler, sb., 'speech, talk, language;' Cot. This is derived from F. parler, vb., to speak.
 Shak, also has the vb. parle, to speak, Lucrece, l. 100, whence the sb. parle, a parley, Haml. i. 1. 62. This is also from F. parler. - Low Lat. parabolare, to discourse, talk. - Low Lat. parabola, a talk; Lat. parabola, a parable. -Gk. παραβολή, a parable; see Parable. Der. parl-ance. borrowed from F. parlance, formed from F. parlant, pres. part. of parler; parl-ia-ment, g. v., parl-our, g. v. And see parole, palaver.

PARLIAMENT, a meeting for consultation, deliberative assembly, (F., -L., -Gk.; with L. suffix.) M. E. parlement, Havelok, 1006; Rob. of Glouc., p. 169, l. 7; Chaucer, C. T. 2972. [The spelling parliament is due to Low Lat. parliamentum, frequently used in place of parlamentum, the better form.] - F. parlement, 'a speaking, parleying, also, a supreme court;' Cot. Formed with suffix -ment (= Lat. -mentum) from F. parler, to speak. See Parley. Der. parliament-ar-y, parliament-ar-i-an. [+] PARLOUR, a room for conversation, a sitting-room. (F.,-L., -Gk.) M. E. parlow, Chaucer, Troil. ii. 83; parlow, Ancren Riwle, p. 50, 1. 17. - O. F. parleor (Littré), later parloir, 'a parlour;' Cot. - F. parl-er, to speak, with suffix -oir (-eor) = Lat. -atorium, -itorium; so that parloir answers to a Low Lat. parabolatorium*, a place to talk in; cf. M.E. dor:our, F. dortoir = dormitorium, a place to sleep in. See further under Parley.

PARLOUS, old pronunciation of Perilous. (F., -L.) parlous fear,' Mids. Nt. Dr. iii. 1. 14. See Peril. ٢A

PAROCHIAL, belonging to a parish. (L.,-Gk.) In the Rom. of the Rose, 7689. - Lat. parochialis (White). - Lat. parochia, another form of paræcia, a parish. - Gk. mapounia; see Parish.

PARODY, the alteration of a poem to another subject, a burlesque imitation. (L.,-Gk.) 'Satiric poems, full of parodies, that is, of verses patched up from great poets, and turned into another sense than their author intended them;' Dryden, Discourse on Satire [on the Grecian Silli]; in Dryden's Poems, ed. 1851, p. 365.-Lat. parodia. - Gk. παρφόία, the same as παρφόή, a song sung beside, a parody. - Gk. παρ', for παρά, beside ; and φόή, an ode. See Paraand Ode. De-· parod-ist.

vord of honour, solemn promise; a parable. Doublets, parable, parle (old form of parley), palaver. PARONYMOUS, allied in origin; also, having a like sound, but a different origin. (Gk.) Rather a useless word, as it is used in two senses, (I) allied in origin, as in the case of man, manhood; and (2) unallied in origin, but like-sounding, as in the case of hair, hare. -Gk. mapinvupos, formed from a word by a slight change; i. e. in the former sense. - Gk. mapá, beside; and oropa, a name, cognate with E. name; the  $\omega$  resulting from a and  $\sigma$ . See Para- and Name. Der. paronom-as-ia, a slight change in the meaning of a word, from Gk.  $\pi$ aparoµagia, better  $\pi$ aporoµagia. Also paronyme, i.e. a paronymous word, esp. in the second sense.

PAROXYSM, a fit of acute pain, a violent action. (F., -L., -Gk.) 'Paroxisme, the accesse or fit of an ague;' Minsheu.-F. paroxisme, the return, or fit, of an ague; Cot. = Lat. paroxysmus. = Gk. rapofu $\sigma\mu\delta$ , irritation, the fit of a disease. = Gk. rapofurer. to urge on, provoke, irritate. - Gk. map', for maps, beside; and defineer, to sharpen, provoke, from defin, sharp. See Para- and Oxalic. Der. paroxysm-al.

PARRICIDE, (1) the murderer of a father; (2) the murder of a father. (F., -L.) 1. The former is the orig. sense. Both senses occur in Shakespeare, (1) K. Lear, ii. 1, 48; (2) Macb. iii. 1. 32. - F. parricide, 'a parricide, a murtherer of his own father; 'Cot. -Lat. parricida, a murderer of his father. -Lat. parri-, put for patri-, crude form of pater, a father, cognate with E. father; and -cida = cæda, a slayer, from cædere, to slay, fell, causal verb from cadere, to fall. See Father and Cadence. 2. In the latter sense, it answers to Lat. parricidium, the murder of a father; formed from the same sb. and vb. ¶ There is the same ambiguity about fratricide and matricide. Der. parricid-al.

PARROT, a well-known tropical bird, capable of imitating the human voice. (F., -L., -Gk.) In Shak. Merch. Ven. i. 1, 53. Spelt parat in Levins, ed. 1570; but parrot in Skelton; see his poem called Speke, Partot.' = F. perrot, 'a man's proper name, being a diminu-tive or derivative of Peter;' Cot. Cf. F. perroguet, 'a partat,' Cot. : also spelt parroquet.  $\beta$ . The F. Perrot or Pierrot is still a name for a sparrow; much as Philip was the M. E. name for the same bird. The F. perroquet was probably an imitation of, rather than directly borrowed from, the Span. perichito, which may likewise be explained as a derivative of Span. perico, meaning both a parrot. and 'little Peter,' dimin. of Pedro, Peter. y. The mod. Ital. parrocchetto is also spelt perucchetto, as if it were a dimin. of parruca, a wig (!); but we find in Florio the O. Ital. forms parochetto, parochito. 'a kind of parrats, called a parakito;' which seems to be nothing but the Span. word adapted to Italian. 8. The Port. form is also periquito, and we should expect the names to be borrowed from Spanish and Portuguese in particular, on account of their sea-voyages. The Ital. word would be borrowed from the Spanish name, and the F. perrot is a sort of translation of the same. If this be right, we may refer all the names to Lat. Petrus, Peter. - Gk. \*\*\*700, a stone, rock; as a proper name, Peter; a word of uncertain origin.

PARRY, to turn aside, ward off. (F.,-L.) A late word. Parrying, in fencing, the action of saving a man's self, or staving off the strokes offered by another; Bailey's Dict., vol ii. ed. 1731.— F. paré, used as equivalent to Ital. parata, a defence, guard; properly pp. of parer, 'to deck, trick, trimme, . . also to ward or defend a blow;' Cot.-Lat. parare, to prepare, deck. See Pare. Der.

par-a-chute, q. v., para-pet, q. v., para-sol, q. v., ram-part, q. v. PARSE, to tell the parts of speech. (L.) 'Let the childe, by and by, both construe and parse it ouer againe;' Ascham, Schoolmaster, b. i. ed. Arber, p. 26. An old school term; to parse is to declare 'que pars orationis'=what part of speech, a word is. It is merely the Lat. pars used familiarly. See Part. Der.

PARSEE, an adherent of the old Persian religion, in India. (Pers.) Spelt Persee, Sir T. Herbert's Travels, ed. 1665, p. 55. – Pers. pérsé, a Persian; from Párs, Persia; Palmer's Pers. Dict. col. 106.

PARSIMONY, frugality. (F.,-L.) Spelt parsimonie in Minsheu, ed. 1627. - F. parsimonie, not in Cotgrave, but cited by Minshen. - Lat. parsimonia, better parcimonia, parsimony. - Lat. parci = parco-. crude form of parcus, sparing; with suffix -monia, formed by joining the Aryan suffixes -max and -ya (Schleicher, Compend. § 219). Cf. Lat. parcere, to spare.  $\beta$ . An initial s has been lost; the word parcus is allied to Gk. omapros, scarce, rare, and to E. spare; see Spare. Der. parsimoni-ous, -ly, -ness. PARSLEY, a well-known pot-herb. (F., -L., -Gk.) Formerly persely, Sir T. Elyot, Castel of Helth, b. iii. c. 5. M. E. persil, P. Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674.-F. persely, Sir T. Elyot, Castel of Helth, b. iii. c. 5. M. E. persil, P. 'Cot. The same word as Prov. Plowman, B. vi. 288; spelt persely in one of the MSS., id. A. vi. 2730 footnote. - F. persil, 'parseley;' Cot. Spelt persil in the 13th cent.; PARTICIPATE, to partake, have a share. (L.) In Shak. Tw. Wright's Vocab. i, 139, col. 2. - Low Lat. petrosillum, at the same Nt. v. 245; properly a pp. or adj., as in Cor. i. 1. 106. - Lat. participreference; contr. from Lat. petroselinum, rock-parsley. - Gk. πετρο-σέλινον, rock-parsley. - Gk. πέτρο-, crude form of πέτροs, a rock; and siluror, a kind of parsley, whence E. Colory. The roots of these words are unknown

PARSNEP, PARSNIP, an edible plant with a carrot-like root. (F., -L.) Formerly parsnep; the pl. parsneppes occurs in Sir T. Elyot, Castel of Helth, b. ii. c. 9. (Palsgrave rightly drops the r, and spells it passeppe). Corrupted from O. F. pastenoque, 'a parse-nip;' Cot. [For the change from qu to p, compare Lat. quinque with Gk. noune (five). The r is due to the sound of the F. a; the te was dropped, and the latter a was weakened, first to e, and then to i.] Cotgrave also gives pastenade and pastenaille with the same sense.—Lat. pastinace, a parsnip.  $\beta$ . Pastinace prob. means that which is dug up,' hence a parsnip, also a carrot; the root being the edible part.—Lat. pastinare, to dig up.—Lat. pastinum, a kind of two-pronged dibble for breaking the ground. Prob. from a base PAS, weakened to PIS in pinsere, to beat, crush, bruise; cf. Skt. pish, pinash, piñish, to grind, pound, bruise. ¶ The corruption of the final syllable may have been influenced by the word turnep or turnip, in which the latter syllable is correct.

PARSON, the incumbent of a parish. (F., -L.) M. E. persone, Chaucer, C. T. 480. In the Ancren Riwle, p. 216, persone means person. It is certain that parson and person are the same word; for the Low Lat. persona is constantly used in the sense of 'parson.' See the Low Lat. persona in Ducange; it means dignity, rank, a choir-master, curate, parson, body, man, person. The sense of parson may easily have been due to the mere use of the word as a title of dignity; cf. Laicus quidam magnæ personæ '= a certain lay-man of great dignity; Ducange.  $\beta$ . The quotation from Blackstone is better known than his authority for the statement. He says: 'A parson, persona ecclesia, is one that hath full possession of all the rights of a parochial church. He is called parson, persona, because by his petson the church, which is an invisible body, is represented; 'Comment. b. i. c. 11. This reason may well be doubted, but without affecting the etymology. See Person. Der. parson-age, a coined word with F. suffix. Bp. Taylor, vol. iii. ser. 7 (R.) 657 The proposed derivation from Lat. parochianus is impossible; this word is preserved in parishen, the old form of parishioner; see Parishioner. And a parishioner is precisely what a parson is not. [†] PART, a portion, piece. (F., -L.) M. E. part, sb., Floris and Plancheding of Lumber Letter barre to the set of the set.

Blancheflur, ed. Lumby, l. 522; hence parten, vb., id. 387. - F. part, 'a part;' Cot. - Lat. partem, acc. of pars, a part. B. The crude 'a part ;' Cot. - Lat. partem, acc. of pars, a part. form is par-ti-, formed with a suffix (Aryan ta) from the base par-, occuring in Lat. parëre *, only found in a-per-ire, o-per-ire, re-per-ire, all nearly related to par-are, to get ready, furnish, provide ; so that the orig. sense of part would be 'that which is provided,' a share. See Pare. Der. part, vb., M. E. parten, as above; part-ible, from Lat. partibilis; part-ly, Cor. i. 1. 40; part-ing; and see part-i-al, partake, parti-cip-ate, parti-cip-le, parti-cle, part-isan, part-it-ion, part-ner, part-y; also a-part, com-part-ment, de-part, im-part, re-part-ee, par-c-el, port-ion. PARTAKE, to take part in or of, share. (Hybrid; F., -L., and Scand.) For part-take, and orig. used as part take, two separate words; indeed, we still use take part in much the same sense. 'The Scand.) breed which we breken, when it is not [is it not] the delynge, or part takynge, of the body of the lord?' Wyclif, 1 Cor. x. 16 (earlier ver-sion; later version omits part). In the Bible of 1551, we find: 'is not the breade which we breake, partakynge of the body of Christ?' in the same passage. See further in a note by Dr. Chance in N. and Q. 4th Series, viii. 481. Similarly, we find G. theilnehmen = theil nehmen, to take a part. Indeed, E. partake may have been suggested by the corresponding Scandinavian word (viz. Dan. deeltage, Swed. deltage, to partake, participate) since take is a Scand. word. See Part and Take. Der. partak-er, spelt partetaker in Coverdale's Bible

PARTIAL, relating to a part only. (F., -L.) Frequently in the sense of taking one part in preference to others, hence, inclined in behalf of. 'That in thine own behalf maist partiall seeme ;' Spenser, F. Q. vii. 6. 35. - F. partial, 'solitary, . . . also partiall, unequall, factious;' Cot. - Low Lat. partialis; formed with suffix -alis from Lat. parti-, crude form of pars, a part. See Part. Der. partial-iy; partial-i-y, spelt parcyalyte, Skelton, Colin Clout, 1. 1195, from F. partialité, ' partiality,' Cot.

Nt. v. 245; properly a pp. or adj., as in Cor. i. 1. 106. - Lat. particip-atus, pp. of participare, to have a share, give a share. - Lat. participstem of particeps, sharing in. - Lat. parti-, crude form of pars, a part; and capere, to take. See Part and Capacious. Der. participat-ion, M. E. participacioun, Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. iii. pr. 10, l. 2564, from F. participation, which from Lat. acc. participationem; also particip-ant, from the stem of the pres. part.; also particip-le, q. v. PARTICIPLE, a part of speech. (F., -L.) So called because partaking of the nature both of an adjectival substantive and a verb. In Ben Jonson, Eng. Grammar, c. 9. The insertion of the 1 is curious, and due to a misapprehension of the sound of the F. word, the difference in F. between participe and participle being slight - F. participe, 'a participle, in grammer ;' Cot. - Lat. participium, a participle. Lat. participi-, crude form of particips, partaking; see Participate. PARTICLE, a very small portion, atom. (F.,-L.) In Shak. Jul. Czes. ii. I. 130. An abbreviation for particule, due to loss of all stress in the last syllable. - F. particule, not in Cot., but in use in the 16th cent. (Littre). - Lat. particula, a small part; double dimin. (with suffixes -cu- and -la) from parti-, crude form of pars, a part. Der. particul-ar, M. E. particuler, Chancer, C. Doublet. parcel.

PARTISAN (1), an adherent of a party. (F., -Ital., -L.) TABUTISAN (1), an addrerent of a party. (F., -11a1., -L.) 'These partizans of faction often try'd;' Daniel, Civil Wars, pt. ii. -F. partisan, 'a partner, partaker;' Cot. - Ital. partigiano, formerly also partegiano, 'a partner;' Florio. Cf. Ital. parteggiane, 'to share, take part with,' Florio; answering to F. partager, to take part in. The forms partigiano, parteggiare, answer to Low Lat. forms parti-tianus \*, partaticare \*, not found; the former being due to Lat. partitus, pp. of partiri, to part, divide, from parti-, crude form of pars, a part. See Part, Partition. Der. parisons inf. PARTISAN (2), PARTIZAN, a kind of halberd. (F., – O. H. G.?) In Hamlet, i. 1. 140. – F. pertusone, 'a partisan, or leading-staffe; Cot.  $\beta$ . But the spelling pertuisane is an accommodated form, to make it appear as if derived from F. pertuiser, to pierce (from pertwis, a hole, which from Lat. pertusus, pp. of per-tundere, to strike through). Cf. O. F. pourtisaine (15th cent.); Ital. partegiana, 'a partesan, a iauelin,' Florio; Swed. bardisan, a partisan; Low Lat. partesana (occurring A.D. 1488). Y. Etymology doubtful; but the word must almost certainly be extended from O. H. G. parta, M. H. G. barte, a battle-axe, which occurs in E. hal-berd. See further under Halberd. ¶ This etymology would be quite satisfactory if we could account for the suffix -sean or -isan; but this remains, at present, unexplained. Can we suppose that the weapon was jocosely termed 'a divider,' by intentional confusion with Low Lat. partizare, to divide, occurring as early as A.D. 1253? Sce Partisan (1).

PARTITION, a separate part, something that separates. (F.,-L.) In Shak. meaning (1) division, Mid. Nt. Dr. iii. 2. 210; (2) a party-wall, id. v. 168. - F. partition, omitted by Cot., but occurring in the 14th cent. (Littré). - Lat. partitionem, acc. of partitio, a sharing, partition. - Lat. partiti- partito-, crude form of pp. of partiri, to divide. - Lat. parti-, crude form of pars, a part. See Part. Der. partition, vb. So also partit-ive, from F. partitif (Littre), as if from Lat. partitious *, not used ; hence partit-ive ly.

PARTNER, a sharer, associate, (F., -L.) A curious corruption, due to the eye, i. e. to the misreading of MSS. and books. In many MSS. c and t are just alike, and the M. E. word which appears as partener or parcener is really to be read as parcener, with c, not t. For a similar instance of misreading, see Citison. The spelling parcener occurs as late as in Cotgrave, as will appear; and even in Blackstone's Commentaries, b. ii. c. 12 (R., s. v. parcel). For the spelling partener, see Wyclif, 1 Cor. ix. 12; for the spelling parcener, id. Rev. xviii. 4.-O.F. parsonnier, 'a partener, or co-parcener; Cot. - Low Lat. partitionarius *, not found ; though we find partionarius sometimes used in the sense of 'common' or 'mutual,' which seems to be a contracted form of it. - Lat. partition-, stem of partitio; see Partition. Thus partner = partitioner. Der. partner-skip. [+] PARTRIDGE, a well-known bird preserved for game. (F... L., -Gk.) M. E. partriche, pertriche, Richard the Redeles ed. Skeat, iii. 38. - F. perdrix, 'a partridge;' in which the second r is intrusive. - Lat. perdicem, acc. of perdix. - Gk. πέρδιξ, a partridge; perhaps named from its cry, as some connect it with Gk. #6p80µas, Skt. pard. PARTURIENT, about to produce young. (L.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. - Lat. parturient stem of pres. part. of parturier, to be ready to bring forth young. - Lat. partur-us, fut. part. of parera, to produce; see Parent. Der. partur-it-ion = F. parturition (Littre), from Lat. acc. parturitionem, which from parturitus, pp. of parturire. PARTY, a company, faction, assembly. (F., -L.) M. E. partie, Der. party-coloured, Merch. Ven. i. 3. 89; party-verdiet, Rich. II, i. 3. 234. PARVENU, an upstart. (F. - L.) Modern. - F. parvenu, lit.

one who has arrived at a place, hence, one who has thriven; pp. of parvenir, 'to atchieve, arrive, thrive;' Cot.-Lat. pervenire, to arrive.-Lat. per-, through; and wenire, cognate with E. come. See Per- and Come.

PARVIS, a porch; also, a room over a church-porch for a school. (F.-L., -Gk., -Pers.) See Halliwell, and Prompt. Parv. p. 385. M. E. paruis (-paruis), Chaucer, C. T. 312; see note in Tyrwhitt's Glossary. = O. F. parvis, 'the porch of a church; also (or more pro-perly), the utter court of a palace or great house;' Cot. = Low Lat. paravisus, a corruption of Low Lat. paradisus, used in the same sense, viz. a court or space before a church, a church-porch; also, paradise. It is thus the same word as Paradise, q. v. Diez cites Neapolitan paraviso as a variant of Ital. paradiso. According to Littre, when the old mystery-plays were exhibited in the church-yard, the porch represented paradise. The word had numerous meanings; it also meant an altar, or a berth in a ship; see Ducange.

PASCH, the Jewish passover; Easter. (L.,-Gk.,-Heb.) M.E. PASCH, the Jewish passover; Easter. (L., -Gk., -Heb.) M.E., paske, P. Plowman, B. xvi. 130; Ormulum, 15850. - A. S. pascha; the gen. pasckes is in the A. S. Chron an. 1123. - Lat. pascha. -Gk. wáσχa, the passover, John, vi. 4. - Heb. pesakk, a passing over, the passover; from Heb. root pdsakh, he passed over. See Exod. xii. 11, 27. Der. pasch-al, from F. paschal, 'paschall,' Cot., from Lat. paschalis; pasck-flower or pasque-flower. (The Heb. is samech.) PASH, to dash, strike hard. (Scand.) 'As he was pasking it against a tree;' Ford, Lover's Melancholy, i. I. And in Shak. Troil.

ii. 3. 213, v. 5. 10. M. E. paschen, P. Plowman, B. xx. 99.-Swed. dial. paska, to dabble in water (Rietz); cf. Norweg. baska, to dabble in water, tumble, work hard, fight one's way on, baksa, to box (Aasen); Dan. basks, to slap, thwack, drub; baxes, to box, baxer, a boxer, pugilist.  $\beta$ . Thus past is really one word with box, to fight; the former = paska, and the latter = baska = baska = paska; see Box (3). And see Plash. PASHA, PACHA, PASHAW, BASHAW, a prince, lord.

(Pers.) Spelt baskaw in Evelyn's Diary, Dec. 17, 1684; baska in Sir T. Herbert, Travels, ed. 1665, p. 139. – Pers. báská, bádshák, 'a governor of a province, counsellor of state, great lord, sometimes the grand vazir; ' corruption of pidskák, 'an emperor, sovereign, mon-arch, prince, great lord; ' Rich. Dict. pp. 234, 228, 315. – Pers. pid, protecting, guarding; and skák, a king; id. pp. 315, 873. Of these, the former occurs in E. bezoar, the latter in E. skak and chess. Pid

The former occurs in E, because, the latter in E, snow and these is prob. from  $\checkmark$  PA, to cherish, guard, protect; see Paternal. PASQUIN, PASQUINADE, a lampoon, satire. (F..-Ital.) Formerly also pasquil, from F. pasquille, 'a pasquill;' Cot.-F. pasquin, 'the name of an image or post in Rome, whereon libels and defamatory rimes are fastened, and fathered; also, a pasquill;' Cot. [Hence pasquinade, which see in Littré.] – Ital. Pasquino, 'a statue in Rome on whom all libels are fathered;' Florio; whence pasquinata, a libel, the original of F. pasquinade. 'In the 16th century, at the stall of a cobbler named Pasquin [Pasquino], at Rome, a number of idle persons used to assemble to listen to his pleasant sallies, and to relate little anecdotes in their turn, and indulge themselves in raillery at the expense of the passers-by. After the cobbler's death the statue of a gladiator was found near his stall, to which the people gave his name, and on which the wits of the time, secretly at night, affixed their lampoons;' Haydn, Dict. of Dates. 'The statue still stands at the corner of the Palazzo Braschi, near the Piazza Navona;' note in Gloss. to Bacon, Adv. of Learning, ed. Wright.

PASS, to walk onward, pace, move on. (F., -L.) In early use; Ancren Riwle, p. 330, l. 20; Layamon, 1341 (later text). - F. passer, to pass. - Low Lat. passare, to pass. β. Diez derives this verb from Lat. passare *, a frequentative form of pandere, to stretch; Littre shews that it may rather have been taken from passws, a step, a pace; and certainly the common use of the E. verb accords better with this view. Happily, it makes little ultimate difference, since passus is itself derived from the same verb, and meant, originally, 'a stretch,' hence the difference of space between the feet in walking. Either way, we are led to Lat. passus, pp. of pandere, to stretch. See Pace. Der. pass, sb., Hamlet, ii. 2. 77; pass-book, pass-key, pass-soord; pass-able, Cor. v. 2. 13; pass-abl-y, pass-able-ness; pass-age, q.v.; pass-er, passer-by; pass-ing, Two Gent. i. 2. 17; pass-ing, adv., L. We also find F. parii, 'a match, passaticum, a right of passage, occurring A.D. 1095; Ducange. [Cf. bargain, party, side;' Cot. The former is the fem. of the latter. – | Ital. passaggio, Span. pasage.] – Low Lat. passare, to pass; see Page. passaticum, a right of passage, occurring A.D. 1095; Ducange. [Cf. Der. passeng-er, in which the n is merely excrescent before the following g, the old spelling being passager, as in North's Plutarch. ed. 1631, p. 24 (life of Romulus), where we read that some 'hold a false opinion, that the vulturs are passagers, and come into these parts out of strange countries.' See F. passager in Cotgrave.

PASSION, suffering, strong agitation of mind, rage. (F., -L.) In early use. M.F. passion; spelt passiun, O. Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, i. 119, l. 6 from bottom. - F. passion, passion, perturbation; Cot. - Lat. passionem, acc. of passio, suffering, &c. - Lat. passus, pp. of pati, to suffer. Root uncertain; but clearly related to Gk. walkin, to suffer; see Patient, Pathos. Der. passion-flower, passion-less, passion-week; passion-ate, Mids. Nt. Dr. iii. 2, 220, from Low Lat. passionatus, occurring A.D. 1409 (Ducange), with which cf. F. passioné (Cot.); passion-ate-ly, passion-ate-ness; com-passion. And see PARATVA

PASSIVE, enduring, unresisting. (F., -L.) In Shak. Timon, iv. 3. 254 - F. passif, 'passive, suffering;' Cot. - Lat. passives, suffering .- Lat. passus, pp. of pati, to suffer. See Passion. Der. passive-ly, -ness; passiv-i-ty, a coined word, in Bp. Taylor, vol. iii. ser. 10 (R.)

ser. 10 (K.) PASSPORT, a permission to travel. (F.,-L.) 'A travelling warrant is call'd Passeport, whereas the original is passe par towi;' Howell, Familiar Letters, b. iv. let, 19. 'They gave us our passe-port;' Hakluyt's Voyages, ed. 1598, vol. i. p. 71. Spelt passeporte, Gascoigne, Fruites of War, st. 116. [Howell's remark is wrong; a passport and a passe-pariout are different things; one is 'leave to quit a town,' the other is 'permission to travel everywhere;' he probably means the the former word came to signify much the same as the latter. means that the former word came to signify much the same as the latter. Dryden has : ' with this passe par tout I will instantly conduct her to Dryden nas: with this passe par tout I will instantly conduct her to my own chamber;' Kind Keeper, Act v. sc. I.] = F. passe-port, 'a passe, or passe-port, or safe conduct;' Cot. = F. passer, to pass; and porte, a gate, from Lat. porta, a gate. See Pass and Port (3). PASTE, dough prepared for pies, flour and water, &c. (F., = L., -Gk.) 'Paste for to make;' P. Plowman, B. xiii. 250. = O.F. paste, 'paste, or dough.' Cot. Mod. F. paire; Span. and Ital. paste. Lette protect protection of the protection of the part of the part of the paste.

passe, 'paste, or dougn', Cot. Mod. F. passe, Span. and Ital. passe. -Late Lat. paste, paste, used by Marcus Empiricus, about A.D. 400 (White). - Gk. raorth, a mess of food; strictly a fem. form from raoros, besprinkled, salted, adj., formed from rdoorse, to strew, sprinkle, esp. to sprinkle salt. Thus the orig. sense was 'a salted mess of food.' Der. paste-board; past-y, M. E. pastee, Chaucer, C. T. 4344, from O. F. paste (mod. F. pate), 'a pie, or pastie,' Cot.; past-y, wide in Coth is the paste of pate), 'a pie, or pastie,' Cot.; past-y, used in Shak. in the sense of a room in which pasties were made, Romeo, iv. 4. 2 (cf. 'Pastrye, pistorium,' Levins), and formed accord-Komeo, iv. 4. 2 (c). Tastrye, pshorum, Levins), and formed accordingly on the model of pant-r-y and butt-er-y (i. e. bottl-er-y), but now applied to articles made of paste; pastry-cook; patt-y (as applied to oyster-patties), from mod. F. pâté. PASTEL, a roll of coloured paste used like a crayon, a coloured part of the part o crayon. (F., -Ital., -L.) An artist's term. -F. pastel, 'a pastel, crayon, 'Hamilton. -Ital. pastello, 'a bit of pie, small cake, pastil' (i.e. pastel); Meadows. - Lat. pastillum, acc. of pastillus, a little loaf or roll. Dimin. of pastus, food. - Lat. pastus, pp. of pascere, to feed. See Pastor. Ger Sometimes written pastil, but this makes it too like pastille. However, pastel and pastille are doublets: and neither are at all related to paste or tarks. are at all related to pasty or paste. Doublet, pastille.

PASTERN, the part of a horse's foot from the fetlock to the hoof, (F, -L). Spelt pasterne in Levins, ed. 1570. Palsgrave has: 'Pastron of an horse, pasturon.' = 0. F. pasturon, 'the pastern of a horse; 'Cot. Mod. F. paturon. So called because when a horse was turned out to pasture, he was tethered to a peg by a cord passing round the pasture. It is, in short, the 'pasturing-joint.' The cord by which the horse was tied was called pasture in Old French. 'Le suppliant frappa icellui Godart deux ou trois coups par le costé d'unes cordes appelées pastures' = the petitioner beat this Godart twice or thrice on the side with cords called pastures; in a passage dated A.D. 1460, in Ducange, s. v. pasturale, and cited by Littré. = O.F. pasture, 'pasture, grasse, fodder;' Cot. See further under Pasture. Thus O.F. pasturon was formed from pasture, a tether, by adding the suffix -on, which gave various meanings to the sb.; see Brachet, Introd. § 231. So also Ital. pasturale, the pastern, from pasture, a pasture. Beaum. and Fletcher, The Chances. i 8. 16, which Rich. notices, but could not understand, viz. 'She had better have worn pasterns.' It means tethers, or clogs tied to her foot; i.e. she had better have been tethered up. Indeed Kersey, ed. 1715, gives : 'Pastern, the a journey, course. (F.,-L.) M. E. passage, King hollow of a beast's heel, the foot of a horse, that part under the fetlock to the hoof; also, a shackle for a horse." It is remarkable the same as prov. E. plek, a patch of ground, which is related to that this sense should have been retained in English, though unnoticed in Cotgrave's F. Dict.

PASTILLE, a small cone made of aromatic substances, to be burnt to purify the air of a room. (F.,-L.) Modern. Borrowed wood, &c.'-Lat. pastillum, acc. of pastillus, a little loaf or roll. Dimin. from pastus, food. See Pastel, which is a doublet. And see Pastor.

PASTIME, amusement. (Hybrid: F., -L.; and E.) In Shak. Temp. v. 38. Put for pass-time. Spelt both passe-tyme and pastyme in Sir T. Elyot, The Governor, b. i. c. 22. It is a sort of half translation of F. passe-temps, 'pastime;' Cot. We also find, in old Authors, the form pastamere or pastans, which is the F. passe-temps Anglicised. Gawain Douglas has pastans, Prol. to Æneid, bk. xii. 1. 212.

PASTOR, a shepherd. (L.) In Hamlet, i. 3. 47; spelt passour in Skelton, ed. Dyce, i. 203, l. 23. - Lat. pastor, a shepherd, lit. feeder. - Lat. past-us, pp. of pascere, to feed, an inceptive verb, pt. t. partic-a/ PA, to feed; whence also E. food; see Food. Der. pastor-al, in Sir P. Sidney, Apology for Poetrie, ed. Arber, p. 43, 1. 16, from F. pastoral, 'pastorall, shepherdly,' Cot., from Lat. pastoralis; pastor-ship; pasture, Cursor Mundi, 18445, from O. F. pasture (mod. F. pâture), 'pasture' (Cot.), which from Lat. pastura, a feeding, formed like fem. fut. part. of passi, to browze, from passere, to feed; pastur-able, from O. F. pasturable, 'pasturable,' Cot.; pastur-age, from O. F. pasturage (mod. F. påturage), 'pasturage,' Cot. And see pastern, pabulum.

PAT(1), to strike lightly, tap. (E.) 'It is childrens sport, to prove whether they can rubbe upon their brest with one hand, and pat upon their fore-head with another; ' Lord Bacon, Nat. Hist. § 62. Not in M. E. or A.S.; but closely allied to (perhaps a weakened form of) A.S. plastan, to strike. 'Hi plaston hyne' - they smote him with their hands, John, xix. 3. So also Swed. dial. pjätta, to pat, to strike lightly and often (Rietz), allied to Swed. plätta, to tap, plätt, a tap, pat. Cf. O. F. (Gascon) fataet, 'a tack, clack, knock, flap;' Cot. Also Bavarian patton, to pat, patton, a pat on the hand; Schmeller. And see Patch (1). Der. pat, sb.; patter.
 PAT (2), a small lump of butter. (C.) Of Celtic origin; cf. Irish pair, a hump, paireog, a small lump of butter; Gael. pair, a hump, paiteach, humpy, paiteag, a small lump of butter. Thus the orig. sense is 'lump.'

PAT (3), quite to the purpose. (E.) Orig. an adv., as in 'Pat he comes,' K. Lear, i. 2. 146; 'it will fall [happen] pat,' Mids. Nt. Dr. v. 188; 'now might I do it pat,' Haml. iii. 3. 73. This can hardly be other than the same word as pat, a tap; see Pat (1). But the sense is clearly due to an extraordinary confusion with Du. pas, pat, fit, convenient, in time, which is used in exactly the same way as E. pat; cf. komt het te fas, 'if it comes convenient,' i. e. pat, te pas dienen, 'to serve just at the time;' Hexham. So also G. pass, pat, fit, suitable; zw passe, apropos; passen, to fit, suit, to be just right. These do not appear to be true Teutonic words, but borrowed from F.; cf. "se passer, whence il se passe à peu de chose, he is contented, he maketh shift, he doth well enough; 'Cot. The E. word seems to have been pitched upon to translate the Du. word, though it must be really of a different origin.

PATCH (1), a piece sewn on a garment, a plot of ground. (O. Low G.) M. E. pacche, patche, Wyclif, Mark, ii. 21; Prompt. Parv. p. M. E. pacche, patche, Wycill, Mark, H. 41, and MSS.; the a. The letters tch really appear as eck in old MSS.; the spelling tek is of later date, and sometimes due to the editors. letters cch answer to an older kk (or A. S. cc), as in M. E. strecchen, to stretch, from A. S. streccan. Hence packe presupposes an older form pakke.  $\beta$ . The etymology is obscured by the loss of l; patch stands for platch, and pakke for plakke. We find: 'Platch, a large spot, a patch, or piece of cloth sewed on to a garment to repair it; Dialect of Banfishire, by W. Gregor. The loss of I was due to the difficulty of sounding it; for other instances, cf. E. pat with A. S. plattan, to pat, strike with the hands, and pate; see Pat (1), Pate. Y. The word plakke is O. Low German. - Low G. plakke, plakk (1), a spot; (2) a piece, both a piece torn away, and a patch put on; (3) a piece of land (cf. E. patch of ground). Hence the verb plakken, to patch, fasten. 'Frisch, from Alberi Lexicon, cites : ick plack, reconcinno, resarcino; ick setze einen placken an, assuo;' Bremen Wörterbuch. The orig. sense of plakken was 'to strike;' cf. O. Du. placken, (I) to strike, (2) to plaster, besmear with lime or chalk, (3) to spot, to stain; placke, mod. Du. plek, a spot (sen mooi plek grondes, a fine spot [patch] of ground, Sewel); see Oudemans. So also Swed. dial. plagga, to strike, smite; plagg, an article of clothing. 8. With a change of ht to tt, we have Dan. plette, to strike, A.S. plattan, to a change of ht to tt, we have Dan. plette, to strike, A.S. plattan, to strike with the hands; and (most curious of all) Goth. plats, a patch, Mark, ii. 21, just where Wyclif has pacede. The A.S. platea is really B. xiv. 300; pl. papes, Havelok, 268. - A.S. pato, pato, a path, plot. The phrase 'in the corners of the streets' (Lat. in angulis platearum) is glossed by 'huommum öæra plæcena vel wordum' in the Northumb. version of Matt. vi. 5. See Plot. e. The root is PLAG, to strike, whence Gk. arryh, Lat. plaga, a stroke, and E. plague, also Lithuanian plak-ti, to strike, pleka, a stroke. By Grimm's law, p is G. f; and we also find a collateral form to Low G. plakke in G. fleek, a spot place, piece, botch, patch some to Low C. plack is just the cognate High German word. Cf. also M. E. flakken, to palpitate (orig. to beat), and E. flap; see Flag (1) and Flap. The other illustrations might be added; thus O. Du. plack means 'a ferule, or small batle-dore, wherewith school-boys are strooke in the palmes of their handes' (Hexham); this (by loss of I) is allied to G. patsche, an instrument for striking ; cf. prov. G. patschen, to patch (Flügel), O. Du. plagge, rags, plets, a patch (Hexham). Dor. patch, verb, Tw. Nt. i. 5. 52; patch-work.

PATCH (2), a paltry fellow. (O. Low G.) In Shak. Temp. i'i. 2. 71, Com. Err. iii. 1. 32, Merch. Ven. ii. 5. 46; &c. In these passages, the word is by most commentators interpreted . . "a domestic fool," supposed to be so called from his parti-coloured dress;' Schmidt. 'Wolsey we find had two fools, both occasionally called patch, though they had other names; see Douce, Illustrations of Shak., i. 258;' Nares. The supposition that patch is a nick-name from the dress is most probably right; if so, the derivation is from patch (1); see above. In Mids. Nt. Dr. iii. 2. 9, the word merely means clown, or an ill-dressed mechanic. It is independent of Ital. pazzo, a fool, madman, which is used in a much stronger sense. Der. pack-ock, a dimin. form (cf. bull-ock, kill-ock); 'as very patchokes [clowns] as the wild Irish,' Spenser, View of the State of Ireland, Globe ed. p. 636, col. 2; this is the word spelt pajock in Shak. Hamlet, iii. 2.

PATE, the head. (F., -G., -Gk.) In Spenser, Shep. Kal., June, l. 16. M. E. pate; 'bi pate and bi polle,' Polit. Songs, ed. Wright, p. 237. in a song of the time of Edw. II. The etymology is disguised by the loss of l; pate stands for plate, i. e. the crown of the head. - O. F. pate, not recorded in the special sense here required, but Cotgrave gives : 'Pate, a plate, or band of iron, &c. for the strengthening of a thing;' which establishes the loss of i. - G. platte, a plate, bald pate, in vulgar language, the head (Flügel); M. H. G. plate, O. H. G. blattá, a plate, plate-armour, the shaven crown of the head. B. Cf. also Low Lat. platta, the clerical tonsure from ear to ear (Ducange); obviously due to G. platte. Cf. O. Du. flatte kruyne, 'flat-crowned, or ball-pated,' Hexham; platte, the shaven crown, Kilian. y. Even in Irish, we find plata, plate; plati, the forehead, platin, a little pate, a skull, the crown of the head (with the usual change of a to ai); O'Reilly. These words were prob. borrowed from O. F. or M. É. We may note a similar change in sense in the word crown, meaning (1) the clerical tonsure, (2) the top of the head, esp. if bald, See Plate.

PATEN, the plate for the bread in the eucharist. (F., -L., -Gk.) Spelt patine in Cotgrave; Shak. has patines - plates of metal, Merch. Ven. v. 59. M. E. pateyn, a paten, Havelok, 187. - O. F. patene, 'the patine, or cover of a chalice;' Cot. - Low Lat. patena, the paten in the eucharist; Lat. patena, patina, a wide shallow bowl, basin, pan. See Pan. Rather a word borrowed from Gk. than true Latin. - Gk. wararh, a kind of flat dish. So named from its flatness; from & PAT, to spread out, whence Gk. wararuu, I spread out; Lat. patere, to lie open, spread out, extend ; see Patent. Doublet, pan.

PATENT, lit. open, hence conspicuous, public; gen. as sb., an official document conferring a privilege.  $(F_{,,}-L_{.})$  The use as an official document conferring a privilege. [The patent was so called because open to the inspection of all men.] - O. F. patent (fem. patente), 'patent, wide open, discovered; 'Cot. - Lat. patent-, stem of pres. part. of patere, to lie open. - 4/PAT, to spread out; whence also Gk. werearvue. King Lear, i. 1. 115. - F. paternel, 'paternal;' Cot. - Low Lat. paternalis, extended from Lat. faternus, paternal, fatherly. Formed with suffix -no- (= Aryan •NA) from pater, a father. Pater is formed with suffix -ter (= Aryan -TAR) from 4 PA, to guard, feed, cherish; cf. Skt. pa, to protect, cherish, and E. food.+Gk.  $\pi a \tau f p$ . + E. father; see Father. Der. faternal-ly; also patern-i-ty, from F. paternité, 'paternity, fatherhood,' Cot., from Lat. acc. paternitatem. Also pater-noster, Chaucer, C. Grein, ii. 361. + Du. pad. + G. pfad. + Lat. pons, a bridge, orig. a path, way; crude form ponti-, from base pat. + Gk. #4708, a trodden way, a path. + Skt. patha, a way, path. -  $\checkmark$  PAT, to go; whence Skt. path, panth, to go; Gk. marsiv, to tread.  $\P$  We should ex-pect to find A.S. f for Skt. p; but there may have been a loss of initial s; Fick suggests that the root PAT may be extended from SPA, to stretch out, whence PAT has also the sense of 'spread,' as in E. patent, paten. Der. path-less, path-way. And see font-oon, pont-iff. PATHOS, emotion, deep feeling. (Gk.) In South's Sermons, vol. iv. ser. 1 (R.); and in Phillips, ed. 1706. [But the adj. pathetical is in earlier use, occurring in Cotgrave, and is oddly used by Shak. As You Like It, iv. 1. 196, &c.] - Gk. rados, suffering, deep feeling ; from rades, used as 2 aor. infin. of  $rads \chi_{eir}$ , to suffer.  $\beta$ . There are numerous related words, such as rados, a yearning, rirdos, grief, all from a base no-, nor-; cf. noros, work, noria, I work, suffer. An initial a seems to be lost; all from  $\checkmark$  SPA or SPAN, to draw or stretch out, as in G. spannen, to stretch out, E. span and spin. See Span. The notion of 'drawing out' leads to those of torture, suffering, labour, &c. See Curtius, i. 337. Der. patk-et-ic, from O. F. patketique, 'patheticall, passionate,' Cot., from Lat. patketicus (White) = Gk. main rusós, extended from manyros, subject to suffering, lit. one who has suffered; tatk-et-ic-al, path-et-ic-al-ly, tatk-et-ic-al-ness. Also patho-logy, in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674, from O. F. pathologie, ' that part of physick which intreats of the causes, qualities, and differences of diseases,' Cot., from Gk. matohoyeir, to treat of diseases, which from wallo, put for wallos, and Alysur, to speak. Hence patholog-ic, Gk. mallohoyuros, patholog-ic-al, patholog-ist. And see patient.

PATIENT, bearing pain, enduring, long-suffering. (F., - L.) M. E. pacient, patient, Chaucer, C. T. 486. - O. F. patient, 'patient.' β. Root un-- Lat. patient-, stem of pres. part. of pati, to suffer. certain; but clearly related to Gk.  $\pi\alpha\theta\epsilon i\nu$ , to suffer, 2 aor. infin. of  $\pi\alpha\sigma\chi\epsilon i\nu$ , to suffer. 'The  $\theta$  is secondary, and we may fairly assume that the shorter root wa- (pa-) was in Greek expanded by  $\theta$ , in Latin by t; Curtius, ii. 17. Pa-pil-io is a reduplicated form from a base pal, meaning to vibrate, cf. palpobra, the eyelid (from its quivering), pal-p-it-are, to palpitate. Thus the lit. sense is 'the flutterer;' cf. G. schmetterling, a butterfly, with G. schmettern, to dash, lit. to strike often. y. Similarly the tent would be named from its fluttering when blown about. That impenetrable pavice, Sir T. More, Works, p. 1179 c. Spelt pauys, Reliquiz Antique, ii. 22; pawes, Skelton, ed. Dyce, i. 8, 1. 48. -F. pavois, 'a great shield,' Cot. Cf. Span. paves, O. Ital. pavese, pavese (Florio), Low Lat. pavensis, a large shield, occurring A. D. 1299. Of uncertain origin; some suppose it to have been named from the city of Pavia, in the N. of Italy.

PAW, the foot of a beast of prey. (C.?) M.E. paue, Sir Isumbras, L 181, in the Thornton Romances, ed. Halliwell; powe, M.E. pawe, Sir Rich. Cuer de Lion, l. 1082, in Weber's Met. Romances. 1. Perhaps of Celtic origin; cf. W. pawm, a paw, claw, hoof, Corn. paw, a foot (found in the 15th century), Bret. pao, pav, a paw, or jocularly, a 2. Otherwise, it is from O. F. poe, a paw (Burguy), large hand. a word of Low G. origin, from Low G. poie, a paw (Bremen Wörter-buch), the same word as Du. poot, G. pfote. All these words seem to be related. Der. paw, verb, [ob, xxxix. 21. [†]

PAWL, a short bar, which acts as a catch to a windlass (L.) A mechanical term; hence is also W. pawl. a pole, a stake, bar. Merely from Lat. palus, whence E. pale; see Pale (1), Pole. Der. paul-windlass (Halliwell).

PAWN (1), a pledge, something given as security for the repay-ment of money. (F., -L.) Spelt pause in Minsheu, ed. 1627; Levins ment of money. (r., = L.) Speir pause in Minsheu, cd. 1027; Levins (ed. 1570) has the verb to pause. = F. pan, 'a pane, piece, or panel of a wall; also a pawn, or gage, also the skirt of a gown, the pane of a hose, of a cloak, &c.; 'Cot. = Lat. pansum, acc. of pansus, a cloth, rag, piece. See Pane, which is a doublet.  $\beta$ . The explanation of this peculiar use of the word lies in the fact that a piece of in this peculiar use of the word lies in the fact that a piece of F clothing is the readiest article to leave in pledge; hence the O.F. power meant not only 'to take pledges,' but generally to take, seize (Burguy). So Span. paño, cloth, stuff, paños, clothes, is accompanied by the verb apanar, to seize, grasp, take, dress, patch; Diez. ¶ In our old pronunciation, the sounds of pane and paum approached much closer to each other than at present. The Du. pand, a pledge, pawn, G. pland, O. H. G. phant, Icel. pantr, is doubtless the same word, and very old in the Teutonic languages; but it was borrowed directly from Lat. pannum, the acc. case of pannus, the d or t being excrescent after n, as in many other instances. From the old Teutonic form pand seems to have been made the A.S. pending, a penny; see

Penny. Der. paum, vb., paum-er, paum-broker. Doublet, pane. PAWN (2), one of the least valuable pieces in chess. (F.,-L.) M.E. paune, Chaucer, Book of the Duchess, 1. 661 (Moxon); but spelt poune, poun in the Tanner and Fairfax MSS. (Chaucer Soc.)-O.F. paon, a pawn at chess (Roquefort); spelt poon in the 12th cent. (Littre); the dimin. paonnet occurs in the 13th cent. (id.). Roquefort also gives the form paonnet. β. The mod. F. name is pion, explained by Cotgrave as 'a pawn at chests,' of which an older form was peon (Burguy), spelt pelon in the 15th century; this often same as Span. peon, a foot-soldier, a pawn. Port. pião, one of the lower people, a pawn, Ital. pedone, 'a footeman' (Florio), pedona, 'a pawne at chesse,' id. These are all from Low Lat. pedonem, acc. of pedo, a foot-soldier; from ped-, stem of pes, a foot, cognate with E. Foot. y. From the F. pied, O. F. piet, foot, was also formed O.F. pieton (mod. F. pieton), 'a footman, one that travels on foot, also, a pawn at chests; 'Cot. 8. Littre supposes the O.F. paon, poon, to be the same as F. paon, a peacock; but there is no reason whatever for the supposition. It is more likely that paon, poon, are mere variants of peon; the form occasions no difficulty, since the presen, id. 198. A later spelling of the pl. is pearon; see examples in also, to ram, tread down, tread the earth even and hard. + Gk. & Low Lat. fetonem = F. faon (Cot.) = E. faum. Indeed, in Migne's epitome of Ducange, we find pedones explained as equivalent to O. F. paons, paoniers, where paon means a foot-soldier; cf. paonnier, 'fantassin, qui va à pied, piéton;' Roquefort. 8. As to the fact of the origin of the name there is no difficulty; the pawns were regarded as the foot-soldiers of the game, and I have seen a set in which each pawn was carved as a foot-soldier armed with a short glaive or halberd. Such was, I suppose, the arrangement from the very first; cf. Skt. chaturanga, adj., consisting of four parts, which, when joined with bala, an army, signifies a complete army, consisting of chariots, elephants, horse, and foot ; also chaturanga, sb. a complete army, chess (Benfey). More strictly, chatwranga is the name of the orig. game out of which chess (the game of the kings) was developed. But even chaturanga had its foot-soldiers; there were four players, and each had a king and an army. The army consisted of an elephant (bishop), chariot (rook), horse (knight), and four foot-soldiers (pawns). There was then no queen. Der. pion-ser, q.v. soldiers (pawns). (And see Rook.)

PAXWAX, the strong tendon in the neck of animals. (E.) Still common provincially; also called paryworxy, pactware, farware, finfare. M. E. parware, Prompt. Parv.; see Way's note. He quotes: 'Le vendon, the fax-wax,' MS. Harl. 219, fol. 150. Again he says ; 'Gautier de Biblesworth says, of a man's body, Et si ad le wenne (fex wex) as col derere,' i.e. and he has paxwax at the back of his neck. The orig. form is fan-wan or fex-wen, and it exactly corresponds to the equivalent G. haarwacks, lit. hair-growth; presumably because the hair grows down to the back of the neck, and there ceases. Compounded of M. E. fax, hair, as in Fair-fax = fair-hair; and wax, growth. - A. S. feax. fex, hair, Luke, vii. 38; and weawan, to grow; see Poctinal and Wax (1).

PAY (1), to discharge a debt. (F.,-L.) M. E. paien, Ancren Riwle, p. 108, l. 9; Layamon, 2340 (later text). It often has the sense of 'please' or 'content' in old authors. 'Be we paied with these thingis '= let us be contented with these things, Wyclif, I Tim. vi. 8.-O.F. paier (also paer), later payer, 'to pay, satisfie, content;' Cot.-Lat. pacare, to appease, pacify; Low Lat. pacare, to pay (A.D. 1338). - Lat. pac-, stem of pax, peace. See Peaco. Der. pay, sb., M. E. paie, satisfaction, P. Plowman, B. v. 556; pay-able. pay-er, pay-er (= F. payé, pp.); pay-master; pay-ment, M. E. paiement, Chaucer, C. T. (Span.?-L.) A nautical term, as noticed by Skinner, ed. 1671; and in the proverb: 'the devil to pay, and no pitch hot.' 'To pay a rope, een kabel series,' lit. to tar a cable; Sewel's Eng.-Du. Dict. 1754. Most likely caught up from Spanish, the present spelling merely representing the supposed sound of the word. - Span. pega, a varnish of pitch, pegar, to join together, cement, unite; empegar, to pitch. The Span. pegar is from Lat. picare, to pitch. - Lat. picem, acc. of pix, pitch. See Pitch. Wedgwood cites, from Bomhoff, Du. paaien, to careen a vessel, the usual sense of the Du. verb being 'to pay;' but the Du. word is merely borrowed, and possibly from English, just as Du. paaien (or paaijen), to pay money, is from F. payer. He next cites the O.F. empoier, to pitch, from poix, pitch, with the quotation: 'Et ne sont pas empoies, car ils n'ont pas de pis' = and they are not paid, for they have no pitch; Marco Polo, Pautier's edition, p. 535. This is an excellent illustration, but I think the Span. word comes nearer to E. than the O. F. does. The M. E. prys, pitch, K. Alisaunder, 1620, is, of course, from O. F. pois; but the verb to pay is late. [†]

PAYNIM, PAINIM, a pagan. (F., -L.) 'The paynim bold;' Spenser, F. Q. i. 4. 41; cf. Fairfax, tr. of Tasso, xviii. 80. M. E. paynim. 'The paynymys hii ouercome' = they overcame the pagans; Rob. of Glouc. p. 401. This E. use of the word is due to a singular mistake. A paynim is not a man, but a country; it is identical with paganism, which was formerly extended to mean the country of pagans, or heathen lands. It is correctly used in King Horn, ed. Lumby, 1. 803, where we find 'a geaunt . . fram paynyme '= a giant from heathen lands. - O. F. paienisme, spelt paienisme in Cotgrave, who explains it by 'paganisme.' The sense is borrowed from that of O. F. paënie, paiënie, the country inhabited by pagans (Burguy). -Low Lat. paganismus, paganism; formed with suffix ismus (Gk, -10µ0s) from Lat. pagan-us, a pagan. See Pagan. ¶ When a writer, wishing to use fine language, talks of a paynim, he had better say a pagan at once. [7] PEA, a common vegetable. (L.) We now say pea, with pl. peas. This is due to mistaking the s of the older form for a plural termination; just as when people say shay for chaise, Chines for Chinese, &cc. Other words in which the same mistake is made are cherry (F. cerise), sherry (formerly sherris). M. E. pese, pl. pesen and peses. A pese-lof = a loaf made of peas, P. Plowman, B. vi. 181; pl. peses, id. 189;

London Lyckpeny, st. 9. - A. S. pisa, pl. pisan, in a gloss (Bosworth). Not an E. word, but borrowed from Lat. pisum, a pea. [The vowelchange from i to e occurs again in the case of pear, q.v.] + Gk. wiose, a pea. - I PIS, to grind, pound, whence Lat. pinsers, to pound, Skt. pish, to grind, pound. 'Hehn is prob. right in adding the Skt. plin, to grind, pound. Frein is prov. right in acting the Church-Slavonic pes-ake, sabulum, calculus, and in conjecturing "globule" or "grain-fruit" to be the primary meaning, one which is easily derived from the root; 'Curtius, i. 343. Cf. Russ. pesok', sand. Der. pea-pod, peas-cod (as above). [+] PEACE, quietness, freedom from war. (F.,-L.) M. E. pais, comments of conjugation of the A S Cheron an 1125 C. F. pais, later occurring as early as in the A.S. Chron. an. 1135 .- O.F. pais, later paix, 'peace;' Cot. - Lat. pacem, acc. of pax, peace, orig. a compact made between two contending parties. - Lat. pac-, seen in pac-isci, to make a bargain, and in O. Lat. pac-ere, to bind, to come to an agreement. A PAK, to fasten; see Pact. Der. peace l, interj.; peace-able. Much Ado, iii. 3. 61; peace-abl-y, peace-ableness; peace-ful, K. John, ii. 340, peace-ful-ly, peace-ful-ness, peace-maker, As You Like It, V. 4. 108; peace-offering, peace-officer. Also ap-pease, pay (1), paci-fy. PEACH (1), a delicious fruit. (F., -L., -Pers.) 'Of Peaches;' Sir T. Elyot, Castel of Helth, b. ii. c. 7. - M. E. peche, peshe, Prompt. Parv. p. 395; where it is also spelt peske, a form due to Low Lat. pesca. = O. F. pesche, 'a peach;' Cot. Cf. Port. pécego, Ital. persica, shorter form pesca, a peach. = Lat. Persicum, a peach, Pliny, xv. 11. 11; so called because growing on the Persicus or peach-tree; where Persicus stands for Persica arbor, the Persian tree. – Pers. Pars, Persia. See Parsoe. Der. peach-coloured, peach-tree.

PEACH (2), to inform against. (F., -L.) From M. E. apecken,

PEACOCK, a large gallinaceous bird with splendid plumage. (Hybrid; L.,-Gk.,-Pers.,-Tamil; and E.) M. E. pecok, but also pacok and pocok. In P. Plowman, B. xii. 241, where the text has pekok, two other MSS. have pokok, pacok. In Chaucer, C. T. 104, the MSS. have pekok, pokok. We also find po used alone, Polit. Songs, ed. Wright, p. 159. The form peror is due to partor; and both partor, p. are from A.S. pawe, a peacock, which is not a true E. word, but borrowed from Lat. pawo. 'Pawo, Pawus, pawe;' Ælfric's Gloss., Nomina Avium, in Wright's Vocab. i. 28. Here pawe is meant to be the A.S. form, whilst pavo, pavus, are Lat. forms. From Lat. pauo come also Du. pauuw, G. pfau, F. paon, &c. β. The Lat. word is not a native one, but borrowed from Gk. raws, raw, where the aspirate is a relic of the digamma, from a form rafies. See Liddell and Scott, and Curtius, ii. 101. The curious change from initial t to p indicates that both words are from a foreign source. -Pers. táwns, táus, Arab. táwús, a peacock; Rich. Dict., p. 962. – O. Tamil tókei, tógei, a peacock; Max Müller, Lect. i. 233. Y. The y. The latter element of the word is E. cock, a native word of onomatopoetic origin. ¶ The suggestion, s. v. Cock, that the word is French, is wrong; it occurs in A.S. much earlier than I thought, viz. in Ælfred, tr. of Gregory's Pastoral, ed. Sweet, p. 459. Der. pra-hen, similarly formed; M. E. pehen, pohen, P. Plowman, B. xii. 240. PEA.JACKET, a coarse thick jacket often worn by seamen.

(Hybrid; Du. and F.) Prob. of modern introduction. The latter element is the ordinary word jacket. The former element is spelt so as to resemble pea, a vegetable, with which it has nothing to do. It is borrowed from Du. pij, pije, a coat of a coarse woollen stuff; the word jacket being a needless explanatory addition. 'Een pije, a pie gowne, or a rough gowne, as souldiers and seamen weare; Hexham, 1658. As the Du. pij is pronounced like E. pie, it should rather be called a pie-jacket, as the form pie-goume suggests. The material of which the jacket is made is called pij-laken, where laken is cloth. β. The Du. pije is the same word as Low G. pije, a woollen jacket, called pigge, pyke in the Osnabrück dialect (Bremen Wörterbuch). Rietz gives the form pade, a coat, of which he considers the forms paje, paja, paj-rokk (rokk is a coat), pait, all found in various Swedish dialects, to be variants. If we are to connect all these, we may also compare Goth. paida, used to translate Gk.  $\chi_i r \delta r$ , a coat, Matt. v. 40; also M. H. G. pfeit, a shirt, and even perhaps Gk. Bairn, a shepherd's or peasant's coat of skins. It is remarkable that we even find W. pais, Corn. peis, in the sense of coat. [†] ¶ Cf. M. E. courtepy (short coat), Chaucer, C. T. 292. PEAK, a sharp point, top. (C.) M. E. pek; 'the hul of the pek' = the hill of the Peak, in Derbyshire; Rob. of Glouc, p. 7. In the A.S. Chron. an. 924, the same district is called Peac-lond = Peak-land. Though the hill is flat at the top, it presents a remarkably peaked appearance from many points of view. It is one of the Celtic words so often met with in English place-names. - Irish peac, any sharp pointed thing, whence peaced, sharp-pointed, neat, showy. Cf. Gael. beic, a point, a nib, the bill of a bird; whence E. beak. See Nares. Shak. has peas-cod = pea-pod, Mids. Nt. Dr. iii. 1. 191; and  $\frac{\Phi}{Peak-cd}$ , not quite the same word as M. E. piked (Prompt. Parv.) otherwise only the form pease. We also find percodes in Lydgate, though used in the same sense; the M. E. form answers rather though used in the same sense; it M. E. form answers rather to mod. E. pike, sb., with the suffix ed added. Also (probably) peak verb, to become thin, dwindle, Macb. i. 3. 23. Cf. peaked, thin, Dorsetskire (Halliwell).

PEAL, a loud sound, summons, chime of bells, sound of a trumpet. (F., -L.) 'A peale of gunnes, &c.;' Levins. The same phrase occurs in a tract dated 1533, in An English Garner, ed. Arber, vol. ii. p. 36. 'Peele of belles;' Palsgrave. A shortened form of appeal, by loss of the first syllable, which in the O. F. apel was a sole vowel, and may have been mistaken for the E. indef. article, just as we now use vow where the M.E. form is commonly avow. We speak of a trumpet's peal; compare this with F. appel, a call with β. Besides the form apel, mod. F. drum or trumpet (Hamilton). appel, there was a later derived form appear, now used in the sense of 'bird-call' (Hamilton). Cotgrave has: 'Appear, as Appel, also a bird-call; (Appear, as chimes, or the chiming of bells.' This at once explains our common use of the phrase 'a peal of bells.' Note also M. E. apel, 'an old term in hunting music, consisting of three long moots;' Halliwell. This etymology is noticed by Minsheu, ed. 1627; he has: 'a peal of bells, from the F. appeller, i. e. vocare.' See Appeal. Der. peal, verb. [+]

PEAN, the same as Pesan, q.v. (L., = Gk.)
PEAN, a well-known fruit. (L.) M. E. pere, Chaucer, C. T. 10205. = A.S. pera or peru; Ælfric's Grammar, 6, 9 (Bosworth); spelt pere, Wright's Vocab. i. 285, col. 2. [The A.S. pirige, a peartree, occurs in 'Pirus, pirige;' Ælfric's Gloss., Nomina Arborum, in Wright's Vocab. i. 33. Hence M. E. pers. a pear-tree, Chaucer, C. T. 10199, or pirie, P. Plowman, B. v. 16.] = Lat. pirum. a pear. Pliny, xv. 15, 16. Root unknown. The vowel-change from i to e appears again in Ital. pera, a pear. Der. pear-tree, perr.y.
PERARL, a well-known shining gem. (E. = L.) M. E. derle.

FEARL, a well-known shining gem. (F., -L.) M. E. perle, Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, A. 1.-F. perle, 'a pearle, an union, also a berrie; ' Cot. β. Of disputed etymology, but doubtless Latin. It is best to collect the forms; we find Ital., Span., Prov. perla, Port. perola, sometimes perla; also A. S. perl, in Alfric's Glossary (Lye); O.H.G. perala, perla, berala, berla (according to Diez). All prob. from Low Lat. perula, found in Isidore of Seville, in the 7th century y. Diez explains perula to stand for pirula, a little (Brachet). pear, from pirum, a pear; the change of vowel is seen again in Ital. pira, a pear. See Pear. This is perhaps the best solution; for, though the change of sense is curious, it may easily have been suggested by the use of the Lat. bacca, which meant (1) a berry, (2) an olive berry, (3) any round fruit growing on a tree, (4) a pearl (Horace, Epod. viii. 14). Diez also draws attention to Span. perilla, (1) a little pear, (2) a pear-shaped ornament. Perhaps we may add O. Ital. perolo, 'a little button or tassell of wooll on the top and middle of a knit cap;' Florio. And observe the sense of 'berry' which Cotgrave assigns to F. perle. ¶ The next best solution which Cotgrave assigns to F. perle. ¶ The next best solution appears to be that also due to Diez, viz. from Lat. pilulo, a little ball, globale, pill, with change of the first I to r. Der. pearl-y, pearl-i-ness; pearl-ash, a purer carbonate of potash, named from its pearly colour; pearl-barley, F. orge perile, 'pearl-barley,' Hamilton, but perhaps for orge pell, 'pilled barley,' Cot. see Peel (1). PEASANT, a countryman. (F., -L.) The t is excrescent, as in ancient, tyran-t, but it occurs in O.F. In Gascoigne, Steele Glas, Formed with suffix -an (= Ital. -ano, Lat. -anus) from O. F. pais (mod. F. pays), a country; answering to Ital. passe, Span. pais, Port. pais, paiz. All these latter forms answer to Low Lat. pagense*, neut. of pagensis, orig. meaning a villager. -Lat. pagus, a village. See Pagan. Der. pessant-ry, Bacon, Lite of Hen. VII, ed. Lumby, p. 7a, l, 16, a coined word.

PEAT, a vegetable substance like turf, found in boggy places, and used as fuel. (E.) 'There other with their spades the peaks are squaring out;' Drayton. Polyolbion, s. 25. 'Turf and peak... are cheape fuels;' Bacon, Nat. Hist. § 774. The true form is beak, as in Devonshire; the change from b to p is very unusual, but we have it again in purse from F. bourse; see Purse. 'Beak, the roots and soil subjected to the operation of burning beat, which answers to the paring and burning, or more technically, sod-burning, of other districts ;' Marshall's Rural Economy of West Devonshire, 1796 (E. D. S., Gloss, B. 6). Marshall also gives beating-ane as the name of the implement used for paring the sods, but wrongly connects it with the verb to beat, with which it has nothing to do. The operation was so common in Devonshire that 'to Devonshire ground' or 'to Denshire land ' passed into a proverb, and is mentioned in Fuller's Worthies, under Devonshire.  $\beta$ . The beat was so called because used Beak. Allied to Pike, q. v., Peck, q. v., and Pick, q. v. Der. for besting, i. e. mending the fire; from M. E. besen, to replenish a

A.S. bétan, to better, amend, repair, to make up a fire. ' Da het he betan ber-inne mycel fyr' = he then caused men to make up therein a great fire; Ælfred, tr. of Orosius, b. vi. c. xxxii. § 2. Formed (by usual vowel-change from  $\delta$  to  $\epsilon$ ) from A.S.  $b\delta t$ , advantage; see Boot (2). See further in Wedgwood, who cites from Boucher, s. v. beats-burning, a passage from Carew about 'turfes which they call beating,' i. e. fuel; also 'betting, pared sods,' from Lewis's Herefordshire Glossary, &c. And see beit in Jamieson. [†] PEBBLE, a small round stone. (E.) In Shak. Cor. v. 3. 58; a pebble-stone, Two Gent. ii. 3. 11. M. E. pobble, Allit. Poems, ed. pebble-stone, Two Gent. ii. 3. 11. M. E. pobble, Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, A. 117; pibbil-ston, Wyclif, Prov. xx. 17. – A. S. papol-stán, a pebble-stone; Ælfric's Homilies, i. 64, l. 3.  $\beta$ . Prob. named from its roundness; cf. Lat. papula, a pustule, papilla, a little pustule, nipple of a teat. rose-bud; Gk. moupoos, a bubble, miupois, a bubble, a blister. - VPAP, to swell up; nasalised in Lithuan. pampti, to swell, puff up ; cf. Skt. pupputa, a swelling at the palate. ¶ The difficulty in this etymology is in the preservation of the Aryan p in A. S.; but all reatonic words beginning with p present unusual difficulties. The A. S. papel may have been borrowed from Lat. papela as far as its form is concerned, but the sense hints at its being a survival of something older. Der. pebbl-y, pebbl-ed. PECCABLE, liable to sin. (L.) for peccable and peccability from Cudworth, Intellectual System (first ed. 1678, also 1743, 1820, 1837, 1845), pp. 564, 565. Englished from Lat. peccabilis\*, a coined word from peccare, to sin. Der. peccabili-ty. See Peccant. PECCADILLO, a slight offence, small sin. (Span.,-L.) In Etymology doubtful: Cicero (Parad. iii. 1. 20) says peccare est tanquam transilire lineas,' like our transgress or trespass. It has been suggested that it may stand for pedicare, from pedica, a clog, fetter, shackle, like our phrase ' to put one's foot in it.' If there be any truth in this, the etymology is from ped-, stem of pes, a foot; see Foot. Der. peccant-ly, peccanc-y ; and see pecc-able, pecc-ad-illo.

PECCARY, a hog-like quadruped of S. America. (F., -S. American.) In a tr. of Buffon, Nat. Hist., London, 1793, i. 202. - F. pecari, a peccary. A S. American word. 'It is not improbable that the pecari has been so called by Buffon from pachira, which is the name given to this quadruped in Oronoko; Clavigero's Hist. of Mexico, tr. by Cullen, 1787, ii. 319. It is also called, in different parts of America, saino, cojametl, and tatabro (id.).

PECK (1), to strike with something pointed, to snap up. (Scand. -C.) A mere variant of pick. In Chaucer, C. T. 14973 (Six-text, B. 4157) we have : 'Pikke hem right as they growe,' where most MSS. have Pekke or Pek. Pick is the older form ; see Pick.  $\beta$ . A similar vowel-change appears in Corn. peg, a prick, answering to W. pig, a pike, point, also a nip. And some Swed. dialects have pekka for pikka. Der. peck-er. wood-peck-er. Der. peck-er, wood-peck-er.

PECK (2), a dry measure, two gallons. (Scand., -C.) M. E. pekke, Chaucer, C. T. 4008. The word is somewhat obscure, but it is probably a mere derivative of peck, to snap up. As in the case of most measures, the quantity was once quite indefinite, and prov. E. peck merely means 'a quantity; ' we still talk of 'a peck of troubles.' In particular, it was a quantity for eating; cf. prov. E. peck, meat, victuals, from the prov. E. verb peck, to eat. 'We must scrat before we peck,' i. e. scratch (work) before we eat ; Halliwell. Hence slang E. peg away, i. e. peck away, eat quickly, or drive hard; pecker, appetite. β. We do indeed find Irish peac, Gael. peic, a peck; but appetite. there is a suspicion that these are rather borrowed from E. than the orig. Celtic words.  $\gamma$ . Similarly Scheler derives picotia, a peck, a measure, from the verb picoter, to peck as a bird does; and picoter is itself a mere extension from the Celtic root appearing also in E. peck and pick. PECTINAL, comb-like, applied to fish with bones like the teeth of a comb. (L.) Sir T. Browne speaks of peetinals, i. e. pectinal fish; Vulg. Errors, b. iv. c. 1, last section. Coined from Lat. peetin-, stem of pecten, a comb. – Lat. p. ctere, to comb. + Gk.  $\pi exresity$ , to comb; lengthened form from  $\pi execut,$  to comb, to card wool, to shear.  $\beta$ . From  $\checkmark$  PAK, to pluck, pull hair, comb; preserved also in Lithuanian pesz-ti, to pluck, pull hair. From the same root is A. S. fax, a head of hair, whence Fairfax, i.e. fair hair. And see Fight. Der. Hence also rectin-ate, pectin-at-ed; and see paxwax.

PECULATE, to pilfer, steal. (Lat.) 'Peculator, that robs the prince or common treasure ; ' Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. - Lat. peculatus, pp. of peculari, to appropriate to one's own use. Formed as if from peculum *, with the same sense as peculium, private property, and allied to pecū-nia, property; see Peculiar, Pecuniary. Der. peculat-ion, peculat-or

PECUNIARY, relating to property or money. (F., -L.) Spelt pecuniarie in Minsheu, ed. 1627. - F. pecuniarie, 'pecuniary', 'Cot. -Lat. pecuniarius, belonging to property. - Lat. pecunia, property. B. Formed with Aryan suffixes -na and -ya from pecu-, as appearing in pl. pecu-a, cattle of all kinds, sheep, money; the wealth of ancient times consisting in cattle. + Skt. pagu, cattle; lit. that which is fastened up, hence cattle possessed and controlled by men. -✓ PAK, to fasten; cf. pecuniari-ly. PEDAGOGUE, a teacher, pedant. (F., -L., -Gk.) In Minshou, ed. 1627. - F. pedagogue, 'a schoolmaster, teacher, pedant;' Cot. - Lat. pædagogue, a preceptor. - Gk. παιδαγωγόs, at Athens, a slave who led a boy to school, hence, a tutor, instructor. - Gk. maio-, stem of mais, a boy; and dywyos, leading, guiding, from dyear, to lead. B. The Gk. wais is for wafes, i. e. pau-is, from a probable  $\checkmark$  PU, to beget, whence numerous derivatives, such as Lat. pu-er, a boy, Skt. pu-tra, a son, Gk.  $\pi \hat{\omega} \rightarrow \lambda o_s$ , a foal, and E. Now chiefly used as a sb., as the pedal of an organ, i. e. a key acted on by the foot. - Lat. pedalis, (1) belonging to a foot, (2) belonging to a foot-measure (whence the old use, as in Blount). - Lat. ped-, stem of pes, a foot;

I. iii, 179. - F. pedant, 'a pedant, or ordinary schoolmaster;' Cot. Borrowed from Italian (Littré). -Ital. pedante, 'a pedante, or a schoolemaster, the same as pedagogo;' Florio.  $\beta$ . Pedante is a pres. participial form as if from a verb pedare \*, which, as Diez suggests, is probably not the O. Ital. pedare, to foote it, to tracke, to trace, to tread or trample with one's feete (Florio), but an accommodation of the Gk. raedever, to instruct, from was, stem of was, a boy. See Pedagogue. Diez cites from Varchi (Ercol., p. 60, ed. 1570) a passage in Italian, to the effect that ' when I was young, those who had the care of children, teaching them and taking them about, were not called as at present pedanti nor by the Greek name pedagogi, but by the more horrible name of ripitiori [ushers]. y. If this etymology be not approved, we may perhaps fall back upon the verb pedare in Florio, as if a pedant meant one who tramps about with children at his heels.' This is, of course, from Lat. ped-, stem of pes, a foot, cognate with E. Foot. Der. pedant-ic, pedant-ic-al, pedant-ry

PEDDLE, to deal in small wares. (Scand.?) Bp. Hall contrasts 'pedling barbarismes' with 'classick tongues; 'Satires, bk. ii [not iii]. sat. 3, l. 25. PEDESTAL, the foot or base of a pillar. (Span., - Ital., - I., and G.) Spelt pedestall in Minsheu, ed. 1627. - Span. pedestal, 'the base or foot of a pillar.' Minsheu. Cf. O. F. pied-stal in Cotgrave. basic of the span for 'foot' is pid, it is not a Span word, but borrowed wholly from Ital. piedestallo, 'a footstall or a treshall [threshold] of a doore; 'Florio.  $\beta$ . A clumsy hybrid compound; from Ital. piede, 'a foote, a base, a footstall or foundation of anything' (Florio), which from Lat. pedem, acc. of pes, a foot ; and Ital. stallo, a stable, a stall, from G. stall, a stable, stall, cognate with E. stall. See Foot and Stall. 47 Footstall (G. fussgestell) is a better word. PEDESTRIAN, going on foot; an expert walker. (L.) Pro-perly an adj. Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674, gives the form pedestrial. Both pedestri-an and pedestri-al are coined words, from Lat. pedestri-, crude form of pedester, one who goes on foot. Formed, it is supposed, from pedit-ter \*, i. e. by adding the suffix -ter (Aryan -tar) to pedit-, PECTORAL, belonging to the breast or chest. (F., - L.) In stem of pedes, one who goes on foot. Ped-it- is from ped-it- is fr is joined on to a tree. (F., -L.) Pedicel is modern, from mod. F. pédicelle; not a good form, since Lat. pedicellus means 'a little louse.' Pedicle is the better word, as used by Bacon, Nat. Hist. § 592.-O. F. pedicule, 'the staulk of a leafe, or of fruit;' Cot. - Lat. pediculum, acc. of pediculus, a little foot, foot-stalk, pedicle. Double dimin. from pedi, crude form of pes, cognate with E. foot. See Foot.

Foot. PEDIGREE, a register of descent, lineage, genealogy. (F.?) In Shak. Hen. V, ii. 4. 90. Spelt pedegree in Minsheu (1627); pedigrew in Levins (1570); petygrewe in Palsgrave (1530). In the Prompt. Parv. A.D. 1440, we find the spellings pedegru, pedegrw, pedygru, pedegrewe, petygrue, and it is explained by 'lyne of kynrede and awncetrye, Stemma, in scalis.' In the Appendix to Hearne's ed. of Rob. of Glouce in the Herald's Office, a piece which barins' 'A determent for William Conquerons. begins: 'A petegree, fro William Conquerour . . vn-to kyng Henry the vi.' The last circumstance mentioned belongs to A.D. 1431, 50 that the date is about the same as that of the Prompt. Parv. Wedgwood cites from the Rolls of Winchester College, temp. Henry IV, printed in Proceedings of the Archeeological Institute. 1848, p. 64, a passage relating to the expenses 'Stephani Austinwell . . ad loquendum . . de evidenciis scrutandis de pe de gre progeni-torum hæredum de Husey. This, being in a Latin document, is not much to be relied on for spelling, but it appears to be the earliest trace of the word at present known. Thus the word does not β. Etymology unknown; but we appear till the 15th century. B. Etymology unknown; out we may feel sure it is French. The numerous guesses, par degrés (Mahn), pied and gré, père and degré, petendo gradus, &c., are all utterly unsatisfactory. The evidence certainly points to something different from F. gré and Lat. gradus, or we should not have the appear till the 15th century. forms gru and grewe in the Prompt. Parv. y. I merely add the guess that there may be a reference to F. grue, a crane. Danser la grue meant to hop or stand on one leg only (Cotgrave), in allusion to the crane's frequently resting on a single leg; and there is a proverbial phrase à pied de grue, 'in suspence, on doubtfull tearms, or not wel, or but halfe, setled, like a crane that stands but upon one leg;' Cot. Thus a pedigree would be so named, in derision, from its doubtfulness; or from the cranes' legs (single upright stalks) used in drawing out a pedigree. 3. Wedgwood (in N. and Q. 6 S. i. 309) gives pied the sense of 'tree;' so that pied de gres is 'tree of degrees.' Cf. F. pied-bornier, 'a tree that serves to divide severall tenements;' Cot. [†]

PEDIMENT, an ornament finishing the front of a building. (L.) Fronton, in architecture, a member that serves to compose an ornament, raised over cross-works, doors, niches, &c., sometimes making a triangle, and sometimes part of a circle; it is otherwise called a pediment, and fastigium by Vitruvius; Phillips, ed. 1706. I cannot trace the history of the word, and the dictionaries make no attempt to explain it. Mahn, in Webster, derives it from pes, a foot; which is but a poor account. The form of the word is clearly Latin; but there is no such word as pedimentum. I can only suppose that the orig. word is pedamentum, a stake or prop, with which trees and vines are supported; formed with suffix -mentum from pedare, to prop, from ped-, stem of pes, a foot; see Foot. The spelling pediment for pedament would naturally be brought about by confusion with the common word impediment.  $\beta$ . This etymology is, as to the form, probably right; as to the reason of the use of the word, I can only guess that pedamentum was used as an equivalent to pedatura. Pedatura not only means a prop or ' pedament,' but in Low Lat. had the sense of a certain space, containing a certain number of feet, in which anything could be put, a site or plot (Ducange). And a pediment does, in fact, enclose a space which was often ornamented

PEDLAR, PEDLER, PEDDLER, a hawker, one who travels about selling small wares. (Scand.?) The verb to peddle, to sell small wares, is later, and a mere derivative from the sb. We find pedler in Cotgrave, to explain F. mercerot, and pedlar in Sherwood's index. But the older form was peddar or pedder, appearing as late as in Levins, ed. 1570; although, on the other hand, pedlere occurs as early as in P. Ployman, B. v. 258. 'Peddare, calatharius [basket-maker], piscarius' [one who sells fish hawked about in baskets]; Prompt. Parv.; formed from pedde, explained by 'panere,' i.e. a pannier; id. See Way's excellent illustrative note. The Prompt. Parv. also gives : 'Pedlare, shapmann,' i.e. chapman, B. PEEL (1), to strip off the skin or bark.  $(F_{..}-L_{.})$ In Shak. Merch. Ven. i. 3. 85. [Two F. verbs are mixed up here, viz. F. peler and F. piller. It is true that peler and piller are now well distinguished in French, the former meaning 'to peel, strip,' and the latter 'to plunder,' a sense preserved in E. pillage. But in O. F. they were sometimes confused, and the same confusion appears in M. E. pilien, pilien, used in the sense of 'peel.' 'Rushes to pilie = to peel rushes, P. Plowman, C. x. 81; pilled = bald, Chaucer, C. T. 3993. A clear case is in Palsgrave, who has: 'I pyll rysshes, le pille des ionez.' For further remarks on pill, see Pillage.] We may consider peel, in the present place, as if due to peler only. - F. peler, 'to pill, pare, bark, unrind, unskin;' Cot. Cf. Span. pelar, Ital. pelare, to strip, peel, O. Ital. pellare, 'to vnskin,' Florio. - Lat. pellis, skin; see Fell (2). ¶ But some senses of F. peler are due to Lat. pilare, to deprive of hair, make bald. - Lat. pilus, hair. Dor. peal-ed; peel, sb.

PEEL (2), to pillage.  $(F_{-}, -L_{-})$ "Peeling their provinces," i.e. robbing them; Milton, P. L. iv. 136. This is not the same word as the above, but another spelling of the old verb pill (F. piller), to rob. See Pillage, and see remarks under Peel (1).

PREL (3), a fire-shovel, (F., -L.) Once a common word; see Halliwell. 'Pele for an ouyn, pelle a four; 'Palsgrave. -F. pelle, oider form pale, 'a fire-shovell,'Cot. - Lat pāla, a spade, shovel, peel. Root uncertain; but prob.  $p\bar{a} = pag$ , to fasten, plant, as in Lat. pas

Refer the state of the state o it seems nevertheless to have been borrowed from F. On the confusion between the sounds denoted by the E. ee in the 16th century, see remarks in Palsgrave, cited by Ellis, Early Eng. Pron. i. 77. Palsgrave says that the mod. bear and bier were both spelt beere in his time. Thus E. peep may answer either to O. F. pepier or to F. piper; the M.E. pipen, however, is solely the latter .- O. F. pepier, i to peep, cheep, or pule, as a young bird in the neast, 'Cot.; piper, 'to whistle, or chirp, like a bird,' id.; cf. pipee, 'the peeping or chirping of small birds,' id. – Lat. pipare, pipire, to peep, chirp. Of imitative origin; due to repetition of the syllable PI. Cf. Gk. πιπίζειν, πιπτίζειν, to chirp. See Pipe, Pule. [†]

PEEP (2), to look out (or in) through a narrow aperture, to look silly. (F., - L.) 'Where dawning day doth never peeps;' Spenser, F. Q. i. 1. 39. 'To peeps, inspicere ;' Levins, ed. 1570. The etymology offers great difficulties ; but nearly all writers think it must be connected with the word above, as no other solution seems pos-sible, the word being unknown in M.E.; whereas M.E. pipen, to peep, chirp, occurs in the Owl and Nightingale, 503. β. The explanations hitherto offered are very forced; Richardson suggests that the verb was 'transferred from the sound which chickens make upon the first breaking of the shell to the look accompanying it!' Wedgwood says : ' When we endeavour to sound the highest notes in our voice we strain for a moment without effect until after an effort a thin, sharp sound makes its way through the constricted passages, affording a familiar image of a hidden force struggling through obstructions into life; as the sprouting of a bud through the bursting envelopes, or the light of day piercing through the shades of night. Hence may be explained Dan. at pipe frem (of a bud or seed), to shoot, or peep forth, and the O. E. [M. E.] day-pipe, rendered by Palsgrave la pipe du jour. We now call it the peep of day, with total unconsciousness of the original image. In the same way Du, kriecke, krieckeling, the day spring or creak of day, from kricken, F. cricquer, to creak. "I peke or prie, je pipe hors" [I peep out]; Palsy. It is far simpler to derive E. peep at once from O.F. grave.' fiper, formerly used, as the above happy quotation shows, in the phrase piper hors, to peep out, to pry. How the F. piper came to be used in that sense will appear at once if we refer the verb, not wares in such a manner is termed a pedder.' Probably pedlar is due to the bird, but to the fouler who lies in wait for him, which was, in fact, a common use of it. 'Piper, to whistle, or chirp, like a bird; & dren. The origin appears, perhaps, in Lowland Sc. peu, to make a also to cousen, deceive, cheat, gull, overreach, beguile, esp. by false | plaintive noise, used in the Complaint of Scotland, ed. Murray, i. 39, also to cousen, deceive, cheat, gull, overreach, beguile, esp. by false cards or dice; ' Cot. ' Pipe, the peeping or chirping of small birds, counterfeited by a bird-catcher; also, a counterfeit shew, false &c.; id. 'Pipe, a bird-call, or little wooden pipe, countenance,' wherewith fowlers do counterfeit the voices of the birds they would take :' id. Now at p. 212 of Lacroix (Manners, Customs, and Dress during the Middle Ages) there is an excellent illustration of ' bird-piping, or the manner of catching birds by piping,' being a fac simile of a miniature in a MS of the 14th century. The picture shews a man, nearly concealed within a bush, attracting wild birds by means of a pipe, He is piping and peeping out at once. I think we may therefore explain piper as meaning to act like a bird-catcher, to pipe, to peep, to beguile. The sense 'to beguile' is still common; see Littré. The above explanation shews why it is that to peep implies not merely to look out, but to look out slily, to look out so as not to be seen, 'to look as through a crevice, or by stealth' (Schmidt, Shakespeare-Lexicon). Why pryst thou through my window? leave thy peeping; Lucrece, 1089. See further under Peep (1). Der. by peep, Cymb. i. 6, 108; peep-bo. ¶ It deserves to be added that the use of the E. verb may have been further influenced by that of the old verb to peak, used in much the same sense. The quotation 'I peke or prie' has been given above, from Palsgrave. Cf. 'To peake into a place, inspicere; 'Levins. This is the M. E. piken; 'Cam nere, and gan in at the curtein pike' = came near, and peeped in at the curtain, Chaucer, Troilus, iii. 60; apparently borrowed from F. piquer, to pierce, hence (metaphorically) to poke one's nose into a thing. See Pique, Pick, Peck. [†] PIEER (1), an equal, a nobleman. (F., - L.) The orig. sense is

'equal;' the twelve peers of France were so called because of equal rank. M. E. pere, Chaucer, C. T. 10900 [not 11119]; per, Havelok, 2211. – O. 'Right so doth he, whan that he pirets And toteth on her womanhede' = so does he, when he peers and looks upon her womanhood; Gower, C. A. iii. 29, l. 4. Skeat, iii. 48. – Low G. piren, to look closely, a form in which l has been lost; it is also spelt pliren, plüren; see Bremen Wörterbuch. For the loss of l, cf. Patch. + Swed. plira, to blink; Dan, plire, to blink. The orig, sense of Low G. pluren is to draw the eyelids together, in order to look closely. See Blear-eyed. And see Poor (3). Doublet, pry. PEER (3), to appear. ( $F_{..}-L$ .) Distinct from the word above, though prob. sometimes confused with it. It is merely short for appear. M. E. peren, short for appear. 'There was I bidde, in payn of deth, to pere;' Court of Love (late 15th cent.), l. 55. Cf. 'When daffodils begin to pere;' Shak. Wint. Ta. iv. 3. 1. As the M. E. approx was frequently spelt with one p, the prefix a easily dropped off, as in the case of peal for appeal; see Peal. See further under Appear. ¶ In F. the simple verb paroir (Lat. parere) was used in a similar way. 'Paroir, to appear, to peep out, as the day in a morning, or the sun over a mountain;' Cot. PEEVISH, cross, ill-natured, fretful. (E.) M. E. peuisch; spelt provession in P. Plowman, C. ix. 151, where four MSS. have provide; the sense being 'ill-natured.' It occurs also in G. Douglas, tr. of Virgil, Æn. xi. 408 (Lat. text), where we find : 'Sik and proved and catyve saule as thine' - such a perverse and wretched soul as thine. And again, in the same, Æn. vi. 301, where the Lat. 'Sordidus ex humeris nodo dependet amictus' is translated by: 'Hys smottrit habyt, owr his schulderis lydder Hang pengely knyt with a knot togidder,' where it seems to mean 'uncouthly.' And yet again, Aruns is called 'thys pevech man of weyr' [war], where it answers to Lat. improbus; An. xi. 767. Ray, in his North-country Words, ed. 1691, gives: 'Peevish, witty, subtil.' Florio explains schifezza by 'coynes, quaintnes, pesuishnes, fondnes, frowardnes.' Peevish in Shak. is silly, childish, thoughtless, forward. Peevishnesse = waywardness, Spenser, F. Q. vi. 7. 37. Thus the various senses are childish, silly, wayward, froward, uncouth, ill-natured, perverse, and even witty. All of these may be reduced to the sense of 'childish,' the sense of witty being equivalent to that of 'forward,' the child being the sense of mill our and the main observe word; but prob. of onomatopoetic origin, from the noise made by fretful chil- K. Cf. also Peep (1) and Pewit. In this view, the suffix -ish has the not uncommon force of 'given to,' as in thiev-ish, mop-ish. Parv. Pelf, to rob, occurs as a verb, Cursor Mundi, l. 6149. - O. F. pelfre, booty, allied to pelfrer, to pilfer (Burguy).  $\beta$ . Of unknown origin; Roquefort gives O.F. pilféer, pilfeer, to rob, plunder, which Mahn (in Webster) derives from Lat. pilare, to rob, plunder, which make. This derives from Lat. pilare, to rob, and facere, to make. This derivation from two verbs is not satisfactory; yet it is highly probable that, at any rate, the first syllable of pelfrer is connected with F. and E. pillage. The difficulty is to explain the latter part of the word.  $\gamma$ . Pelf and pilfer are obviously related; but it is not clear which is the older word. See Pilfer.

Ashmole 61; which comes very near the mod. usage. The sense of 'drive' comes out in the common mod. E. phrase full pelt = full  $\beta$ . The easiest way of interpreting the vowel-sounds is to drive. refer the word to an A.S. form pyllan\*, to thrust, drive, not recorded. This would give M.E. pulten or pilten; cf. A.S. lytel, whence M.E. Litel, litel, and A. S. pyt, a pit, whence M. E. put, pit. The e is a dialectal variety, like Kentish pet for pit, and E. dent as well as dint, from A. S. dynt.  $\gamma$ . Just as pyt is from Lat. puteus, such a form as A. S. pytan \* would answer to Lat. puttare, to beat, strike, knock; and this is the most prob. origin of the word. 8. Lat. puttare, like pulsare, is an iterative form from pellere (pp. pulsus), to drive; see Fulsate. The simple Lat. pellere appears, probably, in Havelok, 810: 'To morwen shal ich forth pelle' = tomorrow I shall drive forth, i.e. rush forth. ¶ It is usual to derive E. pelt from O. F. peloter, to throw a ball, from pelote, a ball, discussed under Pellet. But though the word pellet may have influenced the later usage of the verb to pelt, and probably did so, such an origin for the word must certainly be rejected, as the M.E. forms clearly shew; esp. as pelt was in use before pellet. Certainly full pelt is not full pellet, nor anything of the kind. Der. pelt-ing, pelt, sb. PELLT (2), a skin, esp. of a sheep. (F., -L.) Used in the North

E. pett. 'Off shepe also comythe pett and eke felle' [skin]; The Hors, Shepe, and Goos, l. 43 (by Lydgate), in Political, Religious, and Love Poems, ed. Furnivall. We also find prov. The form pelt seems to have been shortened from peltry or peltry-ware, there being no such word as pellet in F.; whilst peltry = O. F. pelleterie, 'the trade of a skinner, or peltronger;' Cot. = O. F. pelleterie, 'a skinner.' Formed (like bijou-tier, grains-tier) by a suffix -tier (due to a diminutive -et and suffix -ier) from O. F. pel, mod. F. peau, a skin; see Pell. ¶ But it may be added that the passage quoted by Hackluyt says that pelire-ware was brought from Pruce (Prussia); so that peli may have been borrowed directly from M. H. G. pelliz (mod. G. pelz), a skin, the t being due to G. z. However, the M. H. G. pelliz, like Du. pels, are mere borrowings from O. F. pelice, 'a skin of fur' (Cot.) = Lat. pellicea, fem. of pelliceus, adj. formed from pellis. So that it comes

Lat. penetratus, pp. of penetrare, to pierce into.  $\beta$ . Lat. penetrare is a compound. The part pene- is from the base of penes, with, B. Lat. pene-trare peni-tus, within, pen-us, the inner part of a sanctuary; prob. connected with penus, stored food, provisions kept within doors, Lithuan. penus, fodder, from & PA, to feed. 'The idea "stores, store-room," furnishes the intermediate step from penes to penetrare; Curtius, i. 336.  $\gamma$ . The suffix -trare is the same as in in-trare, to enter, connected with Lat. in-tra, within, ex-tra, without, trans, across; from VTAR, TRA, to cross over, pass beyond, cf. Skt. tri, to cross. Der. penetra-ble, Hamlet, iii. 4. 36, immediately from Lat. penetrabilis; impenetrable; penetrably, penetrable-ness, penetrabili-ty; penetral-ing; penetrat-ive, from O.F. penetratif, 'penetrative' (Cot.); penetrat-ive-ly, penetrat-ive-ness; penetrat-ion, Milton, P. L. iii. 585, immediately from Lat. penetratio. PENGUIN, PINGUIN, the name of an aquatic bird. (C.7) 'As Indian Britons were from penguins;' Butler, Hudibras, pt. i. c. 2, l. 60. It occurs still earlier, in the 15th note (by Selden) to Drayton's Polyolbion, song 9, ed. 1613, where we find: 'About the year 1170, Madoc, brother to Dauid ap Owen, Prince of Wales, made this sea-voyage [to Florida]; and, by probability, those names of Capo de Breton in Norumbeg, and pengwin in part of the Northerne America, for a white rock and a white headed bird, according to the British, were reliques of this discouery.' Certainly, the form penguin bears a striking resemblance to W. pen gwyn, where pen = head, and gwyn=white; and if the name was given to the bird pat into the straits of Magellan; and on the 8th, we came to two islands named by Sir F. Drake, the one Bartholomew Island, because he came thither on that Saint's day; and the other Penguin Island, upon which we powdered [salled] three tons (1) of perguins for the victualling of our ship. The etymology is open to the objection that the penguin's head is black, but the name may have been transferred to the penguin from some similar bird. 2. Another story (in Littré) is that some Dutchmen, in 1598, gave the name to some birds seen by them in the straits of Magellan, intending an allusion to Lat. pinguis, fat. But this will not account for the suffix -in, and is therefore wrong; besides which the 'Dutchmen' turn out to be Sir F. Drake, who named the island 11 years earlier than the date thus assigned. After all, is it certain that the name is not S. American? The F. pingouin appears to be derived from the E. word.

PENINSULA, a piece of land nearly surrounded by water. (L.) Cotgrave has 'peninsule, a peninsula.'-Lat. peninsula, a piece of land nearly an island. - Lat. pen-e, pan-e, almost; and insula, an island; see Isle. Der. peninsul-ar, peninsul-ate.

PENITENT, repentant, sorry for sin. (F., -L.) M. E. penitent, Chaucer, C. T. Persones Tale, near beginning. -O. F. penitent, 'penitent;' Cot. - Lat. panitent-, stem of pres. part. of panitere, to cause to repent, frequentative form of panire, the same as punire, to punish; see Punish. Der. penitent-ly; penitence, O. Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, ii. 61, l. 4 (doublet, fenance); penitent-i-al, penitent-ial-ly, penitent-i-ar-y. PENNON, PENNANT, a small flag, banner, streamer. (F.,- L.) Pennant is merely formed from pennon by the addition of t after R, as in ancient, tyrant. It occurs in Drayton, Battle of Agincourt (R.) Pennon is in Shak. Hen. V, iii. 5. 49. M. E. penon, penoin, Chaucer, C. T. 980. – O. F. pennon, 'a pennon, flag, streamer; les pen-nons d'une fleiche, the feathers of an arrow; 'Cot. Cf. Span. pendon, a banner (with excrescent d); Ital. pennone, a pennon, of which the old meaning was 'a great plume or bunch of feathers' (Florio). Formed, with suffix on, from Lat. penna, a wing, feather; whence the sense of 'plume,' and lastly, of streamer or standard. See Pon (2). Der. pennon-cel, a dimin. form, from O. F. pennoncel, 'a pennon on the top of a launce, a little flag or streamer;' Cot.

PEINNY, a copper coin, one twelfth of a shilling. (L., with E. suffix.) Formerly a silver coin; the copper coinage dates from A.D. 1665. M. E. peni, Havelok, 705; pl. penies, Havelok, 776, also pens (pronounced like mod. E. pence) by contraction, P. Plowman, B. v. 243. The mod. E. pence is due to this contracted form A. S. the mod. E. pence is due to this contracted MS form. - A. S. pening, a penny, Mark, xii. 15, where the Camb. MS. has penig, by loss of n before g; the further loss of the final g pro-duced M. E. peni. The oldest form is pending (A. D. 835), Thorpe, Diplomatarium, p. 471, l. 26; formed from the base pand- with dimin. suffix -ing. B. It is clear that pand = Du. pand, a pawn, pledge, O.H.G. pfant, G. pfand; a word of Lat. origin; see Pawn. In this view, a penny is a little pledge, 'a token.' + Du. penning. + Icel. penningr. + Dan. and Swed. penning. + G. pfennig. O. H. G. phanting. Der. penny-weight, penny-worth, penni-less. PENNY-BOYAL, a herb. (F., -L.) In Sir T. Elyot, Castel of Helth, b. ii. c. 9, where however the first part of the word is a singular corruption of the old name puliol or puliall; we find Cotgrave translating O.F. pulege by 'penny royall, puliall royall,' the name being really due to Lat. pulsium regium, penny-royal (Pliny, b. xx. c. 14), a name given to the plant (like E. flea-bane) from its supposed efficacy against fleas; from Lat. pulex, a flea (see Floa). So also 'Origanum, puliol real, wde-minte, i.e. wood-mint; Wright's Vocab. i. 140, col. a. PEINSILE, suspended. (F., -L.) 'If a weighty body be pensile; Bacon, Nat. Hist. § 763.-O. back, and shew that the word existed in Sir F. Drake's time. In a tract printed in 1588, and reprinted in An English Garner, ed. Arber, vol. ii. p. 119, we read that: 'On the 6th day of January, 1587, we read that 'On the 6th day of January, 1587, we read that 'On the 6th day of January, 1587, we read that 'On the 6th day of January, 1587, we read that 'On the 6th day of January, 1587, we read that 'On the 6th day of January, 1587, we read that 'On the 6th day of January, 1587, we read that 'On the 6th day of January, 1587, we read that 'On the 6th day of January, 1587, we read that 'On the 6th day of January, 1587, we read that 'On the 6th day of January, 1587, we read that 'On the 6th day of January, 1587, we read that 'On the 6th day of old form of where, five, cognate with E. five; and yawing, a corner, angle, lit. a bend, from  $\gamma \delta r \nu$ , a knee, cognate with E. knee. PENTATEUCH, the five books of Moses. (L., -Gk.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. Spelt pentateuches in Minsheu, ed. 1627 .- Lat. pentateuchus. - Gk. #érra, old form of #érre, five, cognate with E. five; and revxos, a tool, implement, in late Gk., a book. Hence applied to the collection of the five books of Moses. B. Tevros is allied to reixeev, to prepare, get ready, make ; older forms appear in Gk. rúxos, rúxos, an instrument for working stones with, a mason's pick or hammer, whence  $\tau v \kappa i \{\epsilon w$ , to work stones. The base of  $\tau v \kappa \cdot o \epsilon$  is tuk or twak, allied to  $\sqrt{TAK}$ , to hew, cut, prepare, arrange, seen in Gk. raddeur (= rak-yeir), to set in order, rafus, order. The lengthened form TAK-S appears in Lat. texere, to weave, Skt. taksk, to cut, takshan, a carpenter. See Five and Text. ¶ Thus -teuch is, etymologically, nearly an equivalent of use; and it has much the same sense. Der. pentateuch-al. PENTECOST, Whitsuntide; orig. a Jewish festival on the fiftieth day after the Passover. (L.,-Gk.) M. E. pentecoste, O. Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, i. 89, l. 5. - A. Again, -korra is short for dékorra, tenth, from déka, ten, cognate with E. ten. See Five and Ten. Der. pentecost-al.

PENTHOUSE, a shed projecting from a building. (F.,-L.) In Shak. Much Ado, iii. 3. 110. A corruption of pentice or pentis, due to an effort at making sense of one part of the word at the expense of the rest, as in the case of crayfish, &c. M.E. pentice, pentis. 'Pentice of an howse ende, Appendicium', Prompt. Parv. Caxton, in the Boke of the Fayt of Armes, explains how a fortress ought to be supplied with fresh water, cisterns being provided 'where men may receiue inne the rayne-watres that fallen doune along the thackes of thappentyzes and houses;' Part ii. c. 17 (Way's note). Here thackes = thatches; and thappentyzes = the appentices, shewing that pentice stands for apentice, the first syllable having been dropped, as in peal for ap-peal. Way further quotes from Palsgrave: 'Penthouse of a house, appentis;' and from the Catholicon: 'A pentis, appendix, appendicium.' -O. F. apentis, appentis, 'a penthouse;' Cot. - Lat. appendicium, an appendage; allied to appendix, an appendage; see Append. ¶ Thus a penthouse is an 'appendage' or out-building. See the next word. [+]

PENTROOF, a roof with a slope on one side only. (Hybrid; F., -L. and E.) Given in Webster. I notice it because it has probably affected the sense of penthouse, which has been confused with it, though they mean quite different things. They are, however, from the same ultimate source. Compounded of F. pente, a slope; and E. roof. The F. pente is formed from pendre, to hang, like vente from vendre, to sell. – Lat. pendere, to hang; see Pendant. Errors. b. iv. c. 7. § 4: 'A man in the morning is lighter in the scale, because in sleep some pounds have perspired.' The sb. is in Col-grave; perspirable is in Minsheu, ed. 1627. – F. perspiration, 'a perspiration, or breathing through." - Lat. perspirationem, acc. of per-spiratio*, not given in White's Dict., but regularly formed from perspiratus, pp. of perspirare, to breathe or respire all over. - Lat. per, through; and spirare, to breathe; see Per- and Spirit. Der. perpirat-or-y; also perspire, verb, answering to Lat. perspirare. PERSUADE, to prevail on, convince by advice. (F., - L.) Common in Shak., Meas. for Meas. i. 2. 191; perswade in Palsgrave. - F. persuader, 'to perswade;' Cot. - Lat. persuadere (pp. persuasus), to persuade, advise thoroughly. - Lat. per, thoroughly; and suadere, to advise; see Por- and Suasion. Der persuader; also (from pp. persuasus) persuas-ible, from F. persuasible, 'perswasible,' Cot.; persuasible-ness, persuasibili-ty; also persuas-ion, Temp. ii. 1. 235, Skelton, Garland of Laurel, l. 34, from F. persuasion, 'perswasion,' Cot. ; persuas-ive, from F. persuasif, 'perswasive,' Cot. ; persuasive-ly, persuas-ive-ness. PERT, forward, saucy. (C.) In Shak. it means 'lively, alert,' L. L. L. v. 2. 272. M. E. pert, which, however, has two meanings, and two sources; and the meanings somewhat run into one another. 1. In some instances, per is certainly a corruption of apert, and perily is used for 'openly' or 'evidently ;' see Will. of Palerne, 4930, also 53, 96, 156, 180, &c. In this case, the source is the F. apert, open, 53, 96, 156, 180, &C. In this case, the source 2. But we also find evident, from Lat. apertus; see Malapert. 2. But we also find 'proud and pert,' Chaucer, C. T. 3948; 'stout he was and pert,' Li Beaus Disconus, l. 123 (Ritson). There is an equivalent form Li Beaus Disconus, l. 123 (Ritson). There is an equivalent form perk, which is really older; the change from k to t taking place occasionally, as in E. mate from M. E. make. ' Perke as a peacock ; Spenser, Shep. Kal. Feb. 1. 8. 'The popeiayes perken and pruynen fol proude' = the popinjays smarten up and trim themselves very proudly; Celestin and Susanna, ed. Horstmann, l. 81, pr. in Anglia, ed. Wülcker, i. 95. Cf. prov. E. perk, pert, proud, elated; perk, saucy; peart, brisk, lively. - W. pert, smart, spruce, pert; perc, compact, trim; percus, trim, smart; percu, to trim, to smarten. See Pork. Dor. pert-ly, Temp. iv. 58; pert-ness, Pope, Dunciad, i. 112.

PERTAIN, to belong. (F., -L.) M. E. partenen, Will. of Palerne, 1419; Wyclif, John, x. 13. Not a common word. - O. F. partenir, to pertain; in Burguy and Roquefort, but not in Cotgrave. (It seems to have been supplanted by the comp. apartenir; see Ap-both pertinacity and pertinacy; Minsheu, ed. 1627, has only the latter form, which is the commoner one in old authors, though now dis-used. Pertinacity is from F. pertinacité, omitted by Cotgrave, but occurring in the 16th century (Littré). Pertinacy is from F. pertinace, cited by Minsheu, but not found in Cotgrave or Littré. B. Pertinacity is a coined word; pertinacy (F. pertinace) is from Lat. perti-nacia, perseverance.-Lat. pertinaci-, crude form of pertinax, very tenacious. - Lat. per-, very; and tenaz, tenacious, from tenere, to hold. See Per- and Tenable. Der. pertinacious, Milton, Apology for Smectymnuus (R.), a coined word, to represent Lat. pertinaz, just as perspicacious represents perspican; pertinacious-ly, -ness.

PERTINENT, related or belonging to. (F.,-L.) In Shak. Wint. Tale, i. 2. 221. - F. pertinent, 'pertinent;' Cot. - Lat. perti-ment., stem of pres. part. of pertinere, to belong. - Lat. per., thoroughly; and tenere, to hold, cling to; see Per- and Tenable. Der. pertiment-ly, pertinence ; and see pertinacity.

PERTURB, to disturb greatly. (F.,-L.) M.E. perturben, Chaucer, C. T. 908. - F. perturber, 'to perturb, disturb;' Cot. -Lat. perturbare, to disturb greatly. - Lat. per, thoroughly; and turbare, to disturb, from turba, a crowd. See Per- and Turbid. Der. perturbation, spelt perturbacyon, Bp. Fisher, On the Seven Psalms, Ps. 38, ed. Mayor (E. E. T. S.), p. 53, l. 21, from F. perturbation (Cot.), which from Lat. acc. perturbationem. PERUKE, an artificial head of hair. (F., - Ital., -L.) The same word as periwig, which, however, is the Dutch form of the word; see Periwig. For the form peruke, R. refers to a poem by Cotton to John Bradshaw; and Todd refers to Bp. Taylor, Artificial Handsomeness, p. 44; we therefore find the word at the close of the 17th century, periwig being in earlier use. - F. perruque, 'a lock of haire;' Cot. - Ital. parrucca, O. Ital. parucca, 'a periwigge,' Florio; who also gives the form perucca. β. The same word with Span. peluca, a wig, Port. peruca; Littré also cites Sardinian pilucca, and other forms. The key to the etymology is in remembering the frequent interchange of r and 1; the true forms are those with 1, such as Span. peluca, Sardinian pilucca. These are closely related to Ital. piluccare, now used in the sense 'to pick a bunch of grapes,' but formerly 'to pick or pull out haires or feathers one by one;' Florio. Y. The Y. The true old sense of pilucca was probably 'a mass of hair separated from the head, thus furnishing the material for a peruke. Cf. also Ital. pelluzo, very soft down, O. Ital. pellucare, pelucare, *to plucke off the haires or skin of anything, to pick out haires; 'Florio. Also F. peluche, 'shag, plush,' Cot.; see Plush. 8. The O. Ital. pelucare and Sard. pilucca are formed (by help of a dimin. suffix -ucca) from Ital. pelo, hair. - Lat. pilum, acc. of pilus, a hair. Root un-known. Doublets, periwig, wig. GP The usual form of the Ital. dimin. is not -ucca, but -uccio or -uzzo in the masc., and -uccia, -uzza in the feminine.

PERUSE, to examine, read over, survey. (Hybrid; L. and F., – L.) In Shak. in the sense 'to survey, examine,' Com. Errors, i. 2. 13; also 'to read,' Merch. Ven. ii. 4. 39. 'That I perused then;' G. Turbervile, The Louer to Cupid for Mercy, st. 12. 'Thus hauynge perused the effecte of the thirde booke, I will likewise peruse the function. By Confirm Privation 29. Of the booke peruse the fourth; 'Bp. Gardiner, Explication, &c., Of the Presence, fol. 76 (R.) 'To peruse, peruti; 'Levins, ed. 1570. And see Skelton, Phyllyp Sparowe, l. 814. A coined word; from Per- and Use. ¶ No other source can well be assigned; but it must be admitted to be a barbarous and ill-formed word, compounded of Latin and French, and by no means used in the true sense; since to per-use could only rightly mean to 'use thoroughly,' as Levins indicates. The sense of the word comes nearer to that of the F. revoir or E. 'survey' or 'examine;' cf. 'Myself I then perused,' i. e. surveyed, Milton, P. L. viii. 267; 'Who first with curious eye Perused him,' id. P. R. i. 320. The F. revoir and E. survey both point to the Lat. uidere, to see; hence Wedgwood observes: 'the only possible origin seems Lat. perwisere, to observe [intensive form of perwidere], but we are unable to show a F. perviser, and if there were such a term, the vocalisation of the v in the pronunciation of an E. peruise would be very singular. Webster suggests that peruse arose from the misreading of an old word peruise, really peruise, but read as if the v were u. This is ingenious, but is utterly negatived by the fact that an E. peruise is as mythical as a F. perviser; at least, no one has yet produced either the one or the other. On the other hand, there is a fair argument for the supposed barbarous coinage from per and use, in the fact that compounds with per were once far more common than they are now. I can instance peract, Dr. Henry More, Poems (Chertsey Worthies' Library), p. 133, l. 31; perdure, perfixt, perplanted, perquire, persway, all in Halliwell; perscrute, pertract, Andrew Borde, Introduction of Knowledge, ed. Furnivall, p. 144, l. 32, p. 264, l. 25; pervestigate, pervigilate, both in Minsheu; peraction, perarate, percruciate, perduction, perendinate, perflation, perfretation, perfriction, perfusion, per- (as above), from F. pestilence = Lat. pestilentia; pestilent-ly, pe.

Hamlet, ii. 1. 90. [+] PERVADE, to penetrate, spread through. (L.) 'Pervade, to go over or through ; 'Phillips, ed. 1706. - Lat. pervadere, to go through. -Lat. per, through ; and uadere, to go, allied to E. wade. See Per-and Wade. Der. per-vas-ive (rare), from the pp. peruasus, Shenstone, Economy, pt. iii.

PERVERT, to turn aside from the right, to corrupt. (F., -L.) M. E. peruerten (with u for v), Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, bk. ii. pr. I, 1. 737 .- F. pervertir, 'to pervert, seduce ;' Cot. - Lat. pervertere, to overturn, ruin, corrupt (pp. perversus). - Lat. per, thoroughly; and vertere, to turn; see Per- and Vorse. Der. pervert-er; also perverse, Fabyan's Chron. vol. i. c. 112, in the description of Brunechieldis, from F. pervers, 'perverse, cross' (Cot.), which from Lat. pp. perversus ; hence perverse-ly, perverse-ness, pervers-i-ty, pervers-ion. Also pervert-ible.

PERVICACIOUS, wilful, obstinate. (L.) 'Why should you be so pervicacious now, Pug?' Dryden, Kind Keeper, A. ii. sc. 2 (ed. Scott). Coined by adding -ous to peruicaci-, crude form of peruican, wilful, stubborn.  $\beta$ . Perhaps from per-, thoroughly, and the base wi- seen in uis, strength. Cf. Lat. peruieus, stubborn, in which -eus is a suffix (Aryan -ka). See Per- and Violate.

PERVIOUS, penetrable. (L.) In Dryden, tr. of Ovid, Meleager, l. 146. Borrowed directly from Lat. peruius, passable, by change of -us to -ous, as in arduous, &c. - Lat. per, through ; and uia, a way ; hence, 'affording a passage through.' See Per- and Voyage. Der. pervious-ly, -ness

PESSIMIST, one who complains of everything as being for the worst. (L.) Modern; not in Todd's Jahnson. Formed with suffix -ist (= Lat. -ista, from Gk. - $\alpha\sigma\eta s$ ) from Lat. pessim-us, worst. [So also optim-ist from optim-us, best.]  $\beta$ . Pessimus is the superl. connected with comp. peior, worse; see Impair.

PEST, a plague, anything destructive or unwholesome. (F.,-L.) 'The hellish pest;' Milton, P. L. ii. 735.-F. peste, 'the plague, or pestilence;' Cot.-Lat. pestern, acc. of pestis, a deadly disease, plague. Perhaps from Lat. perdere, to destroy; see Perdition. Der. pest-house; pesti-ferons, Sir T. Elyot, The Governor, b. i. c. 3 (R.), Englished from Lat. pestiferus (the same as pestifer), from pesti-, crude form of pestis, and -fer, bringing, from ferre, to bring, cognate with E. Bear (1); also pesti-lent, q.v. PESTER, to encumber, annoy. (F.,-L.)

The old sense is to <sup>1</sup> encumber' or 'clog'. 'Neyther combred wyth ouer great multitude, nor pestered wyth too much baggage; 'Brende, tr. of Q. Curtius, fol. 25 (R.) 'Pestered [crowded] with innumerable multitudes of people;' North's Plutarch (in Shakespeare's Plutarch, ed. Skeat, p. 175). Hence pesterous, cumbersome, in Bacon, Life of Hen. VII, ed. Lumby, p. 196, l. 29 (wrongly explained as pestiferous). A shortened form of impester, by loss of the first syllable, as in the case of fence for defence, sport for disport, story for history, &c. Cotgrave explains the F. pp. empestre as 'impestered, intricated, intangled, incumbered. - O. F. em-pestrer, 'to pester, intricate, intangle, trouble, incumber.' Mod. F. β. 'Empêtrer signifies properly to hobble a horse while embêtrer. he feeds afield, and depêtrer is to free his legs from the bonds. These words come from the medieval Lat. pastorium, a clog for horses at pasture. Pastorium (derived through pastum from pascere, to feed) is common in this sense in the Germanic laws: 'Si quis in exercitu ali-quid furaverit, passorium, capistrum, frenum,' &c. (Lex Bavar. tit. II. vi. 1). So also in the Lex Longobard. tit. I. xx. 5 : 'Si quis pastorium de caballo alieno tulerit; Brachet. y. Thus empestrer represents Low Lat. impastoriare\*, regularly formed from in, prep., and pastorium, a clog. Pastorium is a derivative from pastus, pp. of pascere, to feed, inceptive form from a base  $pa. - \checkmark PA$ , to feed; see Food. Wholly unconnected with pest; but, on the other hand, it is closely connected with Pastern, q. v.

PESTILENT, bringing a plague, hurtful to health or morals. (F., - L.) In Hamlet, ii. 2. 315. [The sb. pestilence is much older; M.E. pestilence, P. Plowman, B. v. 13.]-F. pestilent, 'pestilent, plaguy;' Cot. - Lat. pestilent-, stem of pestilens, unhealthy; we also find an old rare form pestilentus.  $\beta$ . Pestilens is formed as a pres. part. from a verb pestilere\*, not in use, but founded on the adj. pestilis. pestilential. This adj. is formed with suffix -li- (Aryan -i pesti-, crude form of pestis, a plague ; see Pest. Der. pest PESTLE, an instrument for pounding things in a mortar. (F., -L.) & F. petrifier, 'to make stony;' Cot. Formed as if from Lat. per-M. E. pestel, Tale of Gamelyn, l. 122. 'Pestel, of stampynge, Pila, pistillus, pistellus;' Prompt. Parv. - O. F. pestel (Roquefort), later pesteil, 'a pestle or pestell;' Cot. - Lat. pistillum, a pestle; regularly formed, as a dimin. of an unused sb. pistrum\*, from pistum, supine of pinsere, to pound, rarely spelt pisere. B. Pinsere (-pisere) is cognate with Gk. srioscu, to grind coarsely, to pound, and Skt. pisk, to grind, pound, bruise.  $\checkmark$  PIS, to grind, pound; whence also Russ. pikkate, to push, shove. See Pistil, Piston. PET (1), a tame and fondled animal, a child treated fondly. (C.) 'The love of cronics, petts, and favourites;' Tatler, no. 266, Dec. 21, 1710. Formerly wast as in Shek Tam Characteria.

Profile (2), a sudden in of pervisiness. (C.) In a per of tem-perance; Milton, Comus, 721. Shak. has pettish, adj., i.e. capricious, Troil. ii. 3. 139; spelt petish, Levins. There was also an old phrase 'to take the pet,' or 'to take pet.' Cotgrave translates F. se mescon-temer de by 'to take the pet, to be ill satisfied with.' The simplest and most probable derivation is from Pet (1), q. v. A pet is a spoilt child; hence pettish, capricious; to take the pet, to act like a spoilt child; whence, finally, the sb. pet in its new sense of 'capricious action ' or previshness. Der. pett-ish, pett-ish-ly, pett-ish-ness.

PETAL, a flower-leaf; part of a corolla. (Gk.) 'Petala, among herbalists, those fine coloured leaves of which the flowers of all plants are made up; Phillips, ed. 1706. Here petala is the Greek plural form, shewing that the word was taken from the Greek immediately.-Gk. #iralor (pl. #irala), a leaf; properly neut. of réralos, spread out, broad, flat. Iléra-los is formed with suffix -los (Aryan -ra) from the base wera- (whence also werá-wruµu, I spread out), extended form of the base wer- (for war-), to spread. Cf. Lat. paulus, spreading, pai-ere, to lie open, be spread out. -  $\checkmark$  PAT, to spread out; see Fathom. Der. petal-oid. PETARD, a war-engine, a case filled with explosive materials.

(F.,-L.) In Hamlet, iii. 4. 207; spelt petar in the quarto edd. of Hamlet, and by all editors down to Johnson. Cotgrave has both petard and petarre. – F. petart, petard, 'a petard or petarre; an engine . . wherewith strong gates are burst open.' Formed with suffix -art or -ard (of Germanic origin, from G. hart, hard, Brachet, Introd. § 196) from the verb peter, to break wind. - F. pet, a breaking wind, slight explosion. - Lat, peditum, a breaking wind. - Lat, peditus, pp. of pëdere (contracted from perdere), to break wind. + Lith. persti, I p. s. pr. perd-zui. + Gk.  $\pi \epsilon p \delta \epsilon v$ . + Skt. pard. + Icel. freta. + O. H. G. firzan, G. furzen. All from  $\checkmark$  PARD, to crack, explode slightly; whence also E. partridge. PETIOLE, the footstalk of a leaf. (F., -L.) Modern; botanical. -F. pétiole, a petiole. - Lat. petiolum, acc. of petiolus, a little foot, a stem or stalk. β. Apparently for pediolus; the usual derivation is from pedi-, crude form of pes, a foot; see Foot. PETITION, a prayer, supplication. (F.,-L.) M. E. peticion, petition; Rob. of Blunne [not Rob. of Glouc.], tr. of Langtoft, p. 313, l. 18.-F. petition, 'a petition; 'Cot.-Lat. petitionem, acc. of petitio, a suit. - Lat. petities, pp. of petere, to attack, ask; orig. to fall on. - A PAT, to fly, fall; whence also E. find, feather, &c.; see Find, Feather, Impetus. Der. petition, vb., petition-ar-y, petition-PETREL, PETEREL, a genus of ocean-birds. (F., -G., -L., PETREL, PETEREL, a genus of ocean-birds. (F., -G., -L., -Gk.) 'The peterels, to which sailors have given the name of Mother Carey's chickens; 'Hawkesworth's Voyages (Todd). The spelling perel is used in a translation of Buffon's Nat. Hist., London, 1792, where we are told that the stormy petrels 'sometimes hover over the water like swallows, and sometimes appear to run on the top of it; vol. ii. p. 128. From the latter peculiarity they take their name. -F. petrel (sometimes peterel); Littre cites a letter written by Buffon, dated 1782, who gives his opinion that petrel is a better spelling than pétérel, because the derivation is from the name Peter, which is pronounced, he says, as Petre. (The usual F. word for Peter is Pierre.)  $\beta$ . Thus petrel is formed as a diministration of Peter or Peter; and the allusion is to the action of the bird, which seems to walk on the sea, like St. Peter. The G. name Petersvogel (lit. Peter-fowl = Peter-bird) gives clear evidence as to the etymology. -G. Peter. - Lat. Petrus, Peter. - Gk. Hérpos, a rock ; a name given to the apostle by Christ; see John, i. 42, in the orig. Gk. text. See Petrify. ¶ The F. Pêtre was prob. borrowed from G. Peter, not from the Lat. directly.

PETRIFY, to turn into stone. (F., - L. and Gk.) Properly transitive; also used intransitively. 'When wood and many other transitive; also used intransitively. 'When wood and many other but he rejects this solution, on the ground that the form perver could bodies do setrify;' Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, bk. ii. c. 1. § 3.- ont well become peliro in Italian. The solution is, probably, that the ficare*, a coined word, to make stony. - Lat. petri-, for petra, a rock; and -ficare, for facere, to make. β. The Lat. petra is merely borrowed from Gk. πέτρα, a rock; cf. Gk. πέτροs, a mass of rock, a stone. Der. petrifact-ion, as if from a Lat. pp. petrifactus *, but the older word is petrification, from F. petrification, 'a petrification, a making stony' (Cot.); petrifact-ive; also petrific, adj., Milton, P.L.

x. 294. PETROLEUM, rock-oil. (Late Lat., -L., -Gk.) Minshen, ed. 1627, explains petrol or petroleum as 'a kind of marle or chaulky clay;' this is the same word, differently applied. Coined from Lat. petr-, stem of petra, a rock, a word borrowed from Gk. werpa; and Lat. oleum, oil. See Petrify and Oil. ¶ There is a curious mention of rock-oil in Plutarch's Life of Alexander; see North's Plutarch, ed. 1631, p. 702.

PETRONEL, a horse-pistol. (F., - Span., -L.) 'Their peeces then are called petronels; Gascoigne, The Continuance of the Author, upon the Fruite of Fetters, st. 7; Works, ed. Hazlitt, i. 408. Spelt petrionel in Ben Jonson, Every Man, ed. Wheatley, iii, 1; some edd. have petronel. – F. petrinal, 'a petronell, or horseman's piece;' Cot.  $\beta$ . Wedgwood remarks that they are said to have been invented in the Pyrenees; and he is very likely right in deriving the word from Span. petrina, a girdle, belt; as a horseman's carbine would require to be slung by a belt. Cf. O. Ital. pietranelli, souldiers serving on horseback, well armed with a pair of cuirasses and weaponed with a fire-locke-piece or a snaphance or a petronell ;' Florio. y. Span. petrina is allied to Span. petral, a pointel; both are from Lat. pettor., stem of petrus, the breast; see Poitrel. PETTY, small, insignificant. (F., -C.?) Common in Shak.; see Merch. Ven. i. 1. 12, &c. M.E. petit, P. Plowman, B. xiv. 242.-

F. petit, 'little, small, . . meane, petty;' Cot. 8. Perhaps of Celtic origin; Diez connects it not only with Sardinian pitien, little, Wallachian pitie, a dwarf, O. Ital. pitetto, petitto, Prov. and Catalan petit, Wallachian piti, small, little; but also with Span. pito, a pointed piece of wood [I can only find Span. piton, a tenderling, sprig or sprout of a tree], and O. F. pite, a small piece of money (Cotgrave). He cites several other words (none of them very easy to verify), from all of which he concludes the existence of a Celtic base pit, meaning something with a fine point, preserved in W. pid, a tapering point. Y. Similarly the Ital. piccolo, little, may be related to a Celtic base pie, seen in W. pig, a point, peak, bill, beak. ¶ The W. pitw, petty, may be borrowed from English. Der. petti-ly; petti-ness, Hen. V, iii. 6. 136; petti-coat, i. e. little coat, As You Like It, i. 3. 15 (see Coat); fetti-fogger, Marston, The Malcontent, A. i. sc. 6 (R.), spelt pettie fogger in Minsheu, ed. 1627, allied to prov. E. fog, to hunt in a servile manner, to flatter for gain, used by Dekker (Halliwell), from O. Du. focker, 'a monopole, or an engrosser of wares and commodities,' Hexham.

PETULANT, peevish. (L.) In Ben Jonson, Epigram 2 (To My Book), l. 5.-Lat. petulant-, stem of petulans, forward, pert, petulant; lit. 'ready to attack in a small way,' as it answers to the form of a pres. part. of petulare *, a dimin. of petere, to attack, seek. See Potition. Der. petulant-ly; also petulance, from F. petulance, petulancy,' Cot.; petulanc-y.

PEW, an inclosed seat in a church. (F., -L., -Gk.) M.E. prove. Yparroked in proves' = enclosed in pews; P. Plowman, C. vii. 144. -O.F. pui, an elevated place, the same as puye, 'an open and outstanding terrace or gallery, set on the outside with rails to lean on ;' Cot. Cf. Span. poyo, a stone-bench near a door, Ital. poggio, a hillock. [Prob. orig. applied to a raised desk to kneel at.] - Lat. podium, an elevated place, a balcony, esp. a balcony next the arena, where the emperor and other distinguished persons sat. [The loss of d and final -um, and change of po-i to O. F. pui, are perfectly regular.] - Gk.  $\pi \delta \delta \cos r$ , a little foot; whence the senses of footstool, support for the feet, gallery to sit in, &c. must have been evolved; for there can be no doubt as to the identity of the Gk. and Lat. words. - Gk. mobi-, no doubt as to the identity of the Ok. alth Lat. words. - Ok. words, crude form of words, a foot; with dimin. suffix -ov. Gk. words is cognate with E. foot; see Foot. Der. pew-fellow, Rich. III, iv. 4. 58. GF The Du. puye, 'a pue' (Hexham), is borrowed from F. puye. [†] PEWET, PEEWIT, the lapwing. (E.) 'Pewet or Puet, a kind of bird;' Phillips, ed. 1706. 'Een Piewit-vogel, ofte [of] Kiewit, a puet, or a lap-winckle ;' Hexham's Du. Dict., ed. 1658.

Named from its cry. So also Du. piewit or kiewit, G. kibitz. PEWTER, an alloy of lead with tin or zinc. (F., -E.?) M.E. pewtir, pewtyr. 'Pewtyr, metalle;' Prompt. Parv. 'Pewter pottes;' Lydgate, London Lyckpeny, st. 12. -O. F. peutre, peautre, pinutre, a kind of metal (Roquefort). Peutre stands, as usual, for an older form peltre; cf. Span. peltre, Ital. peltro, pewter. Diez remarks that the Italians believe their word peltro was borrowed from England;

Ital., Span., and O. F. forms have lost an initial s, owing to the 2 formed to the Gk. spelling as far as relates to the initial of. Formed difficulty of sounding the initial sp; and the original word really does appear in E. in the form speller. 'Speller, a kind of metall, not known to the antients, which the Germans call zink;' Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. Zinc and pewter are often confounded. See Spolter. Der. pewter-er, Prompt. Parv. PHAETON, a kind of carriage.  $(F_{..}-L_{.}-Gk.)$  Properly Phaethon, but we took the word from French. Spelt phaeton (tri-syllabic) in Young, Night Thoughts, 1. 245 from end. - F. phaeton, a phaeton; occurring in a work written in 1792 (Littré). - F. Phaéthon, proper name. - Lat. Phaethon. - Gk. Dallow, son of Helios, and driver of the chariot of the sun. - Gk.  $\phi a \theta \omega w$ , radiant, pres. part. of  $\phi a \theta \omega w$ , to shine, lengthened form of  $\phi a \omega w$ , to shine. -  $\checkmark$  BHA, to shine ; see Phantom.

'Pickadil, the round hem, or the several divisions set together about the skirt of a garment, or other thing, also a kind of stiff collar, made in fashion of a band; 'Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. Also in Minsheu, ed. 1627. F. piecadille, picadille; Cot. explains the pl. piecadilles by 'piccadilles, the several divisions or preces fastened together about the brimme of the collar of a doublet.' The form of the word shews it to be Spanish; it is formed, with dimin. suffix -illo, from Span. picado, pp. of picar, to prick, to pierce with a small puncture (Neuman). picada, a puncture, incision made by puncture; picadura, a puncture, an ornamental gusset in clothes (Neuman). - Span. pica, a pike, a long lance, a word of Celtic origin; see Pike. Der. Piccadilly, the street so named, according to Blount and Nares; first applied to 'a famous ordinary near St. James's.'

PICK, to prick with a sharp-pointed instrument; hence, to peck, to pierce, to open a lock with a pointed instrument, to pluck, &c. (C.) The sense 'to choose' or 'gather flowers' is due to a niceness of choice, as if one were picking them out as a bird with a sharply pointed instrument. M. E. pikken, picken, Chaucer, C. T. 14972; in the Six-text edition (B. 4157) the Camb. MS. has pikke, where the rest have pekke. 'Get wolde he teteren and pileken mid his bile '= yet would tear in pieces and pluck with his bill; where another MS. has pikken for pileken; Ancren Riwle, p. 84. [We also find piken (with one k), as in 'to pyken and to weden it,' P. Plowman, B. xvi. 17, probably taken from F. piquer, which is ultimately the same word.] = A.S. pycan, to pick, of rather doubtful authority. And let him pycan ut his eagan '= and caused his eyes to be picked out; Two Saxon Chronicles, ed. Earle, an. 796, p. 267. [Thorpe prints pytan.] β. However, M. E. pikken answers to an A.S. piccan \* (=pician), a causal verb, meaning to use a pike or peak or sharp instrument; so also Icel. pikka, to pick, to prick; Du. pikken, to pick; G. picken, to pick, peck. y. None of these are Teutonic words, but are all borrowed from Celtic. – Irish piccaim, I pick, pluck, nibble; Gael. pice, to pick, nip, nibble; W. pigo, to pick, peck, prick, choose; Corn. piga, to prick, sting. These are probably derived from the sb. which appears in E. as peak and pike. See Peak, Pike, Pink (1). Der. pick-er, Hamlet, iii. 2. 348; pick-lock, pick-pocket; pick-purse, Chaucer, C. T. 1900; also pickaze, q. v., picket, q. v., piquet. Also pitch-fork = M. E. pikforke, Prompt. Parv. Perhaps pick-le, pic-nic. Doublete, peck (1), pitch, verb. PICKAXE, a tool used in digging. (F., -C.) A pickaze is not an axe at all, but very different; the name is an ingenious popular corruption of the M. E. pikois or pikeys; see my note to P. Plowman, corruption of the M. E. pikois or pikeys; see my note to F. Flowman, C. iv. 465. 'Pykeys, mattokke;' Prompt. Parv. 'Mattok is a pykeys, Or a pyke, as sum men seys;' Rob. of Brunne, Handlyng Synne, 940. The pl. appears as pikeys in the Paston Letters, ed. Gairdner, i. 106; and as pikeyses, Riley, Memorials of London, p. 284. - O. F. size pinuois (Burguy), later picquois, 'a pickax;' Cot. --O.F. picois, piquois (Burguy), later picquois, 'a pickax;' Cot. -O.F. piquer, 'to prick, pierce, or thrust into;' Cot.-F. pic, 'a masons pickax,' Cot.; still called 'a pick' by English workmen. Of Celtic origin.-Bret. pik, a pick or pickaxe. + W. pig, a point, pike. Cf. Irish piocaid, Gael. piocaid, a pickaxe. See Peak, Pike, Pick. PICKET, a peg for fastening horses; a small outpost. (F., -C.) The sense of 'outpost' is secondary, and named from the C.) picketing of the horses, i.e. fastening them to pegs. Not in early use; in Phillips, ed. 1706 – F. piquet, spelt piequet in Cotgrave, who explains it as 'a little pickax, also the peg or stick thrust down into  $\frac{1}{5}$  pica, which was the old name for the Ordinale ; 'quod of pic, a pickaxe; see Pickaxe. Der. picket, verb. Doublet, piquet. PICKLE, a liquid in which substances are preserved. (Du. i or E.?) M.E. pikil, pykyl. 'Pykyl, sawce, Picula;' Prompt. Parv. Cf. Du. pekel, pickle, brine; Low G. pekel, the same (Bremen Wörterb.). \beta. Origin unknown; the old story that pickle took its name from its inventor, whose name is given as William Beukeler in Pennant's British Zoology, vol. iii, and as Wilhelm Bückel in the Bremen Worterbuch, is an evident fable; b would not become p, the usual corruption being the other way. By way of mending matters, the name is turned into Pökel in Mahn's Webster, to agree with G. pökel, pickle; but then Pökel will not answer to the Du. form pekel. Y. Wedgwood's suggestion is preferable to this, viz. that the word is F. and the frequentation of the unit of the second , and the frequentative of the verb to pick, in the sense 'to cleanse, with reference to 'the guiting or cleansing of the fish with which the operation is begun.' The prov. E. pickle, to pick, is still in use; and the Prompt. Parv. has: 'pykelynge, purgulacio,' derived from 'pykyn, or clensyn, or cullyn owite the onclene, purgo, purgulo, segrego.' Also 'pykynge, or clensynge, purgacio.' See Pick. Der. pickle, sb., brine; whence the phr. a rod in pickle, i. e. a rod soaked in brine to make the punishment more severe; also to be in a pickle, i. e. in a mess.

PICNIC, an entertainment in the open air, at which each person contributes some article to the common table. (E.) Added by Todd to Johnson's Dict. The word found its way into French shortly before A. D. 1740 (Littré), and was spelt both picnic and piquenique. It also found its way into Swedish before 1788, as we find in Widegren's Swed. Dict. of that date the entry 'picknick, an assembly of young persons of both sexes at a tavern, where every one pays his club, i.e. his share.  $\beta$ . It has no sense in F. or Swed, and I believe the word to be English; there can be little  $\beta$ . It has no sense in F. or webster; cf. slang E. peck, food, peckish, hungry, pecker, appetite. Y. The latter element is difficult to explain; in reduplicated words, with riming elements, one of the elements is sometimes unmeaning, so that we are not bound to find a sense for it. At the same time, we may, perhaps, assign to nick (perhaps knick) the sense of 'trifle;' cf. knick-knacks, trifles, spelt nick-nacks in Hotten's Slang Dictionary. Thus picnic may mean an eating of trifles, a hap hazard repast. Cf. the curious Northern word nicker-pecker, as a name for the woodpecker (Halliwell); though this probably means 'a picker of nicks,' i.e. notches. Knack for 'trifle' is sufficiently common, and knick may be an attenuated form of it. Cf. click-clack, tip as a weakened form of top, clink of clank; &c. [+]

PICTURE, a painting, drawing. (L.) 'The picture of that lady's head;' Spenser, F. Q. ii. 9. 2. Englished (in imitation of F. peinture, a picture) from Lat. pictura, the art of painting, also a picture. Formed like the fem. fut. part, of pingere, to paint; see Paint. Der. pictur-esque, in Johnson's Dict., ed. 1755, s. v. Graphically, Englished from Ital. pittoresco, like what is in a picture, where the suffix is the Lat. -iscus, Gk. -ionos, cognate with A. S. -isc, E. -ish; hence picturesque-ly, -ness. Also pictor-i-al, Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. iii. c. 24. § 2, formed with suffix -al from Lat. pictori-us, pictorial, from pictori-, crude form of pictor, a painter, which from pictus, pp. of pingere. PIDDLE, to trifle, deal in trifles. (Scand.?)

'Neuer ceasynge piddelynge about your bowe and shaftes ;' Ascham, Toxophilus. ed. Arber, p. 117. Perhaps a weakened form of peddle, orig. to deal in trifles ; hence, to trifle. See Poddle. Hence piddling, paltry, used as an adj.; see Nares, ed. Halliwell. But see Addenda. [*]

PIE (1), a magpie; mixed or unsorted printer's type. (F., -L.) The unsorted type is called pie or pi, an abbreviation of pica; from the common use of pica-type. It is ultimately the same word as pie = magpie, as will appear; see Pie (2). M. E. pie, pye, a magpie, Chaucer, C. T. 10963. - F. pie, 'a pie, pyannat, meggatapy;' Cot. (See Magpie.)-Lat. pica, a magpie. β. Doubtless allied to Lat. picus, a wood-pecker; and prob. to Skt. pika, the Indian cuckoo. There has most likely been a loss of initial s, as we find G. specht, a wood-pecker, Lithuan. spakas, a starling; note also Gk. swifa, a small piping bird, esp. a kind of finch. Y. These words prob. a small piping bird, esp. a kind of finch. Y. These words prob. all mean 'chirper,' and are of imitative origin; cf. Gk.  $\sigma \pi i \int \epsilon u r$ , to chirp, Lat. pipire, to chirp; M. H.G. spake, a loud noise, cited by Fick, i. 831, whom see. Note also Irish pighead, Gael. pigheid,

PIE (2), a book which ordered the manner of performing the divine service.  $(F_{\cdot,-}-L_{\cdot})$  'Moreover, the number and hardness of the rules called the pie;' Introd to Book of Common Prev Here, as in the case of Pie (1), the word pie is a F. form bulo dicitur Pica, sive directorium sacerdotum,' Sarum Breviary, &violent ; it is, however, accepted by Mahn and E. Müller. Pertuiser fol. 1, cited in Procter, On the Book of Common Prayer, p. 8. The name pica, lit. magpie, was doubtless given to these rules from their confused appearance, being printed in the old black-letter type on white paper, so that they resembled the colours of the magpie.  $\beta$ . The word pica is still retained as a printer's term, to denote certain sizes of type; and a hopeless mixture of types is pie. ¶ In the oath 'by cock and pie,' Merry Wives, i. 1. 316, cock is for the name of God, and pie is the Ordinal or service book.

PIE (3), a pasty. (C.?) M. E. pie, Chaucer, C. T. 386. Certainly not a contraction from Du. pastei, a pasty, as suggested in Mahn's Webster, since we had the word pasty in English without going to Holland for it. This desperate guess shews how difficult it is to assign a reasonable etymology.  $\beta$ . We find Irish pighe, a pie, Gael. pighe, pigheann, a pie. If these are true Celtic words, we have here the obvious origin; the word is just of the character to be retained as a household word from the British. Cf. Irish pigke-feola, a pasty, lit. flesh-pie, in which feol, flesh. is certainly Irish. y. I venture to suggest that the orig. sense of pighe may have been 'a pot,' with reference to the vessel in which the pie was made; cf. Gael.

with reference to the vesser in which are pige, a jar, pot. See Piggin. PIEBALD, of various colours, in patches. (Hybrid: F., - L.; and C.) 'A piebald steed;' Dryden, tr. of Virgil, Æn. ix. 1. 54. Richardson quotes it in the form 'A pie-ball'd steed; ' which is a matched shelling. Compounded of pie and bald.  $\beta$ . Here pie Rectanded in quotes it in the form A prevail a steed,  $\beta$ . Here pie signifies 'like the magpie,' as in the word pied. Bald, formerly ball'd or balled, signifies 'streaked,' from W. bal, having a white streak on the forehead, said of a horse. See further under Pie(1) and Bald. ¶ A like compound is skew-bald, i. c. streaked in a skew or irregular way.

PIECE, a portion, bit, single article. (F.,-L.?) M.E. pece, Rob. of Glouc. p. 555, l. 5; the spelling piece is rarer, but occurs in Gower, C. A. i. 295, l. 5; the spelling piece is rarer, but occurs in Gower, C. A. i. 295, l. 5. - O. F. piece, mod. F. pièce, a piece. Cf. Span. pieza, a piece; Prov. pessa, pesa (Bartsch); Port. peça; Ital. pezza.  $\beta$ . Of unknown origin; we find Low Lat. petium, a piece of land, used as early as A. D. 730. This is clearly a related word, merely differing in gender. As F. piège, a net, is from Lat. petica, perica, peakend of words the provided and the provided pr we should expect piece to come from a form petica \*. Scheler draws attention to the use of Low Lat. pedica in the sense of a piece of land, and suspects an pltimate connection with pes (gen. pedis), a foot. Cf. Lat. peliolus, a little foot, a stem or stalk of fruits; see Potiole. Note also Gk.  $\pi i \langle a, a$  foot, also the hem or border of a garment. Y. Otherwise, Diez suggests a connection with W. peth, a part, Bret. pez, a piece; in which case the word is of Celtic origin; but the W. th does not suit. Der. piece, vb., Hen. V, prol. 23; piece-less, piec-er, piece-work; also piece-meal, q. v. PIECE-MEAL, by portions at a time. (Hybrid; F. and E.). M. E. pece-mele; Rob. of Glouc. has by pece-mele, p. 216, l. 20. The word is reduplicated, meaning 'by piece-pieces.' For the first ele-ment, see Piece. B. The second element is the M. E. termination -mele, found also in flokmele, in a flock or troop, lit. ' in flock-pieces, Chaucer, C. T. 7962 ; lim-mele, limb from limb, lit. ' in limb-pieces, Layamon, 25618. A fuller form of the suffix is -melum, as in wukemelum, week by week, Ornulum, 536; hipylmelum, by heaps, Wy-clif, Wisdom, xviii, 25. See Koch, Eng. Gram. ii. 202. M. E. melum = A.S. mélum, dat. pl. of mél, a portion; see Meal (2). PIEPOWDER COURT, a summary court of justice formerly held at fairs. (F., - L.) Explained in Blount's Nomolexicon, ed.

1691; he says, 'so called because they are most usual in summer, and suiters to this court are commonly country-clowns with dusty feet.' At any rate, the Lat. name was curia pedis pulverizati, the court of the dusty foot; see Ducange, s. v. curia. The E. piepowder is a mere corruption of O. F. pied pouldre, i. e. dusty foot. - F. pied, a foot, from Lat. acc. pedem; and O. F. pouldre, dusty, pp. of pouldrer, poudrer, to cover with dust, from pouldre, poudre, dust. See Foot and Powder. ¶ Blount refers us to the statute 17 Edw. IV. cap. 2; &c.

PIER, a mass of stone-work. (F., -L., -Gk.) In Shak. Merch. Ven. i. t. 19. M.E. pere. 'Pere, or pyle of a brygge [bridge], or other fundament' [foundation]; Prompt. Parv. [The alleged A. S. per or pere is unauthorised.] - O. F. piere, later pierre, a stone. [With the M. E. spelling of pere for piere, compare that of pece for piece.] - Lat. petra, a rock, stone. - Gk. #trpa, a rock; cf. #trpos, a mass of rock. Root unknown. Der. pier-glass, properly a glass hung on the stone-work between windows; see Webster.

PIERCE, to thrust through, make a hole in, enter. (F.,-L.?) M. E. percen, Rob. of Glouc. p. 17, l. 10. – F. percer, 'to pierce, gore;' Cot. [Florio has Ital. perciato, pierced through, but no verb perciare; it looks as if borrowed from French.]  $\beta$ . Origin gore; Cot. [Florio has Ital. percentato, pierced through, but no verb perciare; it looks as if borrowed from French.]  $\beta$ . Origin uncertain; the suggestion in Diez, that percer is contracted from O. F. pertwisier, with the same sense, is ingenious, but somewhat  $\gtrless$  piquet, picnic. Doublets, peak, pick, sb., pique, sb., beak, spike. [†] occurring in the 12th century, is from pertuis, a hole, and is parallel to Ital. pertugiare, to pierce, from pertugio, a hole; and to Prov. pertusar, to pierce, from pertuis, a hole. Y. The Ital. pertugio pertusar, to pierce, from pertuis, a hole. Y. The Ital. pertugio answers to a Low Lat. pertusium \*, not found, but a mere extension from Lat. pertusus, pp. of pertundere, to thrust through, bore through, pierce, a compound of per, through, and tundere, to beat ; see Contuse. S. The suggestion of Diez is supported by these considerations, (1) that the Lat. per, through, seems certainly to be involved in F. percer; and (2) that Lat. pertundere gives the exact sense. Ennius has law pertudit hasta (White), which is exactly 'the spear pierced his side.' Der. pierce-r; also pierce-able, spelt perceable in Spenser, F. Q. i. 1. 7. PIETY, the quality of being pious. (F., -L.) In Shak. Timon, iv. 1. 15; and prob. earlier. - F. piete, piety; omitted by Cotgrave. but given in Sherwood's index. - Lat. pietatem, acc. of pietas, piety.

Formed with suffix -tas (Aryan -ta), from pie, put for the crude form of pins, pious; see Pious. Doublet, pity. PIG, a porker, the young of swine. (E.?) M. E. pigge, Ancrea Riwle, p. 204, l. 9. Prof. Earle kindly informs me that he has found the A. S. form perg in a charter of Swinford, copied into the Liber Albus at Wells; to which must be added that the word is commonly pronounced peg in Berkshire, Wiltshire, and Somersetshire. The origin of the word is unknown, and it is doubtful if it is a Teutonic form, as Teutonic words rarely begin with p.+Du. bigge, big, a pig. + Low G. bigge, a pig, also, a little child; de biggen loper even under de vöte, the children run under one's feet; Bremen Wörterbuch. Cf. also Dan. pige, Swed. piga, Icel. pika, a girl. Der. pig, verb; pigg-ish, pigg-er-y; pig-head-ed, used by Ben Jonson (R.). pig-tail; pig-nut, Temp. ii. 2. 172. Also pig-iron: 'A sow of iron is an ingot; Pano di metallo, a mass, a sow or ingot of metal (Florio). When the furnace in which iron is melted is tapped, the iron is allowed to run into one main channel, called the sow, out of which a number of smaller streams are made to run at right angles. These are compared to a set of pigs sucking their dam, and the iron is called sow and pig iron respectively. Probably the likeness was suggested by the word sow having previously signified an ingot.'--Wedgwood. Add to this, that sow may very well have been applied jocularly to an ingot, owing to its bulk and weight. Ray mentions these sows and pigs in his 'Account of Iron-work;' see Ray's Glos-sary, ed. Skeat (E. D. S.), Gloss. B. 15, p. 13. PIGEON, the name of a bird. (F., -L.) Spelt priors (- pijor)

PIGEION, the name of a bird. (F.,-L.) Spelt pyions (= pions) in the Prompt. Parv. p. 396; pygeon in Caxton, tr. of Reynard the Fox (1481), ed. Arber, p. 58. – F. pigeon, 'a pigeon, or dove; 'Cot. Cf. Span. pickon, a young pigeon; Ital. piccione, pippione, a pigeon. - Lat. pipionem, acc. of pipio, a young bird, lit. 'a chirper' or 'piper.' – Lat. pipire, to chirp, cheep, pipe; see Pipe, Peep. Of imitative origin, from the cry pi, pi of the young bird. Der. pigeon-hole, pigeon-hearted, pigeon-livered, Hamlet, ii. 2. 605. PIGGIN, a small wooden vessel. (C.) 'Piggin, a small wooden cylindrical vessel, made with staves and bound with hoops like a will .' Brochest. Cotogray translates E transfer by 'a milking pale

PIGMENT, a paint, colouring matter. (L.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. - Lat. pigmentum, a pigment; formed with suffix -mentum from pig-, base of pingere, to paint; see Paint. Der. or-pinent, or-pine. Doublet, pimento.

PIGMY, the same as Pygmy, q. v. (F., -L., -Gk.) PIKE, a sharp-pointed weapon, a fish. (C.) 1. M. E. pike, pyke, in the sense of a pointed staff, P. Plowman, B. v. 482; spelt pic, in the sense of spike, Layamon, 30752. [The A. S. pic is unauthorised.] Of Celtic origin. — Irish pice, a pike, fork; cf. picida, a pike or long spear, a pickaxe; Gael. pic, a pike, weapon, pickaxe; W. pig, a point, pike, bill, beak, picell, a javelin; Bret. pik, a pick, pickare.  $\beta$ . The orig. sense is 'sharp point' or 'spike; pike, peak, beak are all variants of the same word. See also Pick, Peck.  $\gamma$ . The γ. The 8. There F. words pic, piquer, bec ate likewise of Celtic origin. r. Words pie, piquer, one are intense of cente origin. C. Intere has been an early loss of initial s; cf. Lat. spice, a spike. The young pike is called a pikerel, or pickerel (Nares), formed with dimin. suffixes -er and -el, like cock-er-el from cock. Der. pik-ed, old form of peaked, i. e. spiked, Rob. of Brunne, PILCH, a furred garment. (L.) For the various senses, see Halliwell. It orig. meant a warm furred outer garment. M. E. pilche, Ancren Riwle, p. 362, last line. - A. S. pylee, in Screadunga, ed. Bonterwek, p. 20, l. 28; pylee, Wright's Voc. i. 81, col. 2. - Lat. pellicea, fem. of pelliceus, made of skins; see further under Pelisse. Doublet, pelisse.

PILCHARD, the name of a fish. (C.?) 'A Pilcher, or Pilchard ;' Minsheu, ed. 1627. Spelt pilcher in Shak. Tw. Nt. iii. 1. 39 (first folio). Of uncertain origin; but prob. Celtic; pilchards are abundant off the Comish coast. Cf. Irish pileeir, a pilchard. We may also note Irish pelog, Gael. peilig, a porpoise; W. pilcod, minnows. The final d in the mod. E. word is excressent.

PILE (1), a roundish mass, heap. (F., -L) In Shak. Cor. iii. I. 207. - F. pile, 'a ball to play with, a hand-ball, also a pile, heap;' Cot.-Lat. pila, a ball. Perhaps allied to Gk. πάλλα, a ball. Der.

Thorpe, p. 5; col. 2, l. 6 from bottom. Lat sile a piller a pine ar mole of stars. of from bottom. - Lat. pila, a pillar; a pier or mole of stone. But the sense of 'sharp stake' is due rather to Lat. pilum, a javelin; cf. A. S. pil, a javelin, stake, Grein. There seems to have been some confusion in the uses of the word. Der. pile-driver; also pillar, q. v., pil-aster, q.v. ¶ Pile in the heraldic sense is an imitation of a sharp stake. In the old phrase cross and pile, equivalent to the modern head and tail, the allusion is to the stamping of money. One side bore a cross; the other side was the under side in the stamping, and took its name from the pile or short pillar (Lat. pila) on which the coin rested. Thus Cot. translates O. F. pile (which here = pila, not pila) by ' the pile, or under-iron of the stamp, wherein money is stamped ; and the pile-side of a piece of monie, the opposite whereof is a crosse; whence, Ie n'ay croix ne pile'= I have neither cross nor pile. PILE (3), a hair, fibre of wool. (L.) In Shak. All's Well, iv. 5. 103; cf. three-piled, L. L. L. v. 2. 407. Directly from Lat. pilus, a hair (the F. form being poil). Der. pil-ose, three-piled. Also de-pil-

A con-tracted form of pilule. - F. pilule, 'a physical pill; 'Cot. - Lat. pilula, a little ball, globule, pill. Dimin. of pila, a ball; see Pile (1). PILL (2), to rob, plunder. (F., -L.) Also spelt peel; see Poel (2). [But the words peel, to strip, and peel, to plunder, are from different sources, though much confused ; we even find pill used in the sense 'to strip.' The sense of 'stripping' goes back to Lat. pellis, skin, or to pilare, to deprive of hair, from pilus, hair; as shewn under Peel(1).] M. E. pillen, Chaucer, C. T. 6944; also pilen, Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 42, l. 9. – F. piller, 'to pill, ravage, ransack, rifle, rob;' Cot. – Lat. pilare, to plunder, pillage; a rare verb, used by Ammianus Marcellinus; see Compile. PILASTER, a square pillar or column, usually set in a wall. Tstrip or deprive of hair. Der. pill-age, plunder; we find 'such as delyte them in pyllage and robbery' in Fabyan, Chron. vol. i. c. 114, ed. Ellis, p. 87; from F. pillage (as if from a Lat. pilaticum). Hence pill-ag-er, for which piller was formerly used, spelt pilour in Chaucer, C. T. 1009

PILLAGE, plunder; see under Pill (2).

PILLAR, a column, support. (F., -L.) In early use. M. E. piler, O. Eng. Hamilies, ed. Morris, i. 281, l. 29. – O. F. piler (Littré), later pilier, 'a pillar;' Cot. Cf. Span. and Port. pilar, a pillar. – Low Lat. pilare, a pillar; formed (with adj. suffix) from Lat. pila, a pier of stone; see Pile (2). PILLION, the cushion of a saddle, a cushion behind a saddle.

(C.) Spenser speaks of a horseman's 'shaunck-pillion (shank-pillion) without stirrops;' View of the State of Ireland, Globe ed. p. 639, col. 2, l. 21. [Not the same word as pilion, a kind of hat, in P. Plow-man's Crede, 830; which is from Lat. pileus.] - Irish pilliun, pillin, a pack-saddle; Gael. pillean, pillin, a pack-saddle, a cloth put under a pannel or rustic saddle. Obviously from Irish pill, a covering, better spelt peall, a skin, hide, couch, pillow. So also Gael. peall, a skin, hide, coverlet, mat, whence also peillic, a covering of skins or coarse http://docs.coverief.mat, whence also perifie, a covering of skins of coarse cloth. And cf. W. pilyn, a garment, clout, pillion, allied to pilen, cuticle.  $\beta$ . The Irish and Gael. peall is cognate with Lat. pellis, a skin, and E. fell, a skin. See Poll, Foll (2). Of unknown origin; it were easy to connect it with O.F. piler (E. pillar) β. PILLOW, a cushion for the head. (L.) M.E. pilwe, Gower, C.A. i. 142, last line. The change from M.E. -we to E. -ow is regular; cf. arrow, M. E. arwe. But it is less easy to explain the M. E. form, which we should expect to be pule, as the A.S. is pyle, Ælfred, tr. of Orosius, b. v. c. 11. § 1. However, both M.E. pilwe and A.S. pyle are alike due to Lat. puluinus, a cushion, pillow, bolster; a word of β. The Lat. puluinus also gave rise to Du. uncertain origin. peuluw, a pillow, and G. pfuhl, a pillow. E. Müller cites the M. H. G. phulwe, O. H. G. phulwi; and we may note that the M. H. G. phulwe resembles M. E. pilwe, whilst the G. pfull comes near to A. S. pyle. Der. pillow, vb., Milton, Ode on Christ's Nativity, l. 231; pillow-case. PILOT, one who conducts ships in and out of harbour. (F., - Du.?) Spelt pylot in Gascoigne, Voyage into Holland, A.D. 1572, I. 44; cf. Mach. i. 3. 28. – F. pilot, 'a pilot or steersman ; Cot. Mod. F. pilote, Connected with piloter, to take soundings, a word used by Palsgrave, ed. 1852, p. 709.  $\beta$ . This early use of piloter as a verb renders it very probable (as admitted by Littré and Scheler) that the F. word is borrowed from Du. piloot, a pilot, rather than the contrary, as supposed by Diez. The O. Du. form was pijloot (Hexham); a word which is immediately explicable as being equivalent to pijl-loot, i. e. one who uses the sounding-lead; compounded of Du. pijlen, 'to sound the water' (Hexham), and loot, lead. Hexham also gives : 'een dieploot, grondi-loot, ofte [or] sinck-loot, a pilots or a saylers plummet, to sound the depth of the water; ' and ' lootmans water, water to sound.' Y. So also G. peilen, to sound; peil (as a nautical term), water-mark; peil-loth, a lead, plummet. 5. It is clear that the lit. sense of Du. peil-lock, a lead, plummet. pijloot (= G. peillotk) must have been 'a plummet or sounding-lead; the transference in application from the plummet to the man who used it is curious, but there are several such examples in language; e.g. we call a sailor 'a blue-jacket,' and a soldier 'a red-coat;' we speak of 'a troop of horse,' meaning ' horse-men;' and the man who wields the bow-oar in a boat is simply called 'bow.' As to Du. pijl, it is the same word as E. pile, a great stake, from Lat. pilum; Hexham has the pl. pijlen, i piles, great stakes.' The earliest con-trivance for sounding shallow water must certainly have been a long pole. The O. Du. pijle, peyle, 'a plummet of lead' (Hexham), is, perhaps, a mere derivative from the verb pijlen. The Du. looi, G. loih, is E. lead. See, therefore, Pile (2) and Lead (2). Der. pilot, torn, is E. tada. See, therefore, Flie (2) and Lead (2). Der. pitot; vb., pilot-age, pilot-cloth, pilot-fish. [†] PIMENTO, all-spice or Jamaica pepper; or, the tree producing it. (Port., -L.) Also called pimenta; both forms are in Todd's Johnson. - Port. pimenta (Vieyra); there is also (according to Mahn) a form pimento. The Spanish has both pimienta and pimiento; but the E. word clearly follows the Port. form. β. The O. F. piment meant 'a spiced drink,' and hence the M. E. piment, Rom. of the Rose, 6027. All these forms are from Lat. pigmentum, (1) a pigment, (2) the juice of plants. See Pigment.

iii (R.) Probably equivalent to F. pp. pimple, but in any case connected with the F. verb pimple. - F. timple, 'sprucified, finified, curiously pranked, comptly tricked up;' pp. of pimple, 'to sprucifie, or finifie it;' Cot. It may have merely meant 'a spruce fellow,' and have easily acquired a bad sense; but Littre notes that pimple is merely a nasalised form from piper, which not only meant 'to pipe,' but also, as Cotgrave says, 'to cousen, deceive, cheat, gull, overreach.' In this view, a pimp is 'a cheat' as well as 'a spruce fellow;' the B. Littré combination of meanings suits the E. word well enough. cites the Prov. verb pimpar, to render elegant, from the Prov. sb. pimpa, equivalent to F. pipeau, meaning (1) a pipe, (2) a bird-call, (3) a snare; with an allusion to an old proverb piper en une chose, to pipe in a thing, i. e. to excel in it. Hence pimper came to mean, (1) to pipe, (2) to excel, (3) to beautify or make smart. Cf. also F. pimpto pipe, (2) to excel, (3) to beautify of make smart. Cf. also F. pimp-ant, 'spruce' (Cot.), especially applied to ladies whose dress attracted the cye (Littré). γ. Thus pimper is from piper, to pipe; see Pipe. PIMPERNEL, the name of a flower. (F., -L.) Spelt pympernel in Sir T. Elyot, Castel of Helth, b. iii. c. 5. 'Hec pimpernelle, pimpernolle;' Wright's Voc. i. 191, col. 1. -O. F. pimpernelle, pimpi-nelle, 'the burnet,' Cot.; mod. F. pimprenelle. Cf. Span. pimpinela, wardthe burnet,' Cot.; mod. F. pimprenelle. Cf. Span. pimpinela, burnet; Ital. pimpinella, pimpernel.  $\beta$ . Diez regards these words as corrupted from Lat. bipinella – bipennula, a dimin. from bipennis, i e. double-winged. The pimpernel was confused with burnet (see Prior), and the latter has from two to four scale-like bracts at the base of the calyx; according to Johns, Flowers of the Field.  $\gamma$ . If this be right, we trace the word back to bi-, for bis, twice; and penna, a wing; see Bi- and Pen. δ. Diez also cites Catalan pampinella, Piedmontese pampinela, but regards these as corrupter forms, since we can hardly connect pimpernel with Lat. pampinus, a tendril of a vine.

PIMPLE, a small pustule. (L.) Spelt pimpel in Minsheu, ed. 1627. A nasalised form of A.S. pipel, appearing in the pres. part. pipli-gend, pypylgend, pimply; A.S. Leechdoms, i. 234, note 9, i. 266, note 16. [The alleged A.S. pinpel is Lye's misprint for winpel; Wright's Voc. i. 26, l. 1.] Apparently not an E. word, but a nasalised form of Lat. papula, a pimple. Closely allied nasal forms appear in Gk. for lat. papua, a pimple. Closely affect has not only appear in Ok.  $\pi o \mu \phi \phi e_i$ , a bubble, a blister on the skin; and in Lithuanian pampti, to swell. Thus the orig, sense is 'swelling,'  $\rightarrow \sqrt{PAP}$ , PAMP, to swell; Fick, i. 661. Cf. also Skt. piplu, a freckle, mole, pupputa, a swelling at the palate or teeth; also F. pompette, 'a pumple or pimple on the nose, or chin,' Cot.; and (perhaps) W. pump, a bump.

PIN, a peg, a small sharp-pointed instrument for fastening things together. (L.) M. E. pinne, Chaucer, C. T. 196, 10630. Perhaps from an A.S. pinn, said to mean a pen, also a pointed style for writing ; but this form is due to Somner, and unauthorised. The M.E. tinne or pin often means 'a peg' rather than a small pin in the modern sense. β. We also find Irish pinne, a pin, peg, spigot, stud, pion, a pin, peg; Gael. pinne, a pin, peg, spigot; W. pin, a pin, style, pen; Du. pin, pin, peg; O. Du. penne, a wooden pin, peg (Hexham); pinne, a small spit or ironshod staff, the pinnacle of a steeple (id.); Swed. pinne, a peg, Dan. pind, a (pointed) stick; Icel. pinni, a pin; y. All borrowed words from G. pinnen, to pin; penn, a peg. Y. All borrowed words from Lat. pinna, variant of penna, a feather, pen, fin, pinnacle. In late Lat. penna meant a probe (Ducange); the various senses of the derived words easily suggest that penna, orig. a feather, came to mean, (1) a pen, (2) a style for writing on wax. From the latter sense the transition to the sense of 'peg' was easy. The double form of the Lat. word appears again in Du. and G. See Pen (2). Der. pin, verb, L. L. L. v. 2. 321, M. Plowman, B. xiii. 371. - F. pincer, 'to pinch, nip, twitch;' To the Guernsev dialect, pinchier; Métivier. B. This is a masslised form of O. Ial. pictare, pizzare, 'to pinch, to snip' (Florio), mod. Ital. pizzicare, to pinch, Span. pizcar, to pinch (with which cf. Span. pinchar, to prick, to pierce with a small point); see Diez for Y. These verbs are from the sb. which other related forms. appears as Ital. pinzo, a sting, a goad, O. Ital. pizza, an itching (Florio), Span. pizco, a pinch, nip. y. The orig. sense seems to have been 'a slight pricking with some small pointed instrument;' the word being formed from a base pit (probably Celtic) allied to W. pid, a sharp point. Cf. Du. pilsen, pinsen, to pinch (Hexham). See Potty. Dor. pinck-er; pinch-ers or pinc-ers, M.E. pynsors, Wight's Vocab. i. 180, l. 5, with which cf. F. pinces, 'a pair of pincers,' Cot. > PINDAR, PINNER, one who impounds stray cattle. (E.) See the anonymous play, 'A pleasant conceyted Comedie of George-s-Greene, the pinner of Wakefield,' London, 1599. Spelt pinder in the reprint of 1632. M. E. pinder, pinner; spelt pyndare, pinner in Prompt. Parv. p. 400; and see Way's note. Formed, with suffix er of the agent, from A. S. pyndan, to pen up; Ælfred, tr. of Gregory's Pastoral Care, c. xxxix, ed. Sweet, p. 282, 1. 13. Pyndan is formed (with the usual vowel change from u to y) from the A. S. sb. pund, a pound for cattle; see Pound (2), Pinfold. m The spelling pinner is due to a supposed connection with the verb to pen up; but there is no real relationship. See Pon (1).

PINION, a wing, the joint of a wing. (F.,-L.) Used in Shak. to mean 'feather.' Antony, iii. 12. 4; he also has nimble-pinioned = nimble-winged, Rom. ii. 5. 7. M. E. pinion. 'Pynion of a wynge, pensula;' Prompt. Parv.—F. pignon, only given by Cotgrave in the sense of 'a finial con or small magle on the xides or to of a pennula;' Prompt. Parv. – F. pignon, only given by Cotgrave in the sense of 'a finiall, cop, or small pinacle on the ridge or top of a house,' like mod. F. pignon, a gable-end. The sense of the E. word was probably derived from some dialectal F. pignon; we find O. F. pignon in the sense of 'pennon on a lance,' for which Burguy gives a quotation; and the Span. piñon means 'pinion,' as in English.  $\beta$ . Both F. pignon and Span. piñon are derivatives from Lat. pinna, variant of penna, a wing, feather, fin. In Low Lat. pinna means 'a peak,' whence the sense of F. pignon; the same sense appears in Lat. pinnaculum. See Pen (a), Pennon, Pinnacle. ¶ The E. pinion, in the sense of 'a small wheel working with teeth into another,' is really the same word; it is taken from F. pignon, with the same sense (Littré), which is from Lat. pinna, in the sense of 'float of a water-wheel' (White). Cotgrave gives 'pinon, the pinnion of a clock.' Der. pinion, verb, lit. to fasten the pinions of a bird, hence, to tie a

PINK (1), to pierce, stab, prick. (C.) Esp. used of stabbing so as to produce only a small hole, as, for instance, with a thin rapier. The word, though unusual, is still extant. 'Pink, to stab or pierce; in the days of rapier-wearing a professed duellist was said to be "a regular pinker and driller;" Slang Dictionary. Todd quotes "a regular pinker and driller;" Stang Dictionary, 1000 quotes from Addison's Drummer: 'They grew such desperate rivals for her, that one of them pinked the other in a duel.' Cotgrave has: 'Eschif-feur, a cutter or pinker.' Shak, has pink'd porringer, i.e. a cap reticulated or pierced with small holes, Hen. VIII, v. 4, 50. M.E. pinken, to prick. 'Heo pynkes with heore penne on heore parchemyn' = they prick with their pens on their parchement; Polit. Songs, ed. Wright, p. 156.  $\beta$ . It is best to regard pink as the regular nasa-lised form of pick, in the sense to peck; from a Celtic source, viz. Gael. and Irish pice, W. pigo, Corn. piga, to prick, sting; see Pick. In fact, the E. pink, to cut silk cloth in round holes or eyes (Bailey), is result to O. E. form. In fact, the F. pink, to cut silk cloth in round holes or eyes (Bailey), is parallel to Q. F. piquer, with the same sense (Cotgrave).  $\gamma$ . E. Müller derives pink from A.S. pyngan, to pierce, Ælfred, tr. of Gregory's Pastoral, c. xl, ed. Sweet, p. 296, l. 7, which is merely bor-rowed from Lat. pungere, to prick. The Lat. pungere (base pug-pt. t. pupugi), is to be referred to  $\checkmark$  PIK, to prick, pierce; cf. Gk. murpos, bitter; see Pungent. 8. The root is the same either way. ¶ The A. S. pyngan is represented, not by pink, but by prov. E. ping, to push, M. E. pingen, to prick, Romance of Otuel, p. 55. See also Pinch, which is an allied word. [†]

55. See also Pinch, which is an ameu word. PINK (2), half-shut, applied to the eyes. (Du., -C.) Obsolete. 'Plumpy Bacchus, with pink eyne;' Shak. Ant. ii. 7. 121. It means

"winking, half-shut;' from O. Du. pincken, or pinck-oogen, 'to shut p PIOUS, devout. (F., -L.) In Macb. iii. 6. 12, 27; and prob. the eyes,' Hexham; where ooge = eye. The notion is that of bringing earlier. - F. pieux (fem. pieuse), 'pious, godly;' Cot. The O. F. to a point, narrowing, or making small, and it is much the same word as Pink (1), from a Celtic source pic, a point. The same notion comes out in the verb to pinch; also in prov. E. pink, a minnow, i.e. a very small fish. See also Pink(3). Dor. pink-eyed, q.v.

PINK (3), the name of a flower, and of a colour. (C.) Spelt pincke, as the name of a flower, Spenser, Shep. Kal. April, 1, 136. [The name of the colour is due to that of the flower, as in the case of violet, menue; in the case of carnation, the flower is named from its colour. Again, the phrase 'pink of perfection' is prob. due to Shakespeare's 'pink of courtesy,' a forced phrase, as remarked by Mercutio; Romeo, ii. 4. 62.] The flower seems to have been named from the delicately cut or peaked edges of the petals; see Pink (1) and Pink (2). Or else from a resemblance to a bud or small eye; see Pink (2); an application which may easily have been suggested by the corresponding use of O. F. orillet, which Cotgrave translates by 'a little eie, also, an oilet-hole; also, the young bud of a tree, &cc., also, a gilliflower, also, a pink.' The use of pink in the sense to pierce, to cut silk cloth into round holes or eyes, has already been noted; see Pink (1). We may note 'pink'd por-ringer,' i.e. cap ornamented with eyelet-holes, in Shak. Hen. VIII, v. 4. 50. ¶ The prov. E. pink, a chaffinch, is W. pine, a chaffinch, connected with W. pine, smart, brisk, gay, fine; this is altogether a different word, and prob. allied to E. Finch. ¶ We cannot, in different word, and prob. allied to E. Finch. ¶ We cannot, in opposition to phonetic laws, derive E. pink from F. pince, a pink; this F. pince also means 'a pincer,' or 'croe, great barre, or lever of iron; also, the view or footing of a deere, the tip, or edge of the bottome of a beast's hoof,' Cot., and is evidently connected with pincer, to nip, pinch. In this case, the F. pince, a pink, clearly takes its name from its peaked edges, since F. pince, a pinc, cicarly cares its name from its peaked edges, since F. pincer is to be referred to a radical meaning 'pointed;' see Pinch. In any case, the ultimate origin of pink, in all senses but (4), is from a Celtic pie, a peak. PINK (4), a kind of boat. (Du.) See Nares. 'Hoy's, pinks, and sloops;' Crabbe, The Borough, let. 1, l. 52. – Du. pink, a fishing-boat. The derivation is very curious, and is pointed to by Scheler in a note to the 4th edition of Diez; though Scheler fails after all to explain it. Pink is a corruption of O. Du. espincke, as shewn by Hexham, who has: 'Espinche, or pincke, a pinke, or a small fisher's boat.' This is the same word as Swed. esping, Icel. espingr, a long boat; formed with suffix ing from esp-, signifying 'aspen,' of which wood it must have been first made. Cf. Icel. espi, aspen-wood; O. Du. espe, 'an aspe-tree;' Hexham. See Aspon.

PINK-EYED, having small eyes. (Hybrid; Du., -C.; and E.) 'Them that were pinke-eied and had very small eies, they termed "Them that were pinke-eiea and Aad very small eles, they termed ocella; ' Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xi. c. 37 (on the Eye). See Nares. 'Plumpy Bacchus, with pink [half-closed] eyne;' Antony, ii. 7. 121. - Du. pinken, to wink. Hexham has: 'pincke, light, or an eye; pincken, ofte [or] pinck-cogen, to shut the eyes; pimpooge, ofte [or] pimpoogen, pinck-eyes, or pinck-eyed.' See further under Pink (2). PIINNACE, a small ship. (F.,-Ital.,-L.) In Shak. Merry Wives, i. 3. 89. - F. pinasse, 'the pitch-tree; also, a pinnace;' Cot. -O. Ital. pinaccia, pinazza, 'a kind of ship called a pinnace;' Florio. So called because made of pine-wood. - Lat. pinus, a pine; see Pine (1). PINNACLE, a slender turret, small spire. (F., - L.) M. E. pinacle, Gower, C. A. ii. 124, l. 20; spelt pynacle, Wyclif, Matt. iv. 5. -F. pinacle, 'a pinacle, a spire;' Cot.-Lat. pinnaculum, a pinnacle, peak of a building; Matt. iv. 5 (Vulgate). Double dimin. (with suffire sculue) from size a mine to the building in the second sec suffixes -cu-lu-) from pinna, a wing, feather, hence, a feather-like adjunct to a building. See Pin, Pen (2), Pinnate.

PINNATE, feather-like. (L.) A botanical term. · Pinnata folia, among herbalists, such leaves as are deeply indented, so that the parts resemble feathers; Phillips, ed. 1706.-Lat. pinnatus, feathered.-Lat. pinna, for penna, a feather. See Pen (2).

PINT, a measure for liquids. (F.,-Span.,-L.) M.E. pinte, prote; Prompt. Parv. - F. pinte, 'a pint;' Cot. - Span. pinta, a spot, blemish, drop, mark on cards, pint. So called from the pint being marked by a mark outside (or inside) a vessel of larger capacity. The lit. sense is 'painted,' hence a mark, spot, &c. Cf. Span. pintor, β. The Span. pinta, pintor, pintura, a painter, pintura, a painting. answer to Lat. pieta, pietor, pietura. Thus prima is from Lat. pieta, fem. of pietus, painted, pp. of pingere, to paint; see Paint. PIONEER, a soldier who clears the way before an army. (F.,- Richardson quotes the spelling pyoner from Berners' tr. of Froissart, vol. i. c. 138.-F. pionnier, 'a pioner;' Cot. B. F. pionnier, O. F. peonier, is a mere extension of F. pion, O. F. pron, a foot-soldier; with the more special meaning of foot-soldier who works at digging mines. For the etymology of O. F. peon, see Pawn (2). PIONY, the same as Poony, q. v.

form was pius (Littré), directly from Lat. pius, holy; not from a form piosus *. The root of Lat. pius is uncertain. Der. pious-ly; piety. Timon, iv. 1. 15, a coined word, and a doublet of pity, q.v.; piet-ist, borrowed from G. pietist, the name of a Protestant sect in Germany instituted about 1689 (Haydn), and taking their name from their devotion, the word being a mere coinage (with suffix -ist) from a part of the stem (piet-) of Lat. pietas. And see pity.

PIP (1), a disease of fowls, in which a horny substance grows on FLP (1), a disease of towls, in which a normy substance grows on the tip of the tongue. (F, -L) M. E. pipps, pypps (once dissyllabic). 'Pypps, sekenesse [sickness], Pituita;' Prompt. Parv. 'Pypps, a sickenesse, pepye;' Palsgrave. -O. F. pepie, 'pip;' Cot. Cf. Span. pepita, the pip (Neuman); Ital. pipita, Port. pevide (in the phrase pevide de gallinhas, the pip).  $\beta$ . All from Lat. pituita, phlegm, theum, the pip; which must first have passed into the form pivita, red a Directed for the phrase of the phrase period. and afterwards into that of pepita (Diez). Hence also O. H. G. phiphis, the pip, cited by Diez; Du. pip; O. Swed. pip, &c. Y. Lat, pituita is formed (with suffix -ita, like -itus in crin-itus) from a verbal stem pitu-sputu-, from sputus, pp. of spuere, to spit out; and means 'that which is spit out,' hence phlegm, &c. The Lat. spuere is cognate with A.S. spiwan; see Spow.

PIP (2), the seed of fruit. (F., -L.?-Gk.?) This is nothing but Pippin is in Cotgrave; pepin in Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xv. c. 14, ed. 1634, p. 438 1; b. xvii. c. 10, p. 511 a, b. -F. pepin, 'a pippin or kernel, the seed of fruit;' Cot. Allied to Span. pepita, a pip, kernel; and prob. to Span. pepino, a cucumber.  $\beta$ . It is conjectured that the name was first applied to the pips of the melon or cucumber, and that the derivation is, accordingly, from Lat. pepo, a melon, borrowed from Gk. wirrow, a melon, orig. an adj. signifying 'ripe.' The Gk. wirrow meant 'ripened by the heat of the sun,' lit. 'cooked,' from were, base of mérreue, to cook, allied to Skt. pach, to cook, and to Lat. coquere; see Cook.  $\P$  Would it not be simpler to refer F. pepin to Gk. ##www, ripe, more directly, the presence of pips indicating ripeness? This would not disturb the etymology. The odd re-Inclusion of the second point of the transformation of tr a kernel, is merely defusive; confusion between the pip occurs as caused corruption of the word now considered. Yet pip occurs as caused corruption of the word now considered. The true name is pick, still preserved provincially. 'Pick, a diamond at cards: Grose says it means a spade,' Halliwell; and see Brockett. 'A diamond, or picke at cards;' Minsheu, ed. 1627. - O. F. picque, pique, 'a spade, at cards;' Cot. It also means a pike; see Pike, Pique. The word seems to have meant (1) a spade, (2) a diamond, and (3) a pip (on cards) in general.

PIPE, a musical instrument formed of a long tube; hence, any long tube, or tube in general. (E.) The musical sense is the orig. one. M.E. pipe, Wyclif, Luke, vii. 32; Chaucer, C. T. 2753. The pl. pipen is in Layamon, 5110. - A. S. pipe, a pipe, A. S. Leechdoms, ed. Cockayne, ii. 126, l. 3; and in comp. song-pipe, a song-pipe, in the Glosses to Prudentius (Leo).  $\beta$ . The word perhaps may be claimed as English, being obviously of imitative origin, from the 'peeping' or chirping sound; the pipe was frequently used to imitate and decoy birds. It is very widely spread. We find Irish and Gael. piob, a pipe, flute, tube; Irish pib, a pipe, tube; W. pib, a pipe, tube, pipian, to pipe, pibo, to pipe, squirt. Also Du. pijp, Icel. pipa, Swed. pipa, Dan. pibe, G. pfeife. Cf. also Lat. pipire, pipare, to peep or chirp as a young bird, Gk. mmi(ev, to chirp. All from the repetition pi-pi of the cry of a young bird. If the word was repetition pi-pi of the cry of a young bird. If the word was borrowed at all, it was, perhaps, taken from Celtic, i. e. from the old British. Der. pipe, verb, Chaucer, C. T. 3874 [not 3974]; pip-er, pip-ing; pipe-elay; and see pip-kin, pib-rock. See also peep (1), peep (2). Doublet, fife. PIPKIN, a small earthen pot. (E.) 'A pipkin, or little pot;'

Minsheu, ed. 1627. A dimin. (with suffix -kin) of E. pipe, in the sense of a vessel, chiefly applied to a cask of wine. This particular sense may have been imported. It occurs both in French and Dutch. 'Pipe, a measure called a pipe, used for corn as well as wine; ' Cot. 'Een pijpe met obye ofte wijn, a pipe or caske with oyle or wine;' Hexham. PIPPIN, a kind of tart apple. (F.?-L.?-Gk.?) In Shak. Merry Wives, i. 2. 13; and in Minsheu, ed. 1627. Cotgrave explains F. renette as 'the apple called a pippin, or a kind thereof.' Sometimes said to be named from pip(3), because of the spots upon it, which utterly fails to explain the suffix -in. We must rather connect it with pip(2), of which the old spelling was actually pippin, as has been shewn. That is, it was named with reference to the pips inside it (not outside); 'prob. an apple raised from the pip or seed,' Wedgwood. See Pip (2). ¶ Hexham has Du. ' pippinck, called a pippinck.' But the Du. word seems to have been borrowed from E., and they hardly knew what to make of it. Thus Sewel's Du. Dict. has yet another form pippeling, with the example 'Engelsche pippelingen, English pippins. [†] PIQUE, wounded pride. (F., -C.) Oddły spelt pike in Cot-grave, who is an early authority for it. -O. F. picque, pique, 'a pike; also, a pikeman; also a pike, debate, quarrel, grudge; 'Cot. B. Of Celtic origin; see Pike. Der. pique, verb; piquant (as in 'piquant sauce,' Howell, Familiar Letters, vol. i. sect. 5. let. 38 [not 36], where, by the way, the spelling is pickant), from F. piquant, pres. part. of piquer, verb. Hence piquant-ly, piquanc-y. PIQUET, a game at cards. (F.,-C.)

'Piquet, or Picket, a certain game at cards, perhaps so called from pique, as it were a small contest or scuffle;' Phillips, ed. 1706. This is ingenious, and perhaps true; Littré says the game is supposed to have been named from its inventor. In any case, piquet is a doublet of Picket, q. v. PIRATE, a sea-robber, corsair.  $(F_{.,}-L_{.,}-Gk.)$  In Shak. Merch. Ven. i. 3, 25. – F. pirate, 'a pirat;' Cot. – Lat. pirata. – Gk. second s, one who attempts or attacks, a pirate. Formed with suffix -rns (Aryan -ta) from  $\pi\epsilon\iota\rho\dot{a}$ , a lattempt. -Gk.  $\pi\epsilon\dot{\mu}a$ , an attempt, trial, essay. -  $\sqrt{PAR}$ , to go through, experience; appearing in Gk. welow, I pierce (perf. pass. we-map-uai), and in E. ex-per-ience and fare; see Fare, Experience. Der. firat-ic-al, pirat-ic-al-ly;

PIROGUE, a sort of canoe. (F.,-W. Indian.) Sometimes spelt piragua, which is the Span. spelling. Both F. pirague and Span. piragua are from the native W. Indian name. The word is said to be Caribbean (Littré).

PIROUETTE, a whirling round, quick turn, esp. in dancing. F.) Formerly used as a term in horsemanship. 'Pirouette, Pirout, (F.) Formerly used as a term in horsemanship. a turn or circumvolution, which a horse makes without changing his ground ;' Bailey's Dict., vol. ii. ed. 1751.-F. pirouette, 'a whirligig, also a whirling about ;' Cot. β. Origin unknown, according to Littre; but in Metivier's Dict. Franco-Normand appears the Guernsey word piroue, a little wheel or whirligig, a child's toy, of which pirouette is obviously the diminutive. Metivier well compares this with the E. pirie or pirry, formerly in use to denote 'a whirlwind.' The spelling has prob. been affected by confusion with F. row (Lat. roto), a wheel. And not be aferde [afraid] of pirries or great stormes;' Sir T. Elyot, The Governor, b. i. c. 17; in Skeat, Spec. of English, p. 197. See further examples of pirry in Richardson, s. v. perry (which is an inferior spelling), and in Prompt. Parv. s.v. pyry; also in Nares. Y. I take this word to be of imitative origin; cf. Scotch pirr, a gentle wind, Icel. byrr, wind; E. birr, buzz, with which compare also purr, tohirr, purl. Similarly we find Span. birazones, land and sea breezes, O. F. birrasque, 'a high going sea, or tempest at sea, caused by whirlwinds, and accompanied by gusts of raine,' Cot. The latter is a Gascon word, from the Gascon birer, to turn. These examples lead to a base bir- or pir-, with the same sense as E. whirr. Hence pir-ou-ette may very well = whirl-igig, and pirry = whirl-wind. In fact, we find M. E. pirle, prille, a whirligig, pirr. Der. pirouette, vb. [+] PISCES, the Fish; a zodiacal sign. (L.) M. E. Pisces, Chancer,

C. T. 6286. - Lat. pisces, pl. of piscis, a fish; cognate with E. Fish, q.v. Der. pisc-ine; pisci-vorous, fish-eating, from Lat. worare, to devour; pisc-at-or-y, from Lat. piscatorius, belonging to fishing, from piscator, a fisherman, formed from piscatus, pp. of piscari, to fish. PISH, an interjection, expressing contempt. (E.) In Shak. Oth.

ii. 1. 270; iv. 1. 42. Of imitative origin; it begins with expulsion of breath, as in pook l, and ends with a hiss.

PISMIRE, an ant. (Hybrid; F. and Scand.) In Shak. I Hen. IV, i. 3. 240. 'The old name of the ant, an insect very generally named from the sharp urinous smell of an ant-hill;' Wedgwood. M. E. pissemire (four syllables), Chaucer, C. T. 7407. - M. E. pisse, urine; and mire, an ant, in Reliquiæ Antiquæ, i. 214 (Stratmann). β. The A.S. mire, given in Benson's A.S. Dict., is See Piss. unauthorised, but may be correct; still, the true E. word is emmet or ant, and mire is rather Scandinavian, appearing in Icel. maurr, Swed. myra, Dan. myre, an ant, as also in Du. mier. Y. The word is very widely spread; we find also Irish moirbh, W. mor-grugyn, Bret. merinterner, Russ. mur-cavei, Gk. μόρ-μηf, all meaning 'ant,' for which Cur-tius proposes a root MUR, to swarm; cf. Gk. μυρίοι, ten thousand. The Cornish murrian means 'ants.' See Myriad. notes a similar method of naming an ant in the Low G. misgemke, an ant: from misgen = Lat. mingere. Rietz connects mire with midge, but this presents much difficulty, midge being from a base MUGYA (Fick, iii. 241), and containing a g which it is difficult to dispose of.

puppinck, a pipping, an apple so called;' also 'pupping, an apple & ed. Halliwell, p. 249 (Stratmann). - F. pisser; supposed to be a Romance word, and of imitative origin. Cf. Spelt pistachoe or pistake-nut in Phillips, ed. 1706. - Span. pistachoe (with ch as in English), a pistachio, pistich-nut. - Lat. pistacium. -Gk. πιστάκιον, a nut of the tree called πιστάκη.- Pers. pistá, the PISTOL, a small hand-gun. (F., - Ital.) In Shak. Merry Wives, iv. 2. 53; and as a proper name. -F. pistole, 'a pistoll, a great horseman's dag;' Cot. [Here dag is an old name for a pistol.] – Ital. pistola, 'a dag or pistoll;' Florio.  $\beta$ . We also find Ital. pistolese, 'a great dagger,' in Florio; and it seems to be agreed that the two words are closely connected; that the word pistolese is the older one; and that the name was transferred from the dagger to the pistol, both being small arms for similar use. The E. name dag for pistol confirms this; since dag must be the F. dague, a dagger. Y. Both pistolese and pistola are said to be named from a town in Tuscany, near Florence, now called Pistoja. The old name of the town must have been Pistola, as asserted by Mahn; and this is rendered extremely probable by the fact that the old Latin name of the town was Pistoria, which would easily pass into Pistola, and finally into Pistoja. 'Pistols were first used by the cavalry of England about 1544;' Haydn. Der. pistol, vb., Tw. Nt. ii. 5. 42; pistol-et.

Doublet, pistole. PISTOLE, a gold coin of Spain. (F., - Ital.) In Dryden, The Spanish Friar, Act v. The dimin. form pistolet is in Beaum. and Fletcher, The Spanish Curate, Act. i. sc. 1 (Jamie). Yet the word is not Spanish, but French. The forms pistole and pistolet, in the sense of 'pistole,' are the same as pistole and pistolet in the sense of pistol. - Pistolet, a pistolet, a dag, or little pistoll, also, the gold coin tearmed a pistolet; Cot. Diez cites from Claude Fauchet (died 1599) to the effect that the crowns of Spain, being reduced to a smaller size than French crowns, were called pistolets, and the smallest pistolets were called bidets; cf. 'Bidet, a small pistoll;' Cot. Thus the name is one of jocular origin; and the words pistole and pistol are doublets. Pistol, being more Anglicised, is the older word in English

PISTON, a short cylinder, used in pumps, moving up and down within the tube of the pump. (F., - Ital., - L.). In Bailey's Dict, vol. ii. ed. 1731. - F. piston, 'a pestell, or pounding-stick;' Cot. In mod. F. 'a piston.' - Ital. pistone, a piston; the same word as persone, a large heavy pestle. - Ital. pestare, to pound. - Late Lat. pistare, to pound (White); formed from pistus, pp. of pinsere, pisere, to pound. - YPIS, to pound. See Pestle, Pistil, Pes.

PIT, a hole in the earth. (L.) M. E. pit, Wyclif, Luke, xiv. 5; put, Ancren Riwle, p. 58, l. 4. - A. S. pyt, pytt; Luke, xiv. 5. - Lat. puteus, a well, pit; Luke, xiv. 5 (Vulgate). B. Perhaps orig. a well of pure water, a spring; and so connected with Lat. putus, pure, from the same root as purus; see Pure. Der. pit, verb, to set in competition, a phrase taken from cock-fighting. PITCH (1), a black sticky substance. (L.) M.E. pick, pyck; Rob. of Glouc. p. 410, l. 12; O. Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, i. 251, l. 24; older form pik, id. i. 260, l. 22. - A.S. pic, Exod. ii. 3. - Lat. pic. stem of pix, pitch. Hence also G. pech. β. Allied words are Gk. πίσσα (for πικ-ya), Lithuan. pikkis, pitch. Also Lat. pinus, a pine-tree, Gk. πίτυs, a pine-tree; Skt. pitudárus, pútudárus, the name of an Indian pine (lit. pitch-tree, since ddrus = tree). See Curtius, i. 201, who cites the Skt. word from Fick. See Pine (1). Der. pitch, verb; pitch-y, All's Well, iv. 4. 24. Also pay (2).

PITCH (2), to throw, to fall headlong, to fix a camp, &c. (C.) A weakened form of pick, to throw. Cor. i. 1. 204; esp. used of throwing a pike or dart. 'I pycke with an arrowe, Ie darde;' Pals-The Cornish murrian means 'ants.' See Myriad. ¶ Wedgwood hotes a similar method of naming an ant in the Low G. miegemka, na ant: from miegen = Lat. mingere. S. piδa, Ælfred, tr. of Boethius, c. xxxiv. § 10; lib. iii. pr. 11. + Du. pit, pith; O. Du. pitte (Hexham). + Low G. peddik, pith (Bremen Wörterbuch). β. PITTANCE, an allowance of food, a dole, small portion. (F.) M. E. pitance (with one 1), pitaunce, P. Plowman, C. x. 92; Ancren Riwle, p. 114, l. 5.-F. pitance, 'meat, food, victuall of all sorts,  $\beta$ . Of disputed etymology; bread and drinke excepted;' Cot. cf. Span. pitanza, a pittance, the price of a thing, salary; Iïal. pistanza, a pittance, portion. In all probability the Ital. pistanza is a popular corruption, due to a supposed connection with pietà, pity, mercy, as if to give a pittance were to give alms. The Lombard form is still pitanza (Diez). Diez connects pitance with O. F. pite, a thing of little worth, which he further connects with petit, small; and he supposes pittance to be from the same Celtic origin as petty; see Petty. y. The Span. pitar means to distribute allowances of meat, &c., and is clearly a connected word; this seems at once to set aside any connection with piety or pity. But Ducange gives the Low Lat. pictantia as a pittance, a portion of food (given to monks) of the value of a pieta, which he explains to be a very small coin issued by the counts of Poitiers (moneta comitum Pictavensium). This answers to O.F. pite, 'the half of a maille, a French farthing, also, a moath, a mite;' Cot. 8. This brings us back to the same O.F. pite, but 8. This brings us back to the same O. F. pite, but suggests a different origin for that word, viz. Low Lat. picta, a Poitiers coin. And this Lat. picta is supposed to be a mere abbrevia-tion from Lat. Pictava, i.e. Poitiers (White). If this be right, the origin is really French.

PITY, sympathy, mercy. (F., -L.) M. E. pité, Floriz and Blauncheflor, ed. Lumby, 529; Ancren Riwle, p. 368, l. 14. -O. F. pite (pité), 13th cent. (Littré); pitet, 12th cent. (id.)-Lat. pietatem, acc. of pietas; see Piety. Der. pity, verb, As You Like It, ii. 7. 117; piti-able, piti-abl-y, piti-able-ness; piti-ful, All's Well, iii. 2. 130; piti-ful-ly, piti-ful-ness; piti-less, As You Like It, iii. 5. 40; piti-less-ly, piti-ful-ly, piti-gr-ly. Also pite-ous, a corruption of M. E. pit-ous, Chaucer, C. T. 8950, 8962, spelt pitos, Rob. of Glouc., p. 204, l. 12, from O. F. piteus, mod. F. piteus, 'pitiful, merciful,' Cot. = Low Lat. pierossa, merciful. And hence piteous-ly.

PIVOT, a pin upon which a wheel or other object turns. F., – Ital., – Low Lat.) In Cotgrave. – F. pivol, 'the pivot or, as some call it, the tampin of a gate, or great doore, a piece of iron, &cc. made, for the most part, like a top, round and broad at one end and sharp at the other, whereby it enters into the crappaudine [iron wherein the pivot plays]; and serves as well to bear up the gate as to facilitate the motion thereof;' Cot. Formed, with dimin. suffix  $\infty$ , from Ital. piva, a pipe, a weakened form of pipa, a pipe. – Low Lat. pipa, a pipe; connected with Lat. pipare, pipire, to chirp as a bird; see Flpe.  $\beta$ . The Ital. piva meant (1) a pipe, (2) a tube with a fine bore; and so at last came to mean a solid peg, as well shewn in the O. Ital. dimin. form pivolo, or piviolo, 'a pin or peg of wood, a setting or poaking sticke to set ruffes with, also a gardeners toole to set herbes with called a dibble;' Florio.  $\P$  Scheler intimates some doubt as to this etymology, but whoever will consult the articles piva and pivolo or piviolo in Florio will probably be satisfied: I do not reproduce the whole of his remarks.

PLACABLE, forgiving, easy to be appeased. (L.) In Minsheu, ed. 1627; and in Milton, P. L. xi. 151. Taken directly from Lat. placabilis, easily appeased; formed with suffix -bilis from placa-re, to appease. Allied to placere; see Please. Der. placable, placableness. Also placabili-i, Sir T. Elyot, The Governor, b. ii. c. 6. 447

<sup>b</sup> PLACARD, a bill stuck up as an advertisement.  $(F_n - Du.)$  In Minsheu, ed. 1637; he notes that it occurs in the 2nd and 3rd years of Philip and Mary (1555, 1556). – F. placard, plaquard, 'a placard, an inscription set up,'&c.;.. also a bill, or libell stuck upon a post; also, rough-casting or pargetting of walls;' Cot. The last is the orig sense. Formed with suffix -ard (of O.H.G. origin, from G. Aart = E. hard) from the verb plaquer, 'to parget or to rough-cast, also, to clap, slat, stick, or paste on;' Cot. – F. plaque, 'a flat lingot [ingot] or barre of metall, ... a plate to naile against a wall and to set a candle in;' Cot. – Du. plak, a ferula, a slice; O. Du. plack, 'a ferule or a small batle-dore, wherewith schoole-boys are strooke in the palmes of their hands;' Hexham.  $\beta$ . This Du. word seems to have meant any thin slice or plate, whence the F. use of plaque. However, all doubt as to the derivation is removed by observing the use of the Du. verb plakken, viz. to paste, glue, formerly also 'to dawbe or to plaister,' Hexham. [The Du. plakkaat, a placard, is merely borrowed back again from the French.]  $\gamma$ . The Du. plak is cognate with G. bleck, a plate, and comes from a base PLAK, with the notion of flatness, allied to the base PLAT, with the same notion. See Plate, Place. ¶ Diez prefers this etymology to that sometimes given from Gk.  $\pi\lambda di$  (stem  $\pi\lambda a \omega$ -), a flat surface. This Gk. word is prob. related, but only in a remote way. Der.

PILACE, a space, room, locality, town, stead, way, passage in a book. (F., - L., - Gk.) In early use. In King Horn, ed. Lumby, 718. - F. place, 'a place, room, stead, . . a faire large court;' Cot. - Lat. platea, a broad way in a city, an open space, courtyard. Sometimes platea, but properly platea, not a true Lat. word, but borrowed. -Gk. *Aareîa, a broad way, a street; orig. fem. of *Aaris, flat, wide. + Lithuan. platus, broad. + Skt. prithus, large, great. Macleod and Dewar consider plaide to be a contraction of Gael. (and Irish) peallaid, a sheep-skin. Cf. Gael. peallag, a shaggy hide, a little covering. These words are from Gael. (and Irish) peall, a skin, hide, also a covering or coverlet. It thus appears that the original plaid was a Formed with suffix -18-08 from #λαστ-όs, formed, moulded. β. Gk. πλάσσειν appears to be put - Gk. πλάσσειν, to mould. for That-year, and to be related to That's, broad. ' The verb Tháosear. with a dental stem (#λάσμα, #λαστόs), probably belongs here [viz. to #λατύε]; so that the fundamental meaning is extendere, expandere, a meaning well adapted for working in soft masses; hence also *ipaxlag-*roor, plaster; 'Curtius, i. 346. 'A gardin platte;' Udall's Erasmus, Luke, fol. 174 a (1548). See further under Plot, Patch. The spelling plat is prob. due to M.E. plat, F. plat, flat; for which see Plate.

PLAT (2), to plait. (F.,-L.) In Shak. Romeo, i. 4. 89. The same as Plait, q. v. PLATANE, a plane-tree; see Plane (3). PLATE, a thin piece of metal, flat dish. (F.,-Gk.) M. E. plate, Chaucer, C. T. 2123.-O. F. and F. plate, in use in the 12th century; see Littré. Hamilton, s. v. plat (flat), gives 'Vaisselle plate, hammered plate ; particularly, plate, silver plate.' Plate is merely the fem. of F. plat, flat. Cf. Low Lat. plata, a lamina, plate of metal, Ducange; and esp. Span. plata, plate, silver (whence La Plata). But the Span. word was derived from the French; Littre.-Gk. πλατύε, broad; whence Du. and Dan. plat, G. and Swed. platt, are borrowed; see Place. Der. plate, vb., Rich. PLATOON, a group of men, sub-division of a company of soldiers. (F., -L.) 'Platoon, a small square body of 40 or 50 men,' &c.; Bailey's Dict., vol. ii. ed. 1731. Corrupted from F. peloton, pronounced plo-tong, a ball, tennis-ball, group, knot, platoon; Hamilton. Formed, with suffix -on, from F. pelote, a ball; whence also E. pellet. See Pellet. PLATTER, a flat plate or dish. (F., -Gk.) M. E. plater (with one 1), Wyclif, Matt. xxiii. 25. Formed (with substitution of the suffix -er for -el, by the common interchange of l and r) from O. F. platel, a plate (Burguy), which is also the origin of mod. F. plateau, still used in the sense of 'waiter, tray, tea-board; 'Hamilton. Thus platter and plateau are doublets. See Plateau. PLAUDIT, applause. (L.) The form plaudit is due to mis-reading the Lat. plaudite as if it were an E. word, in which the final e would naturally be considered as silent. Sometimes the pronunciation in three syllables was kept up, with the singular result that the suffix -itè was then occasionally mistaken for the ordinary E. suffix -iy. Hence we find 3 forms; (1) the correct Latin form, considered as trisyllabic. After the plaudite's stryke up Our plausible assente; as trisinance. Anter the plaudite strike up out plausible assence, Drant, tr. of Horace, Art of Poetry (R.) (a) The form in -ivy. 'And give this virgin crystal plaudities;' Cyril Tourneur, The Revenger's Tragedy, Act ii. sc. 1 (R.) (3) The clipped E, form. 'Not only the last plaudit to expect;' Denham, Of Old Age, pt. iv. (R.)-Lat. plaudite, clap your hands; a cry addressed by the actors to the spectators, requesting them to express their satisfaction. It is the imperative pl. of plaudere, to applaud, also spelt plodere; see Plausible. Der. plaudit-or-y, an ill-coined word, neither French nor Latin.

PLAY, a game, sport, diversion. (E.; perhaps L.) M. E. play, Chaucer, C. T. 8906. – A. S. plega, a game, sport, Grein, ii. 361.  $\beta$ . We may note how frequently the A. S. plega was used in the sense of fight, skirmish, battle. Thus æsc-plega, ash-play, is the play of spears, i. e. fighting with spears; sweord-plega, sword-play, fighting with swords. Even in the Bible, 2 Sam. ii. 14, to play really means to fight; but this is due to the use of ludere in the Lat. version; Wyclif uses the same word. To play on an instrument is to strike upon it. Cf. 'tympanan plegiendra' = of them that strike the timbrels; A. S. version of Ps. lxvii. 27, ed. Spelman. And again, 'plegað mid handum' = clap hands; Ps. xlvi. 1. Thus the orig. sense of plega is a stroke, blow, and plegian is to strike. Y. The base is PLAG, and, considering the scarcity of Teutonic words with initial p, it is most likely that the word is merely a borrowed one, from Lat. plaga, a blow, stroke, thrust. See Plague. If plega were cognate with plaga, it would be less similar in form. ¶ E. Müller considers A.S. plega equivalent to O. Fries. plega, custom, G. pflege, care; but, though the form exactly answers, the sense is so widely different that it is hard to see a connection; see Plight. Der. play, verb, M. E. pleyen, Chaucer, C. T. 3333, A. S. plegian, formed from the sb. plega, not vice versa. Also play-bill, -book, -fellow, -house, -mate, Formed from Low Lat. plessa, a thicket of interwoven boughs, occurring A.D. 1215 (Ducange). He also gives the verb pleetare, to plash; but O. F. plesser answers rather to a form pleetiare\*. We also find plesseium, a pleached hedge; and numerous similar forms.  $\beta$ . All from pleetere, to weave, or from the pp. plexus, woven. Plec-t-ere is extended from the base PLAK, to weave, appearing in Gk. where we to weave, and in Lat. plic-are, to fold. See Ply, Plait.

PLEAD, to urge an excuse or plea. (F.,-L.) M. E. pleden. Pledoures shulde peynen hem to plede for such' = pleaders should take pains to plead for such; P. Plowman, B. vii. 42. [We also find the form pleten, id. vii. 30.] Also plaiden, Owl and Nightingale, 184.
O. F. plaider, 'to plead, argue, or open a case before a judge, also, to sue, contende, goe to law;' Cot. = O. F. plaid, a plea; see Plea.
The form pleten is due to O. F. plei, an occasional form of plaid public before a M. F. defour. which preserves the t of Lat. placitum. Dor. plead-er = M. E. pledour, as above, from F. plaideur, 'a lawyer, arguer, pleader,' Cot. Also place of -or. The object seems to have been to give the word an apparent substantival ending. B. Again, the F. plaisir is merely a substantival use of the O. F. infin. plaisir, to please; just as F. loisir (leisure) is properly an infinitive also. Sce Please. Der. pleasure, verb, in Tottell's Miscellany, ed. Arber, p. 128, 1.16 of Poem on the Death of Master Deuerox ; also pleasure-boat, pleasure-ground ; pleasur-able, a coined word; pleasur-abl-y, pleasur-able-ness. PLEAT, the same word as Plait, q. v. In Shak. Cor. i. 9. 7; ii. 1. 10; &c. - O. F. plebeien, mod. F. plebeien; omitted by Cotgrave, but in use in the 14th century; Littré. also, a security, Prompt. Parv. - O. F. plege, 'a pledge, a surety,' Cot.; mod. F. pleige. Connected with O. F. plevir (Burguy), later pleuvir, 'to warrant, assure,' Cot.; see Replevy.  $\beta$ . Of uncertain etymology; but Diez points out that O.F. plege cannot be from Lat. prædium, nor allied to præs, a surety, because this would not give the v in O.F. plevir. It corresponds rather to a Lat. form prabium \*, a thing offered, from præbere (answering to plevir), to offer, proffer, furnish, render, give up. There is a Prov. form pleuzo which answers exactly, in form, to Lat. prabitio, a providing, provision. I would add that the Lat. prabere also suits well with the M.E. sense of 'hostage' for plegge, as applied to persons. Y. The Lat. probere is for prakibere; see Probond. Dor. pledge, verb, 3 Hen. VI, iii.

Englished from Lat. plausibilis, praiseworthy. Formed, with suffix -bilis, from plausi-= plauso-, stem of plausus, pp. of plaudere, plodere, to strike, beat, clap by the curious change of -ir into -ure, from F. plaisir, pleasure; the Gø

PLENARY, full, complete. (Low Lat., -L.) Spelt plenarie in Minsheu, ed. 1627. Englished from Low Lat. plenarius, entire, occurring A.D. 1340 (Ducange); which is extended, with suffix -arius, from Lat. plenus, full.  $\beta$ . Lat. plenus is connected with Gk.  $\pi\lambda i - \omega s$ , full,  $\pi i \mu = \pi \lambda \eta - \mu a$ , I fill; from the base PLA=PAL=  $\checkmark$  PAR, to fill; whence also E. Full, q. v. F. plentivous (Burguy); this form appears to be made with suffix -ose (= Lat. -osus) from O. F. plentif (Burguy), answering to a Lat. form plenitieus \*; hence plenteous stands for plenitieusus \*, a form not found. Hence plenteous-ly, -ness. Also plenti-ful, Hamlet, ii. 2. 202; plenti-ful-ly, -ness.

PLIGHT (1), dangerous condition, condition; also, an engage-ment, promise. (E.) The proper sense is 'peril;' hence a promise involving peril or risk, a promise given under pain of forfeit, a duty, or solemn engagement for which one has to answer. M. E. plint, (1) danger, Layamon, 3897; (2) engagement, Story of Genesis and Exodus, ed. Morris, 1269; (3) condition, spelt plite, Chaucer [Addenda]. - A.S. plikt, risk, danger, used to translate Lat. periselsms in Ælfric's Colloquy, in the Merchant's second speech. Formed with the substantival suffix -t (Aryan -ta) from the strong verb plice, to risk, imperil, in Ælfred's tr. of Gregory's Pastoral Care, ed. Sweet. p. 229, l. 20; the pt. t. pleak occurs in the same, p. 37, 1. 7. + O. Fries. plicht, peril, risk, care; we also find the short form ple, pli, rnes, price, peril, risk, care; we also not the short form gre, par,danger, answering to A. S. plió, danger, in Ælfred, tr. of Gregory, p. 393, l. 9. + O. Du. plicht, 'duty, debt, obligation, administration, office, custom, or use;' Hexham; cf. plegen, 'to be accustomed, to experiment, or trie' [i. e. to risk]; id. + G. pflicht, duty, obligation, faith, allegiance, oath; from the O. H. G. strong verb plegan, to promise or engage to do. ¶ The connection, sometimes asserted, between this word and E. play, seems to me very doubtful. Der. plight, verb, M. E. pligten, plikten, P. Plowman, B. vi. 35, A.S. pliktan, weak verb, to imperil, Laws of King Cnut (Secular), § 67, in Thorpe's Ancient Laws, i. 411; plight-er, Antony, iii. 13. 126. [†] PLIGHT (2), to fold; as sb., a fold. (F.,-L.) Shak, has

'plighted cunning,' K. Lear, i. 1. 283; where the quarto editions have pleated. Spenser has 'with many a folded plight;' F. Q. ii. 3. 26; also plight (=plighted) as a pp. meaning 'folded' or 'plaited,' F. Q. ii. 6. 7, vi. 7. 43.  $\beta$ . The word is really misspelt, by conalso pitget (=pitgetta) as a pp. meaning rotate a parton F. Q. ii. 6. 7, vi. 7. 43.  $\beta$ . The word is really misspelt, by con-fusion with plight (1), and should be plite, without gh. Chaucer has the verb pliten, to fold, Troilus, ii. 697, 1204. It is clearly a mere variant of flait or pleat, though the vowel is difficult to account for. See Plait. ¶ 'Plite of lawne, &c., seemeth to be a certaine measure, or quantitie thereof. Anno 3 Edw. IV, cap. 5;' Minsheu. PLINTH, the lowest part of the base of a column.  $(L_{n} - Gk_{n})$  Plinke, the neather part of a pillars foot, of the forme of a four-square bricke or tile; Minsheu, ed. 1627. Cotgrave gives F. plinthe, 'a plinth,' &c. - Lat. plinthus. - Gk.  $\pi\lambda i \pi \delta \sigma$ , a brick or tile, a brickshaped body, a plinth. Cognate with E. Flint, q.v. Cf. Lithuan. plinta, a flint.

PLOD, to trudge on laboriously, labour unintermittingly. (C.) In Shak. Sonnet 50, Merry Wives, i. 3. 91, All's Well, iii. 4. 6. 'The primitive sense of plod is to tramp through the wet, and thence, figuratively, to proceed painfully and laboriously;' Wedgwood. It nguratively, to proceed paintuity and laborousty; Wedgwood. It particularly means to wade through pools; (frose (ed. 1790) has Plouding, wading through thick and thin; North.' Jamieson has Ploud, to splash; Plouter, to make a noise among water, to be engaged in any wet or dirty work; Plouter, sb., the act of floundering through water or mire; Plotch, to dabble, to work slowly.' [He also notes plod, ploud, a green sod.] The M.E. sb. plod (dat, plodde) meant a fully rough or middle. 'In a foul directed in the strate subtha meant a filthy pool or puddle; ' In a foul plodde in the strete suththe me hym slong' = people then threw him into a foul puddle in the strete suthine street; Rob. of Glouc. p. 536, 1.6. So also Northern plud, a puddle; E. D. S. Gloss. B. I. = Irish plod, plodan, a pool, standing water, plodack, a puddle; whence plodaim, I float, plodanackd, paddling and rowing in water. So also Gael. plod, a clod [accounting for Scot. plod, a green sod], also a pool, standing water, plodana, a small pool; whence plodanackd, a paddling in water. Prob. related to Plash (1), o an Data Aladán a baddling in water. q.v. Der. plodd-er, plodd-ing, plodd-ing-ly.

PLOT (1), a conspiracy, stratagem.  $(F_{..}-L_{.})$  One of the earliest instances of the word seems to be in Spenser, F. Q. vii. 6. 23 (about A.D. 1590); he also has plot as a verb, id. iii. 11. 20. It is hardly possible to assign any other origin for it than by considering it as an abbreviation of complot, used in exactly the same sense, both as a sb. and verb. We have numerous examples of the loss of an initial syllable, as in fence for defence, sport for disport, story for history. The word complot does not appear to be in much earlier use; and further information on this point is desired. Shak, has both plor and complot, and both words are employed by him both as sb. and verb. The sb. complot is in Titus Andron. ii. 3. 265, v. 1. 65, v. 2. 147; the vb. complot in Rich. II, i. 1. 96. Minsheu, ed. 1627, gives complot, but does not recognise plot, except as a ground plan. - F. complot, 'a complot, conspiracy;' whence comploter, 'to complot, conspire, Cot. The O. F. complot means (1) crowd, in the 12th century,

β. Of disputed etymology; but Diez is pp. of complicare, to complicate, involve, lit. to fold together. Another form of the pp. is complicatus. See Complicate, Complex. T Littre thinks the F. word may be from English, and adduces E. plot in the sense of a plot or plat of ground. There does not seem to be any real connection between plot (1) and plot (2); though it is highly probable that the use of E. plot in the sense of a groundplan or 'plat-form' (see Minsheu) caused confusion, and the short-ening of complot to plot. Neither plot (1) nor complot are old words in English, whereas F. complot is found in the 12th century. The very prefix com- indicates a Latin origin. Der. plot, vb., plotter. [+] PLOT (2), PLAT, a small piece of ground. (E.) The sense of plot and of patch is almost exactly the same, and the words (as shewn under Patch) are closely related. A plot is a patch of ground; and it also meant, in M. E., a spot on a garment. 'Many foule plottes' = many dirty spots (on a garment); P. Plowman, B. xiii. 318. In the Prompt. Parv. p. 405, we are told that plot is the same as plek; and we also find 'Piecke, or plotte, portiuncula.' Way's note adds that 'Plet is given by Cole, Ray, and Grose as a North-Country word, signifying a place, and is likewise noticed by Tim Bobbin;' and he correctly refers it to A.S. plac, Matt. vi. 5 (Northumb. version). This pleck is a mere variant of platch, the older form of patch; thus bringing plot and patch into close connection, as above noted. So also Plock, a small meadow (Herefordshire); E. D. S. Gloss. B. 12. The expression 'plot of flowres faire' occurs in the Flower and the Leaf, 1. 499 (15th century). - A.S. plot, a patch of ground; A.S. Leechdoms, ed. Cockayne, iii. 286, 1. 19 (the same passage is in Schmid, Die Gesetze der Angelsachsen, App. XI, l. 5; p. 408, ed. 1858). Cf. Goth. plats, a patch, Mark, ii. 21. ¶ For the spelling plat, see Plat (1). PLOUGH, an instrument for turning up the soil. (Scand.) M.E. ploud, plou, plou; Chaucer, C. T. 889; Havelok, 1017. It can scarcely be called an E. word; the traces of it in A. S. are but slight; we find ploh = a plough-land, in A. S. Leechdoms, ed. Cockayne, iii. 286, l. 19, where is the phrase 'ne plot ne ploh' = neither plot of ground nor plough-land. It is rather Scand. than E., the true A. S. word being sulh - Icel. plogr, a plough; which also seems to be a borrowed word, the genuine Norse word being ardr; Swed. plog; Dan. plov. We find also O. Fries. ploch, G. pflug, O. H. G. pfluoc; and it is tolerably certain that the Lithuan. plugas, Russ. pluge, a plough, are borrowed words from the Teutonic. See Grimm, Gram. ii. 414; who has grave doubts as to whether the word is really Teutonic, though early known and widely spread. β. Perhaps of Celtic origin c.f. Gael, ploc, a block of wood, stump of a tree, used as the orig. plough; see Plug, Block. γ. Max Müller, Lect. on Lan-guage, i. 296 (8th ed.), identifies plough with Skt. plava, Gk. πλοΐον, a boat, from 🖌 PLU, to float : ' As the Aryans spoke of a ship ploughing the sea, they also spoke of a plough sailing across the field.' This sounds too poetical, and does not account for the gh. Der. plough, verb, Cor. iii. 1. 71; plough-er, see Latimer's Sermon on the Ploughers; plough-able; plough-boy; plough-iron, 2 Hen. IV, v. 1. 20; plough-man, M. E. plouman, Chaucer, C. T. 531; plough-share, spelt plouhschare in Trevisa, ii. 353, and derived from the verb to shear.

PLOVER, the name of a wading bird. (F.,-L.) M.E. plouer (with u for v), P. Plowman's Crede, ed. Skeat, 764; Gower, C. A. iii. 33, 1. 9; Prompt. Parv. - O. F. plovier, in the 13th century (Littré), later plavier, 'a plover;' Cot. Formed as if from a Low Lat. pluniarius\*, equivalent to Lat. plunialis, belonging to rain, because these birds are said to be most seen and caught in a rainy season. – Lat. pluuia, rain. – Lat. pluit, it rains. –  $\checkmark$  PLU, to swim; whence also E. Flow, q.v. See Pluvial. ¶ 'We derive it from the F. pluvier, E. Flow, q.v. See Fluvial. ¶ 'We derive it from the F. plavier, pour ce qu'on le prend mieux en temps pluvieux qu'en nulle autre saison,' Belon, Oyseaux, 360; cited in Pennant, Zoology, vol. ii (R.) Wedgwood remarks that the G. name is regenpfeifer, the rain-piper. PLUCK, to pull away sharply, to snatch. (E.) M. E. plukken, P. Plowman, B. v. 501; xii. 249; Wyclif, Matt. xii. 1. - A. S. pluc cian, Matt. xii. 1. + Du. plukken. + Icel. plokka, plukka, perhaps a borrowed word. + Dan. plukke. + Swed. plocka. + G. pflücken.  $\beta$ . This is one of the five words beginning with p which Fick admits as being truly Teutonic; he gives the base as PLUK; iii. 169. The resemblance to Ital. cilla cillocere to nick granes is remarkable but is a resemblance to Ital. piluccare, to pick grapes, is remarkable, but is a mere coincidence; it is impossible that a word found in A.S. can be derived from Italian, and it is unlikely that there was such a form in early Low Latin. Der. pluck, sb., a butcher's term for the heart, liver, and lights of an animal, prob. because they are plucked out after killing it; Skinner, ed. 1671, has 'pluck, a sheep's pluck, i. e. cor animalis, an animal's heart. Hence pluck in the sense of 'spirit, courage;' whence the adj. plucky. Cf. the phrase 'pluck up thy spirits,' Tam. Shrew, iv. 3. 38; 'pluck up, my heart,' Much Ado, v. 1. 207. PLUG, a block or peg used to stop a hole. (Du., -C.) Skinner, prob. right in taking it to be the Lat. complicitum, neut. of complicitus, \$ of the word may be doubted. The word is also in Hexham, ed. 1658, and was probably borrowed from Dutch. - O. Du. plugge, 'a plugge, or a woodden pegg; also pluggen, 'to plugge, or pegge; Hexham. Mod. Du. plug, a peg, bung. We find also Swed. plugg, a plug, Dan. plok, a peg, G. plock, a wooden nail, plug, peg, pin.  $\beta$ . The word is not Teutonic, and was doubtless borrowed from Celtic. The original word appears in Irish ploc, pluc, a plug, stopper, bung; Gael. ploc, a club, bludgeon, head of a pin, block of wood, stump of a tree, plug, bung, block or pully, hump, plue, a lump, knot, bunch, bung; W. ploe, a block, plug. See further under Block; and see Bludgeon. Der. plug, verb. Doublet, block. PLUM, the name of a fruit. (L., -Gk.) M. E. ploume, ploume, Prompt. Parv. 'Piries and plomirees' = pear-trees and plum-trees, P. Plowman, B. v. 16. - A. S. plume, Ælfric's Grammar, 6 (Bosworth); cf alumside ili plumshog alumatica plumatica in Elficiel Close cf. plum-slá, lit. plum-sloe, plum-treów, plum-tree, in Ælfric's Gloss. Nomina Arborum. Here plúm-slá translates Lat. pruniculus, and variation of Lat. prunum, a plum, with change of r to l, and of n to m. The change from r to l is very common, and hardly needs illustration; the Span. coronel = E. colonel. The change from n to m is not unfrequent, as in lime-tree for line-tree, venom for Lat. uenenum, vellum from F. velin, megrim from F. migraine. Thus plum is a doublet of prune; see Prune, which is of Gk. origin. The Swed. plommon, Dan. blomme, G. pflaume, are all alike borrowed from Lat. prunum. Der. plum-tree, as above; plum-cake, plum-padding. Doublet, prune (a). PLUMAGE, the whole feathers of a bird. (F.,-L.) 'Pruning his plumage, cleansing every quill;' Drayton, Noah's Flood (R.)-F, plumage, 'feathers;' Cot.-F. flume, a feather; see Plume. [+] PLUMB, a mass of lead, hung on a string, to shew a perpendicular direction. (F., -L.) 'Plumbe of leed [lead], Plumburs; 'Prompt. Parv. Der. plumb, verb, to sound the depth of water with a plumb-line, from F. plomber, 'to sound,' Cot.; plumb-line, plumb-rule, used by Cot. to translate F. plombet; plumb-er, also spelt plum-mer, as by Cot. to tr. E. plomp, rude, clownish (as in Dutch), Caxton, tr. of Reynard the Fox, ed. Arber, p. 100, l. 12. The word is in rather early use as a sb., meaning 'a cluster, a clump,' applied either to a compact body of men, or to a clump of trees. 'Presede into the plumpe' = he pressed into the throng; Morte Arthure, ed. Brock, 2199. Though it cannot be traced much further back, the word may be E., as the radical verb is preserved in the prov. E. plim, to swell, given as an Exmoor word by Grose, but somewhat widely known, and still in use in Oxfordshire and elsewhere. B. Hence plump means orig. 'swollen,' and since that which is swollen becomes tight and firm, we find plump further used in the sense of 'hard;' as, 'the ways are plump' = the roads are hard (Kent); E. D. S. Gloss. B. 11; C. 5. In Oxfordshire, the word plim is also used as an adj., in the sense of plump. The word appears in most Teutonic tongues. Cf. 'Plump, to swell;' Nares, ed. Halliwell. + O. Du. plomp, 'rude, clownish, blockish, or dull;' Hexham. This is a metaphorical use, from the notion of thickness. + Swed. plump, clownish, coarse. + Dan. plump, clumsy, vulgar. + G. plump, heavy, clumsy, blunt. Der. plump-ly, plump-ness. Also plump-er, a vote given at elections, when a man who has a vote for two separate candidates gives a single vote to one, thus swelling out that ed. 1671, has 'a plug, or splug;' but that the initial s is a true part a candidate's number of votes as compared with the rest; see Todd' Gg 2

Johnson. Also plump-y, as above. Also plump, sb., a cluster, as a PLURISY, superabundance. (L.; misformed.) Shak. has pluming above: plump or plump out, verb, to swell out. to express 'plethora,' Hamlet, iv. 7, 118. So also in Massinger, The showe; plump or plump out, verb, to swell out. PLUMP (2), straight downward. (F., -L.) Formerly also plum, plumb. 'Plumb down he falls,' Milton, P. L. ii. 933; cf. 'Which thou hast perpendicularly fell,' K. Lear, iv. 6. 54. 'They do not fall plumb down. but decline a little from the perpendicular; 'Bentley, Serm. a (Todd). Johnson notes that it is sometimes pronounced ignorantly [and commonly] plump. Johnson also gives plump, verb, 'to fall like a stone into the water; a word formed from the sound, or rather corrupted from plumb.' Cf. 'It will give you a notion how Dulcissa plumps into a chair;' Spectator, no. 492. B. However expressive the word may seem, a careful examination of its history will tend to shew that it is really a peculiar use of plumb, and derived from F. plomb. Lat. plumbum, lead. 'To fall like lead' must have been a favourite metaphor from the earliest times, and Diez shews, in his article on Ital. piombare, to fall like lead, that this metaphor is widely spread in the Romance languages. Cf. Ital. cadere a piombo, to fall plump, lit. like lead; F. à plomb, 'downright;' à plomb sur, 'direct, or downright;' Cot. We even find it in M. E.; 'Hy plumten doune, as a doppe' = they dived straight down, like a diving-bird; K. Alisaunder, 5776. Y. We also find Du. plomp, interj., plump, plompen, to plunge; Dan. plumpe, to plump. All of these may be suspected to owe their peculiar form to the Lat. plumbum, though easily supposed to be imitative. The word tends also to confusion with Plump (1), from which I believe it to be wholly distinct. See further under Plunge. Der. plump, verb, as above. PLUNDER, to rob, pillage. (G.) A note in Johnson's Dict. (ed. Todd) says that 'Fuller considers the word as introduced into the language above the peculiar or the set is introduced into

PLUNDER, to rob, pillage. (G.) A note in Johnson's Dict. (ed. Todd) says that 'Fuller considers the word as introduced into the language about 1642.' R. gives a quotation for it from Pryne, Treachery and Disloyalty, pt. iv. pp. 28, 29 (not dated, but after A.D. 1642, as it refers to the civil war). He also cites a quotation dated 1642, and this may be taken to be nearly the exact date when the word was borrowed. Hexham, in his Du. Dict., ed. 1658, gives O. Du. plunderen, plonderen, 'to plunder, or to pillage;' the mod. Du. spelling is plunderen. It is one of the very few G. words in English, and seems to have been introduced directly rather than through the Dutch. – G. plundern, to plunder, pillage, sack, ransack; provincially, to remove with one's baggage. Derived from the G. sb. plunder, trumpery, trash, baggage, lumber; the E. keeping the vowel of the sb.  $\beta$ . Connected with Low G. plunnen, formerly also plunden, rags; Bremen Wörterbuch. The orig, sense of the sb. was 'rags' hence, worthless household stuff; the verb meant, accordingly, to strip a household even of its least valuable contents. The Dan. plyndre, Swed. plundera, Du. plunderen, are all alike borrowed from the G. or Low G.  $\P$  See Trench, Eng. Past and Present. He says that 'plunder was brought back from Germany about the beginning of our Civil Wars' by the soldiers who had served under Gustavus Adolphus and his captains.' And again, 'on plunder, there are two instructive passages in Fuller's Church History, b. xi. § 4, 33; and b. ix. § 4; and one in Heylin's Animadversions thereupon, p. 196.' Der. plunder, sb., which seems to be a later word in E., though really the original word; plunder-er.

PLUNGE, to cast or fall suddenly into water or other liquid. (F., -L.) M. E. ploungen; ' and wenen [imagine] that it be ryght blisful thynge to ploungen hem in uoluptuous delit;' Chaucer, tr. of Roethius, b. iii. pr. a, l. 1784. - F. plonger, 'to plunge, dive, duck;' Cot. Formed from a Low Lat. plumbicare\*, not found, but the existence of which is verified by the Picard plonquer, to plunge, dive, due to the same Low Lat. form; see Diez, s.v. plonbare.  $\beta$ . Thus plonger is a frequentative of plomber, to cover with lead, to sound the depth of water; from F. plomb, lead; see Plumb. Cf. Ital. piombare, 'to throw, to hurle, .. to fall heauilie as a plummet of leade;' Florio. See also Plump (2). Der. plunge, sb., plung-er, plung-ing. PLUPERFECT, the name of a tense in grammar. (L.) In the Grammar prefixed to Cotgrave's F. Diot. will be found the expression 'the przeterpluperfect tense;' he gives 'J'avoise seid. I had been' as an example. The E. word is a curious corruption of the Lat. name for the tense, viz. plusquamperfectum. We have dropped the syllable quam, and given to plus the F. pronunciation. -Lat. plus, more; quam, than : and perfectum, perfect. See Plural and Perfect.

POACH (1), to dress eggs. (F, -O. Low G.?) Formerly pocke. 'Egges well pocked are better than roasted. They be moste holesome whan they be poched;' Sir T. Elyot, Castel of Helth, b ii. c. 13. Spelt potch in Palsgrave; Levins; Bacon, Nat. Hist. § 53; and in Cotgrave. – F. pocker; Cotgrave gives 'Pocké, poched, thrust or digged out with the fingers; out pocké, a potched egge.'  $\beta$ . The real origin of F. pocker in this particular sense is much disputed. I do not think we can derive the F. word from E. poke, verb, which is what Wedgwood's suggestion amounts to; see Poke (2). Littré unhesitatingly derives pocker from F. pocke, a pouch, pocket; but this does not explain Cotgrave's expression 'thrust, or digged out.' Indeed, he goes on to point out that two verbs have been confused. There is (1) F. pocker, from pocke; and (2) F. pocker, powcker (both forms are in Cotgrave), 'to thrust or dig out with the fingers, which rests upon powe, the thumb. What was the orig. sense of 'a pouched egg' is a matter of dispute. It can hardly be an egg of which the inside is 'dug out' by the fingers or by the thumb; nor does 'poked egg' give any satisfactory sense. Scheler explains it very differently; he thinks that 'a poached egg' means 'eggs dressed in such a manner as to keep the yolk in a rounded form,' and that the sense rests upon that of 'pouch.' In this view, it is, in fact, 'a pouched egg.' I would explain it still more simply by supposing that the egg is likened to a pouch, because the art is to dress it in such a way as not to let the yolk escape. I incline, therefore, to Scheler's view, that pocker is here derived from pocke, a pouch. See Pouch, Poke (1).

POACH (2), to intrude on another's preserves, for the purpose of stealing game. (F., -O. Low G.?) 'His greatest fault is, he hunts too much in the purlieus. 'Would he would leave off poacking t'

• pocher le labeur d'autruy, to poch into, or incroach upon, another man's imploiment, practise, or trade : Cot. β. Just as in the case of Poach (1), there is great difficulty in assigning the right sense to F. pocher. Cotgrave gives it only as meaning 'to thrust, or dig at with the fingers,' in which sense it is also spelt poucher, and rests upon pouce, the thumb; see Littré. But Littre also assigns as an old sense of the verb, 'to put in a poke, sack, or pouch' (and certainly pocher le labeur looks as if we may translate it ' to pocket the labour'); he also cites the Norman poquer, to carry fruits in one's pocket. y. If we give the verb the sense adduced by Cotgrave, we may derive it from pouce = Lat. pollicem, acc. of pollex, the thumb. 8. It seems simpler to derive it directly from poche, the pocket, in which case pocker may mean either to put into one's own pocket, or, possibly, to put one's hand in the pocket of another. See Pouch. And see Poke (1), Poke (2), for further discussion of these words. Der. poach-er.

POCK, a small pustule. (E.; perkaps C.) We generally speak of 'the small post;' but the spelling pow is absurd, since it stands for pocks, the pl. of pock, a word seldom used in the singular. We might as well write sow as the pl. of sock; indeed, I have seen that spelling used for abbreviation. The word pock is best preserved in the adj. pocky, Hamlet, v. 1. 181. The term small pox in Beaum. and Fletcher, Fair Maid of the Inn, ii. 2 (Clown), is spelt pocks in the adj. difference and the Bintender Constraints and spectra the old edition, according to Richardson, Cotgrave explains F. morbille by 'the small pox,' but in Sherwood's Index it is 'the small pockes; ' and in fact, the spelling pocks is extremely common. The pl. was once dissyllabic. Fabyan has: ' he was vysyted with the sykenesse of pockys;' vol. ii. an. 1363, ed. Ellis, p. 653. M. E. pokke, pl. pokkes, P. Plowman, B. xx. 97. – A.S. poo, a pustule. 'Gif poc sy on edgan' = if there be a pustule on the eye, in a MS. foll. 142, 152, described by Wanley in his Catalogue of A.S. MSS., p. 304. So also 'wi) pic-ddle' = for pock-disease, meaning small pox, A.S. Leechdoms, ed. Cockayne, ii. 104, l. 14. There is an accent over the o in the MS., both here and in ll. 22, 23 (same page), accent over the o in the oris, both here and in 11, 22, 25 (same page), but it is omitted in 11. 19, 24.+Du. pok, a pock.+G. pocke, a pock. Perhaps related to Poke (1), with the notion of 'bag;' and prob. ultimately of Celtio origin. Cf. Irish puccid, a pustule, puccidk, a swelling up, Gael. puccid, a pimple. Der. pox (= pocks); pock-y. POCKET, a small pouch. (F.,=O Low G. or C.) M. E. poket, Prompt. Parv. 'Sered pokets' = small waxed bags; Chaucer, C. T.

16270. From a dialectal form of F. pochette, probably Norman. Métivier gives the modern Guernsey form as pouquette, dimin. of pouque, a sack or pouch; the older spellings would be poquette and poque. He cites a Norman proverb: Quant il pleut le jour Saint Marc, Il no faut ni pougue ni sao' = when it rains on St. Mark's day (April 25), one wants neither poke nor bag. It is therefore a dimin. of O. Norman foque, Parisan F. pocke. – O. Du. poke, a bag, Hex-ham; see Pouch, Poke (1). Der. pocket, verb, Temp. ü. I. 67; pocket-book, pocket-money.

POD, a husk, a covering of the seed of plants. (Scand.? or C.?) In speaking of the furniture necessary for a cart, Tusser enumerates 'cart-ladder, and wimble, with percer, and pod;' Husbandry, ed. for E. D. S., § 17, st. 6, p. 36. Pod was explained by Mavor to mean a box or old leather bottle nailed to the side of the cart to hold necessary implements, and perhaps grease.' The orig. sense was merely 'bag;' and the word is the same with pad, a cushion, i. e. a stuffed bag, and related to pudding, of which the old meaning was 'sausage,' i. e. stuffed skin.  $\beta$ . The nearest word, in form, is Dan. pude, a cushion, pillow, Swed. dial. pude (also puda, puta), a cushion (Rietz). The word is of Celtic origin, and may have been taken from Celtic directly; cf. Gael. put, a large buoy, commonly made of an inflated sheep-skin. From the root PUT, to bulge out, be inan inflated sneep-skin. From the root root, to buye out, or hard flated, discussed under Pudding, q. v. Y. The peculiar use of pod to mean 'the husk' may have resulted from confusion with the old word cod, a husk. Thus what we now call a pea-pod is called peacod in Shak. Mids. Nt. Dr. iii. I. 191; &c. See Cod (2). POEM, a composition in verse.  $(F_{-1}, -L_{-1}, -Gk_{-1})$  In Hamlet, ii.

POKE (1), a bag, pouch. (C.) 'Two pigges in a poke' = two pigs in a bag, Chaucer, C. T. 4276; Havelok, 555. = Irish poe, a bag; Gael. poea, a bag.  $\beta$ . That the word is really Celtic appears from this, that a Celtic e would be represented in A.S. by the guttural h, as in the case of Irish cead = A. S. hund, a hundred; so the  $\overline{A}$ . S. form would be poka. We find poka vel posa as a gloss to peram in the Northumbrian gloss to St. Mark, vi. 8, in the Lindisfarme MS., and pokka vel posa in the Rushworth MS.; the form poca given in Bosworth being due to a misreading. Pokha also occurs in the y. We find also Icel. Glossary to Cockayne's A. S. Leechdoms. poki, a bag, O. Du. poke, ' a poke, sack,' Hexham, perhaps borrowed from Celtic; also the related Goth. puggs (= pungs), a bag, Luke, x.4; Icel. pungr, a pouch, A. S. pungs, a purse, pouch. 5. Perhaps connected with Lat. bucea, the inflated cheek; so that the orig. sense was 'that which is blown out, or inflated; 'just as bag is connected with the verb to bulge. Cf. Gael. poc, to become like a bag. See Pock. Cf. Fick, iii. 167. Der. pock-et. Doublet, pouch.

POKE (2), to thrust or push, esp. with something pointed, (C.) M. E. poken, Chaucer, C. T. 4167; pukken, P. Plowman, B. v. 620, 643. POLIE (a), a pivot, axis, end of the axis of the earth.  $(F_{.,-}L_{.,-}G_{k,.})$  'The north pole;' L. L. L. v. 2, 699. M. E. pol, Chaucer, On the Astrolabe, pt. i. § 14, l. 6. - F. pol, 'a pole; pol artique, the north pole;' Cot. - Lat. polum, acc. of polus, a pole. - Gk. #0Aos, a pivot, hinge, axis, pole. - Gk. #4Aesv, to be in motion; the poles being the points of the axis round which motion takes place. Allied, by the usual substitution of initial  $\pi$  for  $\kappa$ , to  $\kappa \in \lambda_{0,\mu}(\alpha)$ ,  $\kappa \in \lambda_{1,\mu}(\alpha)$ . I urge on, Lat. -cellere in percellere. - V KAR, later KAL, to go, to drive. See Celerity. Der. pol-ar, Milton, P. L. v. 269, from Lat. polaris; POLE-CAT, a kind of axe; see under Poll. POLE-CAT, a kind of axe; see under Poll.

M. E. poleat, Chaucer, C. T. 12789. For the latter (Unknown). syllable, see Cat. But the sense of pole, M. E. pol, is unknown. The proposed etymologies are, (1) a Polish cat (Mahn); this seems very improbable, as the word is in Chaucer. (2) A cat that goes after improbable, as the word is in Chauter. (1) A cat that goes after poultry, from F. poule, a hen; this is contradicted by the vowel. (3) From O. F. pulent, stinking (Wedgwood); but this word is merely from the Lat. purulentus, and the syllable pul- alone (= Lat. purul-) would be unmeaning; besides which, this again gives the wrong vowel. (4) I shall add a possible guess, that it may be pool-cat, i. e. cat living in a hole or burrow, since the Irish poll, Gael. poll, Corn. pol, mean 'a hole' or 'pit' as well as a pool. [†] POLEMICAL, warlike, controversial. (Gk.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. Formed with suffix -al (= Lat. -alis) from Gk. moleukos, β. Formed with suffix -ε-μοε (like warlike. - Gk. wύλεμοε, war. du-e-mos = Lat. an-i-mus) from mod- = mad- = map. - of PAR, to strike, fight; appearing in Zend par, to fight (Curtius, i. 345), Lithuan. per-ti, to strike; cf. Russ. prate, to resist. Perhaps to the same root belong Gk. #62-1800, a battle-axe, Skt. paraçu, a hatchet. Dor. polemic-al-ly; also polemic-s, from Gk. molecules. POLICE, the regulation of a country with respect to the preservation of order; hence, the civil officers for preserving order. (F., -L.,-Gk.) The expression the police is short for the police-force, i. e. the force required for maintaining police, or public order. The sb. is in Todd's Johnson; but we already find the expression 'so well a policed [regulated] kingdome' in Howell, Instructions for Foreign Travel, ed. Arber, p. 78, last line but one; A. D. 1642. – F. police, 'policy, politick regiment, civill government;' Cot. – Lat. politia. – Gk. πολιτεία, citizenship, polity, condition of a state. – Gk. πολίτηs, a citizen. – Gk. πολι-, crude form of πόλιs, a city; with suffix -τηs (Aryan -ta).  $\beta$ . The orig. sense of  $\pi \delta \lambda is$  was 'a crowd, throng;' hence, a community; 'the Skt. puri [a town] for pari = Gk.  $\pi \delta \lambda is$  comes undoubtedly from the root PAR, to fill (Gk.  $\pi \epsilon \lambda$ ,  $\pi \lambda \epsilon$ ), and denoted originally the idea of fulness, of a crowd, a throng, form which, later, the idea "town" is developed even without this physical conception; "Curtius, i. 102. With Skt. puri cf. Indian poor in Bhurt-poor, Futteh-poor, &c. And see Folk, Full. Der. policiey, M.E. policie, Chaucer, C. T. 12534, answering to O.F. policie (= Lat. politia), an older form of F. police. Also polity, in Hooker, Eccl. Polity, from Lat. politia; polit-ic, spelt politick in Minsheu, from Lat. politicus, Gk. πολιτικόs; polit-ic-ly; politic-s, spelt politickes in Minsheu; polit-ic-al, Minsheu; polit-ic-al-ly; polit-ic-i-an, used as adj. in Milton, Samson, 1195. And see acro-polis, metro-polis, cosmo-polite. POLICY, a warrant for money in the public funds, a writing containing a contract of insurance. (F., -Low Lat., -Gk.) Quite distinct from policy as connected with Police, q.v. 'A policy of in-surance is a contract between A and B;' Blackstone. And see Phillips' Dict., ed. 1706. The form is prob. due to confusion with policy in the other sense, or the final syllable may have been due to the Span. or Ital. form. - F. police, a policy; police d'assurance, policy of insurance; Hamilton. Cf. Span. poliza, a written order to receive a sum of money; poliza de seguro, a policy of insurance; Ital. polizza, a bill, ticket, invoice. - Late Lat. politicum, poleticum, polecticum, various corruptions of polyptychum, a register, a roll in which dues were registered, a word of common occurrence; Ducange.-Gk. πολύπτυχον, a piece of writing folded into many leaves; hence, a long register or roll; orig. neut. of wohúwruxos, having many folds, of England (Halliwell). Cf. Gael. put, to push, thrust. See Put. & form of mrút, a fold, leaf, layer, connected with mrússeur (= mrús-yur), B. From the same Celtic source is O. Du. poke, a dagger, lit. 'a thruster,' to fold, double up; and with mun-vós, close, compact. These words and E. fist; Curtius, ii. 105. Cf. Diptych. [+] POLISH, to make smooth, glossy, or elegant. (F., -L.) M.E.

polischen, Chaucer, C. T. 9456; sometimes contracted to polischen, as in P. Plowman, B. v. 483. 'A marble stone polyshed;' Caxton, Reynard the Fox, ed. Arber, p. 11 .- F. poliss-, stem of polissant, pres. part. of tolir, to polish. - Lat. polire, to polish. B. Here polire prob. = po-lire, where po- is a prefix, supposed to be related to the prefix pro-, before, and to Gk. #pós, towards; whilst -lire is related to linere, to smear, and to litera, a letter; see Letter, Liniment. Thus polire = to smear upon, make glossy. Der. polither; also polite, in Phillips, ed. 1706, from Lat. politus, pp. of polire; polite-ly, polite-ness.

POLKA, a dance. (Bohemian?) Said to have been first danced by a Bohemian peasant-girl in 1831, and to have been named polks at Prague in 1835, from the Bohemian pulks, half; because of the halfstep prevalent in it. See the account in Mahn's Webster. Cf. Russ. polovina, sb., a half.

POLL, the head, esp. the back of it, a register of heads or persons, a place where votes are taken. (O. Low G.) All the meanings are a place where votes are taken. (O. Low G.) All the meanings are extended from poll, the rounded part of the head; hence, a head, person, &c. M. E. pol, pl. polles. 'Pol bi pol' = head by head, separately, P. Plowman, B. xi. 57. 'Bi pate ant by polle' = by pate and poll; Polit. Songs, ed. Wright, p. 237, in a MS. of the reign of Edw. II. [Not in A. S.] An O. Low G. word, found in O. Du. polle, pol, or bol, 'the head or the pate,' Hexham; also in Low G. polle, the head, Bremen Wörterbuch; Swed. dial. pull (Rietz), Dan. build (for pull), the crown of the head. B. As initial p and k puld (for pull), the crown of the head.  $\beta$ . As initial p and k may be interchanged, it is the same as Swed. kulle, a crown, top, O. Swed. kull, kulle, the crown of the head, kulla, to poll or shave off the hair (Ihre); Icel. kollr, top, shaven crown, kollótr, having the hair polled or cut short. See Kill.  $\gamma$ . These words appear to be of Celtic origin; one sense of Irish coll is 'the head, or neck;' cf. W. col, peak, summit, and perhaps Lat. corona, a crown, Gk. κορυφή, a summit, κολοφάν, a summit, κάρα, the head, κάρ, the hair of the head. Der. poll, verb, to cut off the hair, Numb. i. 2, iii. 47; poll-tax, a tax by the head, i.e. on each person. Also pole-tax, for merly pollar, Chaucer, C. T. 2546, O. Low G. polless, Bremen Wör-terbuch, from O. Low G. polle, the poll, head, and exe, an axe; I doubt if it is the same as Icel. boloxi, which is rather an axe for lopping branches, from bolr, bulr, the trunk of a tree. Also poll-ard, used as a sb. in Bacon, Nat. Hist. § 424, and in Sir T. Browne, Cyrus Garden, c. iii. § 12, in which the use of the suffix -ard is not easy to account for, though it is, etymologically, the same as in drawk-ard, i.e. F. -ard from O. H. G. -kart, hard. [+] POLLOCK, POLLACK, a kind of cod-fish, the whiting. (C.)

In Carew (Survey of Cornwall?); Todd's Johnson. Of Celtic origin; cf. Gael. pollag, a kind of fish, the gwyniad (i. e. whiting); Irish pullog, a pollock. Perhaps from Gael. and Irish poll, a pool; cf.

Gael, pollag, a little pool. POLLEN, the powder on the anthers of flowers. (L.) In Johnson; it is also used for fine flower, in which case it is also called pollard, by corruption. - Lat. pollen, pollis, fine flour. Connected with Gk. πάλη, fine sifted meal; from πάλλειν, to shake.

POLLUTE, to defile, taint, corrupt. (L.) In Shak. Lucrece, 854, 1063, 1726. Milton has pollute as a pp., Hymn on Christ's Nativity. 41; but we already find poluted in Skelton, Ware the Hauke, 44, 161, 174.-Lat. pollutus, pp. of polluere, to defile.-Lat. pol-, a prefix, of which the older form was por- or port., towards; and luere, to wash: see Position and Lave. The old sense is 'to wash over.' as when a river overflows, and pollules the banks with mud; cf. Lat. lutern. mud. Der. pollulion, Lucrece, 1157, from Lat. acc. pollutionern. [†] POLONY, a kind of sausage. (Ital.) Used by Thackeray (Webster). A corruption for Bologna sousage; which city is 'famous for sausages; 'Evelyn's Diary, May 21, 1645. See Hotten's Slang Dict. for sausages; 'Evelyn's Diary, May 21, 1045. See frotten s Diarg Luct. POLTROON, a dastard, coward, lazy fellow. ( $F_{..} = Ital., = G_{.}$ ) In Shak. 3 Hen. VI, i. 1. 62. Earlier, spelt pultroune, in Skelton, The Douty Duke of Albany, I. 170. – F. poltron, 'a knave, rascall, varlet, scowndrell, dastard, sluggard;' Cot. – Ital. poltro, 'a varlet, knaue, villaine, raskall, base idle fellowe, coward; also, a bed or couch;' Florio. He also gives poltrare, poltreg jarer, poltron-to plus and the poler is poltrone to lise. eggiare, 'to play the coward, to loll or wallowe in idlenes, to lie idlie a bed.'  $\beta$ . The old sense is clearly a sluggard, one who lies in bed; from poltro, a bed, couch. Poltro is for polstro, and is derived from G. polster, a cushion, bolster, quilt; see Bolster. Thus 'a poltroon' is a bolster-man, one who loves his couch. ¶ The usual astounding derivation from pollice truneus, deprived of one's thum, rendered famous by Horne Tooke, is one of those etymologies which much folded. - Gk. wolv, neut. of wolvs, much; and wrvxo, crude ware prized as jewels, not because they rest on any evidence, but be-

POLY., many; prefix. (L., -Gk.) Lat. poly-, put for Gk. πολυ-, from πολύ-, crude form of πολύs, much. Cognate with Skt. puru, much; and closely allied to Gk. πλέοs, full, and E. full; see Full

E. pomgarnet, Trevisa, i. 107, 1. 7. - O. F. pome grenate, which was turned into pome de grenate by some confusion or misunderstanding of the sense. In Li Contes del Graal, a poem of the 12th century, we find ' Dates, figues, et noiz mugates, Girofle et pomes de grenales;' see Bartsch, Chrestomathie Française, col. 172, ll. 4, 5. Cf. Ital. pomo granato, a pomegranate; Florio. – Lat. pomum, an apple; and granatum, used also alone to signify a pomegranate.  $\beta$ . POPINJAY, a parrot; a mark like a parrot, put on a pole to be shot at; a coxcomb. (F., =G.; with modified suffix.) M. E. popin-gay, Chaucer, C. T. 13299; where the Ellesmere and Hengwrt MSS. have papeiay (= papeiay); Six-text ed., Group E, 1.2322. The pl. papeiayes occurs in Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, B. 1465. Thus the n is excressent, as in other words before a j-sound; cf. messnger for messager, passenger for passager, &c. = O. F. papegai, papegay, 'a parrot or popinjay; also a woodden parrat, . . whereat there is a generall shooting once every year;' Cot. Mod. F. papegai, pafe-gawt; the latter spelling has a needless suffixed t, and is due to O. F. have here two distinct forms; (1) F. papegai, Span. papagayo, papagaio, in which the base papa- is modified by the addition of K. -gai, Span. -gayo, due to a popular etymology which regarded the bird as having gay plumage, or as chattering like the jay (it matters little which, since gay and fay are one and the same); and (2) O. F. papegau, Ital. papagallo, in which the bird is regarded as a kind of cock, Lat. gallus; and the latter form appears to be the older. These modifications of the suffix are not of great consequence; it is of more importance to tell what is meant by the prefix papa. Y. Respecting this there is much dispute; it has been suggested (as in Littre) that the word is Arabic; but the late Arab. babaghá, a parrot, appears to be merely borrowed from the Span. papagayo, by the usual weakening of p to b (Diez). 8. There remains only the suggestion of Wedgwood, that the syllables pa-pa- are imitative, and suggestudi of Weigwood, that the synaples paper at infratty, and were suggested by the Bavarian pappeln, pappeln, or pappern, to chatter, whence the sb. pappel, a parrot, lit, a babbler; Schmeller, i. 398, 399. Wedgwood adds: 'So also Skt. vach, to speak; vacha, a parrot. The change in the last element from Ital. gallo, Fr. gau, a cock, to Fr. gai, geai, a jay, probably arose from the fact that the jay, being remarkable both for its bright-coloured plumage and chattering voice, seemed to come nearer than the cock to the nature e. We may conclude that F. papegai, a talking of the parrot.' jay, was modified from the older O. F. papegau, a talking cock ; see Jay and Gallinaceous. Also, Bavar. pappeln is cognate with E. Babble, q. v. Cf. bubblyjock (i. e. babble-jack), the Lowland Scotch name for a turkey-cock; so named from the gobbling sound which it makes. [†]

POPLAR, a kind of tall tree. (F., -L.) M. E. poplere, Chaucer, C.T. 2923; poplar, Palladius on Husbandry, b. iii. l. 194. - O.F. poplier (13th cent.), mod. F. peuplier, a poplar; Littre. Formed with mames, (1) porkepyn, shortly porpin, easily lengthened to porpint by the

- Low Lat. pulla, a hen (Ducange); fem. of pullus, a young animal, <sup>4</sup> suffix -ier (Lat. -arius) from O. F. pople* (not recorded), later forma peuple, 'the poplar;' Cot. Cf. prov. E. popfle, a poplar; Nares, ed. Halliwell. – Lat. ropulum, acc. of populus, a poplar. β. Origin uncertain, but probably from its trembling leaves; põpulus = tak pal-us, by reduplication of the base pal-, to vibrate, shake, seen in Gk. waλλeev, to shake, vibrate, brandish; similarly we have Lat. pal-p-itare, to palpitate, tremble, pal-pe-bra, the quivering eye-lid. See Palpitate.

POPLIN, a fabric made of silk and worsted. (F.) Added by Todd to Johnson's Dict. - F. popeline, of which an older form was papeline, first mentioned in A. D. 1667 (Littre). β. Origin un-known; it has been supposed to be connected with F. papal, papal, because it may have been first made at Avignon, where there was once a papal court, A.D. 1309-1408. The chronology does not bear out this suggestion. Cf. Span. populina, populina, poplin. Y. Ishall record my guess, that popelin, not papelin, is the right form; and that it is connected with O.F. popelin, 'a little finical darling,' Cot. : popin, 'spruce, neat, trimme, fine,' id.; se popiner, 'to trimme or tricke up himselfe.' In this view, popelin means 'spruce stuff for dresses,' or 'stuff fit for finical people,' an easy solution. These words are related to Low Lat. popula, auford, a young girl of light demeanour (Ducange); Ital. pupina, a doll (Florio), and to E. pupper; see Puppet. But see Addenda. [*]

POPPY, the name of a flower with narcotic properties. (L.) M. E. popy (with one p), Gower, C. A. ii. 102, l. 21. – A. S. popy; 'Papaver, popig,' Wright's Vocab. i. 31, col. 1. Merely borrowed from Lat. papauer, a poppy, by change of u(w) to g, and loss of  $\pi$ . B. Root uncertain; perhaps named from its 'swollen' globular capsule; cf. Lat. papula, a swelling, pustule. See Pimple.

POPULACE, the common people. (F., -Ital., -L.) 'And caim the peers, and please the fopulace;' Daniel, Civil Wars, b. vii (R.) - F. populace, 'the rascall people;' Cot. - Ital. popolazzo, popo-laceio, 'the grosse, base, vile, common people;' Florio. Formed

Der. population, in Bacon, Essay 29, § 5, from late Lat. populationem, acc. of populatio, a population (White). Also popul-ous, Rich. II, v. 5. 3, from F. populeux, 'populous,' Cot., which from Lat. populosus, full of people; popul-ous-ly, -ness. PORCELAIN, a fine kind of earthenware. (F., -Ital, -L.) In Dryden, Annus Mirabilis, st. 29; spelt porcellan, Sir T. Herbert, Travels, ed. 1665, pp. 301. 306; and see extract from Florio below

Travels, ed. 1665, pp. 391, 396; and see extract from Florio below. Porcelain was so named from the resemblance of its finely polished surface to that of the univalve shell of the same name, called in English the Venus' shell; as applied to the shell, the name goes back to the 13th century, when it occurs in the F, version of Marco Polo in place of the Ital. name (Littré). Cotgrave gives porcelaine, pourcelaine, 'the purple fish, also, the sea-snail, or Venus shell.'that, porcellana, 'a purple fish, a kinde of fine earth called forcelane, wherof they make fine China dishes, called porcellan dishes;' Florio, ed. 1598.  $\beta$ . Again, the shell derived its name from the curved shape of its upper surface, which was thought to resemble the raised back of a little hog. [It is very easy to make a toy-pig with a Venus' shell and some putty; and such toys are often for sale.]-Ital. porcella, 'a sow-pig, a porkelin;' Florio. Cf. porcello, 'a yong hog, or pig, a porkelin;' id. Dimin. of Ital. porco, a hog. - Lat. porcum, acc. of porcus, a pig ; see Pork.

PORCH, a portico, covered way or entrance. (F., -L.) M. E. porche, Rob. of Glouc., p. 271, L. 6. - F. porche, a porch. - Lat. por-ticum, acc. of porticus, a gallery, arcade, porch; for the letter-changes, β. Formed with suffix -cus (Aryan -ka) from portisee Brachet. put for porta, a gate, door; see Port (3). Cf. E. perch from F. perche, Lat. pertica. Doublet, portico. PORCINE, relating to swine. (L.)

a pig; see Pork. PORCUPINE, a rodent quadruped, covered with spines or quills. (F.,-L.) a. In Shakespeare, old edd. have porpentine; a spelling which also occurs in Ascham, Toxophilus, ed. Arber, p. 31. being which also occurs in reachan, to opining, ci. rate,  $\mu$ ,  $\mu$ . Levins has porpin. Huloet has: 'Porpyn, beaste, havinge prickes on his backe.' The Prompt. Parv. has: 'Poork-poynt, porpoynte, per-poynt, beste, Histrix;' p. 409. 'Porkepyn, a beest, porc espin;' Pals-grave.  $\beta$ . We thus see that the animal had two very similar OSUAL excrescent I alter n, and inally altered to porpentine as a by-form of porkepyn; and (2) pork-point, porpoint; the latter of which forms would also readily yield porpentine. Y. We conclude that porpentine is late; that porkpoint was little used, and simply meant a 'pork' or pig furnished with points or sharp quills; and that the modern porcupine is due (by substitution of obscure u for obscure e) to the M. E. form porképyn, pronounced in three syllables and with the y long. 8. The M. E. porképyn is obviously derived from O. F. porc espin, a word known to Palsgrave, A.D. 1530, but now obsolete, and supplanted by porcépie, in the 13th century porc espi (Littré), a form which is also given by Cotgrave, who has: 'Porc-espi, a porcupine.' e. Thus the O. F. names for the animal were also double; (1) porcespi = porc-espin, the pig with spikes (see Bpike); and (2) porc-espin, the pig with spines. The English has only to do with the latter, which, though obsolete in French, is preserved in Span. puero espin, Port. porce espine (F. épine), from Lat. spina, a thorn. See Pork and Spine. ¶ It is easier to see the etymology than to prove it; I do not think it has been formally proved before. Holland, in his tr. of Pliny, b. viii. c. 35, has pork-pen, where pen, i. e. quill, is an ingenious substitution for -epine.

POŘE (1), a minute hole in the skin. (F., -L., -Gk.) M. E. pore, Prompt. Parv. p. 409. The pl. poorus (=pores) is in Trevisa, i. 53. – F. pore, 'a pore;' Cot. – Lat. porum. acc. of porus, a pore. – Gk.  $\pi\delta\rho\sigmas$ , a ford, passage, way, pore. –  $\checkmark$  PAR, to fare; see Fare. Der. por-ous from F. poreux, 'pory,' Cot.; porous-ly, -ness; por-os-i-ty, pori-form.

PÓRE (2), to look steadily, gaze long. (Scand., -C.) M. E. poren, Chaucer, C.T. 185, 5877, 16138. [Perhaps also puren; 'Abute for to pure' = to peer or pore about; K. Horn, ed. Lumby, 1 1092. But this example may belong to the verb to peer, which may have been confused with pore; though I believe there is no real connection between the words.] - Swed. dial. pora, pura, pdra, to work slowly and gradually, to do anything slowly; Rietz. Cf. Low G. purren, to poke about; sust purren, to clean out a hole by poking about with a pointed instrument; Du. porren, to poke, thrust, instigate.  $\beta$ . The idea seems to be that of poking or thrusting about in a slow and toilsome way, as in the case of clearing out a stopped-up hole; hence to pore over a job, to be a long while about it. Much in the same way we use the expression to potter about, or to potter over a thing; where potter is the frequentative of prov. E. pole, to thrust, from W. putio, to thrust.  $\gamma$ . As most Scand, words beginning with  $\rho$  are unoriginal, the word may be ultimately Celtic; cf. Gael. purr, to push, thrust, drive, urge, jerk, butt; Irish purraim, I push, jerk, thrust. [†]

PORK, the flesh of swine. (F, -L) M. E. pork, Rich. Cuer de Lion, 3049. -F. pore, 'a pork, hog; also pork, or swines flesh;' Cot. Lat. poreum, acc. of porcus, a pig. + Lithuan. parszas, a pig (Nesselmann). + W. porch. + Irish orc, by the usual loss of initial p. + A.S. feark, a pig; whence E. farrow.  $\beta$ . All from a European base PARKA, a pig; Fick, iii. 669. See Farrow. Dar. porker, a young pig, Pope, tr. of Homer, Od. xvii. 201; lit. an animal that supplies pork; substituted for the older term porkes, from O.F. porquet, 'a young pork,' Cot., dimin. of porc. Also pore-ing, q.v. And see porcurping, porpoise, porce-el-ain.

And see porc-w-pine, por-poise, porc-dain. PORPHYRY, a hard, variegated rock, of purple and white colour.  $(F_{.,}-L_{.,}-Gk_{.})$  M. E. porphúrie, Chaucer, C. T. 16243.= O. F. porphyrie\* (?), not found; Cotgrave has only porphyre, 'porphiry;' but the E. form appears fuller and older. Abbreviated from Lat. porphyrie\* (porphyry.-Gk. \*op\$\u00e9\u00e9\u00e9r\_10; so named from its purple colour. Formed with suffix  $\neg \tau \eta_2$ , signifying 'resemblance,' from \*op\$\u00e9\u00e9, \*op\$\u00e9\u00e9\u00e9, the purple-fish, purple-dye; cf.  $\u00e7 op$\u00e9\u00e9\u00e9\u00e9, purple; sce Purple. E. porpeys, Prompt. Parv. -O. F. porpeis, a porpoise (Roquefort), spelt porpeys, A.D. 1410 (Ducange); a term utterly obsolete, and supplanted by the name marsonin (lit. mere-swine), borrowed from G. meerschwein. Put for porc-peis. - Lat. porcum, acc. of porcus, a pig; and piscem, acc. of piscis, a fish, cognate with E. fish. See Pork and Fish. So also O. Ital. pesce-porco, 'a sea-hogge, a hogge-fish;' Florio. The mod. Ital. name is porce marino, marine pig; Span. puerco marino.

PORRIDGE, a kind of broth. (F., -L.) In Shak. Temp. ii. I. por Marine was porree, or poré, sometimes purse; the suffix -idge (=-age) is clearly due to confusion with pottage, M. E. potage, for which see Pottage. We find, 'Porré, or purré, potage', Ali, lit prompt. Parv.; and Way's note gives the spelling porray. Way adds: 'this term implies generally pease-pottage, still called in  $\forall$  1027.

Cf. Ital. posare, to put, lay down, rest, from poso, rest; Span. posar, ¶ One of the most remarkable facts in to lodge, posada, an inn. F. etymology is the extraordinary substitution whereby the Low Lat. passars came to mean ' to make to rest, to set,' and so usurped the place of the Lat. poners, to place, set, with which it has no etymological connection. And this it did so effectually as to restrict the F. pondre, the true equivalent of Lat. ponere, to the sense of ' laying eggs;' whilst in all compounds it completely thrust it aside, so that compausare (i. e. F. composer) took the place of Lat. componere, 2. Hence the extraordinary result, that and so on throughout. whilst the E. verbs compose, depose, impose, propose, &c. exactly represent in sense the Lat. componere, deponere, imponere, proponere, &c., we cannot derive the E. verbs from the Lat. ones, since they have (as was said) no real etymological connection. Indeed, these words are 3. The true derivatives from not even of Lat. origin, but Greek. the Lat. ponere appear in the substantives, such as position, composition, deposition ; see under Position. Der. pose, verb, to assume an attitude, merely an E. formation from the sh. pose, an attitude, and quite modern. Also (from F. poser) the compounds ap-pose, com-pose, de-pose, dis-pose, ex-pose, im-pose, inter-pose, op-pose, pro-pose, pur-pose, re-pose (in which the sense of Lat. pausa appears), sup-pose, trans-pose. (B) Under compose, depose, the F. pose is, by inadvertence, derived from Lat. poners. To M. E. apposen, acosen ; see examples in Richardson, s. v. Appose. appose was to question, esp. in a puzzling way, to examine. 'When Nicholas Clifforde sawe himselfe so sore aposed [posed, questioned], he was shamfast; 'Berners, Froissart's Chron. c. 373 (R.) 'She would appose mee touching my learning and lesson; Stow's Chronicle, an 1043. And see Chaucer, C. T. 7179, 15831; P. Plowman, B. i. 47, iii. 5, vii. 138, xv. 376. β. The word appears at first sight to answer to F. apposer, but that verb is not used in any such sense; and it is really nothing but a corruption of oppose, which was used convertibly with it. Thus we find 'Aposen, or oppoyn, Opponere,' Prompt. Parv., p. 13. 'I oppose one, I make a tryall of his lernyng, or I laye a thyng to his charge, Ie apose. I am nat to lerne nowe to oppose a felowe, à apposer ung gallant;' Palsgrave. [Here the O. F. aposer, apposer, is, in the same way, a corruption of F. opposer.] 'But she, whiche al honour supposeth, The false prestes than opposeth [questions], And azeth [asks], &c.; Gower, C. A. i. 71, l. 21. See another example in Hallwell. Y. The word arose in the schools; the method of examination was by argument, and the examiner was the umpire as to questions put by an opponent; hence to examine was also to oppose, or pose. ' Opponere, in philosophicis vel theologicis disputationibus contra argumentari; argumenter contre quelqu'un ;' Ducange, ed. Migne, For the etymology, see Oppose. 8. Lastly, the confusion can be accounted for, viz. by confusion of opponere, to question, argue, with the word appointe, applied to a neat answer; see Apposite, which really answers to Lat. appositus. Der. pos-er, Bacon, Essay 32; on which Mr. Aldis Wright says: 'an examiner, one who poses or puts questions; still in use at Eton and Winchester.' Hence also M. E. posen, to put a POSSESS, to own, seize, have, hold. (L.) The verb is probably due to the sb. possession, which was in earlier use, occurring in Chaucer, C. Shak. has Posthumus as a name in Cymb. i. 1, 41, &c. Sir T. Browne has ' posthumous as a many Um-burial, c. v. § 12. – Lat. postumus, the last; esp. of youngest children, the last-born; hence, late-born, and, as sb., a posthumous child.  $\beta$ . In accordance with a popular etymology, the word was also written posthumus, as if derived from post humum, lit. after the ground, which was forced into the meaning 'after the father is laid in the ground or buried;' and, in accordance with this notion, the Hence also the word was at last chiefly confined to such a usage. Hence also the F. spelling posthume, Port. posthumo; but Span. and Ital. have postumo; all in the usual sense attached to E. posthumous. Y. The Lat. postumus = post-tu-mus, a superlative formed (with Aryan suffix -ta-ma) from post, behind. See Posterior. Der. postkumous-ly.

It seems probable that postulare stands for post-tulare, formed as a frequentative verb from post-tum\*, unused supine of poscere, to ask.  $\gamma$ . It is further proposed to assume for poscere an older form porsc-ere, thus bringing it into alliance with  $\checkmark$  PRAK, to pray, whence Skt. praces, to ask. Lat. precari, to pray; see Pray. Position. Der. posture-master; posture, verb. POSY, a verse of poetry, a motto, a bouquet or nosegay. (F., - L., - Gk.) The word, in all its senses, is merely a contraction of 1. It was usual to engrave short mottoes on Poesy, q. v. knives and on rings; and as these were frequently in verse, they were called posies. Thus, in Shak. Merch. Ven. v. 148, we have : 'a ring . . . whose posy was . . . like cutler's poetry Upon a knife, Love me, and leave me not; ' see note to the line in Wright's edition. So also in Hamlet, 'the posy of a ring ;' iii. 2. 162. See Chambers, Book of Days, i. 221, for examples, such as 'In thee, my choice, I do rejoice;' &c. As these inscriptions were necessarily brief, any short inscription was also called a posy, even though neither in verse nor poetically expressed. Thus, Udall, on St. Luke, c. 23, speaking of the handwriting above the cross, calls it 'a superscripcion or poisse written on the toppe of the crosse' (R.) So also in the following : 'And the tente was replenyshed and decked with this posie, After busie labour commeth victorious rest;' Hall's Chron. Hen. V, an. 7. The still older name for a motto was a reason; see Fabyan's Chron. Hen. V, an. 8, ed. Ellis, p. 587.] 2. Mr. Wedgwood well accounts tommentary. (F., - L.) M. So also in Beaum. and Fletcher, Philaster, Act i. sc. 1 [sc. 2 in Darley's ed.]; "Then took he up his garland, and did shew What every flower, as country people hold Did signify;' ' and see Hamlet, iv. 5. 175. To this I may add, that a posy was even sometimes expressed by precious stones; see Chambers, as above. The line 'And a thousand fragrant posies' is by Marlowe; The Passionate Shepherd, st. 3. Doublet, poesy.

Der. pot-ask, i.e. ask obtained from the pot, so called because the alkaline salt was obtained by burning vegetable substances; Chaucer mentions ferm-ashes, as used for making glass; C. They are also mentioned by Ben Jonson, Cynthia's Revels, Act ii. sc. 1. - Span. patata, a potato; also batata, which is the true form. - Hayti batata. 'Peter Martyr, speaking of Haiti, says (in Decad. 2. c. 9), "Effodiunt etiam e tellure suapte natura nascentes radices, indigenæ batatas appellant, quas ut vidi insubres napos existimavi, aut magna terræ tubera."... Navagerio, who was in the Indies at the same time, writes in 1526, "Io ho vedute molte cose dell'Indie ed ho avuto di quelle radice che chiamano batatas, e le ho mangiate; sono di sapor di castagno." Doubtless these were sweet potatoes or yams, which are still known by this name in Spanish. —Wedgwood. POTCH, to thrust, poke. (C.) In Shak. Cor. i. 10. 15. Merely

F. pouche, found in the 14th cent. as a variant of poche, 'a pocket, pouch, or poke;' Cot. See Littré. Rather of Celtic than of Teut. origin; see Poke (1). Der. pouch. verb. Doublet, poke (1).

POULT, a chicken, fowl. (F., -L.) Poult is used by W. King (died A. D. 1712), in a poem on The Art of Cookery (R.) Also in Chapman, Revenge for Honour, i. 1. 21. M. E. pulle, Prompt. Parv. -F. poulet, 'a chicken;' Cot. Dimin. of poule, a hen. - Low Lat. pulla, a hen; fem. of pullus, a young animal, cognate with E. Foal, g. v. Dor. poult-er, one who deals in fowls, 1 Hen. IV, ii. 4. 480, M. E. pulter, Frompt. Parv.; whence the later form poult-er-er (Dekker, Honest Whore, pt. ii), by the unnecessary reduplication of the suffix er, denoting the agent. Also poult-r-y, M. E. pultrie, Prompt. Parv., formed with F. suffix -er-ie, as in the case of pant-r-y, &c. And see Pullet. Doublet, pullet. [†] POULTICE, a soft plaister applied to sores. (L.) In Shak.

Romeo, ii. 5, 65. Gascoigne, Steel Glas, 997 (ed. Arber, p. 77), has the pl. form pulcesses. The F. word is pulce, and it would appear that the word was not taken from the F., but (being a medical term) directly from the Latin; the spelling with -ce being given to it to make it look like French. The F. pulle is from Lat. acc. pullem, but the E. pullesses is a couble plural, from a form pulles which is simply the Latin pluval. - Lat. pulles, pl. of puls, a thick pap, or pap-like sub-stance.+Gk. wóλros, porridge. ¶ Otherwise poultics (if a F. form) must answer to a Low Lat. form pullicius*; I find no trace of it.

Por. poultice, verb. POUNCE (1), to seize with the claws, as a bird, to dart upon suddenly, (F., - L.) Orig. a term in hawking. A hawk's claws were called fourness, as in Spenser, F. Q. i. 11. 19; hence to possese upon, to seize with the claws, strike or pierce with the talons. The orig. sense of the verb was 'to pierce,' to prick, to adorn with big: sense of the vertex was to pierce, to pierce, to adom with pierced work. A pounce is also a punch, or stamp; see Nares. In Chaucer, Pers. Tale, De Ira, Group I, I. 421, we read of 'pounsoud and dagged clothynge' in three MSS., whilst two others have 'pounsed and dagged clothyng.'  $\beta$ . Here pounconed has the same sense, but is a derivative word, being made from the sb. pounson or punsoun, a bodkin or dagger; for which see Barbour's Bruce, i. 545, and my note on the line. The form pounson answers to Low Lat. poother in old edd. of Shak. Cor. ii. 1. 234; pudder in K. Lear, iii. 2. | acc. punctionem, whence the mod. F. poinson, a punch or puncheon for 20. M. F. puderen, apparently in the sense 'to poke about;' see piercing holes. We must refer the verb pownsen to an O. F. ponser\*, to pierce, now lost, and perhaps not recorded. [The mod. F. poncer  $\mathbf{\hat{e}}$  POVERTY, the state of being poor. (F.,-L.) In early use. is related to Pounce (2).]  $\mathbf{\hat{y}}$ . We have, however, parallel forms in other languages, viz. Span. punchar, to prick, punch, puncha, a thorn, line. -O. F. powerte, later powerte, 'powerty,' Cotr. Mod. F. pawareté, prickle, sharp point, exactly equivalent to the pounce or talon of the hawk; Ital. punzechiare, to prick slightly (which presupposes a form punzare, to prick); punzone, a puncher. 8. pumice, and orig, used for powdered pumice-stone, but afterwards ex-tended to other kinds of fine powder, and to various uses of it. "Long effeminate pouldred [powdered] pounced haire;' Prynne, Histrio-Mastix, pt. i. Act vi [iv?] sc. 5 (R.) 'Pounce, a sort of powder strew'd upon paper to bear ink, or to soak up a blot;' Phillips, ed. 1706. – F. ponce; 'pierre ponce, a punis stone,' Cot. 'Ponce, punice;' Hamilton. – Lat. punicem, acc. of punex, punice; whence ponce (= pom'ce) is regularly formed.  $\beta$ . There is little doubt that pumer stands for spumer, and that the stone is named from its lightness and general remarkable resemblance to foam; from Lat. spuma, foam; which from Lat. spuere, to spit, throw up; see Spume, Spow. Der. pounce, to sprinkle with pounce (F. poncer); Pounce, pow. even. Hen. IV. 1. 3. 38. Doublet, pumice. POUND (1), a weight, a sovereign. (L.) The sense of weight 'is the orig. one. M. E. pund, later pound, frequently with the pl. the same as the singular, whence the mod. phrase 'a five pound note.' An hundred pund' = a hundred pounds, Havelok, 1633. – A.S. pund, pl. pund, a weight, a pound; see Luke, xix. 16, John, xii. 3. – Lat. pondo, a pound, used as an indeclinable sb. though orig. meaning 'by weight;' allied to pondus, a weight. Hence also were borrowed G. plund, &c. - Lat. pendere, to weigh; closely allied to pendere, to hang; see Pendant. Der. pound-age; see Blount's Nomolexicon, ed. 1691. And see ponder.

POUND (2), an enclosure for strayed animals. (E.) The same word as pond. Which thus in pound was pent; Gascoigne, A Deuise for Viscount Mountacute; see Gascoigne's Works, ed. Hazbetween the viscount aboundative, see Obsecting ond. M.E. pond; in the comp. pond-folde (other readings ponfolde, punfolde, pounfolde, ppn-fold), P. Plowman, B. v. 633; with the sense 'pinfold 'or 'pound.' - A.S. pund, an enclosure; the compound pund-breche, explained by infractura parei = the breaking into an enclosure, occurs in the Laws of Hen. I., c. 40; see Thorpe's Ancient Laws, vol. i. p. 540. Hence A. S. forpyndan, to shut in, repress; Grein, i. 320. Cf. Icel. pynda, to shut in, torment; O. H. G. piunta, an enclosure, cited by Grein, ii. 362; Irish pont, a pound for cattle, a pond. Der. pound, verb, for, i. 4, 17; im-pound. Also pin-fold, K. Lear, ii. 2. 9, for pind-fold = pound-fold, as shewn by M. E. pynfold cited above, the vowel i being due to the y in the derived A. S. pyndan; as also in pind-ar, Doublet, pend.

POUND (3), to beat, bruise in a mortar. (E.) Here the d is excrescent; it stands for pour, from an older form pun. Cf. soun-d for M.E. soun, goun-d, vulgar form of gown. M.E. pournen, to bruise, Wyclif, Matt. xxi. 44, earlier version. - A.S. punian, to pound; the pp. gepunod occurs as a various reading for geenucud (= knocked, pounded) in Cockayne's Leechdoms, i. 176, footnote 4. Der. pound-er. POUR, to cause to flow, send forth, utter, flow. (C.) M. E. pouren, P. Plowman, B. v. 220; often used with out, Gower, C. A. i. 302, 1. 9. The orig. sense was prob. 'to jerk' or 'throw' water out of a vessel, and it is almost certainly of Celtic origin. It is commonly referred to W. burw, to cast, to throw, to strike, to rain; whence burw gwlow, to cast rain, i.e. to rain (from gwlow, rain). I suspect that an older and truer form occurs in Irish purraim, I push, jerk, throst ; Gael. purr, to push, thrust, drive, urge. improbably ultimately identical with Pore (2), q. v. [†] ¶ Not POURTRAY, the same as Portray, q. v. POUT (1), to look sulky or displeased, to puff out the lips or cheeks. (C.) In Shak. Cor. v. 1. 52. M. E. pouten, in Reliquize Antiquze, ii. 211 (Stratmann). Of Celtic origin; cf. W. pudu, to pout, to be sullen, which I suppose to stand for an older form putu. Cf. W. cad, battle, where the O. Welsh form is cat (Rhys); and cf. W. pwdr, rotten, with Lat. putris. β. Perhaps further related to W. pwdr, to push, thrust; see Put. Cf. also W. poten, a paunch; polenu, to form a paunch. ¶ May not the W. pwdu account for F. bouder, to pout? See Boudoir. Der. pout (2), pout-er, pout-ing.

And see pudding. POUT (2), a kind of fish. (C.) • It has the power of inflating a membrane which covers the eyes and neighboring parts of the head;' Webster. 'Powt, or eel-powt;' Minsheu. We find A.S. disputan, eel-pouts, in Ælfric's Colloquy (Fisherman), in Wright's Vocab. i. 6, 1. 5. Of Celtic origin; see Pout (1); from its pouting out the membrane. ¶ The Sc. pout, chicken (Jamieson) = poult, q.v.  $\notin$  ii. 1. 24. The old sense is to strut about, as if for display; and the Hence power, where the w is used to avoid the appearance of an hiatus; Prick of Conscience, 5884. — O. F. poër, also pooir, and (in order to avoid histus) povoir, power; mod. F. pouvoir. The O. F. poër stands for poter, as shewn by Ital. potere, power; cf. also Span. poder, power. β. The word is merely due to a substantival use of an infinitive mood, as in the case of leisure, pleasure; the Ital. potere, Span. poder, are both infini-tives as well as sbs., with the sense ' to be able.' - Low Lat. poter to be able, which (as shewn by Diez) took the place of Lat, posse in the 8th century. The Lat, posse is itself a contraction for pol-esse, used by Plautus and Lucretius; and pot-esse, again, stands for potis esse, to be powerful; from polis, powerful, and esse, to be. See Possible and Essence. Der. power-ful, Spenser, F. Q. iv. 10. 36; power-ful-ly, power-ful-ness; power-less, power-less-ly, power-less-ness. Doublet, posse.

POX, an eruptive disease. Written for pocks, pl. of pock, a pustule: see Pock.

A. ii. 89. – F. practique, 'practise, experience,' Cot. – Lat. practica, fem. of practicus. - Gk. aparticos, fit for business, practical; whence  $\eta$  mpastich ( $4\pi i\sigma \tau h\mu \eta$ ), practical science, practice. – Gk.  $\pi \rho as$ -tos, to be done; verbal adj. of  $\pi \rho d\sigma \sigma \epsilon i \nu$  (= $\pi \rho a \kappa \gamma \epsilon i \nu$ ), to do, to ac-complish.  $\beta$ . Der. practise, verb, K. John, i. 214 (cf. practisour = practis-er, in Chaucer, C. T. 424); practis-er. Also practic-able, used by Bp. Taylor, vol. iii. ser. 2 (R.), formed from F. practiquer, 'to practise,' Cot.; hence practic-abl-y, practic-abil-i-ty; also practic-al. North's Plutarch, pt. ii. p. 18 (R.), practic-abil-i-ty; also practic-al. North's Plutarch, a needless suffixed -er from the older term practician, with the same sense (both practician and practitioner are in Minsheu), from F. practicien, 'a practicer or practitioner in law,' Cot. PRAIRIE, an extensive meadow or tract of grass.  $(F_{..}-L_{.})$  A word imported from America in modern times. 'The wondrous, beautiful prairies;' Longfellow, Evangeline, iv. 12. - F. prairie, 'a medow, or medow ground;' Cot. - Low Lat. prataria, meadowland; used A.D. 832; Ducange. - Lat. prat-um, a meadow; with adj. fem. suffix -aria. The notion of trimming by means of pricking or making small holes comes out also in the verb to prick, a Hen. IV, iii. 2. 122, 156 (and see Halliwell); note also the phrase point-device. Accordingly I regard prank and prink as formed from prick, just as pink is from pick; see Pink (1) and Pink (2). Der.

Also pressfat, a pressing-vat, Haggai, ii. 16; see Fat (2) and Vat. Also print, im-print.

PRESS (2), to hire men for service, to engage men by earnest-money for the public service, to carry men off forcibly to become sailors or soldiers. (F, -L) The Dictionaries do not explain this word at all well; the only adequate explanation is in Wedgwood. It is quite certain, as he shews, that press is here a corruption of the old word prest, ready, because it was customary to give earnestmoney to a soldier on entering service, just as to this day a recruit receives a shilling. This earnest-money was called prest-money, i. e. ready money advanced, and to give a man such money was to imprest him, now corruptly written impress. 'At a later period, the practice of taking men for the public service by compulsion made the word to be understood as if it signified to force men into the service, and the original reference to earnest-money was quite lost sight of; 'Wedgwood.  $\beta$ . Prest was once a common word for ready money advanced, or ready money on loan. And he sent thyder iii. somers [sumpterhorses] laden with nobles of Castel [Castile] and floreyns, to gyve in prest [as ready money] to knyghtes and squyers, for he knewe well otherwyse he sholds not have them come out of theyr houses;' Berners, tr. of Froissart, vol. ii. c. 64 (R.) See also Skelton, Colin Clout, 350-354, and Dyce's note; North's Plutarch, ed. 1594, p. 638. Both prest-money and imprest-money are in Minsheu, ed. 1627; and Cotgrave explains O. F. impressance by 'prest, or imprest money, received and to be imployed for another.' - O. F. prester, 'to lend, also, to trust out [advance] or sell unto daies' [unto an appointed time], Cot. Cf. O. F. prest, 'prest, ready, full dight, furnished, ... prompt, nere at hand,'id. Ital. pressance, 'to lend,' Florio; impressance, 'to lend or give to lone,' minerfect, prester-pluperfect. 465

This word seems to be of rather late formation, and also to be associated with the notion of compulsion or pressing; at the same time, it certainly took its origin from the verb press, in the sense of ' to hire

Certainly took its origin from the vero press, in the sense of to mire men for service;' see therefore Press (2), as orig, quite distinct from Press (1). And see Gang. PRESTICLE, a delusion; also, influence due to former fame or excellence.  $(F_{,,-}L_{.})$  This word is in the very rare position of having achieved a good meaning in place of a bad one; the reverse is more usual, as noted in Trench, Study of Words. Cf. mod. F. presige, 'fascination, magic spell, magic power, prestige,' Hamilton. In some authors, it had a bad sense, in E. as well as in F., but it is not an old word with us. 'Prestiges, illusions, impostures, juggling not an old word with us. PRETEND, to affect to feel, to feign. (F., -L.) M. E. pre-tenden, to lay claim, Chaucer, Troilus, b. iv. l. 922. - O. F. pretendre, 'to pretend, lay claim to;' Cot. - Lat. pratendere, to spread before, hold out as an excuse, allege, pretend. - Lat. pra, before; and tendere, to stretch, spread; see Pro- and Tond. Dor. pretend-er, esp. used of the Old and Young Pretenders, so called because they laid claim to the crown. Also pretence, Macb. ii. 3. 137 (first folio), a mistaken spelling for pretense, from late Lat. pratensus, pp. of pratendere (the usual Lat. pp. is pratentum, but tendere gives both tensum and tentum); the right spelling pretense is in Spenser, F. Q. iv. 5. 23, with which cf. pretensed, i. e. intended, in Robinson's tr. of More's Utopia, ed. Arber, p. 20, l. 7. PRETOR, PRETORIAL; see Prestor. PRETTY, pleasing, tasteful, neat, beautiful. (C.) Spelt pretie in Minsheu and Levins. M. E. prati, praty, Prompt. Parv.; Destruction of Troy, ed. Panton and Donaldson, 2622, 10815, 13634. The old senses are 'comely' and 'clever,' as used in the above passages; but the true sense was rather 'tricky,' 'cunning,' or 'full of wiles;' though the word has acquired a better sense, it has never quite lost a sort of association with pettiness. - A. S. pratig, pratig, tricky, deceitful; Wille ge beon prattige,' tr. of Lat. 'Vultis esse versipelles;' Ælfric's Colloquy, in Wright's Voc. i. 12. A rare word; formed with the usual suffix -ig (as in stán-ig, E. ston-y) from a sb. præt, prætt, deceit, Quellen, p. 347, col. 1. So also we have Lowland Scotch pratty, pretty, tricky, from prat, a trick, used by G. Douglas (Jamieson). + Icel. prettugr, tricky; from prettr, a trick, pretta, to cheat, deceive. + Norweg. pretten, prettevis, tricky, roguish; from pretta, a trick, piece of roguery, pretta, to play a trick (Aasen). B. The word is pro-bably of Celtic origin; as appears from O. Com. prat, an act or deed, a cunning trick, connected (according to Williams) with W. praith, ¶ Certainly not connected with G. prächtig, showy, an act, deed. as is clear from the absence of the guttural in the E., Icel., Dan., and Cornish forms, and by the difference in sense. Der. pretti-ly, spelt pretily, Court of Love, 420; pretti-ness, Hamlet, iv. 5. 189; also pretty, adv. [†] PREVAIL, to overcome, effect, have influence over. (F., -L.)

Spelt prevayle in Levins ; prevaile in Minsheu. - O. Der. prevail-ing; preval-ent, Milton, P. L. vi. 411, from Lat. prewalence, stem of pres. part. of præwalere; preval-ence, from O. PREVARICATE, to shift about, to quibble. (L.) ' When any of us hath prevaricated our part of the covenant,' i.e. swerved from it, Bp. Taylor, vol. ii. ser. 3 (R.) [Prevaricator and prevarication are both in Minsheu's Dict.; but not the verb.]-Lat. præuaricatus, pp. of prawaricari, to spread the legs apart in walking, to straddle, to walk crookedly; hence to swerve, shuffle, &c. - Lat. præ, before, here used as an intensive prefix; and waricus, straddling, extended (with suffix ic-) from warus, bent, stretched outwards, straddling. Cf. Lat. Uarus as a proper name, orig. a nickname.  $\beta$ . It is supposed by some that Lat. warus is cognate with G. quer, D. F. prevarication, 'prevarication,' Cot. PREVENT, to hinder, obviate. (L.) The old sense is 'to go

F. proie, prey. – Lat. β. Præda is thought to stand for præ-hed-a, that præda, booty. which is got or seized beforehand; from præ, before, and hed, hat which is got or seized beforehand; from præ, before, and hed, base of hendere, to seize, cognate with E. get. Similarly prendere is short for prehendere, as is well known. See Pro- and Get. Y. But if Lat. præda be the same word with W. praidd, flock, herd, booty, prey, Gael, and Irish spreidh, cattle of any kind, then there has been a loss of initial s. Der. prey, vb., Rich. F. priz. - Lat. pretium, price. B. Lat. pre-tium is formed with suffix -tium (from Aryan suffix -ti, Schleicher, Compend.  $\frac{1}{2}$  26) as in serui-tium, service; the base being pre-=per-=per. Cf. Lithman prekia, prekius, price, from perku, I sell (Nesselmann), from the same stem per-, but with a different suffix; also Gk.  $\pi i p \cdot \eta \mu$ , I sell.  $\pi i = a \mu a i$ , I buy. In the Skt. rana, wages, hire, reward, expense, price. the lingual n marks the loss of r, so that pana = par-na; Curtins, i.

the lingual n marks the loss of r, so that pana = par-na; Curtus, 1. 339.—  $\checkmark$  PAR, to buy; whence Skt. pan (= parná), to buy. Dar. price-less; prec-i-ous, prize (2), verb. Doublet, praise. PRICK, a sharp point, puncture, sting, remorse. (E) M. E. prike, pricke, prikke, Ancren Riwle, p. 228, last line.— A. S. price, a point, dot, Ælfred, tr. of Boethius, b. ii. pr. 7, cap. xviii. § 1; price, a point, jot, tittle, Matt. v. 18. + O. Du. prick, a prickle, whence mod. Du. prikkel; see Kilian. + Dan. prik, a dot; whence prikk, to park with dot. 4 Swed with a point dot prick tittle. mark with dots. + Swed. prick, a point, dot, prick, tittle; whence pricka, to point, to mark with pricks. Cf. also W. pric, a stack. a broach; Irish pricadh a goad, prioca, a sting; Skt. priced, of varie-gated colour (spotted, dotted), Gk. wepw-wos, spotted. B. It is clear that the orig. sense is 'a dot' or 'spot;' and there is very little doubt that an initial s has been lost, which appears in Irish sprichar, a sting. Cf. also Skt. prink, to sprinkle, priskata, speckled, also a spot, drop; all related to a  $\sqrt{SPARK}$ , to sprinkle, whence Lat. spargere (for sparc-ere), to scatter, sprinkle, Irish spreightme, I scatter, M. H. G. sprengen, to sprinkle, and E. sprinkle (nasalised form of sprikle or sprickle); see Sprinkle. Curtius, i. 340; Fick, i. 669. Y. The notion of 'puncturing' or 'goading' is unoriginal, and the up to thick in the puncturing or 'goading' is unoriginal, and the verb to prick is a mere derivative from the sb., as shewn by the forms. Der. prick, verb, M. E. priken, prikien, Havelok, 2639. P. Plowman, B. xviii, 11 (the A.S. prician being unauthorised); hence prick-er. Also prick-le, O. Northumb. pricle, Matt. v. 18 (Lindisfame MS.), a dimin. form, with the orig. sense 'a little dot' or 'speck.' Hence prick-I-y, which seems to be formed from prickle rather than from prick with suffix -ly; prick-li-ness. [†] PRIDE, the feeling of being proud. (E.) M. E. pride, pryde, P. Plowman, B. v. 15; spelt pruide, id. A. v. 15; prude, id. C. vi. 118, Ancren Riwle, p. 140, l. 6. - A. S. pryte, pride, Ælfric's Homilies, ii. 220, l. 32. (Thus pride is a weakened form of prite.) β. The A.S. prite is regularly formed from the adj. prit, proud, by the change of i to j; see Proud. We find also A.S. pritung, pride; Mone, Quellen, p. 355, col. 1. Cf. Icel. pridi, an ornament, from pridr, proud; both borrowed from E., but they exhibit the length of the vowel. Der. pride, vb. reflexive. PRIEST, a presbyter, one in holy orders, above a deacon and PALENST, a presbyter, one in holy orders, above a deaton and below a bishop. (L., -Gk.) M. E. presst, Chaucer, C. T. 505; presst, Ancren Riwle, p. 16, l. 25. -A. S. presst, Laws of K. Edgar, i. 2 (see Thorpe's Ancient Laws, p. 263); and, earlier, in the Laws of Ethelbert, § 1 (id. p. 3). Contracted from Lat. presbyter (= Gk.  $\pi pes \sigma \beta ure pos)$ , as clearly shewn by the O. F. prestre (13th cent.), mod. F. prétre. Cf. Prester John in Mandeville's Travels, where prester= β. Πρεσβύτεροs is comp. of πρέσ-βυε, Doric πρέσ-για, pres(by)ler. old; where  $\pi \rho e \sigma = \rho r i e - in Lat. pris-cus, pris-tinus, old, and <math>\gamma v e$  is (probably) from  $\sqrt{GA}$ , to beget, produce; Curtius, ii. 82. See Pris-tino. Dor. priest-ess (with F. suffix); priest-kood, A. S. preóst-kód, Ælfred, tr. of Beda, b. i. c. 7 (near beginning); priest-craft; priest-ly, Pericles, iii. 1. 70; priest-li-ness; priest-ridden. Doubles, presbyter. PRIM, precise, affectedly neat or nice. (F., -L.) Bailey (vol. i. ed.

1735) has: 'to prim, to set the mouth conceitedly, to be full of affected ways.' Phillips, ed. 1706, has: 'to prim, to be full of affected ways, to be much conceited.' The oldest example is prym, sb. a neat girl, in Barclay's Fifth Eclogue, cited by Nares. [From the E. word are derived the Lowland Scotch primp (with excrescent p), to assume prudish or self-important airs, to deck oneself in a stiff and affected manner (Jamieson); and primzie, demure, in Burns, Hallowe'en, st. 9.] Halliwell also cites the word prin as meaning prim, affectedly neat,' but in the quotation adduced from Fletcher's Poems, p. 140, the word obviously means ' thin, gaunt, slender,' &c.  $\beta$ . The sense of 'slender' or 'delicate' is the orig. one, as shewn in p. The sense of "stender of "dencate is the orig, one, as shewn in Cotgrave.-O.F. prim, masc., prime, fem., 'prime, forward;' also prim, 'thin, subtill, piercing, sharp;' also prime, both masc. and fem., 'thin, slender, exile, small; as chevens primes, smooth or delicate hair;' Cot. This last example comes sufficiently near to the E. use. Y. The O.F. prim (corrupter form prim) is from the Lat. masc. acc. primum; the form prime answers to the Lat. fem. prima. The nom. case is primus, first, chief; see Prime (1). Cf. also prov. E. prime, to trim trees; and the phrase 'to prime a gun;' see Prime (2). The sense of 'thin' as derived from that of 'first' or 'foremost is hard to account for; perhaps there is an allusion to the growth of newly grown shoots and buds; cf. filer prim, 'to run thin, or by little and little;' Cot. In E, it is probable that the sense of "E, value, excellence, recompence. (F.,-L.) M. E. pris, prim was affected by some confusion with the old verb print, to adom, dress well, be smart and gay, to be pert or forward (Halli- Pprince, St. Marharete, ed. Cockayne, p. 2, l. 15. - F. prince. Cf. Ital. well); which is merely a nasalised form of the verb to prick, used in the sense of ' to trim ' by Palsgrave and others ; cf. Lowland Scotch prickmaleerie, stiff and precise, prickmedainty, finical (Jamieson). Der.

PRIME (1), first, chief, excellent. (F., -L.) M.E. prime, properly an adj. [A fem. form, the O. F. masc. being prim.] - Lat. prima, i.e. prima Aora, the first hour; fem. of primus, first.  $\beta$ . Pri-mus is a superl. form, and stands for pro-imus, whence the long i. The suffix is the same as in mini-imus (where -mus, whether the holg i. The suffix -ma, appearing also in A.S. forma, Goth. fru-ma, first, which are cognate words); Curtius, i. 354. Or, again, we may look upon prime as expressing 'to put into prime order,' to make quite ready; from prime in the sense of 'ready;' see Nares. But whatever the exact history may be, we may be sure that the etymology is from the E. adj. prime. Cf. prov. E. prime, to trim trees (Halli-well). See Prime (1), and Prim. Der. prim-ing, prim-age, an allowance to the captain of a vessel for loading the same.

PRIMERO, an old game at cards. (Span., -L.) Cotgrave translates O. F. prime by 'primero at cards,' &c.; and see Shak. Merry Wives, iv. 5. 104. - Span. primero, first; the Span. primera (fem. form) is still given as the name of a game at cards. But the game is obsolete, and little is known about it; it probably derives its name from some chief or principal card. - Lat. primarius, primary; from primus, first; see Prime (1). PRIMEVAL, original, lit. belonging to the first age. (L.) Also spelt primaval. In Pope, Dunciad, iv. 630. PRIMRÖSE, the name of a spring flower.  $(F_{.,-}L_{.})$ A. 'Two noble primeroses;' Ascham, Scholemaster, pt. i., ed. Arber, p. 66. Cf. 'Prymerose, primula ;' Prompt. Parv. - F. prime rose, lit. first rose, so called because it comes early in the spring - Lat. prime rosa; see Prime (1) and Rose. B. The above is the popular and obvious Prime (1) and Rose. etymology of the word as it stands; but primrose is, historically, a corruption (due to popular etymology) of M. E. primerole, a prim-rose, Chaucer, C. T. 3268. This answers to a Low Lat. form primerula*, a regular dimin. of Low Lat. primula, a primrose (see Prompt. Parv.), still preserved in Span. primula. Again, primula is a dimin. form from primus; see Prime (1), as before. [†]

Der. principl-ed, sm-principl-ed. PRINT, an impression, engraving, impression of type on paper. (F.,-L.) Under Imprint, I have said that imprint is a compound from im- and print; and such is, historically, the case. But it will appear that print is itself short for emprint, or rather for the F, form empreinte. The use of the word is much older than the invention of printing. M. E. printe, prente. In Chaucer, C. T. 6186, Six-text, D. 604, the Wife of Bath says: 'I had the printe of seinte Venus sele.' In two MSS. it is spelt prente; in one MS. it is preente. It is also spelt preente, presente in the Prompt. Parv. 'And to a badde peny, with a good preynte;' Plowman, C. xviii. 73. Formed, by loss of the first syllable, from O. Cotgrave explains O.F. fresillon and troesne by 'privet, primprint.' Florio, ed. 1598, explains Ital. ligustro by 'the privet or primeprint tree.' In Tusser's Husbandry, ed. Herrtage (E. D. S), § 15. st. 42, we find the forms private and prim. In the Grete Herball (as cited in Prior, Dervley Nurses (British Black) Popular Names of British Plants), we find the form primet applied to the primrose; the confusion being due to the fact that the Lat. ligustrum was applied to both plants. 'Hoc ligustrum, a primerolle;' Wright's Voc. i. 190, col. 2 [not p. 192]. B. It thus appears that the orig. short name was prim, whence the dimin. primet, corruptly privet, or (by elision of the e) prim't or print. The form prim-print (=prim-prim-et) is a reduplicated one. Y. Prob. so named from its being formally cut and trimmed; cf. prov. E. prime, to trim trees; see Prim. ¶ I cannot believe in a connection with the river called Pryfetes-flod, A.S. Prolizus must be compared with elinus, soaked, boiled, allied to O. Lat. lixa, water, and liqui, liquere, to flow. It meant, in Byzantine authors, orig. the first leaf glued on to MSS., in order to register under whose administration, and by whom, the MS. was written; it was afterwards particularly applied to documents drawn up by notaries, because, by a decree of Justinian, such documents were always to be accompanied by such a first leaf or fly-leaf. It means ' first glued-on,' i.e. glued on at the beginning. -Gk. πρώτο-, crude form of πρώτοs, first ; and κολλήν, to glue, from Gk. κόλλα, glue. β. Gk. πρώτοs is a superl. form from πρό, before; see Pro-. The root of κόλλα is unknown; cf. Russ. klei, glue.

PROTOMARTYB, the first martyr. (F., -L., -Gk.) ¶ So also, with the same prefix, we have proto-plasm, proto-pkyle, &c. PROTRACT, to prolong. (L.) 'Without longer protracting of tyme;' Hall's Chron., Hen. VI. an. 38 (R.); and in Shak. - Lat. protract-us, pp. of protrahere, to draw forth, prolong. - Lat. pro-, forth; and trakers, to draw; see Pro- and Trace. Der. protract-ion (not F.); protract-ive, Shak. Troil. i. 3. 20; protract-or. PROTRUDE, to push forward, put out. (L.) In Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. iii. c. 20, § 4. - Lat. protrudere, to thrust forth. - Lat. pro., forth; and trudere, to thrust, allied to E. threat; see Pro- and Threat. Der. protrusion, coined from Lat. pp. protrusus; protrus-ive Der. protuberance.

PROUD, haughty, arrogant. (E.) M. E. prud (with long w), Havelok, 303; Ancren Riwle, p. 176, l. 17; later proud, P. Plowman, B. iii. 178. Older form prut (with long u), Ancren Riwle, p. 276, l. 19; Layamon, 8828 (earlier text; later text, prout). - A. S. prút, proud; a word of which the traces are slight; the various reading priving for rances in the A.S. Chron. an. 1006, is only found in MS. F. & provocation,' Cot., from Lat. acc. provocationen; provoc-at-ive, Henryof the 12th century; see Earle, Two A.S. Chronicles, notes, p. 336. Yet its earlier existence may be safely inferred from the occurrence of the derived words pristing, pride, Mone, Quellen, p. 355, and priste in Ælfric's Homilies, ii. 220, formed by the usual vowel-change from a to y; see Pride.  $\beta$ . Moreover, we find Icel. prudr, proud, borrowed from A.S.; with which cf. Dan. prud, stately, magnificent. Root unknown. Der. proud-ly; also pride, q. v. PROVE, to test, demonstrate, experience. (F.,-L.) In old authors, it commonly means ' to test,' as in the proverb, ' the exception proves the rule' = Lat. 'exceptio probat regulam;' a phrase often foolishly used to signify that 'an exception demonstrates a rule,' which is plainly absurd. M.E. proven, preven (with u for v), P. Plowman, B. viii. 120, A. iz. 115. Older spelling preouen, Ancren Riwle, p. 390, 1. 22. = O. F. prover, pruver, later prover, 'to prove, try, essay, 1. 22.-0. F. prover, prover, later prover, 'to prove, uy, essay, verifie, approve, assure,' &c.; Cot.-Lat. probare, to test, try, ex-amine, orig, to judge of the goodness of a thing. - Lat. probus, good, excellent. Root uncertain.  $\beta$ . From the Lat. probuse are also derived, not only Port. provar, Span. probar, Ital. provare, but also A.S. profian, Laws of Ine, § 20, in Thorpe's Ancient Laws, i. 116, Du. proeven, Icel. prója, Swed. pröjva, Dan. pröve, G. proben, probiren. The mod. E. prove seems to have been taken from the F. rather than from Lat. directly. Der. provable, provabl-9, provabl-mess; and see proof, probable, probation, probe, probity, ap-prove, dis-ap-

PROVEINDER, dry food for beasts, as hay and corn. (F., -L.) In Shak. Hen. V, iv. 2. 58; Oth. i. 1. 48. The final r is an E. addition, just as in lavender; it seems to be due to the preservation of the final e in M. E. provende, provende, which was orig. a trisyllabic word. Shak, has also the shorter form provand, Cor. ii. I. 367, which is, strictly, a better form. The M. E. provende also meant 'prebend,' as in: 'Provende, rent, or dignité;' Rom. of the Rose, 6931. According to Stratmann, provende occurs in the sense of 'provender' in Robert Manning's Hist. of England (unpublished), ed. Furnivall, l. 11188. – F. provende, 'provender, also, a prebendry;' Cot. [In O.F. it also has the sense of 'prebend;' see Littré.] – Lat. præbenda, a payment; in late Lat. a daily allowance of provisions, also a prebend; Ducange. Fem. of prabendus, pass. fut. part. of prabere, to afford, give; see Probend. ¶ We might also explain the mod. form as due to confusion with M. E. provendre, which meant 'a prebendary," or person enjoying a prebend, where the suffix answers to mod. E. -er, so that provendre = prebend-er. See the passages quoted in Richardson, esp. from Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 81, 1. 2, p. 210, l. 27. 'Now is steward for his achates [purchases] .... personer and prouendre alone,' i.e. sole partner and prebendary; Test. of Love, b. iii. fol. 296, col. 2, ed. 1651.

PROVERB, a short familiar sentence, an adage, a maxim. (F., -L.) M. E. proverbe (with u = v), Wyclif, John, xvi. 29. - F. proverbe, *a proverb. - Lat. prouerbium, a common saying, proverb. - Lat. pro., publicly; and uerbum, a word. See Pro- and Verb. Elyot, The Governor, b. ii. c. 12, from F. provision = Lat. acc. provisionem; provis-ion, verb, provis-ion-al, provis-ion-al-ly; provis-or, M. E. provisour, P. Plowman, B. iv. 133, from F. proviseur, 'a provider,' Cot., = Lat. acc. provisorem; provisory, provisor-i-ly. Also proviso, I Hen. IV, i. 3. 78, from the Lat. law-pirase proviso guod = it being provided that, in use A.D. 1350 (Ducange); pl. provisos. Doublet, purvey; doublet of provident, prudent.

PROVINCE, a business or duty, a portion of an empire or state, a region, district, department. (F, -L) M. E. prowynce, province (with u=v), Wyclif, Deeds [Acts], xxiii. 34. – F. province, 'a province,' Cot. - Lat. provincia, a territory, conquest.  $\beta$ . Of unknown origin, the various explanations are unfounded and unsatisfactory. Der. provinci-al, Meas. for Meas. v. 318; provinci-al-ly, provinci-al-ism. PROVISION, PROVISO; see under Provide.

PROVOKE, to call forth, excite to action or anger, offend, challenge. (F., -L.) M. E. prowoken, Prompt. Parv. - F. provoquer, 'to provoke,' Cot. - Lat. proncars, to call forth, challenge, incite, pro-voke. - Lat. pro-, forth; and wocars, to call forth user, stem of wox, the voice. See Pro- and Vocal. E. provost (with u = v), Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. i. pr. 4, l. 203; pro-uest, Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 268, l. 7.–O. F. provost (Burguy), variant of prevost, 'the provost or president of a college;' Cot. - Lat. præpositum, acc. of præpositus, a prefect; lit. 'one who is set over, pp. of praponere, to set over. - Lat. præ, before ; and ponere, to place. See Pre- and Position. β. Ducange gives propositor. as equivalent to propositus; it is certain that the prefix pro- is due to confusion of the Lat. prefix pro- with pra; the mod. F. prévét keeps the correct form. The A. S. práfost is formed directly from the Latin. In Italian we find both prevosto and preposto; shewing that

PROW, the fore-part of a ship. (F., -L., -Gk.) In Minsheu, ed. 1627.-O. F. prous (mod. F. prous), 'the prow, or forepart of a ship;' Cot. Cf. Ital. proda, prua. - Lat. prora, the prow of a ship; the second r disappearing in order to avoid the double trill. - Gk. #papa (for  $\pi \rho \omega t - \rho \alpha$ ), the prow; extended from  $\pi \rho \omega t$ , in front (usually early), an old locative form connected with spo, before; see Pro- PROWESS, bravery, valour. (F.,-L.) Originally 'excellence.' M. E. prowess, prowesse, Rob. of Glouc. p. 12, l. 20; p. 112, l. 2; pruesse, King Horn, ed. Lumby, l. 556.-O. F. prowesse, 'prowesse,' Cot.; formed with suffix -esse (= Lat. -itia) from O. F. prov., brave, mod. F. preux, 'hardy, doughty, valiant, full of prowess;' Cot. β. The etym. of O. F. prou is much disputed ; it occurs also in the forms prod, prud, pros, proz, &c., fem. prode, prude ; we also find Prov. proz, Ital. prode. Y. But, besides the adj. prou, we also find a sb. prou, formerly prod, in the sense of 'advantage;' thus bon prou law face = much good may it do them. This is the common M.E. prow, meaning profit, advantage, benefit, as in Chaucer, C. T. 12234, 13338. 8. It is certain that provesse was used to translate Lat. probitas, and that prou was used to translate probus, but the sense of the words was, nevertheless, not quite the same, and they seem to have been drawn together by the influence of a popular etymology which supposed prov to represent probus, but which is prob. wrong. For example, we cannot explain the fem. prode or prude as = Lat. proba, which would rather have given a form prove. The d is very persistent; we still find the fem. prude even in mod. E., and we must observe that Ital. prode means both 'advantage' and 'valiant,' whilst the F. prud'homme e. It seems best to accept simply meant, at first, 'brave man.' in the suggestion that the word is due to the Lat. prep. pro, often used in the sense of 'in favour of ' or ' for the benefit of;' and to explain (with Scheler) the d as due to the occasional form prod-, appearing (with Scheler) the a as due to the occasional form proa, appearing in Lat. prod-esse, to be useful to, to do good, to benefit. e. This would also explain the use of O. F. prod, prou, as an adverb. Cot. has: 'Prou, much. greatly, enough;' which seems to be nothing but the Lat. prod- (without its accompanying -esse) in the sense of 'suffi-cient.' See Pro-, and Prude.

PROWL, to rove in search of plunder or prey. (C.?) 'To proule for fishe, percontari; To proule for riches, omnia appetere;' Levins. M. E. prollen, to search about; Chaucer, C. T. 16880. ' Prollyn, as ratchys [dogs that hunt by scent], Scrutor,' Prompt. Parv. 'Prollynge, or sekynge, Perscrutacio, investigacio, scrutinium ;' id. 'Purlyn, idem quod Prollyn;' id. 'I prolle, I go here and there to seke a thyng, is tracasse. Prolyng for a promocyon, ambition ;' Palsgrave. Wedgwood well says: 'The derivation from a supposed F. proieler \*, to seek one's prey, is extremely doubtful.' I will go further, and say that it is impossible; there is no such F. word, nor any reason why there should be; if there were, it would surely have given us a why there should be; if there were, it would surely have given us a form preyle rather than prolle; and lastly, the notion of 'prey' is by no means inseparably connected with the use of M.E. prollen.  $\beta$ . It means rather 'to keep poking about,' and I suspect it to be a contracted frequentative form, standing for progle, weakened form of prokle; where progle is the frequentative of progue or prog, to search about, esp. for provisions, and proke is an old verb meaning to thrust or poke. See prog or progue, to go a begging, to procure by a beggarly trick, in Todd's Johnson and Nares. 'And that man in the gown, in my opinion, Looks like a proguing [Ist ed. proaging] knave;' Beaum. and Fletcher, Span. Curate, iii. 3 (Ascanio). 'We travel sea and soil, we pry, we prowl, We pro-gress and we prog from pole to pole;' Quarles, Emblems (Nares). 'Prok, to stir or poke about; proking about, a familiar term applied to a person who is busily looking for something, and examining, as to a person who is busily looking for something, and examining, as we say, every hole and corner; prolls, to search or prowl about, to rob, poll, or steal, to plunder; 'Halliwell. See two more exx. of Prompt. Parv. This last form is related to Dan. prakke, explained by 'to prog' in Ferrall and Repp, though probably of a different origin; also to Swed. pracka, to go begging, G. prackern, pracken, to solicit earnestly, to beg. Moreover, the Dan and G. words may be mere adaptations from Lat. procare, to ask, rather than cognate forms from the same root PARK, to pray, to ask, noticed under Pray. But the whole of the words here noticed are somewhat obscure. ¶ The common vulgar word prog, provisions, is a mere derivative of the verb to prog, to search for odds and ends.

PROXIMITY, nearness. (F., -L.) Spelt proximitie in Minsheu, ed. 1627. - F. proximité, 'proximity;' Cot. - Lat. proximitatem, acc. of proximitas ; formed with suffix -tas from proximi - proximo, crude form of proximus, very near, which is a superl. form from prope, near; see Propinquity. Der. Also proximate, rather a late word, see exx. in R. and Todd's Johnson, from Lat. proximatus, pp. of proximore, to approach, from proximus, very near; proximate, p). Or PROXY, the agency of one who acts for another; also an agent. (Low Lat., = L.) 'Vnles the King would send a proxie;' Fox, Martyrs, p. 978, an. 1536 (R.) Proxy is merely a vulgar contraction for procuracy, which is properly an agency, not an agent. 'Procurator, is used for him that gathereth the fruits of a benefice for another man; An. 3 Rich. II, stat. 1. cap. 2. And procuracy is used for the specialtie whereby he is authorized, ibid; 'Minsheu, ed. 1627. Procuracy is Englished from Low Lat. procuratia, a late form used as euracy is Englished from Low Lat. procuratia, a late form used as equivalent to Lat. procuratio, a management. Similarly, proctor is a contraction for procurator, a manager; see Proctor, Procure. The contracted forms, proctor and proxy, seem to have come into use at the close of the 14th century. Cf. Prokecye, procuracia; Proke-toure, Plocurator; Prompt, Parv. Also prockesy, Palsgrave. It thus appears that the syllable -ra- was dropped, whilst u was first weakened to a and afterward discovered. weakened to e and afterwards disappeared. [+] PRUDE, a woman of affected modesty. (F., -L.) In Pope, Rape

PRUDE, a woman of affected modesty. (F., -L.) In Pope, Rape of the Lock, i. 63, iv. 74, v. 36; Tatler, no. 102, Dec. 3, 1709. -F. prude, orig. used in a good sense, excellent, as in 'preude femme, a chast, honest, modest matron,' Cot. O.F. prode; fem. form of O.F. prod, prud, excellent; the etymology of which is discussed under Prowess, q. v. Der. prud-isk; prud-isk-ly, Pope, Dunciad, iv. 194; prud-e-ry, Pope, Answer to Mrs. Howe, I. I, from F. pruderie. PRUDENT, discreet, sagacious, frugal. (F., -L.) M. E. pru-dent, Chaucer, C. T. 1244. - F. prudent, 'prudent,' Cot. - Lat. pru-dent.m, acc. of prudens, prudent. B. Prüdens is a contracted form of providens; see Provident. Der. prudence = Lat. prudentia; prudenet.al, Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674, coined from Lat. prudentia. PRUNEI (1), to trim trees, divest of what is superfluous. (F.? = L.?) The old form is provine, proin; see exx. of proin in Nares and

L.?) The old form is proine, proin; see exx. of proin in Nates and Jamieson. In Chaucer, C. T. 9885, it is said of Damian, when dressing himself up smartly: 'He kembeth him [combs himself], he proineth him and piketh, where the Harl. MS. has pruneth. It here means to trim, trick out, adorn. Gascoigne speaks of imps, i. e. scions of trees, which 'growe crookt, bycause they be not proyad, i.e. pruned; Steel Glas, 458. It was esp. used of birds, in the sense to pick out damaged feathers and arrange the plumage with the bill' (Schmidt), Cymb. v. 4, 118; cf. L. L. Liv. 3, 183. B. Tyrwhitt, with reference to proises in Chaucer, says: 'It seems to have signified, originally, to take cuttings from vines, in order to plant them out. From hence it has been used for the cutting away of the superfluous shoots of all trees, which we now call pruning; and for that operation, which birds, and particularly hawks, perform upon themselves, of picking out their superfluous or damaged feathers. Gower, speaking of an eagle, says: "For there he pruneth kim and piketh As doth an hauke, whan him wel liketh;" Conf. Amant. iii. 75.' Y. If this be right, the etymology is from F. provigner, 'to plant or set a stocke, staulke, slip, or sucker, for increase; hence to propagate, multiply, &c.; Cot. This may have been shortened to program, thus giving M. E. proving ; and, in fact, Littre gives the Berry forms of provigner as preugner, progner, prominer. This verb is from the F. sb. provin, 'a slip or sucker planted,' Cot.; O.F. provain; cf. Ital. propaggine, a vine-sucker laid in the ground.-Lat. propaginem, acc. of propago, a layer, sucker. See Propagate. ¶ There is a slight difficulty, owing to the want of full proof of the transfer of sense from 'setting suckers' to that of 'trimming trees.' Hence Wedgwood, noting the occasional form press, to dress feathers, used of a bird, refers us to Gael. prin, a pin, Icel. prin. But the Icel. word seems to be merely borrowed from Gaelic, and the change of vowel from i in prin to u in prune is not explained. Der. prun-sr. PRUNE (2), a plum. (F., -L., -Gk.) In Sir T. Elyot, Castel of Helth, b. ii. c. 7. - F. prune, 'a plum,' Cot. - Lat. prusum, a plum. - Gk. "pouror, shorter form of "pouror, a plum; "pouros, shorter form of apoûpuros, a plum-tree. Root unknown. Der. prun-ella, or

beg. Thus we have: 'Proklym, or stifly askyn, Procor, Procito; 'Pprun-ello, Pope, Essay on Man, iv. 204, the name of a strong woollen stuff of a dark colour, so named from prunella, the Latinised form of F. prunelle, a sloe, dimin. of prune. Doublet, plum.

PRURIENT, itching. (L.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674 - Lat. prurient., stem of pruriens, pres. part. of pruries, to itch, orig. to burn; cognate with E. freeze; see Freeze. Der. prurience, prurienc-y.

PRY, to peer, to gaze. (O. Low G.) M. E. pryon, prien, Chaucer, C. T. 3458; P. Plowman, B. xvi. 168; Will. of Paleme, 5019; Polit. Songs, ed. Wright, p. 222, l. 11. It is merely the same word as M. E. piren, to peer, used in precisely the same sense; we have numerous instances of a shifting of the letter r, as in bride, M. E.

humerous instances of a similar of the refer  $r_1$  as in order, at the burd, and in bird, M. E. brid. See Poer (2), which is a doublet. PSALM, a sacred song. (L., - Gk.) M. E. pasim, frequently saim, in very early use, Layamon, 23754. A. S. sealm; see Sweet's A. S. Reader. - Lat. pasimus. - Gk.  $\psi a \lambda \mu \delta s$ , a touching, a feeling. esp. the twitching of the strings of a harp ; hence, the sound of the harp, a song, psalm. - Gk. ψάλλειν, to touch, twitch, twang; from base PSAL, put for SPAL. - VSPAR, to struggle, throb; whence also Skt. sphur, sphar, to tremble, throb, struggle, Gk. aowaipew, to pant, G. sich sperren, to struggle. Der. psalm-ist, Levins, F. psalmiste (Cot.), from Lat. psalmista, late Gk. ψαλμιστήs; psalm-ody, spelt psalmodis in Minsheu, F. psalmodis (Cot.), from late Lat. psalmodis, from Gk.  $\psi a \lambda \mu \omega \delta i a$ , a singing to the harp, which from  $\psi a \lambda \mu$ , stem of  $\psi a \lambda \mu \delta s$ , and  $\psi \delta \delta \eta$ , a song, ode (see Ode); psalmodi-c-al, psalmod-ist.

Also pailtery, q. v. PSALTERY, a kind of stringed instrument. (F., -L., -Gk.) In Shak. Cor. v. 4. 52. M. E. santrie, Chaucer, C. T. 3213. - O. F. pollerie, in use in the 12th cent.; see Littre, s. v. psallerion, which is the mod. F. form. - Lat. psallerium. - Gk. ψαλτήριον, a stringed instrument. - Gk. 4arthp, a harper; formed from 4ar, base of 4ar-Ater, to harp; with suffix answering to Aryan -tar, and denoting the agent. See Psalm. Der psalter, M. E. sauter, Holi Meidenhad. ed. Cockayne, p. 3, from O. F. psaltier, 'a psaulter, book of psalms, Cot., from Lat. psalterium, (1) a psaltery, (2) a song sung to the psaltery, the Psalter.

PSEUDONYM, a fictitious name. (F., -Gk.) Modern; not in Todd's Johnson. Borrowed from F. pseudonyme, used by Voltaire, A. D. 1772 (Littré). - Gk. yevdárvupos, adj., called by a false name. -Gk. 46000-, put for 46000s, a falschood (cf. 4600hs, false); and 60000 oropa, a name. [The & results from the coalescence of the double o. B. The Gk.  $\psi \in \partial o s$  is allied to  $\psi v \partial \rho o s$ ,  $\psi v \partial v \phi s$  (base  $\psi v \partial$ .), false; and to  $\psi i \theta - o s$ , a lie, orig. a whisper; cf.  $\psi v \theta i \langle \varepsilon_i v$ , to whisper. This is from a base  $\psi v \theta$ - = SPUT, an extension of the imitative  $\checkmark$  SPU, to blow, whence also ψε-χαιν, to blow, and Skt. phut, the imitative sound of blowing. γ. For the Gk. δνομα, see Name. Der. perudonym-ous.

PSHAW, interjection of disdain. (E.) 'A peevish fellow ... disturbs all with pishes and pshaws;' Spectator (cited by Todd). An imitative word, like pish; from the sound of blowing. Cf. also

PSYCHICAL, pertaining to the soul. (I., -Gk.) Modern; formed with suffix -al from psychic-us, the Latinised form of Gk.  $\psi_{\nu\chi_i \kappa \nu_i}$ , belonging to the soul or life. - Gk.  $\psi_{\nu\chi_i} \kappa_i$  the soul, life. orig. breath. - Gk.  $\psi_{\nu\chi_i} \kappa_i \nu_i$ , to blow; extended from the base  $\psi_{\nu} = \sqrt{SPU}$ , to blow; see Pseudonym. Der. psychology, where the suffix  $-\log y = Gk$ . suffix  $-\lambda o \gamma i a$ , from  $\lambda o \gamma o s$ , discourse, which from λέγειν, to speak ; hence, psycholog-i-c-al, -al-ly ; psycholog-ist. Also mel-em-psychosis, q. v. PTARMIGAN, a species of grouse. (Gaelic.) 'The ptermigton grous' is mentioned in an E. translation of Buffon's Nat. Hist., London, 1792, vol. ii. p. 48. The singular spelling ptarmigan, with a needless initial p, seems to be French and appears in Littre's Dict. - Gael. tarmachan, 'the bird ptarmigan;' Irish tarmachan, 'the bird called the termagant (1).' I do not know the sense of the word ; the Gael. verb tarmaich means ' to originate, be the source of, gather, collect, dwell, settle, produce, beget.' [+]

PUBERTY, the age of full developement, early manhood. (F.,-L.) Spelt pubertie in Minsheu, ed. 1627.-F. puberte, ' youth,' (r, -1.) Spect puberties in bilinated, on two  $p_{1}$  -  $p_{2}$  -  $p_{2}$  - Lat. Cot. - Lat. pubertatem, acc. of pubertas, the age of maturity. - Lat. pubes, the signs of manhood, hair.  $\beta$ . Allied to pu-pus, a boy, pu-pa, a girl; from  $\checkmark$  PU, to beget; see Puppet, Pupil. Dec. pub-esc-ent, arriving at puberty, from pubercent, pres. part. of pubercent inceptive verb formed from sb. pub-es; pubescence. PUBLIC, belonging to the people, general, common to all. (F.,-L.) 'Publyke toke his [its] begynnynge of people; Sir T. Elyot, The Governour, b. i. c. 1, And in Palsgrave. - F. publier, masc., publique, fem., 'publick,' Cot. - Lat. publicus, public; O. Lat. poblicus, poplicus. B. A contracted form of Lat. populic-us\*, formed from populus, people; see People. Der. public-ly, public-house, public-ist, one skilled in public law; public-i-ty, a modern word, see public-an, public-at-ion, publish. PUBLICAN, a tax-gatherer ; inn-keeper. (L.) M. E. publican, Ormulum, 10147; spelt pupplican in Wyclif, Luke, iii. 12, where it is used to translate Lat. publicanus, with the sense of tax-gatherer. [The sense of 'inn-keeper' is modern.]-Lat. publicanus, a farmer of the public revenue, from publicanus, adj., belonging to the public

 PUBLICATION, a publication, alphabeter in public of the publication of the publication, and the publication of the public o licare, to make public. - Lat. publicse, public; see Public. PUBLISH, to make public. (F.,-L.) M.E. publicschen, pup hischen. 'He was ristful, and wolde not puplische hir;' Wyclif, Matt. i. 19. Also publishen, Chaucer, C. T. 8291. This is a quite irregular formation, due perhaps to some confusion with O.F. peupler, to people, and conformed to other E. verbs in -ich, which are usually formed from F. verbs in -ir making the pres. part. in -issant. It is founded on F. publier, 'to publish.' Cot. - Lat. publicare, to make public. - Lat. publicus, public. See Public. Der. publish-er.

PUCE, the name of a colour.  $(F_{..} = L_{.})$  'Puce, of a dark brown colour;' Todd's Johnson.  $= F_{.}$  puce, a flea; couleur puce, puce-coloured; Hamilton. Thus it is lit. 'flea-coloured.' The O. F. spelling of puce is pulce (Cotgrave). - Lat. pulcem, acc. of pulex, a flea. + Gk.  $\psi v \lambda \lambda a (= \psi v \lambda j a)$ , a flea. B. Hence Gk.  $\psi v \lambda \lambda a (= spul-ex)$  are to be connected with Skt. sphur, to move quickly, from  $\checkmark$  SPAR, to throb. The orig. sense is 'quick jumper' or 'jerker,' from its motion. ¶ Todd says that E. puce is the same as E. puke, an old word occurring in Shak. in the phrase puke-stocking, 1 Hen. IV, ii. 4. 78. Todd also cites 'Cloths . puke, brown-blue, blacks' from Stat. 5 and 6 Edw. VI, c. vi. But the true sense of puke is uncertain, and the origin of the word unknown. It cannot be the same word as puce.

PUCK, a goblin, mischievous sprite. (C.) In Shak. Mids. Nt. Dr. ii. 1. 40. M. E. pouke, P. Plowman, C. xvi. 164, on which passage see my note. It first appears in Richard Coer de Lion, 1. 566, in Weber, Met. Romances, il. 25. Of Celtic origin. - Irish puca, an elf, sprite, hobgoblin; W. puca, puci, a hobgoblin. Cf. Gael. and Irish bocan, a spectre, apparition; Corn. bucca, a hobgoblin, bugbear, scare-crow; W. bug, a hobgoblin. + Icel. puki, a wee devil, an imp. + G. spuk, an apparition, hobgoblin, ghost. β. The G. form shews that an initial s has been lost; and the root takes the form SPU, possibly to blow, inflate; but this is doubtful. The Dan. pog, Swed. pojte, a boy, are unrelated; cf. Finn. poica, a son (E. Müller).  $\gamma$ . It is clear that E. bug, as in bug-bear, hum-bug, is nothing but a weakened form of puck; see Bug (1). Thus puck is a more original form, and it is not possible to connect bug with Lithuan. baugus, terrific, as erroneously suggested under Bug (1). The whole of section  $\beta$  in that article is wrong. Doublets, pug, bug. PUCKER, to gather into folds, to wrinkle. (C.) 'Pucker, to shrink up or lie uneven, as some clothes are apt to do;' Phillips, ed. 1706. 'Saccolare, to pucker, or gather, or cockle, as some stuffes do being wet;' Florio, ed 1598. 'He fell down; and not being able to rise again, had his belly puckered together like a sachel, before the chamberlain could come to help him;' Junius, Sin Stigmatised (1639), p. 19; in Todd's Johnson. The allusion is here to the top of a poke or bag, when drawn closely together by means of the string; cf. 'to purse up the brows, from purse, sb., and Ital. saccolare from sacco. It is a frequentative form from the base puck-, which appears to be of Celtic origin. Cf. Irish pucadh, a swelling or puffing up; Gael. poc, to put up in a bag or sack, to become like a bag; connected with Gael. poca, a bag. See Poke (1), Pock. Der. pucker, sb. PUDDING, an intestine filled with meat, a sausage; a soft kind of meat, of flour, milk, eggs, &c. (C. ?) M. E. pudding, P. Plow-man, B. xiii. 106. It is probable that this word belongs to that class of homely domestic words which are of Celtic origin. The suffix -ing is probably an E. substitute for an older suffix which was not nderstood. - Irish putog, a pudding, the numbles of a deer; Gael. putog, a pudding; W. poten, a paunch, a pudding; Corn. pot, a bag, a pudding. B. The older sense was doubtless 'bag,' and these words point back to a root PUT, 'to swell out, be inflated,' pre-served in Swed. dial. puta, to be inflated, bulge out (Rietz). Though this root has not been noted, it will explain several other words, such as prov. E. puddle, short and fat, poddy, round and stout in the belly, pod, a large protuberant belly (Halliwell); W. putyn, a short round body, putan, a squat female; Gael. put, a large buoy, an inflated skin, put, the cheek (from its inflated appearance). Cf. also E. pad, pod; see Pad, Pod. γ. Perhaps the same root appears in Lat. botulus, a sausage, which certainly seems to be a closely related word, and in F. boudin, a black-pudding. 5. The Low G. word, and in F. boudin, a black-pudding. S. The Low G. (like the F.) shews that the word is formed from a barbarous Latin pudding has much the same sense as E. pudding; and is clearly possens\* (stem possens\*), substituted for the true form potens, powerful; from F. publicité, coined as if from a Lat. acc. publicitatem \*. And grelated to Low G. pudde-wurst, a thick black-pudding, and to buddig, thick, stumpy; see Poodle. And perhaps Pout and Put belong to the same family. PUDDLE (1), a small pool of muddy water. (C.) M.E. podel, Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 54, l. 5. Like pool, it is of Celtic origin; but this is obscured by the loss of l after p, as in the case of patch. M. E. podel stands for plodel, and the loss of I was due to the recurrence of the letter in the suffix ; just as in the case of bubble, put for blubble, the dimin. of blob; see Bubble. β. Again, the suffix -el is an E. suffix, put in place of the Celtic suffix -an or -ach, which was not so well understood. - Irish plodach, puddle, mire; plodan, a small pool; Gael. plodan, a small pool. Dimin. of Irish and Gael. plod, a pool, standing water. Cf. Skt. pluta, bathed, wet; Irish plodaim, I float. The orig. sense of plod is 'flooded water.'-✓ PLU, to swim; see Plod, Flood, Float. Der. puddle (2). [†] PUDDLE (2), to make muddy; to make thick or close with clay, so as to render impervious to water; to work iron. (C.) Shak. has puddle, to make muddy or thick, Com. Err. v. 173; Oth. iii. 4. 143. Hence the various technical uses. From Puddle (1). Cf. Irish and Gael. plodanachd, paddling in water ; from plodan, a small pool. Der. puddl-er, puddl-ing. PUERILE, childish. (F.,-L.) In Phillips, ed. 1706. sb. puerility is in much earlier use, occurring in Minsheu, ed. 1627.] -O.F. pueril, omitted by Cotgrave, but in use in the 16th cent. (Littre); mod. F. pueril. - Lat. puerilis, boyish. - Lat. puer, a boy, lit. 'one begotten.' - & PU, to beget; cf. Skt. pota, the young of any nimal, putra, a son. And see Foal. Dor. puerili-i-y, from F. puerilité, 'puerility,' Cot. So also puer-peral, relating to child-birth, from Lat. puerpera, fem. adj., child-bearing; from puer, stem of puer, a child, and parere, to bear, produce, for which see Parent. PUFF, to blow. (E.) M. E. puffen, Ancren Riwle, p. 272, l. 1. Not found in A. S., but of imitative origin, and may be claimed as E.

Not found in A. S., but of initiative origin, and may be chained as  $\Sigma$ . It occurs not only in G. puffen, to puff, pop, strike, Dan. puffe, to pop, Swed. puffa, to crack, to push, but in W. puff, a puff, a sharp blast, puffio, to come in puffs. Cf. G. puff, a puff; puffi inter-jection, &c.  $\beta$ . All from a base PU or BU, expressive of the act of blowing, which is variously expanded in Skt. bukk, to sound, to bark, Lithuan. pukszti, to pant, &c. And see Buffer (1), Buffet (1). y. The form pop is a mere variant; see Pop. And see Pooh. Der. puff-er, puff-er-y, puff-y, puff-i-ly, puff-i-ness. Also puff-in, q. v. PUFFIN, the name of a bird. (E.) 'Puffin, a fowle so called;

Minsheu, ed. 1627. 'Puffin, a sort of coot or sea-gull, a bird supposed to be so called from its round belly, as it were swelling and puffing out;' Phillips, ed. 1705. And in Skelton, Phylyp Sparowe, 454. (The F. puffin is borrowed from E.) Puffin Island, near Anglesca, abounds with these birds, or formerly did so; but the W. name for the bird is pal. The reason assigned by Phillips is prob. the right one; Webster thinks it is named from its peculiar swelling beak, which somewhat resembles that of the parrot. But it comes to the same thing. Thus the etym. is from Puff, q.v. The suffix is diminutival, answering to E. -en in kitt-en, chick-en.

PUG, a monkey, small kind of dog. (C.) The orig. sense is 'imp' or 'little demon,' as in Butler, Hudibras, pt. ii. c. 3, l. 635, and in Ben Jonson's play The Devil is an Ass, in which 'Pug, the lesser devil' is one of the characters. A weakened form of Puck, q.v. A pug-dog is a dog with a short monkey-like face;' Wedgwood.

PUGILISM, the art of boxing. (L.) Pugilism and pugilist are late words, added by Todd to Johnson's Dict. Coined from Lat. pugil, a boxer. From the base PUG, weakened form of PUK, with the sense of 'close;' cf. Gk.  $\pi v \gamma \cdot \mu \dot{\eta}$ , the fist,  $\pi u \kappa v \dot{\alpha}$ , close, compact. Perhaps allied to  $\checkmark$  PAK, to fasten; see Paot.  $\beta$ . Allied to E. fist; see Fist. And see pugnacious.

PUGNACIOUS, combative, fond of fighting. (L.) Rather a late word. R. quotes 'a furious, pugnacious pope like Julius II, from Barrow, On the Pope's Supremacy. [The sb. pugnacity is earlier, occurring in Minsheu, ed. 1627.] A coined word (with suffix -ous = Lat. -osus) from Lat. pugnaci-, crude form of pugnaze, combative. --Lat. pugna-re, to fight. -- Lat. pugnus, the fist; allied to E. Fist, q. v. Der. pugnacious-ly; also pugnacity, from Lat. acc. pugnacitatem. And see ex-pugn, im-pugn, op-pugn, re-pugn-ant, pug-il-ist, poni-ard. [†] PUISNE, inferior in rank, applied to certain judges in England. (F.,-L.) A law term. 'Puisse or punie, used in our common law-bookes.. for the younger; as in Oxford and Cambridge they call Junior and Senior, so at Innes of Court they say Puisse and Ancient;' Minsheu, ed. 1627. The same word as Puny, q. v.

PUISSANT, powerful, strong. (F., -L.) In Skelton, ed. Dyce, i. 203, l. 3 from bottom. This is so puyssant an enemy to nature; Sir T. Elyot, Castel of Helth, b. iii. c. 12.-F. puissant, 'puissant, mighty, Cot. Cf. Ital. possente, powerful.  $\beta$ . The Ital. form (like the F.) shews that the word is formed from a barbarous Latin see Potent. pres. part. potens and the infin. posse, to be able, have power; see Possible. Der. puissant-ly; puissance, Berners, tr. of Froissart, vol. ii. c. 40, from F. puissance, power. Doublet, potent. [†] PUKE (1), to vomit. (E. ?) In Shak. As You Like It, ii. 7. 144.

As an initial s occasionally is lost before p, it is most likely that pute stands for spute or speuk, an extension from the verb to speue, with the same meaning. Cf. G. spucken, to spit. See Spew.

PUKE (2), the name of a colour; obsolete. (Unknown.) Explained by Baret as a colour between russet and black. See Nares and Halliwell, and see further under Puce, which must be a different word, since puke could never have come out of puce, and indeed it occurs earlier. Origin unknown.

PULE, to chirp as a bird, whine like an infant, whimper. (F.-L.) In Shak. Cor. iv. 2. 52; Romeo, iii. 5. 185. - F. piauler, 'to whelp; 'Cot. Cf. Ital. pigolare, to chirp, moan, complain. These are initiative words; and are formed, like Lat. pipilare, to chirp, from the initiative  $\checkmark$  PI, to chirp, appearing in Lat. pipare, to chirp. See Peep (1), and Pipe.

PULL, to draw, try to draw forcibly, to pluck. (E.) M. E. pullen, P. Plowman, B. xvi. 73; Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, B. 68. And let him there-in pulle' - and caused him to be thrust into it; lit. and caused (men) to thrust him into it; Legends of the Holy Rood, ed. Morris, p. 60. Prob. an E. word; the A.S. pullian and the pp. apullod, given in Somner's Dict., are correct forms; apullod is in A.S. Leechdoms, i. 362, l. 10.  $\beta$ . We find, also, Low G. pulen, to pick, pinch, pluck, pull, tear, which is the same word; Brem. Wörterb. iii. 372. y. And, if we suppose a loss of an initial s, we may compare it with Irish spioladh, a snatching, Gael. spiol, to pluck, snatch, G. sick sperren, to struggle against; also with Lat. pellere (for spellers), to drive, pt. t. po-pul-i, Gk. πάλλειν (for σπάλλειν), to brandish, cast; all from of SPAR, to tremble, throb, struggle, of which the Skt. forms are sphar and sphur, the latter containing the same vowel as the E. word. ¶ We also find O. Du. pullen, to drink; this agrees with the E. phrase 'to take a long pull at a cup' in drinking. Der. pull, sb., Chaucer, Parl. of PULLET, a young hen. (F.,-L.) M. E. polete (with one l), P. Plowman, B. vi. 282. - O. F. polete (13th cent., Littré), later poulette, 'a young hen,' Cot. Fem. form of F. poulet, a chicken, dimin. of poule, a hen. - Low Lat. pulla, a hen; fem. of pullus, a young animal, cognate with E. Foal, q. v. Doublet, poul, q. v.

PULLEY, a wheel turning on an axis, over which a cord is passed for raising weights.  $(F_{..} - L_{..}; or F_{..} - O. Low G.)$  Spelt pulley in Minshen, ed. 1627; polley in Caxton, tr. of Reynard the Fox, ed. Arber, p. 96, l. 6 from bottom. But, in the Prompt. Parv., we have the form poleyne; and in Chaucer, C. T. 10498, we find poliue (polive), riming with drive (drive). The last form is difficult to explain; but we may derive poleyne from F. poulain, 'a fole, or colt, rope, 'Cot. 'Par le poulais on descend le vin en cave ;' Rabelais, Garg. i. 5 (Littré). The mod. E. pulley answers to F. poulie, 'a pulley,'Cot.  $\beta$ . If we take F. poulais to be the origin of the E. word, the derivation is from Low Lat. pullanus, a colt, extended from Lat. pullus, the young of any animal, cognate with E. Foal, q. v. y. The transference of sense causes no difficulty, as the words for 'horse' or 'goat' are applied in other cases to contrivances for the exertion of force or bearing a strain; thus F. poutre, a filly, also means 'a beam' (Cot.); and F. chèvre, a goat, also means a kind of crane. The Low Lat. words for 'colt' are remarkably numerous, including (besides pullanus) the forms pulinus, pullenus, pulletrum, polassus, poledrus, polenus, poletus; also poleria, polina, a filly. 8. The Low Lat. forms polea, polegia, polegium, a pulley, do not much help us, since these may have been adapted from F.; as may also be the case with O. Du. poleye, 'a pullie' (Hexham), Span. polea, Ital. puleggia. We may note, however, Low Lat. polanus, a pulley or a pulley-rope, which also has the sense of 'sledge.' e. Diez, however, derives E. pulley from F. poulie, but F. poulie from the E. verb to pull, though I would rather take it from the Low G. pulen, with the same sense ; see Pull.

FULMONARY, affecting the lungs. (L.) Blount, Gloss., ed. 1674, has pulmonarious, diseased in the lungs. Englished from Lat. pulmonarius, belonging to the lungs, diseased in the lungs. - Lat. pulmon-, stem of pulmo, a lung. β. The Lat. pulmo is cognate with Gk. πλεύμων, more commonly πνεύμων, a lung; and is derived from a base PLU = PNU (Gk. πνυ), to breathe hard; see Pneumonia, Pneumatic. Der. pulmon-i-c, from Lat. pulmoni-, crude form of pulmo. PULP, the soft fleshy part of bodies, any soft mass. (F.,-L.) "The pulpe or pith of plants;" Minsheu. - F. pulpe, 'the pulp or pith dostentation; à pied de plants; "Minsheu. - F. pulpe, 'the pulp or pith dostentation; à pied de plants;"

y. This barbarism is due to confusion between the a of plants;' Cot. - Lat. pulpa, the fleshy portion of animal bodies, pulp of fruit, pith of wood. β. Prob. named from the feel, and connected with palpare, to touch softly; see Palpable. Der. pulp-y. pulp-i-ness; pulp-ous, pulp-ous-ness. PULPIT, a platform for speaking from. (F., -L.) M. E. pulpit.

P. Plowman's Crede, ed. Skeat, 1. 661; pulpet, Chaucer, C. T. 12325. -O.F. pulpite, 'a pulpit,' Cot. - Lat. pulpitum, a scaffold, platform, esp. a stage for actors. Root unknown.

PULSATE, to throb. (L.) A modern word, directly from Lat. pulsatus, pp. of pulsare, to beat. It is no doubt due to the use of the sb. pulsation, in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674, from F. pulsation = Lat. pulsationem, acc. of pulsatio, a beating; from the same verb.  $\beta$ . The orig. sense of pulsare was simply 'to beat;' it is a frequentative verb, formed from pulseus, pp. of pellers, to drive, which is prob. from the  $\checkmark$  SPAR, to vibrate, throb, struggle; cf. Skt. sphar, sphur, to throb; see Pull. Der. pulsat-ion, as above; pulsat-ive, pulsat-or-y; pulse (1), q. v. From the Lat. pellere we have also ap-peal, peal, compel, dis-pel, es-pel, im-pel, inter-pell-at-ion, pro-pel, im-pulse, re-pulse; and see pell, pull, pal-estra, pal-p-able, psalm, poplar, ball, &c. PULSE(1), a throb, vibration. (F., -L.) M. E. pous (in which the l is dropped), P. Plowman, B. xvii, 66. - F. pouls, 'the pulse.'

Cot. - Lat. pulsum, acc. of pulsus, a beating; also the beating of the pulse, a pulse. - Lat. pulsus, pp. of pellers, to drive; see Pulsate. PULSE (2), grain or seed of beans, pease, &c. (L.) M.E. puls.

'All maner puls is goode, the fitche outetake' = every kind of pulse is good, except the vetch; Palladius on Husbandry, b. i. L 723. -Lat. puls, a thick pap or pottage made of meal, pulse, &c., the primitive food of the Romans before they became acquainted with bread (White). Cf. Gk. wókroe, portidge. ¶ I think this ety-mology is sufficient and satisfactory. Wedgwood takes it to be the pl. of a form pull, a husk, supposed to be connected with O. Du. peule, 'a shale, a husk, or a pill [peel]; 'Hexham. But pulse is rather the contents of the husks than the husks themselves. Cf. pulls, rather the contents of the husks than the husks themselves. Cf. pulls, husks of oats; Holderness Glossary (E. D. S.) Der. poultice, q.v. PULVERIBE, to pound to dust. (F., =L) 'To pulverate or to pulverize, to beate into dust; 'Minsheu, ed. 1627. – F. pulverizer, 'to pulverize,' Cot. – Late Lat. pulverizere, to pulverise; Lat. pulver-to scatter dust, also to pulverise. – Lat. pulver-, stem of pulves, dust. B. Prob. connected with pul-sus, pp. of pullere, to beat, drive; from the notion of beating to dust, or of driving about as dust; see Puls-ate. The suffix -ise answers to the usual F. -iser (occasional -izer), late Lat viscus initated from Gk with pul-sus pp. State Lat viscus initated from Gk with pul-sus planets at the second second -izer). late Lat. izare, imitated from Gk. 4(4). Der. pulveris-at-ion. PUMA, a large carnivorous animal. (Peruvian.) 'The American animal, which the natives of Peru call puma, and to which the Europeans have given the denomination of lion, has no mane ; ' tr. of Buffon's Nat. Hist., London, 1792. - Peruvian puma.

PUMICE, a hard, spongy, volcanic mineral. (L.) M. E. pomys, pomyce, Prompt. Parv. – A. S. pumic-stán, pumice-stone; Wright's Vocab., i. 38, col. 1. Thus pumice is directly from Lat. pumic-, stem of pumen, pumice; not from the F. form ponce. B. So named from its light, spongy nature, resembling sea-foam. Put for spumex*; from Lat. spuma, foam; see Spume. Doublet, pounce (2). PUMMEL, the same as Pommel, q. v.

PUMP (1), a machine for raising water. (F., - Teut., -L.?) M. E. pumpe, Prompt. Parv. - F. pompe, 'a pump;' Cot. Of Teut. origin. -G. pumpe, a pump; of which a fuller form is plumpe, shewing that an l has been lost. Cf. prov. G. plumpen, to pump. The G. plumpen also means to plump, to fall plump, to move suddenly but clumsily, to blunder out with a thing; so that the sense of 'pumping' arose from the plunging action of the piston or, as it is sometimes called, the plunger, esp. when made solid, as in the force-pump.  $\beta$ . But I have shewn, s. v. Plump, that the word plump, however expressive as an imitative word, probably took its form from the Lat. plumburn, lead; so that 'to fall plump' meant to fall like lead. Hence I would refer pump (or plump) to the same Lat. origin.  $\gamma$ . Even in English, we find prov. E. plump, a pump, plumpy, to pump (Con-wall), which appears to be taken directly from F. plomber, 'to lead, to soulder, . . also to sound the depth of a place with a plummet;' the change of idea from 'sounding with a plummet' to that of 'letting down a piston into water ' is not a violent one. The word is one of some difficulty. The Span. and Port. bomba, a pump, appear to be weakened forms from pompa, borrowed from F. pompe; we can hardly (with Webster) regard them as the oldest forms. We find also Du. pomp. Swed, pump, Dan. pompe, and even Russ. pompa, a pump; all borrowed words. Der. pump, verb. PUMP (2), a thin-soled shoe. (F., -L., -Gk.) In Shak. Mids. Nt. Dr. iv. 2. 37; explained by Schmidt to mean 'a light shoe, often worn with ribbons formed into the shape of flowers.' So called (as suggested in Webster) because worn for 'pomp' or ornament, by persons in full dress. - F. pomps, 'pomp, state, solemnity, magnificence, ticularly with the foot and its ornament. See further under Pomp. PUMPION, PUMPKIN, a kind of gourd. (F.,-L.,-Gk.) The mod. form pumpkin is a corruption from the older word pompon or pumpion, in which the suffix, not being understood, has been replaced by the E. dimin. suffix kin. Pumpion is in Shak. Merry Wives, iii. 3. 43. Better pompon, as in Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xix. c. 5. - F. pompon, 'a pumpion, or melon;' Cot. Formed, with inserted m, from Lat. peponem, acc. of pepo, a large melon, pumpkin. - Gk. némow, a kind of melon, not eaten till quite ripe. - Gk. némow, cooked by the sun, ripe, mellow; from the base ver-, seen in verver, to cook; see Cook, and Pip (2). PUN, to play upon words. (E.) 'A corporation of dull punning drolls;' Dryden, Art of Poetry, l. 358. The older sense of pun was to pound, to beat; hence to pun is to pound words, to beat them into new senses, to hammer at forced similes. 'He would pun thee into shivers with his fist;' Shak. Troil. ii. 1. 42; and see Nares. Pun is an older form of pound, to bruise; see Pound (3). Der. pun, sb., Spectator, no. 61; punn-ing; pun-ster, a coined word, like trick-ster. PUNCH (I), to pierce or perforate with a sharp instrument. (F., -L.) 'Punch, or Punching-iron, a shoemaker's tool to make holes with;' Phillips, ed. 1706. In Shak. Rich. III, v. 3. 125. M. E. punchen, to prick; see Prompt. Parv. This verb is a mere coinage from the older sb. punchion or punchon, spelt punchon in Prompt. Parv., denoting the kind of awl used for punching or perforating. See further under Puncheon (1). Der. punch, a kind of awl, as above. Distinct from punck (2), q. v.

PUNCH (2), to beat, bruise. (F., -L.) In the phrase ' to punch one's head,' the word is not the same as punch (1), but is a mere abbreviation of punish. In fact, 'to punish a man about the head' has still the same meaning. This is clearly shewn by the entries in the Prompt. Parv., p. 416. 'Punckyn, or chastysyn, punysshen, Punio, astigo;' and again, 'Punckynge, punysshinge, Punicio.' See Punish. T For the suppression of the i in punish, cf. M. E. pulshen, to polish, P. Plowman, A. v. 257, foot-notes; and vanshen, to vanish, id. C. xv. 217. In the present instance, punchen was readily suggested by the like-sounding word bunchen, with much the same sense. Hence the entry: 'Punchyn, or bunchyn, Trudo, tundo;' Prompt. Parv. [†]

PUNCH (3), a beverage composed of spirit, water, lemon-juice, sugar, and spice. (Hindi, -Skt.) 'Punck, a strong drink made of brandy, water, lime-juice, sugar, spice, &c.;' Phillips, ed. 1706. Wedgwood cites two most interesting quotations. 'At Nerule is made the best arrack or Nepo da Goa, with which the English on Hindo the best arrack of Nepo ta Goa, with which the Lagish of this coast make that enervating liquor called pourche (which is Hindostan for five) from five ingredients; ' Fryer, New Account of East India and Persia, 1697. 'Or to drink palepuntz (at Goa) which is a kind of drink consisting of aqua-vitæ, rose-water, juice of citrons, and sugar;' Olearius, Travels to the Grand Duke of Muscovy and Persia, 1669. It was introduced from India, and apparently by the way of Goa; and is named from consisting of five ingredients.-Hindi panch, five; Bate's Dict., 1875, p. 394.-Skt. panchan, five, cognate with E. five; see Five. ¶ Perhaps it is interesting to observe that, whereas we used to speak of four elements, the number of elements in Sanskrit is five; see Benfey, p. 658, col. 2, l. 5; cf. Skt. pañchatva, the five elements; pañchaka, consisting of five. It is, at any rate, necessary to add that the Hindi and Skt. short a is pronounced like E. u in mud or punch; hence the E. spelling. [+]

PUNCH (4), a short, hump-backed fellow in a puppet-show. (Ital., - L.) In this sense, Punch is a contraction of Punchinello. In the Spectator, no. 14, the puppet is first called Punchinello, and afterwards Punch. 'Punch, or Punchinello, a fellow of a short and thick size, a fool in a play, a stage-puppet; 'Phillips, ed. 1706. The pl. Punchinellos occurs twice in Butler, Sat. on our Imitation of the French, ll. 26, 99; it occurs as early as A. D. 1666 (Nares). B. Punchinello is a corruption of Ital. pulcimello, by the change of l to n (cf. Palermo from Lat. Panormus); and the E. sound of chi corresponds to Ital. ci. Pulcinello was a character in Neapolitan comedy representing a foolish peasant who utters droll truths (Scheler); Meadows only gives the fem. pulcinella, 'punch, buffoon of a puppet-show.' These are dimin. forms of Ital. pulcino, 'a yoong chicken,' Florio; fem. pulcina. The latter form is a mere variant (with a different suffix) of Ital. pulcella, a girl, maiden (F. pucelle), and all the words are from Lat. pullus, the young of any animal, whence also F. poule (=Low Lat. pullus), a young hen. The change in sense from 'chicken' to 'little child' is due to the common habit of using the word 'chicken' as a term of endearment. Thus the lit. sense of Ital. pul-einello is 'little chicken;' whence it meant (2) a little boy, and (3) a puppet. See further under Pullet.  $\P$  It is clear that the E. form is due to confusion with prov. E. punch, short, fat, punchy, pot-bellied (Halliwell); words which are prob. closely connected with Bunch, q. v. 'Did hear them call their fat child Punch, ... a word & sents Skt. short a, as in Punch (3).

[gait]; Cot. The use of this O. F. proverb connects the word par- $ of common use for all that is thick and short;' Pepys' Diary, Apr. 30, 1669. In the phrase 'Punch and Judy,' I suppose Judy to be the usual abbreviation from Judith, cnce common as a female name. Judy no more stands for Judae or Judas than Punch for Pontius!

PUNCHEON (1), a steel tool for stamping or perforating; a punch. (F., -L.) Our mod. sb. punch is a familiar contraction of puncheon, which occurs rather early. M.E. punchon, Prompt. Parv. Punsoune, a dagger, occurs in Barbour's Bruce, i. 545; see my note on the line. - O. F. poinson, 'a bodkin, also a puncheon, also a stamp, mark, print, or seale; also, a wine-vessell;' Cot. Mod. F. poingon; cf. Span. punzon, a punch; Ital. punzone, 'a bodkin, or any sharp pointed thing, also a piece [wine-vessel], a barell,' Florio. - Lat. nunctionem, acc. of punctio, a pricking, puncture; Diez remarks that this sb., which in Lat. is feminine, changes its gender to masc. in F., &c., whilst changing its sense from ' pricking ' to the concrete ' pricking-instrument.'- Lat. punctus, pp. of pungere, to prick ; see Pungent. Der. punch (1). PUNCHEON (2), a cask, a liquid measure of 84 gallons. (F., -L.?) 'Butte, pipe, puncheon, whole barrell, halfe barrell, firken, or any other caske; 'Hackluyt's Voyages, vol. i. p. 273. - O. F. poinson, 'a bodkin, also a puncheon [steel tool]; also, a stamp, mark, print, or seale; also, a wine-vessell; 'Cot. β. It is certain that the E. or scale; also, a wine-vessel; Cot.  $\beta$ . It is certain that the E. puncheon, a cask, is the O. F. poinson, mod. F. poinson, a wine-vessel. But it is not certain that O. F. poinson, a bodkin, and poinson, a cask, are the same word. It is gen. supposed that they are quite distinct, owing to the wide difference in sense. For the latter, we also find the O.F. form ponyon, explained by Cot. to mean 'half a tunne, or the same as pointon;' and this latter form comes still closer to E. y. Cot. also has O. F. popon, posson, 'the quarter of a tuncheon. chopine [large half-pint], a little measure for milk, verjuice, and vinegar, not altogether so big as the quarter of our pint.' These forms are regarded by Scheler as variants of poinson or ponpon, and the etymology is admitted to be doubtful. 8. It seems to me that it is not necessary to take posson into account, as the content of that small vessel is so widely different; and, at the same time, I am inclined to think that O. F. poinson remains the same word in all its senses, the wine-vessel being so named from the 'stamp, mark, print, or seale' upon it, the stamp being produced by a puncheon or stamp-ing-instrument. That is, I regard Puncheon (2) as identical with Puncheon (1). Cf. O. Ital. punzone, 'a bodkin, barell, goldsmiths pouncer, little stamp; Florio. In the same way, our word kog-head (formerly owhead, as shewn under the word) must orig. have meant a mark or brand, though now only used in the sense of cask. e. The Bavarian punzen, pouzen, a cask (Schmeller), may be of F. origin. PUNCHINELLO, the same as Punch (4), q. v. PUNCTATE, PUNCTATED, punctured. (L.) A botanical term. Coined with suffix -ate (= Lat. -atus) from Lat. punctum, a point, dot. See Puncture, Pungent.

PUNCTILIO, a nice point in behaviour. (Span.,-L.) 'Your courtier practic, is he that is yet in his path, his course, his way, and hath not touched the punctilio or point of his hopes;' Ben Jonson, Cynthia's Revels, Act ii. sc. 1 (Amorphus). Rather from Span. puntillo, a nice point of honour, than from the equivalent Ital. puntiglio. In fact, the word is spelt punctillo in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. The e is an E. insertion, due to confusion with punctuate, &cc. The li represents the sound of the Span. II.  $\beta$ . Span. puntillo is a dimin. of punto, a point. - Lat. punctum, a point; see Point. Der.

punctili-ous, -ly, -ness. PUNCTUAL, exact in observing appointed times. (F.,-L.) Minsheu, ed. 1627, has punctuall and the sb. punctualitie. PUNT (1), a ferry-boat, a flat-bottomed boat. (L.) Added by Todd to Johnson. I find no modern quotation; yet it is in very early use. - A. S. punt; 'Caudex, punt,' Wright's Vocab. i. 56, col. I. (Caudex means a boat hollowed out of a tree.) Abbreviated from Lat. ponto, a punt, Cæsar, Bellum Civile, iii. 29; also, a pontoon. See Pontoon.

PUNT (a), to play at the game of cards called basset. (F., -Span., -L.) 'Punter, a term used at the game of cards called basset;' Phillips, ed. 1706. - F. ponte, 'a punter; a punt;' also, ponter, 'to punt;' Hamilton. - Span. punto, a point, also, a pip at cards. - Lat. punctum, a point ; see Point.

A fem. sb.; which distinguishes it from the word above. - Lat. pupilla, a little girl; also, the apple of the eye, or pupil. Fem. of pupillus; see Pupil (1). The name seems to be due to the small images seen in the pupil; cf. the old E. phrase ' to look babies in the eyes

Dimin. from Lat. pupa; see Pupa. PUPPY, (1) a whelp; (2) a dandy. (F., -L.) 1. In Shak. Oth. i. 3. 341; a puppy-dog, K. John, ii. 460. Here (as in lev-y, jur-y) the final -y answers to F. -ée. - F. poupée, 'a baby, a puppet;' Cot. Here, by 'baby,' Cotgrave means a doll; but it is clear that in E the word was made to mean the young of an animal. esp. of a in E. the word was made to mean the young of an animal, esp. of a dog. The F. poupée (as if = Lat. pupata *) is due to Lat. pupa; see 2. In the sense of 'dandy,' puppy occurs in the Guardian Puna. (Todd's Johnson). This is not quite the same word; but rather represents the O. F. powpin or popin, 'spruce, neat, trimme, fine,' Cot. Cf. se popiner, 'to trimme or trick up himself,' id.; mod. F. faire le poupin, to play the fop (Hamilton). This word answers to a Low Lat. form pupinus* (not found), and is merely a derivative from Lat. puppy, a boy. Thus the result is match a derivative way. Der. puppy-ism. Also pup, which is merely an abbreviation for puppy; whence pup, verb, formerly puppy, as in Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xxx. c. 14. [†]

PUR-, prefix. (F., -L.) E. pur- answers to O. F. pur-, F. pour-, prefix, which is the F. prep. pour, for, a curious variation of Lat. pro, for. Thus pur- and pro- are equivalent; and words like purvey and provide are mere doublets. ¶ In the word pur-blind, the prefix has a different value.

PURBLIND, nearly blind. (Hybrid; F., -L., and E.) This

In  $\hat{\Phi}$  the strange change in the case of Parboil, q.v. The orig. sense was ed. wholly blind, as in Rob. of Glouc., p. 376: 'Me ssolde pulte oute oute t.t. bobe is eye, and makye him pur blind' - they should put out both his eyes, and make him quite blind. See Spec. of Eng. ed. Morris and Skeat, p. 14, l. 390. Sir T. Elyot writes poreblind, The Governour, b. ii. c. 3 (R.); so also in Levins. In Wyclif, Exod. xxi. 26, the earlier version has pure blynde, where the later has oon ized (i.e. oneeyed), and the Vulgate has luscos. So also 'purblynde, luscus; Prompt. Parv. Even in Shak. we have both senses : (1) wholly blind, L. L. L. iii. 181, Romeo, ii. 1. 12; and (2) partly blind, Venus, 679, 1 Hen. VI, ii. 4. 21.  $\beta$ . It is clear that 'wholly blind' is the orig. sense, and that which alone needs an etymology; whilst 'partly blind ' is a secondary sense, due perhaps to some confusion with the verb to pore, as shewn by the spelling poreblind. Purblind - pureblind, i. e. wholly blind; see Pure and Blind. For the use of pure as an adv., cf. 'pure for his love' = merely for his love, Tw. Nt. v. 86. Der.

PURCE, to purify, clear, carry away impurites. (F., - L.) PURCE, to purify, clear, carry away impurites. (F., - L.) M.E. purgen, Chaucer, C. T. 14953, 14959. - F. purger, 'to purge,' Cot. - Lat. purgare, to cleanse, purge.  $\beta$ . Lat. purgare = purigare (occurring in Plautus); from pur-, stem of purus, pure, and -ig-, weakened form of ag (ag-ere), to do, make, cause. See Pure and Agent. Der. purg-al-ion, M. E. purgacioun, Wyclif, Heb. i. 3, from F. purgation = Lat. acc. purgationem, from purgatus, pp. of purgare; purgat-ive, orig. adj., Macb. v. 3. 55, from Lat. purgatiuns; purgat-or-y, M. E. purgatorie, Ancren Riwle, p. 126, l. 8, from F. purgatoire (of which an old form was prob. purgatorie), which from Lat. purgatorius, adj., cleansing, purifying; purgat-or-i-al; purg-ing, sb., expurg-ale.

PURIFY, to make pure. (F., - L.) M. E. purifien, Wyclif, Deeds [Acts], xxi. 26. - F. purifier, 'to purifie,' Cot. - Lat. purificare, to make pure. - Lat. puri- = puro-, crude form of purus, pure; and fic-, put for fac- (facere), to make. Dor. purifier, purifying ; also purific-at-ion, M. E. purificacioun, Wyclif, John, iii. 25, from F. purification = Lat. acc. purificationem ; purific-at-or-y, a coined word, as if from a Lat. adj. purificatorius *. PURITAN, one who pretends to great purity of life. (L.) The name was first given, about A. D. 1564, to persons who aimed at greater purity of life, &c., than others (Haydn). Frequently in Shak. All's Well, i. 3. 56, 98; Tw. Nt. ii. 3. 152, 155, 159; Wint. Tale, iv. 3. 46; Pericles, iv. 6. 9. A barbarous E. formation, with suffix -an ( = Lat. -anus), from the word purit-y or the Lat. purit-as, See Purity. Der. Puritan-i-c-al, Puritan-ism. ¶ The F. puritain is borrowed from E.

PURITY, the condition of being pure, pureness. (F., -L.) M.E. pureté, Ancren Riwle, p. 4, l. 21; the e (after r) was afterwards altered to i, to bring the word nearer to the Lat. spelling. -F. pureté, 'purity,' Cot. - Lat. puritatem, acc. of puritas, purity; formed with suffix -tas from puri- (= puro-), crude form of purus, pure; see Pure

PURL (1), to flow with a murmuring sound. (Scand.) 'A pipe, a little moistened, . . maketh a more solemne sound, than if the pipe were dry; but yet with a sweet degree of sibillation, or purling; Bacon, Nat. Hist. § 230. Allied to M. E. prille (also pirle), a child's whirligig; Prompt. Parv. p. 413, note 2. The word is rather Scand. than E., being preserved in O. Swed. porla (lhre). Swed. porla, to purl, bubble as a stream.  $\beta$ . But it is merely a frequen-tative form, with the usual suffixed -1, from the imitative word pirr or purr, for which see Purr, Pirouette. Cf. Irish and Gael. bururws, a purling noise, a gurgling. ¶ Purl, to curl, Shak. Lucr. 1407, is from the rippling of a purling stream. PURL (2), spiced or medicated beer or ale. (F., -L.)

'Purl, a sort of drink made of ale mingled with the juice of wormwood;' word has suffered a considerable change of sense, almost parallel to Phillips, ed. 1706. But I suppose the spelling to be a mistaken one, due to confusion with Purl (1). It should surely be pearl, from F. & directly from Latin. So also G. purpur, &c. Der. purple, adj., purple, perie, a pearl; see Pearl. See perié, adj., and perier, verb, in Littré. The word was a term in cookery; thus sucre perié is sugar boiled twice; bouillon perié, jelly-broth (Hamilton). So also G. perien, to rise in small bubbles like pearls, to pearl (Flügel); perie, a pearl, drop, bubble. Hence puri, a drink with bubbles on the surface.

PURL (3), to form an edging on lace, to form an embroidered border, to invert stitches in knitting. (F.-L.) Just as the word above should be spelt pearl, it is found, conversely, that the present word is often misspelt pearl; by the same confusion. It is a con-traction of the old word to purfle, to embroider on an edge. 'Purfled with gold and pearl of rich assay; 'Spenser, F. Q. i. 2. 13. M.E. purfilen, Chaucer, C.T. 193. = O. F. porfiler, later pourfiler. 'Pourfiler d'or, to purfle, tinsell, or overcast with gold thread, &c. ;' Cot. - O. F. por, F. pour, from Lat. pro, from (which is often confused, as Scheler remarks, with F. par. Lat. per, throughout, and such seems to be the case here); and F. filer, to twist threads, from fil, a thread. See Pur- and File (1).  $\P$  Cotgrave also gives O.F. uncau. See Fur- and File (1). "U Colgrave also gives O.F. pourfil in the sense of profile; profile and purl(3) are really the same word, the difference in sense being due to the peculiar use of the F. pretix pour- as if it were = Lat. per. To purl is 'to work along an edge,' or 'to overcast all along with thread.' Doublet, profile. PURL (4), to upset. (E.) A slang term; a huntsman who is thrown off his horse is purled or spill. Purl should rather be pirl; from M E. Agie, a whiling for the former the pirl; from M. E. pirle, a whirligig, formed by the frequentative suffix -l from the imitative word pirr, to whirl. So also O. Ital. pirla, a from the imitative word pirr, to whith. So also 0. Ital. pirra, a whipping-top; pirlare, 'to twirle round;' Florio. Allied to Purl (1). PURLIEU, the borders or environs of any place (orig. only of a forest); esp. when used, as is usual, in the plural.  $(F_{..}-L.)$  'In the purlieus of this forest;' As You Like It, iv. 3.77. 'Purlieu, or Purlue, is all that ground neere any forest, which being made forest by Henry II., Rich. I., or King John, were, by perambulations granted by Henry III., seuered again from the same; Manwood, par. 2 of his Forest Lawes, cap. 20. And he calleth this ground pourallee, i. e. perambulationem, or purlies and purluy, which he saith, be but abusively taken for pourallee; ' Minshen, ed. 1627. Manwood's definition is: 'Purlies is a certain territorie of ground adjoyning unto the forest, meared [marked] and bounded with immoveable marks, meeres, and boundaries;' Reed's note on As You Like It. 'Purlieu: land which having once been part of the royal forest has been severed from it by perambulationem (pourallée, O. F. puralee) granted by the crown. The preamble of 33 Edw. I. c. 5 runs: "Cume aucune gentz que sount mys hors de forest par la puralee... aient requis a cest parlement quils soient quites ... des choses que les foresters lour demandent." In the course of the statute mention is lands of "terres et tenements deaforestes par la puralee." These [lands] would constitute the purlien. A purlieu-man or purlie-man is a man owning land within the purlieu, licensed to hunt on his own land; 'Wedgwood.  $\beta$ . It is thus clear that purlieu is a corruption of O.F. puralee, as if it had something to do with F. lieu (Lat. locus), a place. The intermediate form was purley, of which see examples in Nares. This O.F. puralee appears to be a mere translation of Lat. perambulationem, by that confusion whereby O.F. pur (F. pour), though really answering to Lat. pro, is made to do duty for the Lat. per, as in several instances noted by Scheler. Y. Hence the etymology is from O. F. pur = Lat. pro; and O. F. alee, a going, for which see Alley.

PURLOIN, to steal, plagiarise. (F., - L.) In Shak. Lucrece, 1651. M. E. purlongen. 'Purlongyn, or prolongyn, or put fer owey, Prolongo, alieno;' Prompt. Parv. Thus the orig. sense is simply to prolong, put away, keep back. or remove. Cf. O. F. esloigner = Lat. elongare), 'to remove, banish, drive, set, put, far away; Cot. = O. F. porloignier, purloignier, to prolong, retard, delay; Bur-guy. = Lat. prolongare, to prolong; see Prolong. Der. purloin-er.

Doublet, prolong. PURPLE, a very dark red colour. (F., -L., -Gk.) In Spenser, F. Q. i. 2. 7. Put for M. E. purpre, by change of r to l, as in M. E. marbre, now marble, and in Molly, Dolly, for Mary, Dorothy. The M. E. purpre is in early use, occurring in Layamon, 1. 5928. - O. F. porpre (13th cent., Littre), later pourpre, 'purple,' Cot. Cf. Ital. porpora, Span. purpura. – Lat. purpura, the purple fish, purple dye. – Gk.  $\pi oppupa$ , the purple fish; cf. Gk.  $\pi oppupa$ , purple.  $\beta$ . The B. The orig. sense of Gk. ropopupor, as an epithet of the sea, seems to have been 'troubled' or 'raging,' hence dark, and lastly purple. The sea dark with storms was also called oroop, wine-coloured, wine-dark; apparently from the dark shade of brooding clouds. Hence the ety-mology is from Gk. πορφύρειν, to grow dark, used of the surging sea; a reduplicated form (= $\phi o \rho \cdot \phi v \rho \cdot \epsilon i r = \phi v \rho \cdot \phi v \rho \cdot \epsilon i r$ ) of Gk.  $\phi v \rho \epsilon i r$ , to mix up, mingle, confound, orig. to stir violently. -  $\checkmark$  BHUR, to move about quickly; whence also Skt. buranya, to be active, Lat. furere, to rage; see Fury. ¶ The A.S. purpur is borrowed:

PURPORT, to imply, mean, intend. (F., - L.) In Bacon, Life of Hen. VII, ed. Lumby, p. 146, l. 27. (And prob. a much older word.) - O. F. purporter, pourporter, to intend, whence the sb. purport, tenour. A rare verb, not in Cotgrave ; but Roquefort gives the verb pourporter, to declare, inform, and the sb. purport, tenour; and notes the phrase selon le purport, according to the purport. - O. F. pur, F. pour, from Lat. pro, according to; and F. porter, to bear, carry, from Lat. portare, to carry. A similar application of F. porter occurs from Lat. portare, to carry. A similar application of r. porter occurs in E. import. See Pur- and Port (1). Der. purport, sb., used by Spenser with the sense of 'disguise,' F. Q. iii. I. 52, the lit. sense being rather 'declaration' or 'pretext.' PURPOSE (1), to intend. (F., -L., -Gk.; with F. prefix.) M.E. purposen, Gower, C. A. i. 5, l. 5. - O. F. purposer (Burguy), a variant of proposer, to propose. Thus purpose and propose are doublets; see Propose, which is strictly from Lat. pausare, of Gk. origin, though there has been confusion with Lat. ponere. ¶ Distinct in origin from Purpose (2), though completely confounded with it in association. Doublet, propose. PURPOSE (2), intention. (F., -L.) Though from a different origin, this sb. has become altogether associated with the verb to purpose, owing to the extraordinary confusion, in French, of the derivatives of pausare and ponere. M. E. purpos, Chaucer, C. T. 3979; spelt porpos, Rob. of Glouc. p. 121, l. 6. – O. F. pourpos (of which another form would have been purpos), a resolution, design (Roquefort); a variant of F. propos, 'a purpose, drift, end,' Cot. - Lat. propositum, a thing proposed, design, resolution. - Lat. propositus, pp. of proponere, to propose; see Propound. Der. purpose-ly, purposeless; also a-propos, q. v. PURR, PUR, to utter a murmuring sound, as a cat. (E.) 'A pur . . of fortune's cat;' All's Well, v. 2. 20; 'Pur, the cat is gray;' King Lear, iii. 6. 47. An imitative word, not unlike buzz. Cf. Scotch pirr, a gentle wind, Icel. byrr, wind; see Pirouette. Cf. also Irish and Gael. burburus, a gurgling sound; Gk.  $\beta \alpha - \beta \rho \delta \zeta \cdot \epsilon v$ , to chirp as a grass-hopper. Intended to imitate the sound of gentle blowing. Der. pur-l (1), a frequentative form.

PURSE, a small bag for money. (F.,-L.,-Gk.) M. E. purs, burs; Prompt. Parv. p. 417. Spelt pors, P. Plowman, A. v. 110. In early use; the pl. porses occurs in the later text of Layamon, l. 5927. and contrary to the usual change (from p to b); still we find peat = (Devonshire) beat, and somewhat similar examples in E. apricot as compared with F. abricot, and mod. E. gossip as compared with M. E. gossib, Chaucer, C. T. 5825. Der. purs-er (doublet, burs-ar, q. v.); purs-er-ship; purse-proud; purse-bearer, Tw. Nt. iii. 3. 47. Also purse, verb, to wrinkle like a bag drawn together, Oth. iii. 3. 113. [†] PURSLAIN, PURSLANE, an annual plant, sometimes used in salads. (F., -L.) Spelt purselaine, Hackluyt's Voyages, vol. ii. pt. ii. p. 109, l. 43; pourslane, Sir T. Elyot, Castel of Helth, b. ii. c. 15; purslane, id. b. ii. c. 8. M. E. purslane, to translate Lat. portulaca, Prompt. Parv., p. 417. Cf. Ital. porcellana, 'the hearbe called pur-celane;' Florio. Formed from Lat. porcilaca, purslain, Pliny, b. xx. c. 20; the usual form of the word being portulaca. [†]

PURSUE, to follow after, chase, prosecute. (F.,-L.) M. E. pursuen, Wyclif, John, xv. 20. where the A. V. has persecute; also in P. Plowman, B. xix. 158. – O. F. porsuir, poursuir; mod. F. poursuir, to pursue, prosecute, persecute, 'Cot. Cotgrave gives the spellings poursuir, poursuir, and poursuivre. – O. F. pur, por, mod. F. pour, answering to Lat, pro; and sequi, to follow; so that poursuir = 1.1 poursuir. Lat. prosequi, to prosecute. See Prosecute; also Pur- and Sue.  $\beta$ . Owing to the confusion between the F. prefixes pour (pro) and par (per), the verb poursuivre also had the sense of persecute; we even find in O.F. (11th cent.) the expression à persuir son apel = to pursue his appeal (Littré). See Persecuto. Der pursu-r, which in Scots law means 'a plaintiff,' lit. a prosecutor. Also pursu-au, 'following, according, or agreeable to,' Phillips, ed. 1706, formed with the F. pres. part. suffix -ant from O. F. pursu-ir, though the usual form of the pres. part. was pursuivant or poursuivant (see below); pursu-ance, Phillips, ed. 1706, apparently coined from the adj. pursuant. Also pursuit, Spenser, F. Q. ii. 4. 1, from F. poursuite, fem. sb., a participial form answering to Lat. fem. pp. prosecuta; pursuiv-ant, an attendant on heralds, lit. 'one who is following,' Rich. III, iii. 4. 90, from F. poursuivant d'armes, 'a herauld extraordinary, or young herauld,' Cot., from F. poursuivant, pres. part. of poursuivre. [+]

PURSY, short-winded. (F., -L.) In Shak-Timon, v. 4. 12. Spelt pursy and pursif in Levins. M. E. purcy (ior pursy), Prompt. Parv. "Purcyf, shorte-wynded, or stuffed aboute the stomacke, pourcif;" ¶ The A.S. purpur is borrowed Palsgrave. = O. F. pourcif, in Palsgrave, as just cited; which is a variant (by change of l to r) of O. F. poulif, 'pursie, short-winded,' & puten; pt. t. putte, pp. put, i-put; P. Plowman, A. iii. 75, B. iii. 84; Cot. Mod. F. poussif. Formed, with suffix -if (= Lat. -inus), from | Hayelok, 1033, 1051; the pt. t. putte occurs in Layamon, 18092. Cot. Mod. F. poussif. Formed, with suffix -if (= Lat. -iuus), from O. F. poulser (mod. F. pousser), 'to push,' Cot. Cotgrave also gives the form pousser, which he explains not only by 'to push.' but also by 'to breathe or fetch wind.'-Lat. pullare, to beat, push; see Push. The word has reference to the pantings or quick pulsations of breath made by a pursy person. Der. pursi-ness. PURTENANCE, that which belongs to; the intestines of a beast. (F., -L.) In Exod. xii. 9; the usual translation of the same Heb. word being 'inwards.' Spelt pertengance in Coverdal's transrieb. word being 'inwards.' Spelt pertensance in Coverdate strans-lation. 'Portensaunce of a beest, fressevre;' Palsgrave. In P. Plow-man, B. ii. 103, where most MSS, have purtenannese, MS. W. has appurtinaunces. Thus purtenance is merely an abbreviation of appur-tenance, from O. F. apurtenaunse, variant of apartenance (Burguy), from O. D. S. apurtenaunse, variant of apartenance (Burguy), from O. F. apartenir, to appertain. Cotrave has: 'appartenance, an appurtenance, an appendant.'  $\beta$ . The variation in the syllable pur, par, is due to the frequent confusion between O. F. pur (Lat. pro), and par (Lat. per). In the present case, the syllable is due to Lat. per. See Appurtenance, Appertain. [†] PURULENT, PURULENCE; see Pus.

PURVEY, to provide. (F., -L.) A doublet of provide. M. E. purweien; porweien (with w = v), Rob. of Glouc. p. 39, l. 9; Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 74.  $\pm$  O. F. porvoir (Burguy), mod. F. pourvoir, to provide. - Lat. providere; see Provide.  $\beta$ . The F. voir, to see, has numerous forms in O. F., such as veoir, veor, veir, veer, veeir, veier, &cc.; see Burguy. The E. spelling -vey answers to O. F. weir, veir of the provider of t O. F. veier ; cf. E. sur-vey. Der. purvey-ance, M. E. porueance, Rob. of Glouc, p. 457, l. 18, from an O. F. form answering to later pour-voyance, 'providence, forecast,' Cot.; and therefore a doublet of providence. Also purvey-or, M. E. purveour, P. Plowman, B. xiz. 255, footnote, from an O. F. form answering to later F. pourvoyeur, 'a Provider or purveyor, Cot. Doublet, provide. [†] PUS, white matter issuing from a sore. (L.) In Phillips, ed. 1706.

purulence. PUSH, to thrust against, urge, drive forward. (F., -L.) M. E. possen, pussen; infin. posse, K. Horn, ed. Lumby, I. IOII; pt. t. puste, K. Horn, ed. Ritson, I. 1079; possed, P. Plowman, B. prol. 151. At a later time puss became push, by change of final double s to sh, as in anguist from anguisse, brusk from F. brosse, embellisk from F. embelliss-, &c. = O. F. pousser, poulser, 'to push, thrust,' Cot. = Lat. pulsare, to beat, strike, thrust; frequentative form of pellere (pp. pulsus), to drive. See Pulso (1), Pulsato. Der. push, sb., Spenser, F.Q. i. 3. 35; push-ing; push-pin, L. L. L. iv. 3. 169. ¶ The prov. E. push, a pustule, is prob. from F. pocke, with the same sense (Hamilton). PUSILLANIMOUS, mean-spirited. (L.) 'Womanish and pusillanimous,' Chapman, tr. of Homer, b. i. Commentary, note 7. From Lat. pusillanimus, mean-spirited, by change of -us to -ous, as frequently; the more usual form is pusillanimus. - Lat. pusill, stem of pusillus, very small; and animus, mind, soul.  $\beta$ . Pusillus is a dimin. of pusus, small, an adjectival use of sb. pu-sus, a little boy, allied to pu-er, a boy; see Puerile. For Lat. animus, see Animosity. Der. pusillanimous-ly, -ness. Also pusillanim-i-ty, M. E. pusillanimitee, Gower, C. A. ii. 12, from F. pusillanimité = Lat. acc. pusillanimitaten. PUSS, a cat, a hare. (E.) Spelt pusse in Minsheu, ed. 1627. This may be called an E. word, though it is widely spread. Prob. imitative, from the sound made by a cat spitting (Wedgwood). So also Du. poes, Low G. puns, puns-katte, a puss, puss cat; Swed. dial. pus, a cat (Rietz), &c.; Irish and Gael. pus, a cat.  $\beta$ . That the pas, a cat (Kietz), &c.; Irish and Gael. pus, a cat.  $\beta$ . That the word is imitative, appears from its occurrence in Tamil. 'Pusei, a cat, esp. in the S. Tamil idiom. In the Cashgar dialect of the Affghan, puska signifies a cat;' Caldwell, Comp. Grammar of Dravi-dian Languages, p. 465; cited in N. and Q. 3 S. ix. 288. Lithuan, puź, a word to call a cat. PUSTUT.

PUSTULE, a small pimple. (F.,-L.) 'A pustule, wheale, or blister;' Minsheu, ed. 1627.-F. pustule, 'a push, blain, wheale, small blister;' Cot.-Lat. pustule, longer form of pusula, a blister, pimple. Hence also Dan. puse, to swell up, fuste, to blow, puff; and see Psychical. The root SPU is because of interval. obviously of imitative origin. ¶ Note that pustule has nothing to do with pus, with which it is associated by Richardson, and even in

A.S. potian, to thrust ; Ælfric's Homilies, i. 422, l. 25; but of Celtic origin. - Gael. put, to push, thrust ; W. putio, to push, to poke; Corn-pool, to kick like a horse. The orig. sense seems to have been to push, cast, cf. 'to put a stone;' the sense of laying or placing occurs also in Dan. putte, to put, which is of similar origin. B. Apparently a collateral form with Gael. pue, to push, jostle; cf. Irish poe, a blow. ¶ Stratmann kick; Corn. poc, a push, shove; see Poke (2). in Legonidec's Dict. Diez derives F. bouter, to thrust, from M. H.G. bozen, to beat, see Butt (1); it would seem simpler to suppose bouter to be from the same Celtic source as E. put. In that case, E. butt (1) is also of Celtic origin, which would further affect the origin of buttock, button, and abut. Der. pott-er, verb, q. v.

PUTATIVE, reputed, supposed. (F., - L.) In Minsheu, ed. 1627. -F. putatif, ' putative,' Cot. - Lat. putatiuns, imaginary, presumptive. Formed with suffix -inus from Lat. putatus, pp. of putare, to think. suppose; for which see Compute.

PUTREFY, to make or become corrupt. (F.,-L.) 'Grosse meate... makyth putrifyed matter; Sir T. Elyot, Castel of Helth, b. ii. c. 1. 'Apt to receive putrifaction;' id. b. ii. c. 1. (The spel-ling with i was prob. due to confusion with putrid.) – F. putrefier. 'to putrific, Cot. Formed by analogy with other verbs in -fier as if from Lat. putrificare*; but the true Lat. forms are putrefacere, to make putrid; and putrefieri, to become putrid. - Lat. putre-, as seen in putries, to be rotten, with which cf. puter, putris, rotten; and facere, to make, or fieri, to become. See Putrid. Der. putrefaction, from F. putrefaction = Lat. acc. putrefactionem*, not in White's Dict., but regularly formed from the pp. putrefactus. Also putrefact-ine. Also putrescent, becoming putrid, from Lat. putrescent-, stem of pres. part.

of purrescere, inceptive form of purrere; whence purrescence. PUTRID, stinking, rotten, corrupt. (F., -L.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674; and in Cotgrave. - F. putride, 'putride,' Cot. - Lat. purridus, putrid. Extended from Lat. putri, crude form of put-er, put-ris, rotten; allied to putrere, to be rotten. Formed (with suffix -ra) from put-ere, to stink; from  $\checkmark$  PU, to stink. Cf. Skt. púy, to stink; see Pus and Foul.

PUTTOCK, a kite, kind of hawk.  $(F_{..}-L_{.}; and E_{.})$  In Shak. Cymb. i. 1. 140; see Nares and Palsgrave. Just as a sparrow-hawk is named from sparrows. I suppose that the puttock is named from the pools or pouls, i.e. small birds on which it preys. 'Pool, a chicken, or pullet, Cheshire' (Halliwell); and again, 'Poul, the young of a pheasant; Florio, s. v. fasanello, has a phesant-poul; 'id. β. Poul stands for poult = pullet; the Gael, put, the young of moor-fowl, a young grouse, is merely from Lowland Sc. pout, a young partridge or moor-fowl; see Jamieson, and see Poult. y. The suffix -och may be the usual E. dimin. suffix -ock, used adjectivally, or, if we should suppose puttock to be a corruption of post-kawk, this is not a violent nor unlikely change. [+] PUTTY, an oxide of tin, or lead and tin, for polishing glass:

more commonly a cement of whiting and oil, for windows. (F., -C.) 'Putty, a powder made of calcin'd tin;' Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. 'Putty, pottain, and pot-brass . . . seem all to mean the same thing ; Rich. Dict.; this opinion is supported by extracts from Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xxxiv. c. 9, and Boyle, Works, i. 721. Pliny explains that in brass-founding, it was often found desirable to add to the ore collectaneum, i.e. bits of old vessels, called by Holland 'pottain or old metall,' or ollaria, called by Holland 'pot-brasse;' shewing that pottain simply means the metal of old pots. Similarly, putty simply means potty, or belonging to old pots. β. The difficulty is in the history of the word rather than in its etymology. The old sense of it was 'powder made of calcin'd tin, as in Blount, resembling what is now called putty powder. 'Putty powder, a pulverised oxide of tin sometimes mixed with oxide of lead; extensively used in glass and sometimes index with oxide of lead; extensively used in glass and marble works, and the best kinds are used for polishing plate; Weale's Dict. of Terms used in the Arts. 4th ed. 1873. The same work tells us that putty is 'composed of whiting and linseed oil, with or without white lead.' It thus appears that the successive senses are (1) calcin'd tin or oxide of tin, (2) oxide of lead, (3) white lead, (4) a preparation containing white lead, the name being continued or the the initial lead. The name being continued even after the white lead was omitted. The result is that the mixture now called putty is remarkable for frequently containing nothing that could be called putty in the older sense. Y. This once perceived, the etymology is easy. = O. F. totée, 'brasse, copper, tin, pewter, &c., burnt or calcinated; also, a pot-full of anything;' Cot. The mod. F. potée means 'putty,' shewing a similar change of meaning. 'Potée d'étain, tin-putty;' Hamilton. The mod. F. potée also means (as formerly), a potful. Cf. also O. F. potée, 'broken pieces of metall, or of old vessels, mingled one with another;' Cot. Also O. F. pottie. White. Der. pustul-ous, pustul-ate, pustul-ar. PUT, to push, thrust, cast, set, lay, place, &c. (C.) M. E. putten, & 'solder of mettall;' id. B. Potte is formed with suffix -ie (= Lat.

PUZZLE, a difficult question, embarrassment, problem, perplexity. (F., -L. and Gk.) As a verb in Shak. Hamlet, iii. 1. 80; and it was prob. regarded as a frequentative form of pose, with suffix -le. But this was not at all the way in which the word arose; and, in fact, the suffix -le is not usually added to words of F. origin. It was orig. a sb., and stands for opposal, which is used in the ordinary sense of 'opposition' in Sir T. Herbert's Travels, p. 81 (R.) It has been shewn, s. v. POSE, that pose is short for appose, which again is a corruption of oppose. From the F. opposer was formed M. E. opposaile, a question for solution; whence mod. E. puzzle. 'And to pouert she put this opposajle' [question], Lydgate, Fall of Princes, ed. Wayland, sig. B. iii, leaf lxvi; cited in Dyce's Skelton, ii. 304. Hence corruptly, apposaile. 'Made vnto her this vncouth apposayle, Why wepe ye so?' id., sig. B. v, leaf cxxviii (Dyce). 'Madame, your apposelle is wele inferrid, i. e. your question is well put; Skelton, Garl. of Laurel, l. 141; where the MS. copy has opposelle (Dyce). The M. E. opposaile seems to have been a coined word, like deni-al, refus-al, &c. The loss of the first syllable is due to the loss of the same in pose. For the etymology, see Oppose, Pose. Der. puzzle, verb.

PYGMY, a very diminutive person or thing. (F., -L., -Gk.)M. E. pigmey, Trevisa, i. 11, l. 7. – F. pygmé, adj., 'dwarfie, short, low, of a small stature;' Cot. – Lat. pygmæus, adj., dwarfish, pygmy-like; from pl. PYLORUS, the lower orifice of the stomach. (L., -Gk.) In Phillips, ed. 1706. - Lat. pylorus. - Gk.  $\pi\nu\lambda\omega\rho\delta$ s, a gate-keeper; also the pylorus, because it is gate-keeper to the intestines, or at the entrance to them. - Gk.  $\pi\delta\lambda$ - $\eta$ , a gate; and  $\delta\delta\rho\sigma$ s, a keeper, watcher.  $\beta$ . The Gk.  $\pi\delta\lambda\eta$  is perhaps allied to Gk.  $\pi\delta\rho\sigma\sigma$ s, a way, passage through, from  $\checkmark$  PAR, to fare, whence also Lat. porta, a gate; see Fare.  $\gamma$ . The Gk.  $\delta\delta\rho\sigma\sigma$  is from  $\delta\rho\sigma$ - $\mu\alpha\iota$  (=  $F\delta\rho\sigma\mu\alpha\iota$ ), I heed, guard, from  $\checkmark$  WAR, to guard; see Wary. Der. pylor-ic. PYRAMID, a solid figure with triangular sides meeting in an

PYRAMID, a solid figure with triangular sides meeting in an apex, upon a triangular, square, or polygonal base. (L., -Gk.) The word was rather taken directly from the Latin than from the French. Thus Shak. has the sing. pyramis, 1 Hen. VI, i. 6. 21; pl. pyramides (four syllables). Antony, v. 2. 61; as well as pyramid, Macb. iv. 1. 57. Cotgrave strangely translates F. piramide by 'a pyramides.' – Lat. pyramid-, stem of pyramis. – Gk.  $\pi v pa \mu ls$  (gen.  $\pi v pa \mu i does)$ , a pyramid-al, pyramid-cal. PYX, the sacred box in which the host is kept after consecration; at the mint, the box containing sample coins. (L., -Gk.) Spelt pize in Minsheu, ed. 1627. Abbreviated from Lat. pyzis, a box. -Gk.  $\pi u \xi s$ , a box; so called because orig. made of box-wood. - Gk.  $\pi u \xi s$ , box-wood; so called from its dense, close grain. - Gk.  $\pi u s \cdot v \delta s$ , dense; from  $\checkmark$  PAK, to fasten, make firm; see Pact. QUACK (1), to make a noise like a duck. (E.) An imitative word. 'The goos, the duk, and the cuckow also So cried "keke!' keke!' "cuckow!" "queke, queke!" hye;' Chaucer, Parl. of Foules, 499. Here the cry keke! keke! is assigned to the cackling goose, and queke! queke! to the quacking duck. In Ch. C. T. 4150, the

Der. quack-salver, Blount's Gloss, ed. 1674, i. e. a quack who puffs up his salves or ointments, borrowed from Du. kwakzalver, a quack, charlatan, cf. Du. kwakzalven, to quack, puff up salves (see Salve); quack-doctor, a later word which took the place of quack-salver, Pope, note to Dunciad, iii. 192. Hence also quack = quack-doctor; quack-er-y. QUADRAGESIMA, the forty days of Lent. (L.) 'Quadra-

QUADRAGESIMA, the forty days of Lent. (L.) 'Quadragesima Sunday is six weeks before Easter;' Tables in the Book of Common Prayer. [Hence quadragesimal, adj., = Lenten, Milton, Areopagitica, ed. Hales, p. 5, 1.8.] - Lat. quadragesima, lit. 'fortieth,' fem. of quadragesimus, fortieth; in late authors used to mean 'Lent.' Older form quadragensimus (= quadragenti-mus). - Lat. quadraginta, forty. - Lat. quadr-us, square, fourfold, put for quatrus*, quater-us*, from quater, four times, quatwor, four; and -ginta, put for da-kanta, tenth, from decem, ten. See Four and Ten; and Forty. Der. quadragesim-al.

See Four and Angle. Der. quadrangul-ar. Also quad, quod, a court (in Oxford), short for quadrangle.

QUADRANT, the fourth part of a circle. (L.) Chiefly used of an instrument for measuring angles (like a sextant), graduated with degrees along the arc. M. E. quadrant, Prompt. Parv. - Lat. quadrant., stem of quadrants, sb., a fourth part. Extended from Lat. quadrus, square, which is put for quatrus*, quater-us*, from quatwor; see Four. Der. quadrant.al. From the same source are quarrel (2), quarry (1), squad, squadron, square.

QUADRATE, squared, well-fitted. (L.) Used as a vb. in Levins; as adj. and vb. in Minsheu; as sb. in Milton, P. L. vi. 62, to mean 'square phalanx.' - Lat. quadratus, squared, pp. of quadrare, to make or be square. - Lat. quadrus, square; see Quadrant. Der. quadrat-ic; quadrat-ure, Milton, P. L. x. 381.

QUADRENNIAL, once in four years. (L.) More correctly quadriennial, as in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. Formed with adj. suffix -al (Lat. -alis) from quadrienni-um, a space of four years. – Lat. quadri- = quadro-, crude form of quadrus, square, fourfold; and annus, a year. See Quadrant, Four; also Biennial, Annual.

QUADRILATERAL, having four sides. (L.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. – Lat. quadrilater-us, four-sided; with suffix -al (= Lat. -alis). – Lat. guadri, for quadro-, crude form of quadrus, square; and later-, stem of latus, a side. See Quadrant and Listoral.

QUADRILLE, 1. the name of a game at cards; 2. the name of a dance. (F., -Span, -L.) The name of the dance is late; it is added by Todd to Johnson; so called because danced by 4 persons, or by sets of four. Not improbably suggested by the game at cards, which was a game for 4 persons with 40 cards; see Pope, Moral Essays, iii. 76; Sat. i. 38.  $\beta$ . I dissent from Littr's arrangement of the F. word quadrille; he gives quadrille (1), fem. a troop of horses for a tournament; also masc. a dance. And again, quadrille (2), masc. a game at cards. Obviously the right arrangement is: quadrille (1), fem. a troop of horses; and quadrille (2), mase. a game at cards, a dance. This brings the genders together, and accords with chronology.  $\gamma$ . And it makes a difference; for quadrille, fem., is of Italian origin, from Ital. quadriglia, short for O. Ital. squadriglia, 'a route, a troop, a crue, a band of men,' Florio; which is connected with Squadron, q. v.  $\delta$ . On the other hand, the game at cards, like ombre, is prob. of Span. origin. - Span. cwadrillo, a small square, allied to cuadrilla, 'a meeting of four or more persons,' Neuman. - Span. cwadra, a square. - Lat. quadra, fem. of quadrus, fourfold; see Quadrant. Cf. Lat. quadrula, a little square.

QUADRILLION, a million raised to the fourth power. (L.) An oddly coined word; made by prefixing guadr- (short for quadrus, square, fourfold) to -illion, which is the word million with the m left out. See Billion and Quadrant.

QUADROON, the child of a mulatto and a white person.

Ii

(Span., = L.) Better quarteroon or quarteroon. So called because of  $\mathfrak{E}$  ¶ In F. the word took the sense of 'trim<sub>a</sub>' as noted; in E. it black blood only in a fourth part. Modern; and imported from meant famous, remarkable, curious, strange, &c. Der. quaint-iy, America. = Span. cuarteron, the child of a creole and Spaniard (Neu-quaint-ness, ac-quaint. QUADRUPED, a four-footed animal. (L.) The adj. quadrupedal is in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674 ; guadruped, sb., is in Phillips, ed. 1706. - Lat. quadrupedus, having four feet. - Lat. quadruped., stem of quadrupes, quadrupes, four-footed. - Lat. quadru-, fourfold, four times; and pes, a foot. See Quadrant and Foot. Der. quadruped-al.

QUADRUPLE, fourfold. (F.,-L.) As a verb in Chapman, tr. of Homer, Iliad, i. 129. As adj. in Minsheu, ed. 1627. - F. quadruple, 'quadruple;' Cot. - Lat. quadruplum, acc. of quadruplus, fourfold. - Lat. quadru-, four times; and plus, signifying 'fold,' from ✓ PAR, to fill. See Quadrant and Double. Der. quadruple, verb. Also quadruplic-ate, from Lat. quadruplicatus, pp. of quadruplicare, to multiply by four; for the force of the suffix, see Complicate.

QUAFF, to drink in large draughts. (C.) In Shak. Tw. Nt. i. 3. 14; &c. And in Levins. The double f stands for a guttural. The true form is quach (ch as in German), meaning to drink out of a quach or cup, called quaich, quach, or quaff in Lowland Scotch; see quaich in Jamieson. 'I quaught, I drink all out;' Palsgrave. Thus to quaff is to cup; 'Cup us till the world go round;' Antony, ii. 7. 124.—Irish and Gael. cuach, a cup, bowl, milking-pail. Cf. W. cwch, a round concavity, hive, crown of a hat, boat. Perhaps from  $\checkmark$  KU, to conclusit, and Chart and the cup of a hat, boat. to contain; see Cave. Der quaffer. [+] QUAGGA, a quadruped of the horse tribe. (Hottentot.) The

QUAGMIRE, boggy, yielding ground. (E.) In Shak. K. Lear, iii. 4. 54. Put for quake-mire; see Quake and Mire. 'It is spelt guale-mire in Stanhurst's Descr. of Ireland, p. 20; quave-myre, in Palsgrave; 'Halliwell, s. v. quave-mire, q. v. Cl. M. E. quaven (= quaven), to quake; P. Plowman, B. xviii. 61. So also quagg-y

(i. e. qual-y), adj., used of boggy ground. QUAIL (1), to cower, shrink, fail in spirit. (E.) The old mean-ing of quail was 'to suffer torment, pine, die;' hence to faint, esp. used of the spirits. 'My false spirits quail, Cymb. v. 5. 149; 'ther quailing breasts;' 3 Hen. VI, iii. 3. 54. 'The brauch once dead, the budde eke nedes must quaile,' i. e. die; Spenser, Shep. Kal. November, 91. [The spelling is not quite exact, it should rather have been queel or queal; but it was prob. affected by some confusion with the word quaile, to curdle, used of milk ; for which see Prompt. Parv. p. 418, and Way's note. We also find confusion between quail, to die, and quell, to kill, as in ' to quail and shake the orb,' Antony, v. 2.85. Cf. Devonshire queal, to faint away; Halliwell.] M.E. quelen, to die; not common. A strong verb, with pt. t. qual, pl. quelen; the pl. quelen = they died, occurs 10 times in Layamon, ll. 31825 to 31834. 'Men quelas on hungre' = men die of hunger, O. Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, i. 111, l. 10. – A.S. cuelan, to die, in comp. decuelan, to die utterly, Exod. vii. 18. + Du. quelen, to pine away. + O. H. G. quelan, to suffer torment. β. From a Teut. base KWAL, to suffer torment or pain, to choke; whence also A. S. ewalu, destruc-tion (Grein), Icel. kvöl, Dan. and Swed. qval, G. qual, torment, agony; cognate with Lithuan. gela, torment, anguish. Fick, iii. 54. So also M. E. querken, to choke, is from the equivalent base KWAR. Der. quell, q.v., qualm, q. v. coagulate, is from O. F. coailler, later cailler, to curdle (see Littre); from Lat. coagulare; see Coagulate.

QUAIL (2), a migratory bird. (F. - Low Lat., - Low G.) M. E. quaille, Chaucer, C. T. 9082; quayle, Wright's Vocab. i. 177, l. 13. -O. F. quaille (13th cent., Littré), mod. F. caille. Cf. QUAINT, neat, odd, whimsical. (F., -L.) M. E. queint, Chaucer, C. T. 10553; commonly with the sense of 'famous, excellent.' Also spelt quoyni, Rob. of Glouc. p. 72, l. 18; p. 157, l. 14. Also cuoint, Ancren Riwle, p. 140, l. 21; coint, coynt, Will. of Palerne, 653, 1981; koynt, 4090. – O. F. coint, 'quaint, compt, neat, fine, spruce, brisk, trim;' Cot. Cf. Ital. conto, 'known, noted, counted;' Florio. Certainly derived from Lat. cognitus, known, well-known, famous; though confused (more in F. than in E.) with Lat. comptus, neat, adorned, pp. of comere, to arrange, adorn. β. Cognitus is used as the pp. of cognoscere, to know, and is compounded of co- (for com = cum, with) and gnitus (for gnotus = gnotus), known, used as pp. of moscere, to know; see Cognition. Y. I may add that Lat.

Others take Quaker, like Shaker, to be a name given in derision, from the quaking which is supposed to exhibit their enthusiasm. Either way, the etym. is the same : see Quake. Der. Quaker-ism.

This curious word is almost certainly a corruption of the M.E. wand reth, wandrethe, used in just the same sense of evil plight, peril, adversity. The use of gu for w is not confined to this word; we find such spellings as squete for swete (sweet), squilke for swilke (such); Cursor Mundi, 76, 372; and the confusion of quk, wh, qu, and w, at the beginning of words is well known. Thus Halliwell gives quarof for whereof; and quhar for uhar (where) is the usual Scottish form, whilst the same word is also written war or wer. B. Examples are: 'welthe or wandreth' = prosperity or adversity; Religious Pieces, ed. Perry, E. E. T.S., p. 11, l. 5. 'Al thair wandreth and their wrake' = all their perplexity and misery; Spec. of English, ed. Morris and Skeat, p. 91, l. 59. Allied to vanda, to elaborate; from vans, pt. t. of vinna, to toil; see Win. + O. Swed. wandräde, difficulty; from wand, difficult, and the like suffix. Ihre gives an example in O. Swedish: 'Ther eigh äru i wandrædom' = who are not in peril, i. e. who are not in a quandary.

QUANTITY, size, bulk, large portion. (F., -L.) M. E. quantite, quantitee; Chaucer, C. T. 4662. -F. quantité, 'quantity;' Cot. -Lat. quantitatem, acc. of quantitas, quantity. - Lat. quanti-, for quanto-, crude form of quantus, how much; with suffix -tas. B. Quantus is cognate with Gk. woos (Ionic woos), how much, from the base KA, who, what; see Who. Der. quantit-at-ive.

QUARANTINE, a space of forty days. (F., -L.) Spelt quarentine in Minsheu, who gives it the old legal sense, viz. a space of forty days during which a widow might dwell unmolested in her husband's house after his decease. Blount gives this form and sense, and derives it from O. F. quarantine. He also gives quarantain, meaning (1) Lent, (2) a forty days' truce or indulgence, (3) 'the forty days which a merchant, coming from an infected port, stays on shipboard for clearing himself;' the last sense being the usual one in mod, E. -O. F. quarantine (Roquefort), usually quarantaine, 'Lent, a term of forty days,' &c.; Cot. - Low Lat. quarantina*, quarantana*, quarentena* (all of which prob. were in use, though Ducange only mentions quarantenum), a space of forty days, formed as if from quaranta*, forty, answering to F. quarante; this quaranta being nothing but a -imere, comp. of co- (= com = cura), and emere, to take. + shortened form of Lat. quadraginta, forty. Weber, 1594, 2781.-O.F. quarrel, later quarreau, 'a diamond at cardes, a square tile, a quarrell or boult for a crossebow;' Cot. Mod. F. carreau. - Low Lat. quadrellum, acc. of quadrellus, a quarrel, a square tile. - Lat. quadr-us, square; with dimin. suffix. See Quadrant QUARRY (1), a place where stones are dug, esp. for building purposes. (F., -L.) In Shak. Oth. i. 3. 141. The proper sense is a place where stones are squared for building purposes; hence, a place where stones are procured which are afterwards squared for building; lastly, a place where stones are dug, without any reference to squaring. Again, the proper form should be quarrer, but it was altered to quarry; perhaps by confusion with quarry, sometimes used as a variant of quarry; perhaps by consiston with quarry, sometimes used as a variant of quarrer, a square pane of glass (Halliwell). M. E. quarrere, guarrer, Will. of Paleme, 2133, 2281, 2319, 4692; spelt quarere, quarrer, quarry, guar in Prompt. Parv. – O. F. quarriere, 'a quarry of stone;' Cot. Mod. F. carrière. – Low Lat. quadraria, a quarry for squared stones. - Lat. quadrare, to square. - Lat. quadr-us, square; see Quadrant. ¶ The sense was suggested by Lat. quadratarius, a stone squarer, a stone-cutter ; from the same source. QUARRY (2), a heap of slaughtered game. (F., -L.) In Shak. Cot. i. 1. 202; Haml. v. 2. 375. M. E. querré, Sir Gawain and the Grene Knight, 1324. Corrupted from O. F. coree, curse, the intestines of a slain animal (Burguy); the part which was given to the hounds. Cotgrave has: 'Curée, a dogs reward, the hounds fees of, or part in, the game they have killed;' also: 'Corée, a swines gullet, or a hogs haslet."- Low Lat. corata, the intestines of a slain animal. Cf. O. Ital. corada, 'the plucke, hasselet, or midriff of any beast;' Florio. B. It was a general term for the inwards of the slain animal, and so called from containing the heart. - Lat. cor, the heart; cognate with E. Heart, q. v. ¶ The change of spelling from initial c to qu is easily illustrated by the use of O.F. quer, cuer, the heart (Burguy). But see Addenda. [*] QUART, the fourth part of a gallon. (F.,-L.) M.E. quart, quarte, Chaucer, C. T. 651. - F. quarte, 'a French quarte, almost our pottle; 'Cot. - Lat. quarta (i. e. pars), a fourth part; four of quartus, fourth. Apparently short for quatur-ius*; from Lat. quatuor, cognate with E. Four, q. v. Der. quart-an, quart-er, quart-ern, quart-ette, QUARTO, having the sheet folded into four leaves. (L.) In Johnson. The word is due to the Lat. phr. in quarto, i.e. in a fourth part of the orig. size; where quarto is the abl. case of quartus, fourth ; see Quart. And see Folio. Der. quarto, sb.

QUARTZ, a mineral composed of silica. (G.) Added by Todd to Johnson. - G. quarz, rock-crystal; the G. z being sounded as ts.,

Cf. Ital. quaranta, forty; fare la quarantana, 'to keepe lent... to  $\pounds$  B. Supposed to stand for gewarz=warz, a wart; from the excre-keepe fortie daies from company, namely if one come from infected places, as they vse in Italy; 'Florio. Thus the mod. sense seems to be of Ital. origin. QUARREL (1), a dispute, brawl. (F., - L.) It should rather be querrel, but has been assimilated in spelling to the word below. M. E. querele (with one r), Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. iii. pr. 3, 1. 1932. - O. F. querele, later querelie, 'a quarrel;' Cot. (He gives both Sciences upon it (E. Müller). See Wart. QUASH, to crush, annihilate, annul. (F., -L.) M. E. quaschen; see 'Quaschym, quasso' in Prompt. Parv. Properly transitive; but used intransitively in P. Plowman, C. xxi. 64. And see Owl and Nightingale, 1388.-O. F. quasser, later casser, 'to breake, ... quash asunder;' Cot. (He gives both The O. F. quarter (supine quassem), to shake. Root uncertain. If The O. F. quarter guassem, to shake. Root uncertain. The O.F. quasser also means 'to abrogate, annul' (Cot.), as in E. 'to quast an indictment.' The slight likeness to A.S. cwisan, to break, is accidental; see Queasy. Der (from Lat. quatere) ca:que, cask, con-cuss-ion, dis-cuss, per-cuss-ion. [4]

QUASSIA, a South-American tree. (Personal name.) Added by Todd to Johnson. Botanical names in .ia are formed by adding the Lat. suffix ia to a personal name, as in dakl-ia, fuchs-ia. Quassia was named by Linnæus after a negro named Quassi, who first pointed out the use of the bark as a tonic and who was alive in 1755. A negro named Daddy Quashi is mentioned in Waterton's Wanderings in S. America, Journies 3 and 4. Waterton also quotes a Barbadoes song in Journey 4, cap. ii: 'Quashi scrapes the fiddle-string, And Venus plays the flute;' these lines are altered from the finale to G. Colman's Inkle and Yarico. Quassi is, in fact, quite a common negro mane. See Notes and Queries, 6 S. i. 104, 141, 166.

QUATERNARY, consisting of fours. (F., -L.) Rare; see exx. in Richardson. - F. quaternaire, 'every fourth day;' Cot. - Lat. quaternarius, consisting of four each. - Lat. quaterni, pl., four at a QUATERNION, a band of four soldiers, a band of four. (L.)

L. v. 181. - Lat. guaternion-, stem of quaternic, used in Acts, xii. 4 (Vulgate); it means 'the number four,' or 'a band of four men.' - Lat. quaterni, pl.; see Quaternary. QUATRAIN, a stanza of four lines. (F., -L.) Used by Dryden, in his letter to Sir R. Howard, prefixed to Annus Mirabilis, which is written in quatrains. - F. quatrain, 'a staffe or stanzo of 4 verses; Cot. Formed with suffix -ain (Lat. -anus) from F. quatre = Lat. quatuor, four. See Four.

QUAVER, to shake, to speak or sing tremulously. (E.) In Levins; and in Minsheu, ed. 1627. It is the frequentative form, with suffix -er, of quave. M. E. quauen (with u = v), to tremble; Prompt. Parv. And see P. Plowman, B. xviii. 61. It first occurs as a various reading in St. Marharete, ed. Cockayne, p. 48, l. 3 from bottem. Allied to Low G. guabbeln, to tremble (Brem. Wört.), Dan. d:al. kveppa, to be shaken (Aasen). Also to M. E. quappen, to palpitate, Chaucer, Troil. iii, 57, Legend of Good Women, 865. <sup>3</sup>B. From a base KWAP, to throb, which is a mere variant of KWAK, to quake; see Quake. Der. quaver, sb., lit. a' vibration, hence a note in music. Also quiver (1), q. v.

QUAY, a wharf for vessels. (F., -C.) Spelt quay and hay in Phillips, ed. 1706; key in Cotgrave; keie in Minsheu, ed. 1627. M. E. key, spelt keye, Eng. Gilds, ed. Toulmin Smith, p. 374, l. 23; and see Prompt. Parv. - O.F. quay (F. quai), 'the key of a haven;' Cot. The orig. sense is 'enclosure,' a space set apart for unloading goods. Of Celtic origin - Bret. kaé, an enclosure; W. cae, an enclosure, hedge, confuses it with E. key, for which there appears to be no reason. [+] QUEAN, a contemptible woman, a hussy. (E.) In Shak. Merry Wives, iv. 2. 180. Absolutely the same word as queen; the orig. sense being 'woman.' The difference in spelling is unoriginal, but may have marked some variation of pronunciation. The best pas-sage to illustrate this word is in P. Plowman, C. ix. 46, where the author says that in the grave all are alike; you cannot there tell a knight from a knave, or a queen from a queen. The MSS, have queyne, queene, quene, in the former case, and queene, quene, in the latter; i.e. they make no distinction, none being possible. See Queen.

QUEASY, sickly, squeamish, causing or feeling nausea. (Scand.) 'His queasy stomach ;' Much Ado, ii. 1. 399. 'A queysy mete ; Skelton, Magnificence, 2295. 'Quaisy as meate or drinke is, dangereux;' Palsgrave. Quaysy is used as a sb., in the sense of 'nausea,' in Polit., Religious, and Love Poems, ed. Furnivall, p. 215, l. 22. Formed as adj. from a Scand. source. - Norw. kveis, sickness after a debauch (Aasen); Icel. kveisa, a whitlow, boil; idra-kveisa, bowelpains, colic; Swed. dial. kvesa, a pimple, soreness, blister. Cf. Swed. pans, conc., Swed. una. westa, a piniple, soreness, blister. Cf. Swed. kväsa, to bruise, wound; A.S. tócwisan, to crush, Sweet's A.S. Reader.  $\beta$ . The orig. sense appears to be 'sore,' as if from a wound or bruise. Allied to Goth. kwistjan, to destroy; perhaps to Skt. ji, to overpower; Fick, iii. 55; i. 570. Der. queasi-ness, 2 Hen. IV, i. 1, 196.

QUEEN, a woman, a female sovereign. (E.) M. E. queen, queens; P. Plowman, C. ix. 46. - A. S. cwen (common). + Du. kween, a barren woman, barren cow (cf. E. quean as a term of contempt). + Icel. Ii 2

+ Swed. gvinna, a female ; kona, a quean, strumpet. + Goth. kwens, kweins, a woman, wife ; also kwino. + M. H. G. kone, O. H. G. quena, worms, a woman, + GR. yord, + Russ. jend (with j as in French), a wife. Skt. jani, used in the latter part of compound adjectives; jani, a wife.  $\beta$ . All from  $\checkmark$  GAN, to produce; cf. Goth. keinan, to germinate; see Curtius, and Fick, iii. 39. See Genus, Kin. Der. queen-ly, queen-mother. Doublet, quean.

QUEER, strange, odd. (O. Low G.) 'A queer fellow ;' Spectator (in Todd; no reference). A cant word; and prob. introduced rather from Low than High German. - Low G. queer, across ; quere, obliquity. In Awdeley's Fraternity of Vagabonds, ed. Furnivall, p. 4, a guire fellow' is one who has just come out of prison ; cf. the slang phrase 'to be in queer street;' and Low G. in der quere liggen, to lie across, lie queerly.+ G. quer, transverse; querkopf, a queer fellow. Prob. allied to the curious Lat. warus, crooked; see Prevaricate. Dor. queer-ly, queer-ness.

QUELL, to crush, subdue, allay. (E.) The causal of quail. M. E. guellen, to kill; Chaucer, C. T. 12788. - A. S. cwellan, to kill, Grein, i. 174. + O. Sax. quellian, to torment; causal of quelan, to suffer martyrdom ; Du. kwellen, to plague, vex. + Icel. kwelja, to tor-ment. + Swed. qvälja, to torment. + Dan. qvæle, to strangle, choke; to plague, torment. B. The orig. sense was probably 'to choke;' from the primitive KWAL; for which see Quail (1). ¶ Frequently said to be a doublet of kill, but the evidence is strongly against this unlikely identification; the two words have different vowel-sounds, and have nothing but the final U in common. The sense of quell is 'to choke,' to torture; that of kill, to 'knock on the head.'

QUENCH, to extinguish, check, put out. (E.) M.E. quenchen, Wyclif, Matt. iii. 12. Quench is formed from an obsolete verb quink, to be put out, to be extinguished; just as drenck is from drink. -A.S. ewencan, in the comp. ácwencan, to extinguish utterly, Mark, ix. 44. Causal of A.S. cwincar; the pt. t. d-cwanc (= was extin-guished) occurs in a various reading in Ælfred, tr. of Beda, b. ii. c. 9, ed. Wheelock.  $\beta$ . Further, the verb cwincan is an extension of a shorter form cwinan, to be extinguished (which is a strong verb, with pt. t. curin, pp. curinen); hence 'oet fyr devinen wees and adweesced - the fire was put out and extinguished; Beda, ii. 9 (as above). Cf. O. Fries. kwinka, to be extinguished. Perhaps allied to Skt. ji, to overpower ; Fick, i. 570. Der. quench-able, -le.s.

E. quikenen, quiknen, Wycliffe, John, vi. 64; Chaucer, C. T. 15949. The true form is quinnen, and the suffix -nen=Goth. -nan, which was used only to form intransitive verbs; so that the true sense of quiknen is rather 'to become alive,' as in King Lear, iii. 7. 39. But this distinction was early lost, and the suffixes -ien, -nen were used as convertible. The Goth. keeps them distinct, having gakwin-jan, to make alive, go-kwin-nan, to become alive. From A.S. ewic, alive; see Quick.

QUID, a mouthful of tobacco. (E.) A Kentish variety of cud; Quid, the cud' (Halliwell). See Cud. It occurs in Bailey's Dict., vol. ii. ed. 1731; and see E. D. S. Glos. C. 3.

QUIDDITY, a trifling, nicety, cavil. (L.) A term of the schools. 'Their predicamentes, . . quidities, hecseities, and relatives!' Tyndal, Works, p. 104, col. 1, l. 8 (and in Spec. of Eng., ed. Skeat, p. 176, l. 318). Englished from Low Lat. quidditas, the essence or nature of a thing, concerning which we have to investigate what it is (guid est).-Lat. quid, what, neuter of quis, who; see Who. QUIESCEINT, still, at rest. (L.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674.

- Lat. quiescent-, stem of pres. part. of quiescere, to be at rest. See Quiet. Der. quiescence.

QUIDET, still, at rest, tranquil. (L.) 'A guyet and a pesible lijf;' Wycliffe, 1 Tim. ii. 2; where the Vulgate has quietam. [Rather from Lat. than from F.; the F. form is Coy, q.v.]-Lat. quietus, quiet; orig. pp. of quiere \*, only used in the inceptive form quiescere, to rest. β. Der. quiet, sb., M.E. quiete, Chaucer, C.T. 9269; quiet, verb, 1 Hen. VI, iv. 1. 115; quiet-ly, quiet-ness; quiet-ude, from Late Lat. quietudo (White), a contraction for quietitudo . Also quiet-us, a final settlement, from Lat. quietus, adj.; quiet-ism, quiet-ist. From Lat. quiescere we also have ac-quiesce; and see re-quiess, quit, quite, re-quite, ac-quit. dis-quiet. Doublet, coy. QUILL (1), a feather of a bird, a pen. (F., -O. H.G.) M. E. quille, quylle, 'Quylle, a stalke, Calamus;' Prompt. Parv. Halliwell gives: 'Quill, the stalk of a cane or reed, the faucet of a barrel.' This is a difficult and doubtful word ; it is most likely that the sense of 'faucet' or 'stalk' is an old one, and that the bird's quill was so named from its tapering shape, like that of the conical-shaped peg or pin used in the old game of kails or kayles. - F. quille, 'a keyle, a big peg or pin of wood, used at ninepins or keyles;' Cot. In use in big peg or pin of wood, used at interprise of keyles; Cot. In the in the 15th cent. (Littré.) [A distinct word from F. quille, a keel.] = O.H.G. kegil (Littré), or chegil (Scheler), mod. G. kegel, a nine-pin, skittle, cone, bobbin. See Kails.  $\beta$ . There may have been some confusion with O. Du. kiel, a wedge (Kilian); cf. G. keil, a wedge, bolt. Mahn refers quilt to Irish cuille, a quill (prob. borrowed from E.), or to Irish cuile, a reed, which is not very y. Any connection with Lat. calamus, a reed, or caulis, likely. a stalk, is out of the question ; see Haulm, Cole.

QUILL (2), to pleat a ruff. (F., = O. H.G. or L.) 'What they called his cravat, was a little piece of white linen quilled with great exactness; Tatler, no. 257, Nov. 30, 1710. I. Supposed to be so called from being folded as if over quills; perhaps the quills used were rounded splinters of wood. See Quill (1). 2. Wedgwood quotes from Métivier the Guernsey word enquiller, to pleat, gather, wrinkle, which Métivier derives from O.F. cuillir, to gather, collect, cull; whence also E. Cull, q.v. I do not know which is right.

QUILLET, a sly trick in argument. (L.) 'His quiddities, his quillets;' Hamlet, v. I. 108. Certainly a contraction of quidlibet, notwithstanding the assertion of Nares that quodliber was the [usual] term in the schools. Wedgwood quotes from a late edition of Florio [it explains by 'a question in the schools where the person challenged might choose his side.' Quiddity is a word of the same class. - Lat. Quid liber, which do you choose? lit. which pleases you? See Quiddity and Liberal. QUILT, a bed-cover, a case filled with feathers, &c. (F.,-L.)

See Five and Ten.

QUINQUANGULAR, having five angles. (L.) Formed from quinque, five, just as quadrangular is from quadrus, fourfold. See Quadrangular.

QUINQUIENNIAL, lasting five years, recurring in five years. (L.) Formed from quinque, five, and annus, a year; see Biennial. QUINSY, inflammatory sore throat. (F., -Gk.) 'The throtling guinsey; ' Dryden, Palamon. 1682. A contraction of squinancy, spelt squinancie in Minsheu, ed. 1627 .- O.F. squinancie (16th cent., Littre), mod. F. esquinancie. Cot. gives esquinance, the squincy or squinancy, and squinance, 'the squinancy or squinzie.'  $\beta$ . Formed with prefixed s from Gk.  $\kappa v \nu \dot{\alpha} \gamma \chi \eta$ , lit. 'a dog-throttling,' applied to a bad kind of sore throat. - Gk.  $\kappa v \nu \cdot$ , stem of  $\kappa \dot{\nu} \omega \nu$ , a dog, cognate with E. Hound; and  $\dot{\alpha} \gamma \chi \cdot \epsilon v$ , to choke, throttle, from ANGH, nasalised form of  $\kappa \dot{\alpha} \wedge CH$ form of AGH, to choke; see Awe. [+]

QUINTAIN, a post with arms, set up for beginners in tilting to run at. (F., -L.?) In As You Like It, i. 2. 263. When, if neede were, they could at quintain run; Sidney, Arcadia, b. i (Lamon, l. 55). -F. quintaine, 'a quintane, or whintane, for country youths to run at;' Cot. Cf. Prov. quintana, Ital. quintana (Littré). Origin uncertain; but we find Low Lat. quintana, a quintain, also a certain measure of land, also a part of a street where carriages could pass (Ducange).  $\beta$ . The form of the word is so explicit that I cannot see why we should hesitate to connect it with Lat. quintana, a street in the camp, which intersected the tents of the two legions in such a way as to separate the fifth maniple from the sixth, and the fifth turma from the sixth; here was the market and business-place of the camp (White). We can hardly doubt that this public place in the camp was sometimes the scene of athletic exercises and trials of skill, whence it is an easy step to the restriction of the term to one particular kind of exhibition of martial activity. It is further certain that quintana is the fem. of quintanus, formed with suffix -anus from quintus, fifth, which is for quinc-tus \*, from quinque, five. See Five. QUINTAL, a hundredweight. (F., - Span., - Arab., - L.) - Low Lat. quietantia. And see quite.

has: 'Quolibet, a quirk, or quiddity;' evidentiy from quodlibet. A <sup>(a)</sup> 'Twelve pence upon euerie quintall of copper;' Hackluyt's Voyages, quidlibet was probably the same as quodlibet, which Wedgwood i. 137, l. 18. Spelt quyntall, Palsgrave. - F. quintal, 'a quintal or i. 137, l. 18. Spelt quyntall, Palsgrave. - F. quintal, 'a quintal or hundred-weight;' Cot. - Span. quintal, a quintal, hundred-weight. -Arab. qintar, a weight of 100 pounds of twelve ounces each; Rich.

Dict. pp. 1150, 737. - Lat. centum, a hundred; see Cent. QUINTESSENCE, the pure essence of anything. (F.,-L.) 'Aristoteles . . hath put down . . . for elements, foure; and for a fifth, quintessence, the heavenly body which is immutable;' Holland, tr. of Plutarch, p. 662 (R.) And see The Book of Quinte Essence or the Fifth Being, about A. D. 1460, ed. Furnivall, 1866 (E. E. T. S.) - F. quintessence, 'a quintessence, the vertue, force, or spirit of a thing extracted:' Cot. - Lat. quinta essentia, fifth essence or nature. - Lat. quinta, fem. of quintus (put for quine-tus*), from quinque, five; see The idea is older than Aristotle; Five. And see Essence. cf. the five Skt. bhúta's, or elements, which were earth, air, fire. water, and æther. Thus the fifth essence is æther, the most subtle and highest ; see Benfey, Skt. Dict. p. 658, col. I.

QUINTILLION, the fifth power of a million. (L.) Coined from Lat. quint-us, fifth; and -illion, part of the word million; see Quadrillion, Billion.

QUINTUPLE, fivefold. (F., -L.) In Sir T. Browne, Cyrus' Garden, c. 5. § 3. - F. guintuple, in use in the 16th cent. (Littre). -Lat. quintuplus*, a coined word; formed from quintus, fifth, just as duplus is from duo, two. See Quintessence and Double. Der. quintuple, verb.

QUIP, a taunt, cavil. (C.) 'This was a good quip that he gave unto the Jewes;' Latimer, Sermon on Rom. xili. an. 1552 (R.) Levins has quip in the sense of whip. Like quirk, the word is of Celtic origin. – W. churje, a quick first or turn; cf. churjen, a quick turn; churjeio, to whip, to move briskly. Cf. Gael. enje, to whip.  $\beta$ . From a Celtic base KWIP, answering to Teut. HWIP, to whip. See Whip. Der. quibb-le, q. v.

QUIRE(1), a collection of so many sheets of paper, often 24. (F., -L.) In the Ancren Riwle, p. 248, last line but I, we find the curious form cwaer, in the sense of a small book or pamphlet. - O. F. quaier (13th cent., Littre); spelt quayer, cayer, in Cotgrave, who explains it 'a quire of written paper, a peece of a written booke.' Mod. F. casier. 8. Of uncertain origin, but probably Latin. Diez derives it from codicarium*, a dimin. form from codic-, stem of codex, a codex, book ; see Code y. But it is more usually derived from Low Lat. quaternum, a collection of four leaves, a small quire, from Lat. que terni, nom. pl., four each, which from quatuor, four, cognate with E. Four. We actually find the O. F. quaer as a gloss to Low Lat. quaternus, Wright's Vocab. i. 116; Ital. quaderno, a quire of paper; and the instance of F. enfer from Lat. infernum shews that the suffix -num might easily be lost. ¶ Not from Lat. quaternio, which could never suffer a loss of the latter syllables.

QUIRE (2), a band of singers. (F., -L., -Gk.) Another spelling of Choir, q. v. Der. quir ister (for chorister); Nares.

QUIRK, a cavil, subtle question. (C.) In Minsheu, ed. 1627. The orig. sense seems to have been 'a quick turn.' Formed, with a suffix -k (as in : tal-k, verb, from steal, smir-k from smile), from a base quir. This base is rather Celtic than E., appearing in W. chwiori, to turn briskly, chwyr, strong impulse, chwyrnu, to whir, whiz, hum; whence chwired, a quirk, a piece of craft, chwiredu, to be crafty, to play tricks. Cf. Gael. cuireid, a turn, wile, trick, referred by Macleod to car, to turn.  $\beta$ . I suspect the word to be really of imitative origin, from a Celtic base KWIR, answering to Teut. HWIR, as seen in E. whir. See Whir. And see Quip. Der quirk-isk. This word is sometimes derived from queer, but it appears to have been in use much earlier, and therefore could not have been suggested

QUIT, freed, released, discharged from. (F., -L.) In the phr. 'to be quit,' the word is really an adj., though with the force of a pp. The verb to quit is derived from it, not vice versa; as is easily seen by comparing the F. quitter (O. F. quiter), with F. quitte (O. F. quite). In the phrases 'quit rent' and 'quit claim,' the old adjectival use is retained, and it is unnecessary to insert a hyphen, as in writing quitclaim. Moreover, the adj. was introduced into E. before the verb, appearing as cwite in the Ancren Riwle, p. 6, l. 12. Cf. 'Tho was Wyllam our kyng all quyt of thulke fon,' i. e. all free of those foes; Rob. of Glouc. p. 392. [Hence was derived the verb quyten, to satisfy a claim, pay for. 'He mai quiten hire ale' = he will pay for Satisfy a challer, bay tot. The many prices into a to the rate of the price her ale, Old Eng. Miscellany, ed. Morris, p. 190, 1.7; and see Chaucer, C. T. 772.] = O. F. quite; 'discharged, quit, freed, released;' Cot. Mod. F. quitte; Span. quito, quit. = Lat. quietum, acc. of quietus, at rest, hence free, satisfied. Thus quit is a shorter form of quiet. See Quilet. Der. quit, verb, from O. F. quiter, 'to quit, 'Cot. (mod. F. quitter). And hence guitt-ance, M. E. quitaunce, spelt ewitaunce in Ancren Riwle, p. 1 26, l. 7, from O. F. quitance, 'an acquittance,' Cot.,

are does not appear very early, yet is probably old. 'A quivir, ing dart;' Spenser, F. Q. iii. 5, 19. 'I quyver, I shake;' Palsgrave. Allied to the obsolete adj. quiver, full of motion, brisk, Shak. 2 Hen. Allied to the obsolete ad, guiver, thil of motion, brisk, Shak. 2 Hen. IV, iii. 2. 301; which occurs, spelt cwiver (= cwiver) in the Ancen Riwle, p. 140, 1. 21; also as A. S. cwifer, in the comp. adv. cwiferlice, anxiously, eagerly (Bosworth). B. The base is KWIF, answering to Aryan GIP, perhaps from  $\checkmark$  GI, to quicken (Fick, i. 570), and thus ultimately related to Quick; and see Quaver, Quake. Cf. O. Du. huiven, knivers, to quiver (Kilian).

QUIVER (2), a case for arrows. (F., - O. H. G.) 'Quyver, Pharetre; ' Prompt. Parv. - O. F. cuivre, cuevre, older form couire, a quiver (Burguy). And see Diez, s. v. conire. = O. H. G. kokhar (cited by Diez), mod. G. köcher, a quiver. Cognate with A.S. cocur, cocer, Gen. xxvii. 3. Root unknown. Der. quiver-ed. QUIXOTIC, absurdly chivalrous. (Spanish.) Formed as adj., with suffix -ic, from the name Don Quizote, or Quijote, the hero of the famous novel by Cervantes. (The O. Span. z is now commonly written as j; the sound of the letter is guttural, something like that of G. ck).

QUOIF, a cap or hood. (F., -M. H. G.) In Shak. Wint. Tale, iv. 4. 226. The same word as Coif, q. v. QUOIN, a technical term, orig. a wedge. Used in architecture, gunnery, and printing. (F., -L.) The orig. sense is 'wedge;' and, as a verb, 'to wedge up.' 'A printers quoin, Cuneus;' Levins, 215. 17. Merely another spelling of Coin, q. v. A like change of c to be convert in a weit. Dec nous were were gu occurs in quoit. Der. quoin, verb. QUOIT, COIT, a ring of iron for throwing at a mark in sport. (F.,-L.?) The older spelling is coit. 'Coyte, Petreluda; Coyter, or caster of a coyte, Petreludus;' Prompt. Parv. 'Casting of coitis,' Pecock's Repressor (a. p. 1449); in Spec. of Eng., ed. Skeat, p. 51, l. 70. Of uncertain origin.  $\beta$ . We find W. coetan, a quoit (where W. or - E. or nearly); but this is prob. borrowed from E., having no radical, and therefore does not help us. Y. But it is clear, on the other hand, that the Lowland Scotch coit, to justle or push about, occurring in Fordun's Scotichronicon, ii. 376, is exactly the O.F. coiter. We there read of a woman who 'Gangis coitand in the curt, hornit like a gait' [goat]. 8. The spelling coit suggests a F. origin; and the word is prob. connected with the curious O. F. coiter, to press, to push, to hasten, incite, instigate (Burguy); the Span. coilarse is to hurry oneself, to hasten. If the O.F. coiler could have had the sense 'to drive,' as seems probable, we may look on a quoit as being a thing driven or whirled. doubtful; perhaps from Lat. coactare, to force, from coactus, pp. of 5. The O. Du. kote, 'a huckle-bone' cogere; see Cogent. (Hexham), can hardly be related, on account of the diphthong. Der. quoit, verb, 2 Hen. IV, ii. 4. 206.

QUORUM, a number of members of any body sufficient to transact business. (L.) In Minsheu, ed. 1627. It was usual to enumerate the members forming a committee, of whom (in Lat. quorum) a certain number must be present at a meeting. Lat. quorum is the gen. pl. of qui, cognate with E. who; see Who.

QUOTA, a part or share assigned to each member of a company. (Ital., - L.) Used by Addison (Todd; no reference). - Ital. quota, a share. - Lat. quota (pars), how great (a part), how much; fem. of quotus, how many. - Lat. quot, how many; extended from guo., crude form of qui, cognate with E. Who; with suffix -ta. Der. (from Lat. guotus) quots, q. v., quoti-dian; (from Lat. quot) quot-ient. QUOTE, to cite, repeat the words of any one. (F., -L.) In Shak. Hamlet, ii. 1. 112. Sometimes written cote (Schmidt).=O. F. quoter, 'to quote;' Cot. Mod. F. coter, which is also in Cotgrave. Low Lat. quotare, to mark off into chapters and verses; thus the real sense of quote is to give a reference. The lit. sense of quotare is 'to say how many, with reference to the numbering of chapters. - Lat. quotus, how much, how many; see Quots. Der. quot-able, quot-er. quot-at-ion.

QUOTH, he says, he said. (E.) Properly a pt. t., though some-times used as a present. The form of the infin. is qualt, only used times used as a present. Ine form of the mnn. is queat, only used in the comp. bequeatk. M. E. quoth, quod; Chancer, C. T. 790; and common in both forms. - A. S. cuvδan, to speak, say; pt. t. cuvað, pl. cuvádon; pp. cuvadan; Grein, i. 173. + Icel. kveða; pt. t. kvað, pp. kveðinn. + O. Sax. queðan. + M. H. G. queden, quoden; pt. t. quat, quot. β. All from a Teut. base KWATH, as if from an Aryan base GAT; but we only find Skt. gad, to speak, Lith. žádas, speech, de area to speak difter a read to all from a common a GAA to make

QUITE, entirely. (F., -L.) M. E. quite, quyte. 'And chaced him & Gower, C. A. ii. 142, last line. -O. F. cotidian (13th cent., Littre); out of Norweie quyte and clene;' Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. | later quotidien, 'daily;' Cot. - Lat. quotidianus, daily. - Lat. quoti-go. This is merely an adverbial use of the M. E. adj. quyte. now | from quotus, how many; and di-es, a day; with suffix -anus. Hence quotidianus = on however many a day, on any day, daily. See Quota and Diurnal.

QUOTIENT, the result in arithmetical division. (F., -L.; or L.) In Minsheu, ed. 1627. [Perhaps directly from Latin.] - F. quotient, 'the part which, in the division of a thing among many, falls unto every man's share;' Cot. - Lat. quotient.*, the imaginary stem of Lat. quotiens, which is really an adv., and indeclinable; it means 'how many times.'- Lat. guol. how many ; see Quota.

R.

RABBET, to cut the edges of boards so that they overlap and can be joined together. (F., -L. and G.) M.E. rabe; see Prompt. Parv. 'Many deep rabbotted incisions;' Holland, tr. of Plutarch, p. 902 (R.) The Halifax gibbet, in Harrison's Descr. of England, b. ii. c. 11, ed. Furnivall, p. 227, is described as having a block of wood 'which dooth ride vp and downe in a slot, rabet, or regall betweene two peeces of timber.'-F. raboter, 'to plane, levell, or laye even;' Cot. He also gives: 'rabot, a joyner's plane, a plaisterer's beater.' The F. adj. raboteux means 'rugged, knotty, rough.' Littre refers these words to O.F. rabouter, to thrust back, compounded of Lat. re, F. a (= Lat. ad), and boter (later bouter), to thrust. This O. F. verb is, in fact, equivalent to E. re-abut. B. The notion of abutting or projecting gives the sense of rugged to the adj. raboteva; whilst the notion of removing the roughness is in the verb. See Ro- and Abut. γ. At the same time, it is certain that F. rabod, as shewn by Cotgrave's 2nd definition, was confused with F. rabae, a beater, connected with rabatre (mod. F. rabattre), lit. to re-abate; for which see Re- and Abate. Even in E., the word rabbet is sometimes spelt rebate.

RABBI, RABBIN, sir, a Jewish title. (L., - Gk., - Heb.) 'Rabi, that is to seve maister; Wyclif, John, i. 38. – Lat. rabbi (Vulgate). – Gk.  $\beta \alpha \beta \beta i$ ; John, i. 38. – Heb. rabbi, lit. my master; from rab. great, or as sb. master, and i, my. We also find Rabboni, John, xx. 16; of similar import. Rabbi was considered a higher title than Rab; and Rabban higher than Rabbi;' Smith, Dict. of the Bible, q.v. -Heb. root rábas, to be great. Cf. Arab. rabb, being great; or, as sb., a master; rabbi, my lord; Rich. Dict. p. 719. The form rabbis is French. Der. rabbin-ic-al, rabbin-ist.

RABBIT, a small rodent quadruped. (O. Low G.?) M. E. rabet, Prompt. Parv. The proper E. word is cony. It is a dimin. form from an older word which is only found in O. Du. robbe, 'a rabet;' Hexham. Perhaps cf. F. rable, the back of a rabbit ; Span, and Port, rabo, tail, hind quarters, raber, to wag the tail. RABBLE, a noisy crowd, mob. (O. Low G.)

Levins has robil. rable, rablement. Halliwell has: 'rabble, to speak confusedly,' with an example of M. E. rablen used in the same sense; also: 'rablement, a crowd, or mob.' So named from the noise which they make; cf. O. Du. rabbelen, 'to chatter, trifle, toy;' Hexham. So also prov. G. rabbelen, to chatter, prattle; Flügel. So also Gk. paßageur, to make a noise; whence  $d\rho\rho a\beta a \xi$ , a dancer, a brawler. -  $\sqrt{ABH}$ , to make a noise; whence Skt. rambh, to sound, rambha, the lowing of a cow. The suffix -le gives a frequentative force; a rabble is 'that which keeps on making a noise.' And see Rapparos. Der.

rabble-ment (with F. suffix), Jul. Cæsar, i. 2. 245. BABID, mad, furious. (L.) 'All the rabid flight Of winds that ruin ships; 'Chapman, tr. of Homer, Odyss. b. xii. 1. 418. – Lat. rabidus, furious. - Lat. rabere, to rage; see Rage. Der. rabid-ly, -ness

BACA, a term of reproach. (Chaldee.) Matt. v. 22. 'Critics are agreed in deriving it from the Chaldee reka, with the sense of worthless; Smith, Dict. of the Bible.

RACCOON, RACOON, a carnivorous animal of N. America. (N. American.) It occurs in a tr. of Buffon, London, 1792. The name of the animal in Buffon is raton ; but this is only a F. corruption of the native name, just as racoon is an E. corruption. Spelt rackoon in Bailey, 1735. 'Aralphone, a beast like a fox'; in a glossary of Indian words at the end of A Historie of Travaile into Virginia, by Wm. Strachey; ab. 1610-12; published by the Hackluyt Society in 1849. The F. raton is assimilated to F. raton, a rat. (Communicated.)

RACE (1), a trial of speed, swift course, swift current. (E.) adstei, to speak, źodis, a word; all from a common √GA, to make a noise; cf. Skt. gai, to sing. DOTIDIAN, daily. (F., -L.) M. E. quotidian, spelt cotidian, conscience, l. 8938. -A. S. rás, a rush, swift course; Luke, viii. 33. M. E. rees, res (with long e), Gower, C. A. i. 335, 1. 19; Tale of Gamelyn, 1. 543 (Wright), or 1. 547 (Six-text); spelt rase, Pricke of + Icel. ruis, a race, running.  $\beta$ . The form of the root is RAS,  $\phi$  RACK (4), another spelling of wrack, i.e. wreck. 'To go to convertible with ARS, whence Skt. risk, to flow: the orig. sense seems to be 'current' of a stream, as in E. mill-race. Der. race, Wreck. 'Wreck. verb. A.S. rásan; race-course, race-horse, rac-er.

RACE (2), a lineage, family, breed. (F.-O. H. G.) In Spenser, F. Q. i. 10. 60. - F. race, 'a race, linnage, family;' Cot. Cf. Port. raça, Span. raza, Ital. razza. - O. H. G. reiza, a line, stroke, mark; the notion of 'descent' being represented by that of 'direct line,' as in E. See Diez, who shews that the Romance forms cannot come out of Lat. radix, though it is quite possible that some confusion with radix may have influenced race in some of its usages; see Bace (3). B. This O.H.G. reiza is cited by Fick, iii. 309; and is cognate with

RACEME, a cluster. (F.,-L.) A botanical term; borrowed from F. racème, a cluster, in botany. - Lat. racemum, acc. of racēmus, a cluster of grapes; allied to Gk. paf (gen. pay-oe), a berry, esp. a grape. Der. racem-ed. Doublet, raisin.

BACK (1), a grating above a manger for hay, an instrument of torture; as a verb, to extend on a rack, to torture. (E.?) The word torture, is used in a great many senses, see Rack (2), &c., below; and, in several of these, the origin is quite different. The word rack, to torture, is prob. E., but it is remarkable that it is scarcely to be found in early literature, either in that or any other sense. The oldest E. word etymologically connected with rack (I) is Reach, β. The radical sense of rack is to extend, stretch out; q. v. hence, as a sb., that which is extended or straight, a straight bar (cf. G. rack, a rail, bar); hence, a frame-work, such as the bars in a grating above a manger, a frame-work used as an instrument of torture, a straight bar with teeth in which a cog-wheel can work. Figuratively, to be on the rack is to be in great anxiety; and to rack is to exaggerate (Halliwell). Also a rack-rent is a rent stretched to its full value, or nearly so.  $\gamma$ . For examples, see 'As though I had been racked,' i. e. tortured; Skelton, Phillip Sparrow, l. 97. 'Galows and racke;' Caxton, tr. of Reynard the Fox, ed. Arber, p. 24. 'A rokke, Præsepe,' i. e. a rack for hay; Prompt. Parv. 'Rekke and manger' = rack and manger; Romance of Partenay, l. 8. The verb is found in O. Du. racken, 'to rack, to torture;' 013. Hexham. Related words are Icel. rekja, to stretch, trace, rekkja, to strain, rakhr, straight; O. Du. recker, 'to stretch, reach out, also to racke,' Hexham; Swed. rak, straight; G. rack, a rack, rail, prov. G. reck, a scaffold, wooden horse, reckbank, a rack for torture, recke, a stretcher, recken, to stretch; and esp. Low G. rakk, a shelf, as in E. plate-rack, &c. The great dearth of early quotations suggests that rack (for torture) may have been borrowed from Holland; but the word may, in some senses at least, have been English. For the root, see Rank (2). Doublet, ratch. [+]

BACK (2), light vapoury clouds, the clouds generally. (Scand.) Still in use in the Northern counties, and sometimes there applied to a mist; 'Halliwell. Used in Shak. of floating vapour; see Hamlet, ii. 2. 506, Antony, iv. 14. 10, Sonnet 33, 1. 6. So also (probably) in the disputed passage in the Tempest, iv. 156; where Halliwell hesitates, though he gives instances of its use in earlier English. Thus we find : 'As Phebus doeth at mydday in the southe, Whan every rak and every cloudy sky Is voide clene; 'Lydgate, MS. Ashmole 39, fol. 51. 'The rac dryuez' = the storm cloud drives; Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, B. 433; a most decisive passage. 'A rak [driving storm] and a royde wynde ;' Destruction of Troy, 1985. 'The windes in the vpper region, which move the clouds above (which we call the racke) and are not perceived below ;' Bacon, Nat. Hist. § 115. [Frequently confused with reek, but this is quite a different word. It is rather the same word with wrack, and allied to wreck; but wrack is to be taken in the sense of 'drift,' as rightly explained in Wedgwood. - Icel. rek, drift, motion; given in Vig-fusson only in the sense 'a thing drifted ashore;' but Wedgwood cites ising er i reki, the ice is driving; skyrek, the rack or drifting clouds; cf. 'racking clouds' = drifting clouds, 3 Hen. VI, ii. 1. 27. From Icel. reka, to drive, toss, thrust, cognate with Swed. wräka, to reject, and E. zereak; see Wreak. Cf. Swed. skeppet vräker, the ship drifts.

BACK (3), to pour off liquor, to subject it to a fermenting process. (F.,-L.?) See Halliwell. In Minsheu, ed. 1627, who speaks of 'rackt wines, i.e. wines cleaned and purged.'-O.F. raqué; Cotgrave explains vin raqué as 'small, or corse wine, squeezed RACK (5), a short form of Arrack, q.v. Cf. Span. raque, arrack.

RACK (6), &c. We find (6) prov. E. rack, a neck of mutton; from A.S. Aracca, neck, according to Somner. Also (7) rack, for reck, to care; see Reck. Also (8) rack, to relate, from A.S. reccan; see Reckon. Also (9) rack, a pace of a horse, (Palsgrave), i e. a rocking pace; see Bock (2). Also (10) rack, a track, cart-rut; cl. loel. reka, to drive; see Rack (2). RACKET (1), RAQUET, a bat with net-work in place of a wooden blade  $(F_{\cdot}, -Span., -Arab.)$  M.E. raket, in the phrase plaien raket, to play at rackets, Chaucer, Troilus, iv. 461. The game of 'fives,' with the hands, preceded rackets; to this day, tennis is called in French paume = game of the palm of the hand. - Span. raqueta, a racket, battle-dore. – Arab. rakat, the palm of the hand; spain, rawat, a the palms; Rich. Dict. p. 714. See Devic, in Supp. to Littré. BACKET (2), a noise. (C.) One of those homely words which often prove to be of Celtic origin. Lowland Scotch racket, a dis-turbance, uproar (Jamieson). – Gael. racaid, a noise, disturbance; Irish racan, noise, riot. - Gael. rac, to make a noise like geese or ducks. Of imitative origin. Cf. prov. E. rackle, noisy talk; also rattle, rabble, rapparee.

RACY, of strong flavour, spirited, rich. (F., -O. H. G.; with E. suffix.) Racy undoubtedly means indicative of its origin, due to its breed, full of the spirit of its race; and so is a derivative from Bace (2). <sup>4</sup> Fraught with brisk racy verses, in which we The soil from whence they came taste, smell, and see; <sup>4</sup> Cowley, An Answer to a Copy of Verses sent me from Jersey, 11. 7, 8. With respect to a pipe of Canary wine, Greedy asks 'Is it of the right race?; Massinger, New Way to pay Old Debts, i. 3. 10. Der. Probably sometimes used with some notion of raci-ness. reference to Lat. radix; but race (2) is not derived from radix, which appears only in Race (3). RADIAL, RADIANT; see Radius.

RADICAL, RADISH; see Radix. RADIUS, a ray. (L.) In Phillips, ed. 1710. Chiefly used in mathematics. - Lat. radius, a ray; see Ray. Der. radi-al, from F. radial, ' of, or belonging to, the upper and bigger bone of the arme,' Cot., formed with suffix -alis from Lat. radius, sometimes used to mean the exterior bone of the fore-arm. Also radi-ant, spelt radyawnt in Fisher, On the Seven Psalms, Ps. 130, ed. Mayor, p. 231, last line, from radiant-, stem of pres. part. of Lat. radiare, to radiate, from radius; and hence radi-ant-ly, radi-ance. Also radi-ate, from Lat. radiatus, pp. of radiare. Also radiat-ion, in Bacon, Nat. Hist. § 125, near the end, from F. radiation, 'a radiant brightness,' Cot., which from Lat. radiationem, acc. of radiatio, a shining, from pp. radiatus.

BADIX, a root, a primitive word, base of a system of logarithms. (L.) Lat. radix (stem radic-), a root; chiefly used as a scientific term. + Gk. háðif, a branch, rod. Cognate with E. Wort, q.v. Elyot, The Governour, b. i. c. 4 (R.), and in his Castle of Helth, b. iii. c. 3, from F. radical, 'radicall,' Cot., formed with suffix -al (=Lat. -alis) from radic-, stem of radix; radic-al-ly, radic-al-ness; also radic-le, a little root, a dimin. form from the stem radic-. Also radish, called 'radishe rootes' Sir T. Elyot, Castel of Helth, b. ii. c. 16, from F. radis, 'a raddish root,' Cot.; not a true F. word, but borrowed from Prov. raditz (Littré), from Lat. radicem, acc. of radix. From Lat. radix we also have e-radic-ate and rash (3). Doublets, radieh, race (3).

BAFFLE, a kind of lottery. (F.,-G.) M. E. rafte (a game at dice), Chaucer, C. T. Pers. Tale, De Avaritia; Group I, I. 793 (Six-text). - F. rafte (spelt raffle in Cotgrave), 'a game at three dice, wherein he that throwes all three alike, winnes whatsoever is set; also, a rifling;' Cot. - F. rafter, 'to catch, or seise on violently; Also, a fining; Cot. - F. rafter, to carca, or series on violating, Cot. - G. raffeln, to snatch up; frequentative of raffen, 'to raff, sweep, smatch away, carry off hastily,' Flügel. Cognate with Icel. krapa, to hurry; see Rape (1), Rap (2). Der. raffe, verb. RAFT, a collection of spars or planks, tied together to serve as a boat. (Scand.) M. E. raft; spelt rafte, and used in the sense of spar' or 'rough beam;' Avowing of Arthur, st. 25, in Robson's Met. Rom. p. 69. The orig. sense is 'rafter.'- Icel. rap'r (pron. raftr, in which r is merely the sign of the nom. case), a rafter; Dan. raft, a rafter; see Rafter.

BAFTER, a beam to support a roof. (E.) M. E. rafter, Chaucer, C. T. 992. – A. S. ræfter, Ælfred, tr. of Beda, b. iii. c. 16. An extension (with Aryan suffix -RA) from the base RAFT appearing in raqué; Cotgrave explains un raque as sinali, or coise while, squeeted from the dregs of the grapes, already drained of all their best moisture.' Perhaps from Latin; I suppose raquer = rasquer *, cognate with Span rascer, to scrape; see Rascal. Cf. Span. rascon, sour. [†] Dan. raft, Icel. raptr (raftr), a raster, beam. Again, Dan. raft is an extension (with suffix 4) from the base RAF appearing in Icel. raft, cover; whence Gk. opopos, a roof; see Fick, i. 741, iii. 251. Der. rafter, verb. And see raft. Gur It does not seem to be allied to roof, which has an initial &; A. S. Arif.

RAG, a shred of cloth. (E.) M. E. ragge, Gower, C. A. i. 100, LAG, a shifed of cioin. (L.) M. E. ragge, Gower, C. A. 1, 100, l. 7. 'A ragged colt'=a shaggy colt, King Alisaunder, 684. We only find A. S. raggie, adj. rough, shaggy; 'Setosa, raggie, Mone, Quellen, p. 436. + Swed. ragg, rough hair; cf. raggig, shaggy; Swed, dial. raggi, having rough hair, slovenly; Dan. dial. ragg, rough, uneven hair (Assen), also raggad, shaggy; Icel. rögg, shagginess; raggaör, shaggy. Thus the orig. sense is that of shagginess, hence of untidiness. Root unknown. ¶ 1. There ¶ 1. There is no reason for connecting it with A.S. Aracod, torn, which is one of Somner's unauthorised words. 2. The Gael. rag, a rag, may be borrowed; for the true sense of Gael. and Irish rag is straight, rigid, cognate with Swed. rak, straight, upright, and allied to E, Bigid. 3. The resemblance to Gk. Advos, a shred of cloth (from ✓ WARK, WRAK, to tear), is also accidental, and proves nothing. Der. ragg-ed, as above, also applied by Gower to a tree, stone); rag wort, spelt rag-wrote in Levins and in a Glossary (in BACHE, fury, violent anger. (F., -L.) M. E. rage, King Alis-aunder, ed. Weber, 980. - F. rage. - Lat. rabiem, acc. of rabies, madness, rage. - Lat. rabere, to rave, to be mad. + Skt. raba, to desire vehemently, toact inconsiderately; in Vedic Skt., to seize. - ~ RABH,

'That, when they heard my name in any road,' i. e. raid; Greene, Georgea-Greene, ed. Dyce, vol. ii. p. 169. – Icel. reið, a riding, a raid; cf. Dan. red, Swed. redd, a road. See Boad, Ride. Doublet, road. RAIL (1), a bar of timber, an iron bar for railways. (O. Low G.) M. E. rail; dat. raile, Gower, C. A. iii. 75, 1. 11. Not found in A. S., but regularly contracted from a Low G. form regel; for the loss of g between two vowels, cf. hail (1), nail, rain. - Low G. regel, a rail, a cross-bar; Brem. Wörterbuch; Swed. regel, a bar, bolt; cf. O. Du. richel, rijchel, 'a barre, a let, or a stop, that shutteth a door; 'Hex-ham. + G. riegel, O. H. G. rigil, a rail, bar, bolt, by which a door is fastened. β. This G. sb. is from O. H. G. rikan, to fasten, mod. G. reiken, to put into a row, stitch, string together, connect; the primi-tive bar of a door was prob. a mere latch. The O. Du. rijchel means 'a line or stroke' as well as a bar (Hexham); and is therefore the dimin. of the sb. which appears as G. reike, a row, stroke. This G. reike is connected by Fick with Skt. lekka (for rekka), a line, stroke, mark, from likk (= rikk), to scratch, to write. - A RIK, to scratch; Fick, i. 742. Der. rail, verb, rail-ing, rail-road, rail-way.

BAIL (2), to brawl, to use reviling language. (F., - L.) In Skel-ton, Poems Against Gamesche; see Skelton, ed. Dyce, i. 130, ll. 119, 137. "Rayler, a jestar, railler; 'Palsgrave. F. railler, 'to jest, deride, mock;' Cot. Cf. Span. rallar, to grate, scrape, molest, vex; Poft. ralar, to scrape. The change of sense from scraping to vexing is in accordance with the usual course of metaphors. Cf. Lat. rallum, an instrument for scraping earth from a plough, which is a contraction for an older form radulum *. The F. railler answers to a low Lat. type radulare*, formed as a dimin. from radere, to scrape. See Raso. (See Littré and Scheler.) Der. railler-y = F. raillerie, 'jeast-ing, merriment, a flowt, or scoff,' Cot. Also rally (2). [+] RAIL (3), a genus of wading birds. (F., - Teut.) Given by Phillips, ed. 1710, as 'a sort of bird.' Spelt rayle in Levins, and in the Catholicon Anglicon (cited by Wheatley). - O. F. rasle, 'a rattling in the throat; also, the fowle called a rayle;' Cot. Mod. F. rale. Littré notes raale as the 14th cent. spelling ; also that the Picard form is reille, shewing that the E. word agrees rather with the Picard β. No doubt the bird was named from than the usual F. form. its cry; cf. O. F. raller, 'to rattle in the throat,' Cot.; mod. F. råler. Of Teut. origin; cf. O. Du. ratelen, 'to rattle, or make a noise,' y. So also O. Du. rallen, rellen, 'to Hexham; see Rattle. nake a noise; ' een rel, ' a noise, a cracking, or a rustling,' Hexham; the verb is merely a contracted form of ratelen, as in Dan. ralle, Norw. radla, to rattle. Cf. G. ralle, a rail, land-rail, corn-crake; Swed. ralla, to chatter, rallfdgel, a landrail. [†] BAIL (4), part of a woman's night-dress. (E.) Put for krail.

Obsolete; see Halliwell. 'Rayle for a woman's necke, crevechief, en quarttre doubles ;' Palsgrave. M. E. rezel, Owl and Nightingale, 562; spar, a rafter. The orig. sense is 'that which covers.'- ~ RAP, to Fii. 12. + O. Fries. kreil, reil, a garment. + O. H. G. kregil, a garment. dress. Root unknown.

BAIMENT, clothing. (F., - L. and Scand.; with F. suffix.) 'With ruffled rayments;' Spenser, F. Q. i. 6. 9. M. E. raiment, Plowman's Tale, pt. iii. st. 30 (before A. D. 1400). Short for arraiment, of which the M. E. form was araiment, and the initial a easily fell away. 'Rayment, or arayment, Ornatus;' Prompt. Parv. Cf. O. F. arretement, 'good array, order, equipage;' Cot. We find also array as a sb. Chaucer, C. T. 6509, with the shorter form ray, as in 'Hoc stragu-lum, ray,' in a list of Nomina Vestimentorum; Wright's Vocab. i. 238, col. 1. See Array.

RAIN, water from the clouds. (E.) M. E. rein ; spelt reyne, P. Plowman, B. xiv. 66. - A. S. regn, frequently contracted to ris. Grein, i. 371. + Du. regen. + Icel., Dan., and Swed. regn. + G. regen. + Goth. rign.  $\beta$ . All from a Teut. type REGNA, rain; Fick, iii. 259. Curtius connects Goth. rign with Lat. rigare, to moisten, Gk. Bréxeir, to wet. The root is uncertain. Der. rain, verb, A.S. hregnian, regnian, Matt. v. 45 (Northumb. version); rain-y, A.S. rénig, Grein, i. 372; rain-bow, A. S. rénboga, Gen. ix. 13; rain-gwage. And see ir-rig-aie, em-broc-at-ion.

BAINDEER, the same as Beindeer, q. v. BAISE, to lift up, exalt. (Scand.) A Scand. word; the E. form is rear. M. E. reisen, Wyclif, John, xi. 11; spelt registern, Ormulum, Scand. 15599. - Icel. reisa, to raise, make to rise; causal of risa, to rise. So also Dan. reise, Swed. resa, to raise, though these languages do not employ the simple verb. + Goth. raisjan, causal of reisan. See Rise. Doublet, rear. [†]

BAISIN, a dried grape. (F., -L.) M. E. reisin; spelt reisyn, Wyclif, Judges, viii. 2 (later version); King Alisaunder, 5193. -O. F. raisin, 'a grape, raisin, bunch, or cluster of grapes;' Cot. Cf. Span. racimo, a bunch of grapes. - Lat. racemum, acc. of racemus, a bunch of grapes; see Bacomo. Doublet, raceme.

BAJAH, a king, prince. (Skt.) In Sir T. Herbert's Travels, p. 53, ed. 1665. Of Skt. origin; from Skt. rájan, a king. In compounds rája is substituted for rájan; as in ádirája, primeval king. The Skt. rdjan is allied to Lat. rex; see Rogal.

BAKE (1), an instrument for scraping things together, smoothing earth, &c. (E.) M. E. rate, Chaucer, C. T. 280. - A. S. raca, to translate Lat. rastrum in Ælfric's Gloss., 1. 9. + Du. rakel, a dimin. form. + Icel. reka, a shovel. + Dan. rage, a poker. + Swed. raka, an oven-rake. + G. rechen, a rake. Cf. Lat. ligo, a mattock. β. From the notion of collecting or heaping up. The root appears in Goth. rikan (pt. t. rak), to collect, heap up, Rom. xii. 20; cognate with Lat. legere, Gk.  $\lambda \notin yer$ , to collect.  $- \checkmark$  RAG, to collect. See Legend. Der. rake, verb, A. S. racian (Somner).

RAKE (2), a wild, dissolute fellow. (Scand.) M. E. rakel, rash, Chaucer, C. T. 17238; Allit, Poems, C. 526. [This word was cor-rupted into rake-heil; see Trench, Eng. Past and Present, and 4 examples in the additions to Nares by Halliwell and Wright. And it was finally shortened to rake, as at present. Levins has both rakyl, adj. rascally, and the corrupted form rakekell. Rakekell was sometimes arbitrarily altered to rake-thame. 'Rake, or Rake shame, a base rascally fellow;' Phillips, ed. 1710.] β. The same word as Swed.dial. rakkel, a vagabond, connected with rakkla, to wander, rove, frequent. form of raka, to run hastily (Rietz). Cf. O. Swed. racka, to run about; whence also O. Swed. racka, a kind of dog, M. E. racke. So also Icel. reikall, wandering, unsettled, from reika, to wander; prov. E. rake, to wander. Der. rak-isk, rak-ish-ly.

RAKE (3), the projection of the extremities of a ship beyond the keel: the inclination of a mast from the perpendicular. (Scand.) 'In sea-language, the rake of a skip is so much of her hull or main body, as hangs over both the ends of her keel; 'Phillips, ed. 1710. Evi-dently from rake, to reach; Halliwell. Of Scand. origin; preserved in Swed. dial. raka, to reach ; raka fram, to reach over, project, like Dan. rage, to project, protrude, jut out; see raka (3) in Rietz. Rake is a doublet of E. reach, sb. See Reach. Doublet, reach.

RAKEHELL, a rascal. (Scand.) See Rake (2).

RALLY (1), to gather together again, reassemble. (F.-L.) Properly a trans. verb; also used as intransitive. Spelt rallie in Cotgrave. It stands for re-ally; and Spenser uses re-allie nearly in the same sense as rally; F. Q. vii. 6. 23. - F. rallier, 'to rallie;' Cot. - Lat. re, again; ad, to; and ligare, to bind; see Re- and Ally. ¶ The form rely in Barbour's Bruce, iii. 34, &c., is used in the same sense; and is the same word, with the omission of Lat. ad. RALLY (2), to banter.  $(F_{,,} - Teut.)$  'Rally, to play and droll upon, to banter or jeer; 'Phillips, ed. 1710. He also gives: 'Rallery, pleasant drolling.' Here rallery is another form of raillery, and to rally is merely another form of to rail, in later use, and due to an attempt to bring the E. word closer to F. railler. See Rail (2).

RAM, a male sheep. (E.) M. E. ram, Chaucer, C. T. 550. - A. S. see hrazel in Stratmann. - A.S. hragi, hregi, swaddling-clothes, Luke, 1 ram, rom; Grein. + Du. ram. + G. ramm. Cf. Skt. ram, to sport. thrust violently forward, M. E. rammen, Prompt. Parv., p. 422. Also wamm-ish, fetid, Chaucer, C. T. 16355. Also ram-rod, ramm-er. GP The Icel. ramr, strong, shews merely a derived sense.

RAMBLE, to stray, rove, roam. (E.) The frequentative form of roam, or rather of the prov. E. rame, which is its equivalent. 'Rame, to gad about, to sprawl, to spread out too much ;' Holderness Glossary (E.D.S.) It does not occur very early, and was prob. a dialectal (Northern) word, taken up into the literary language. 'Nor is this lower world but a huge Inn, And men the rambling passengers; Howell, Poema, prefixed to his Familiar Epistles, and dated Jan. 1, 1641. And in Butler, Hudibras, pt. ii. c. 3 (ed. Bell, vol. ii. p. 161, 1. 34). The b is excressent; and ram-b-le is for ramm-le. 'Rammle, to ramble; Whitby Glossary. See Boam. ¶ Perhaps it has been somewhat influenced by the words ramp and romp; the metaphorical sense 'to rave,' i. e. to wander, presents no difficulty. Der.

RAMIFY, to divide into branches. (F.,-L.) 'To ramify and send forth branches;' Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. ii. c. 5. part 6. - F. ramifier, 'to branch, put out branches;' Cot. Formed as if from Lat. ramificare*; from rami- = ramo-, crude form of ramus, a branch; and -ficare, due to facere, to make. Probably rāmus = rad-mus; allied to Gk. Addauvos, a young branch, Addif, a branch, and to Lat. radin; see Badix. Der. ramific-at-ion (as if from Lat. pp. ramificat-us*, whence sb. ramificat-io). Also (from Lat. ram-us) ram-ous, ram-ose, ram-e-ous.

RAMP, to leap or bound, properly, to climb, scramble, rear. (F., - Teut.) "Ramp, to rove, frisk or jump about, to play gambols or wanton tricks;" Phillips, ed. 1706; and in Palsgrave. Not much used, except in the deriv. rampant. M. E. rampen, used by Chaucer in the sense 'to rage, be furious with anger; 'C. T. 13910; cf. mod. E. romp, which is the same word. Gower uses rampend, rearing, said of a dragon, in the same way as the F. pp. rampant; C. A. iii. 74, l. 22. Cf. Prick of Conscience, 2225. - F. ramper, 'to creep, run, crawl, or traile itself along the ground; also, to climb; Cot.  $\beta$ . From a Teut. source. Cf. Bavarian rampfen, explained by Schmeller, ii. 96, by the G. raffen, to snatch. Scheler, following in mod. F. rampe, a flight of steps; and that it is allied to Ital. rampa, a claw, gripe, rampare, to claw, and rampo, a grappling-iron. y. The Ital. rampare (appearing in Prov. in the form rapar) is, in fact, a nasalised form of rappare, only used in the comp. arrappare, to snatch up, carry off, seize upon; and the base is Teut. RAP, to be in haste, found in Low G. rappen, to snatch hastily (Bremen Wörterbuch), Dan. rappe, to hasten, make haste, Dan. rap, quick, Swed. rappa, to snatch, rapp, brisk, G. raffen, to snatch. 8. Probably an initial & has been lost; cf. Icel. krapadr, hurry, krapa, to rush headlong, to hurry. See Rap (2). Der. ramp-ant, chiefly used of a lion rampant, as in Skelton, Against the Scottes, 135, from F. rampant,

RAMPART, a mound surrounding a fortified place. (F., -L.) We frequently find also rampire, rampier, or ramper. Spelt rampyre, Tottell's Miscellany, ed. Arber, p. 173, l. 18 (Assault of Cupid, st. 5); rampari, Gascoigne, Fruites of Warre, st. 45. Rampire stands for rampar (without the final t) .- O. F. rempart, rempar, 'a rampier, the wall of a fortresse; 'Cot. Cf. remparer, 'to fortific, enclose with a rampier; 'id.  $\beta$ . The F. rempar is the true form; in rempart, the t is excrescent. Rempar corresponds (nearly) to Ital. riparo, a defence, and is a verbal sb. from remparer, to defend, answering (nearly) to Ital. riparare, to defend. y. F. remparer is ' to put again into a state of defence;' from re-, again, em- for en, in, and parer, to defend, borrowed from Ital. parare, which from Lat. parare, to prepare, make ready. The Ital. riparare is the same word, with the omission of the preposition. See Re-, Em-, and Parapet or Parry

RAMSONS, broad-leaved garlic. (E.) Put for kramsons. "Allium ursinum, broad-leaved garlic, ramsons;' Johns, Flowers of the Field. Ramsons = rams-en-s, a double pl. form, where -en represents the old A.S. plural, as in E. ox-en, and -s is the usual E. pluralending. We also find M.E. ramsis, ramzys, ramseys, Prompt. Parv. p. 422; and Way says that Gerarde calls the Allium ursinum by the names 'ramsies, ramsons, or buckrams.' Here again, the suffixes -is, -eys, -ies are pl. endings. - A. S. kramsan, ramsons; Gloss. to Cockayne, A. S. Leechdoms; a pl. form, from sing. hramsa. + Swed. rams-lök (lök = leek), bear-garlic. + Dan. rams, or rams-lög (lög = leek). + Bavarian ramsen, ramsel (Schmeller). + Lithuan. kremusza, hremuszis, wild garlic (Nesselmann). Further allied to Gk. «póµvov, an onion, Irish cream, garlic; Fick, iii. 83. All from an Aryan form KARMA, whence KARMUSA, an onion, or garlic.

RANCID, sour, having a rank smell. (L.) A late word; in scented. (E.) The sense 'rancid' or 'strong-scented' is late, and Bailey, vol. i. ed. 1735. - Lat. rancidus, rancid. - Lat. rancere, to pmerely due to confusion with Lat. rancidus, E. rancid, or rather with Scc.; rati, passion. Der. ram, verb, to butt as a ram, hence to  $\phi$  stink; only used in the pres. part. rancens, stinking. This word thrust violently forward, M. E. rammen, Prompt. Parv., p. 422. Also has influenced the sense of the E. adj. rank; see Rank (2). Der. rancid-ly, -ness; also ranc-our, q. v.

BANCOUR, spite, deep-seated enmity. (F., -L.) M.E. rancour, Chaucer, C. T. 2786. - F. rancour, 'rankor, hatred;' Cot. - Lat. rancorem, acc. of rancor, spite, orig. rancidness. - Lat. rancere, to be rancid ; see Rancid. Der. rancor-ous, rancor-ous-ly.

BANDOM. done or said at hazard, left to chance. (F., - Teut.) The older form is random, or randown ; and the older sense is ' force, impetuosity, &c., the word being used as a sb. It was often used with respect to the rush of a battle-charge, and the like. 'Kyng and duyk, eorl and baroun Prikid the stedis with gret randoun; King Alisaunder, l. 2483. It often formed part of an adverbial phrase, such as in a randown, in a furious course, Barbour's Bruce, vi. 139, xvii. 694, xviii. 130; intill a randoun, id. xix. 596; in randoun richt, with downright force, id. v. 632. So also at random, orig. with rushing force, hence, left without guidance, left to its own force, astray, &c. 'The gentle lady, loose at randon lefte, The greene-wood long did walke, and wander wide At wilde adventure, like a forlorne weite; Spenser, F. Q. iii. 10. 36. [The change from final -n to -m may have been due to the influence of whilem, seldom; so also ransom.] -O.F. randon, 'the swiftnesse and force of a strong and violent stream; whence aller à grand randon, to goe very fast, or with a great and forced pace; Cot. Thus the E. adv. at random answers to F. à random.  $\beta$ . A difficult word; Diez compares O. F. randir, to press on, Span. de rendom, de rondom, rashly, intrepidly, abruptly (nearly like E. at random), O. F. randomner, 'to run swiftly, violently.' Cot., and refers them all to G. rand, an edge, rim, brim, margin. Hence also Ital. a randa, near, with difficulty, exactly; of which the lit. sense is ' close to the edge or brim,' Span. randa, lace, border of a dress. y. The difficulty is in the connection of ideas; but Cotgrave really gives the solution, viz. that random refers to the force of a brimming river. Whoever has to cross a mountain-stream must feel much anxiety as to whether it is full or not; at one time it is a mere rill, a few hours later its force sweeps all before it. This com-mon and natural solution is, I suspect, the right one. Cf. G. bis am rande voll, full to the brim; am rande des Todes, on the brink of death, at death's door; eine sache zu rande bringen, to bring a thing to the brim, to fulfil or accomplish it. So also O. F. sang respandus à gros randons, blood shed by great gushes, or in great quantity, Cot; ; lit. in brimming streams. 8. We find also Ital. randello, 'a hurling, whirling, or hissing noise in the aire; a randello, at random, carelesly, furiously, hurlingly;' Florio. Here randello is a dimin. corresponding form, and may be merely taken from the same image; but since rand means the rim or verge of a circular shield as well as the brink of a river, it may equally well refer to circular motion. A whirled stone keeps to the utmost verge (as it were) of its circular path, with a tendency to fly beyond it with great force. e. The G. rand is cognate with A. S. rand, rim, rim of a shield, verge (Grein), Icel. rönd, a rim, border, Dan. rand, a rim, streak, Swed, rand, a stripe; all from a Teut. form RANDA, a rim; Fick, iii. 246. Root uncertain.

RANGE, to rank, or set in a row, to set in order, to rove. (F., -O. H. G.) The sense of 'to rove' arose from the scouring of a O. H. G.) country by troops or ranks of armed men; the orig. sense is 'to set in a rank,' to array. M. E. rengen (corresponding to O. F. renger, the form used in the 14th cent., according to Littre), Rob. of Brunne, p. 40, 1. 26. 'The helle liun rengest euer abuten' = the lion of hell is always are size (correspondence). is always ranging (roving) about; Ancren Riwle, p. 164. – F. ranger (O. F. renger), 'to range, rank, order, array;' Cot. – F. ranger ranke,' id. See Bank (1). Der. range, sb., Antony, iii. 13. 5. Also, ranger, esp. one who ranges a forest, Minsheu, ed. 1627 (see his explanation); rang-er-ship.

RANK (1), row or line of soldiers, class, order, grade, station. (F., - O.H.G.) Spelt ranck, Spenser, F. Q. iii. 6. 35 (the verb to ranck is in the same stanza). The M. E. form is reng, Chaucer, C. T. 2596; also renk, St. Brandan, ed. Wright, 12 (Stratmann); see reng in Stratmann. Reng became renk, altered afterwards to rank in accordance with a similar change made in the F. original. - O. F. reng, later rang, 'a ranke, row, list, range; 'Cot. He gives both forms. Scheler gives the Picard form as ringue, Prov. renc. -O. H. G. bring or brinc, a ring; cognate with E. Ring, q. v. And see Harangue. The sense changed from 'ring' of men to a 'row' of men, or a file irrespective of the shape in which they were ranged. The Bret. renk is borrowed from O. F., and the other Celtic forms from F. or E. The G. rang is borrowed back again from F. rang. Dor. rank, verb (Spenser, as above); also range, q. v.; also ar-range, de-range. [+]

RANK (2), adj., coarse in growth, very fertile, rancid, strong-

O. F. rance, 'musty, fusty, stale,' Cot.; which comes to the same to make haste, cf. rap, quick, brisk. + G. raffen, to snatch. Der. thing. 'As rank as a fox;' Tw. Night, ii. 5. 136. M. E. rank, ronk. rap-t, at least in the 16th century, see above. Also raff-le, q. v.: 'Ronk and ryf;' Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, A. 843 (or 844). Often rape (1): ramp. romp. [+] with the sense of "proud 'or 'strong;' thus ronke is a various read-ing for stronge, Ancren Riwle, p. 268, note c. - A. S. ranc, strong, proud, forward; Grein, ii. 363.+Dn. rank, lank, slender (like things of quick growth).+Jcel. rakkr (for rankr), straight, slender. + Swed. rank, long and thin. + Dan. rank, erect.  $\beta$ . A nasalised form of Teut. base RAK, to make straight, to stretch; Hexham gives ranchen as equivalent to recken, to rack, to stretch. From ARAG, to stretch, make straight; whence also Rack (1), Right, Rich. Der. rank ly, ness; also rank-le, q.v. BANKLE, to fester. (E.) In Levins; spelt rankyll in Palsgrave.

Lit. to grow rank; but, being derived from rank only in the M.E. period, it took up the later sense of rank, after it had been confused with F. rance or ranci, 'musty, fusty, stale, putrified,' Cot.; as noticed under Bank (2). It is rare in M. E., but appears, according to Stratmann, in Si Beres of Hampton, ed. Turnbull, l. 2656. Formed from Rank (2) by the addition of the frequentative suffix -le. Hence the sense is 'to keep on being rank, to fester con-BANSACK, to search thoroughly. (Scand.) M. E. ransaken, Chaucer, C. T. 1007; Genesis and Exodus, ed. Morris, 2323. - Icel. rannsaka, to search a house, to ransack; Swed. ransaka, Dan. ransage. - Icel. rann, a house, abode : and sak, base of sakja, to seek. B. The Icel. rank, a house, above, and sar, by the assimilation so common in Icelandic; and is cognate with A.S. rask, a plank, beam (Bosworth), Goth. razk, a house; the root of which is unknown. Icel. sakja is cognate with A.S. secan, to seek; see Soek. IN Not connected with A.S. rak, Icel. rak, plunder, which is quite different from Icel. rann.

RANSOM, redemption, price paid for redemption, release. (F., - L.) M.E. ranson, raunson, Chaucer, C. T. 1178. The change from final n to final m is not uncommon; cf. random. Spelt raunsum, Ancren Riwle, p. 124, l. 24. - O. F. raenson (12th cent., Littré), later rançon, 'a ransome,' Cot. - Lat. redemptionem, acc. of redemptio, redemption, by the usual loss of d between two vowels. See Redemption. Der. ransom, vb.; ransom-er. Doublet, redemption. RANT, to use violent language. (Du.) In Hamlet. v. 1. 307.-

O. Du. ranten; 'randen, or ranten, to dote, or to be enraged;' Hexham. Cf. Low G. randen, to attack any one, to call out to one. + G. ranzen, to toss about, to make a noise, to couple (as animals). Perhaps allied to O. H. G. rázi, M. H. G. raze, wild, violent. Root uncertain. Der. rant-er.

RANUNCULUS, a genus of plants, including the buttercup. (L.) Botanical. - Lat. ranunculus, a little frog; also, a medicinal plant. Formed with double dimin. suffix -cu-lu-s from ran-un-, extended from rana, a frog.  $\beta$ . The Lat. rana stands for rac-na, and means 'croaker,' from RAK, extension of  $\checkmark$  RA, to bellow, make a noise. Cf. Lat. raccare, to make a noise as a tiger, loqui, to BAP (1), to strike smartly, knock; as sb., a smart stroke. (Scand.) 'Rappe, a stroke;' Palsgrave. M. E. rap, sb., rappen, vb., Prompt. Parv. The verb is formed from the sb.-Dan. rap, a rap, tap; Swed. rapp, a stroke, blow, whence rappa, to beat. From a base RAP, allied to RAT, the base of ratt-le; of imitative origin. Cf. rat-a-tat-tat, a knocking at a door. Der. rapp-er.

BAP (2), to snatch, seize hastily. (Scand.) Perhaps for Arap, an initial & being lost. M. E. rapen (for Arapen), to hasten, act hastily. Gower, C. A. i. 335, 1. 26; P. Plowman, B. v. 399; &c. The mod. E. phrase to rape and rend, to seize all one can get, is a corrupted phrase due to the collocation of the Icel. Arapa, to rush, hurry, seize, with rana, to plunder, a verb formed from rán, plunder; the true sense is 'to seize and plunder,' to plunder quickly. It appears in Chaucer as rape and renne, C. T. Group G, 1, 1422; on which see my note and the Glossary. A similar phrase is rap and reave, seize and spoil, in Fox's Martyrs, p. 781, an. 1521 (R.) So also ' to rap out oaths,' to hurry them out; Ascham, Scholemaster, b. i. ed. Arber, p. 57. Palsgrave has: 'I rappe, I raysshe;' also, 'I rape or rende, je rapine.' 'What, dear sir, thus raps you?' Cymb. i. 6. 51. 'Sure he would rap me into something now suddenly;' Beaum. and Fletcher, Island Princess, iii. 1. 23.  $\beta$ . Hence the pp. rapt = rapped. 'How our partner's rapt!' Macb. i. 3. 142. [But it is certain that this pp. was soon and easily confused with Lat. raptus, pp. of rapere, to seize, with which it had no orig. connection, and very soon the Latin word, being better known, caused the E. word to be entirely lost sight of, so that it is now obsolete. Cf. F. rapt, 'a a hurry; Swed. rappa, to snatch, seize, cf. rapp, brisk; Dan. rappe, BAPTURE, transport, ecstasy. (L.) In Shak. Troil. ii. 2, 132;

BAPACIOUS, ravenous, greedy of plunder. (L.) In Milton. P.L. xi. 258. A coined word, formed with suffix ous from Lat. r. L. XI. 255. A coined word, formed with sum; our four func-rapaci-, crude form of rapax, grasping. - Lat. rapere, to seize, grasp; see Rapid. Der. rapacious-iy, sess; also rapac-i-ty, from F. rapacite, 'rapacity,' Cot., which from Lat. acc. rapacitatem. RAPE (1), a seizing by force, violation. (Scand.) Levins has: 'a rape, raptura, rapina;' and 'to rape, rapere.' The word is certainly Scandinavian, and the same as M. E. rape, haste, hurry; bat has obviously been affected by confusion with a supposed derivation from Lat. raper, to seize, with which it has really nothing to do; cf. F. rapt, 'a violent snatching,' Cot. The sb. really derived from Lat. rapere is Rapine, q. v.  $\beta$ . The M. E. rape, haste, is common enough, occurring in the old proverb 'ofte rap reweth' - haste often repents, Proverbs of Hendyng, l. 256, in Spec. of Eng. ed. Morris and Skeat, p. 42. Chaucer accused Adam Scrivener of 'negligence and rape, i. e. haste. And see King Horn, ed. Lumby, 148; P. Plow-man, B. v. 333; Gower, C. A. i. 296, l. 27. – Icel. Arap, ruin, falling down (probably also haste, as the vb. Arapa often means to hasten), krapadr, a hurry; Swed. rapp, Dan. rap, brisk, quick. See Rap (2). Der. rape, verb. [†]

RAPE (2), a plant nearly allied to the turnip. (F., -L.; or L.) M.E. rape, Prompt. Parv. - O. F. rabe, later rave, 'a rape, or turner,' Cot. The M.E. rape is either derived from a still older F. form, viz. rape, or else has been accommodated to the spelling of the Lat. word. - Lat. rapa, a turnip, rape; also spelt rapum. + Russ. riepa, a turnip. + Gk. pawus, a turnip; cf. papawis, a radish. Root unknown. Der. rape-oil, rape-cake.

RAPE (3), a division of a county, used in Sussex. (Scand.) Still in use; of Scand. origin. - Icel. Areppr, a district; see remarks in the Icel. Dict. Prob. the orig. sense was 'share' or allotment; the deriv. being from Icel. kreppa, to catch, hence to obtain. This verb is cognate with A.S. Arepian, Areppan, to touch, take hold of, Gen.

iii. 3; Swed. repa., to scratch. [†] BAPID, swift. (F., -L.; or L.) In Milton, P. L. ii. 532, iv. 227.-F. rapide, 'violent;' Cot. [Or directly from Latin.]-Lat. rapidum, acc. of repidus, rapid, quick; lis, snatching away.-Lat. rapere, to snatch. Cf. Gk. dondfeir, to seize, from a base APII - PAIL. β. From a base RAP, perhaps allied to  $\sqrt{RUP}$ , to break, for which see Bupture. Der. rapid-ly, ness; rapid-i-ty, from F. rapid-is = Lat. acc. rapiditatem. And see harfy, rap-ine, rav-age, rav-en (2), rav-ine, rav-i.h, rapt-or-i-al, rapt-wre.

RAPIER, a light, narrow sword. (F.,-Span.,-O H.G.) In Shak. Temp. v. 84. In A. D. 1579, 'the long foining rapier' is de-scribed in Bullein's Dialogue between Sorenesse and Chirurge as 'a school in Bullein's Dialogue between Sorenesse and Chrurge as 'a new kynd of instrument;' see note in Ben Jonson's Every Man, ed. Wheatly, introd. pp. xliv. = F. rapiere (mod. F. rapiere), 'an old rusty rapier;' Cot.  $\beta$ . Of unknown origin, see Scheler and Littré; but Mr. Wheatley's note shews that, in 1530, la rapiere was 'the spanische sworde,' and Palsgrave has 'rapiere, Spanische sworde.' This makes it probable that Diez's solution (rejected by Littré) is right, and that rapiers is for raspiere, a name given in contempt, meaning a rasper or poker. Hence also 'a proking-spit of Spaine' means a Spanish rapier (Nares). Cf. Span. raspadera, a raker (Newman), from raspar, to rasp, scrape, file, scratch; see Rasp.

RAPINE, plunder, violence. (F.,-L.) In Shak. Titus, v. 2. 59. - F. rapine, 'rapine, ravine,' Cot. - Lat. rapine, plunder, robbery. - Lat. rapere, to seize ; see Rapid. Doublet, ravine.

RAPPAREE, an Irish robber. (Irish.) 'The Irish formed themselves into many bodies . . . called rapparess, &cc.; Burnet, Hist. of Own Time, b. v. an. 1690 (R.) 'Rapparess and banditti :' Bolingbroke, A Letter on Archbp. Tillotson's Sermon (R.) – Irish rapaire, a noisy fellow, sloven, robber, thief; cf. rapal, noise, rapach, noisy. So also Gael. rapair, a noisy fellow. See Rabble. BAPPEE, a kind of snuff. (F., - Teut.) Not in Todd's Johnson.

-F. râpé, lit. rasped; Littré quotes: 'J'ai du bon tabac. , j'ai da fin et du rapé; 'Lattaignant, Chanson. Pp. of réper, to rasp, of Teut. origin. See Rasp.

BAPT, carried away. (E. ; confused with L.) Orig. an E. word, the pp. of rap, to hurry ; see Bap (2). But when Milton writes: 'Rape in a chariot drawn by fiery steeds,' P. L. iii. 522, he was probably thinking of Lat. raptus, pp. of rapere, to seize, snatch away; see Rapid. If The question as to which word is meant depends on chronology; the Latin sense is the later. [†] RAPTORIAL, in the habit of seizing. (L.) Used of birds of prey. Formed with suffix -al (= Lat. -alis) from raptori-, crude

tii. 2. 138. The word seems to be a pure coinage; there is no F. 2 hastily roasted;' Minsheu, ed. 1627. This etymology is prob. the rapture, nor Low Lat. raptura. Formed with suffix -ure (as in conject-ure, &c.) from rapt-us, pp. of rapere, to seize ; see Rapid. Der. raptur-ous, raptur-ous-ly.

B.A.R.E., thin, scarce, excellent. (F., -L.) In Levins, ed. 1570. -F. rare, 'rare;' Cot. -Lat. rarum, acc. of rārus, rare. Root unknown. Der. rarely, rareness. Also rarify, from F. rarefier, 'to rarifie,' Cot., as if from Lat. rareficare*, but the classical Lat. word is rarefacere, from facere, to make. Also rarefaction, from F. rarefaction, 'a making thin,' Cot. -Lat. acc. rarefactionem*, from rarefactus, pp. of rarefacere. Also rarify, Temp. ii. 1. 58, from F. rarité, 'rareness, rarity,' Cot., from Lat. acc. raritatem.

RASCAL, a knave, villain. (F., -L.?) M. E. raskaille, used collectively, 'the common herd,' Morte Arthur, ed. Brock, a881. See Prompt. Parv., and Way's note. 'Certain animals, not accounted as beasts of chace, were so termed; ... the hart, until he was six years old, was accounted rascayle;' Way. He also cites: 'plebecula, lytell folke or raskalle ; plebs, folk or raskalle.' Cf. 'Rascall, refuse beest ;' Palsgrave.  $\beta$ . As the word was a term of the chase, and as it has the F. suffix -aille, it must needs be of F. origin; no other origin is conceivable, the word not being English. Nor can it, I think, be doubted that the E. raskaille stands for an O. F. rascaille\*, which is clearly the same word as mod. F. racaille, 'the rascality or base and rascall sort, the scumme, dregs, offals, outcasts, of any company,' Cot.  $\gamma$ . The lit, sense is 'scrapings;' for I take O. F. rascaille \* to stand for rasclaille \* (which would have been unpronounceable), from O.F. rascler, mod. F. racler, 'to scrape, raspe;' Cot. Or perhaps there was an O.F. rasquer, to scrape, whence may be derived O. F. raqué, small or corse wine, squeezed from the dregs of the grapes, 'Cot. 8. Or, in any case, we find Prov., Span., and Port. rascar, to scrape, O. Ital. rascare, 'to bur-nish, to rub, to furbish' (Florio); all formed from a Low Lat. type rasicare\*, a frequentative form from rasum, supine of radere, to scrape; see Rase. e. The above view is, practically, that taken by Scheler. Perhaps it will also explain Port. rascão, a mean page or servant, a dish of minced meat; i.e. scrapings. Moreover, from Ital. raspare, to scrape, rasp, we have O. Ital. raspato, 'a kind of raspise [raspish, harsh] wine' (Florio); which seems a similar formation to O.F. raqué, coarse wine. ¶ The A.S. rascal, is unauthorised, and prob. a fiction. Der. rascal-ly, rascal-i-ty. [+]

RASE, to scrape, efface, demolish, ruin. (F.,-L.) Often spelt raze, esp. in the sense to demolish; but it makes no real difference. See Rage. M. E. rasen, to scrape; Prompt. Parv. - F. raser, 'to shave, sheere, raze, or lay levell, to touch or grate on a thing in passing by it,' Cot. - Low Lat. rasare, to demolish, graze ; frequentative verb formed from rasum, supine of Lat. radere, to scrape. Allied to rodere, to gnaw. - A RAD, to scratch; cf. Skt. rad, to split, divide. Fick, i. 739. Der. ras-ure, from F. rasure, * a razing out, Cot.; ab-rade; e-rase, q.v., e-ras-ure; ras-or-i-al, q.v.; raz-or, q.v.; rail (2), q.v.; rascal, q.v., rask (2), q.v. And see rodent, ral. Doublet, raze.

RASH (1), hasty, headstrong. (Scand.) M. E. rask, rasch, Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, A. 1166 (or 1167). The final -sch stands for -sk, as usual. – Dan. and Swed. rask, brisk, quick, rash; Icel. roskr, vigorous. + Du. rasch, quick. + G. rasch, quick, vigorous, rash. Cf. Skt. ricch, to go, to attack.  $\beta$ . An adjectival form, from  $\checkmark$  AR, to raise, drive; cf. Skt. ri, to rise, raise, attack; Gk. op-vupu, I excite. The orig. sense is excitable, prompt to attack. Der. rash-ly, -ness; perhaps rash-er.

RASH (2), a slight eruption on the body.  $(F_{.,-}L_{.})$ In Johnson's Dict. = O. F. rasche, 'a scauld, or a running scurfe, or sore; a Languedoc word,' Cot.; also spelt rasque. F. rache, an emption on the head, scurf (Littré). Cf. Prov. rasca, the itch (Littré). So called from the wish to scratch it; cf. Prov. rascar, Span. rascar, to scratch, scrape, formed from a Low Lat. type rasicare *, to scratch, due to Lat. rasum, supine of radere, to scrape. See Rascal, Rase. BASH (3), to pull, or tear violently.  $(F_{..} - L_{.})$  'Rask, to snatch or seize, to tear or rend;' Halliwell. 'The second he took in his arms, and rashed him out of the saddle;' Arthur of Little Britain, ed. 1814, p. 83 (R.) 'And shields did share, and mailes did rauk, and helms did hew;' Spenser, F. Q. iv. 2. 17. 'Rashing off helmes, and riving plates asonder ;' id. v. 3. 8. M. E. aracen, afterwards shortened to races. 'The children from hire arm they gan arace,' i. e. tore away; Chaucer, C. T. 8979. 'Hur here of can she race' = she tore off her hair (Halliwell, s. v. race). [The change from the sound of final - (voiceless) to -sh is regular, as in flourish from the stem fleuriss-, &c.]=O.F. esracer, mod. F. arracher, 'to root up, to pull away by violence,' Cot. - Lat. exradicars = eradicars, to root up; see Eradicate, Radix. [†]

RASHER, a thin slice of broiled bacon. (Scand.?) In Shak. Merch. Ven. iii, 5, 28. 'Rasher on the coales, quasi rashly or his studying, Chaucer, C. T. 3463. Moreover, we find the compound right one; cf. rashed, burnt in cooking, by being too hastily dressed,' Halliwell; and see his examples. In my former edition of Acts and Monuments, so hastely rashed vp at that present, in such shortnesse of time;' Fox, Martyrs, p. 645, an. 1439 (R.) See Rash (1). The W. rhasg, a slice, does not suit the evidence.

RASORIAL, the name of a family of birds. (L.) It includes birds which, like hens, scrape the ground for food. Coined with suffix -al (= Lat. -alis) from rasori-, crude form of rasor, one who scrapes ; see Rasor.

RASP, to scrape, rub with a coarse file. (F., -O. H. G.) M. E. raspen, Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, B. 1545. - O. F. rasper, mod. F. rasper, to rasp. - O. H. G. raspon, whence mod. G. raspeln, to rasp. a frequentative form. Cf. O. H. G. hrespan, M. H. G. respen, to rake together. Der. rasper; and perhaps rapier. Also rasp-berry, q. v. RASP-BERRY, a kind of fruit. (F., = O. H. G.; and E.) The word berry is E.; see Berry. The old name was rassis-berry or raspise-berry; see Richardson. 'Raspo, a fruit or berie called raspise;' Florio. 'The raspis is called in Latin Rubus Idaus;' Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xxiv. c. 14; the chapter is headed: ' Of Cynose batos, and the raspice.' Ampes, raspises;' Cot. B. Raspice, raspise are corruptions of rastis (= raspes), which is nothing more than the old plural form, so that raspis = rasps, the word being at hrst used without berry, as shewn by the examples. Indeed, the prov. E. name is rasps, to this day; and raspes is used by Bacon. Essay 46. The word kex, q.v., is in a similar predicament. y. The Ital. raspo also means a rasp; and the name was given to the fruit from some supposed similarity to a rasp, prob. from the look of it, which is remarkably rough. See Rasp. The goose-berry is named for a like reason; see Gooseberry.

RAT, a rodent quadruped. (E.) M. E. rat, or ratte, P. Plowman, B. prol. 200. – A. S. rat, Ælfric's Gloss., Nomina Ferarum; in Wright's Voc. p. 22, col. 2. + O. Du. ratte, 'a ratt;' Hexham; Du. rat. + Dan. rotts. + Swed. rdita. + G. ratte, ratz. Cf. also Low Lat. ratus, rato, Ital. ratto, Span. rato, F. rat. Also Irish and Gael. radan,  $\beta$ . Perhaps from  $\checkmark$  RAD, to scratch; see Rodent. Bret. raz. Cf. Skt. rada, a tooth, elephant; vajra-rada, a hog. Der. rat, verb, to desert one's party, as rats are said to leave a falling house. Also rat's-bane, ratten.

BATAFIA, the name of a liquor. (F., - Malay.) 'Ratafiaz, a delicious liquor made of apricocks, cherries, or other fruit, with their kernels bruised and steeped in brandy;' Phillips, ed. 1710. – F. ratafia, the same; cf. F. tafia, rum-arrack. The right etymology is clearly that pointed out in Mahn's Webster. – Malay araq, 'arrack, a distilled spirit,' Marsden's Dict., p. 5: and táfia, 'a spirit distilled from molasses, (the French name foi rum); araq bram tafia, three kinds of spirit, enumerated in an old Malayan writing, id. p. 65. Again, at p. 39 of the same we find araq, bram, tafia, arrack, bram, and rum. Omitting bram, we have araq tafia, whence ratafia is an easy corruption, esp. when it is remembered that araq is also called ray, in Spanish raque, or in English rack; see Rack (5). β. The use of both words together is explicable from the consideration that araq is a very general term, and is not a true Malay word, being borrowed from Arabic; see Arrack. Thus ratafia means ' the rack (spirit) called tafia. See also Rum, sb. RATCH, a rack or bar with teeth. (E.) "Ratch, in clock-work, a wheel with twelve large fangs, &c.; Phillips, ed. 1710. It is the wheel which makes the clock strike. The word is merely a weak-ened form of rack, in the sense of a bar with teeth, as in what is called 'the rack and pinion movement;' hence it came to mean also a kind of toothed wheel. See Rack (1). Hence also the dimin. ratch-et, in watch-work, ' the small teeth at the bottom of the fusee or barrel that stop it in winding up.' Doublet, rack (1).

BATE (1), a proportion, allowance, standard, price, tax. (F., - L.) In Spenser, F. Q. iv. 8. 19.-O. F. rate, price, value (Roquefort); not in Cotgrave. - Lat. ratwm, neut., or rata, fem. of ratws, determined, fixed, settled, pp. of reor, I think, judge, deem. Both ratum and rata occur as sbs. in Low Latin.  $\beta$ . The root appears to be RA, to fix, identical with  $\checkmark$  AR, to fit; see Art (2). Der. rate, verb; to fix, identical with AR, to fit; see Art (2). Der. rate, verb; rat-able, rat-abl-y, ral-able-ness, rate-payer. And see ratio, ration, reason, rat-i-fy.

BATE (2), to scold, chide. (Scand.?) In Shak. Merch. Ven. i. 3. 108. Usually supposed to be a peculiar use of the word above, as though to rate meant to tax, and so to chide. Observe the use of tax in the sense of ' to take to task.' But, if this were so, we should expect to find rate, to value, in earlier use; whereas, on the contrary, the present word seems to be the older of the two, being found in the 14th century. Palsgrave distinguishes between 'I rate one, I set one to his porcyon or stynte,' and 'I rate or chyde one.' M.E. raten, to chide ; 'He shal be rated of his studying' = he shall be scolded for arated,' id. xiv. 163. - Swed. rata, to reject, refuse, slight, find fault with; whence ratgods, refuse of goods. So also Norw. rata, to reject, cast aside as rubbish; rat, rubbish, rata, adj. bad (Aasen.) Allied to Icel. hrat, hrati, rubbish, trash. Of obscure origin. BATH, early, BATHER, sooner. (E.) Rather, sooner, earlier, is the comp. form of ratk, soon, now obsolete. We also find rathest, soonest. M. E. rath, early, ready, quick, swift, rathe, adv., soon; comp. rather; superl. rathest, soonest. 'Why rise ye so rathe' = why rise ye so early, Chaucer, C. T. 3766. The word has lost an initial A, and stands for Araik. - A. S. hrade, adv., quickly, comp. Arador, superl. Arabost; from the adj. Arab, Areb, also written Arad, Ared, quick, swift, Grein, ii. 99, 100. + Icel. Aradr. swift, fleet. + M. H. G. rad. hrad, quick. All from the Teut. base HRATHA, quick; Fick, iii. 82. Root uncertain; see Curtius, i. 188.

RATIFY, to sanction, confirm. (F.,-L.) In Levins; and in Skelton, Colin Clout, 716. - F. ratifier, ' to ratifie;' Cot. - Low Lat. ratificare, to confirm. - Lat. rati-, for rato-, crude form of ratws, fixed ; and -ficare, for facere, to make. See Rate (1) and Fact. Der. ratific-at-ion.

BATIO, the relation of one thing to another. (L.) Mathematical; in Phillips, ed. 1706. - Lat. ratio, calculation, relation. - Lat. ratus, determined, pp. of reor, I think, deem. See Rate (1). Doublets, ration. reason RATION, rate or allowance of provisions. (F., -L.) In Phillips, ed. 1706. - F. ration, a ration; see Littre. - Lat. rationem, acc. of ratio, a calculation, reckoning; so that a ration is a computed share for soldiers, &c., according to the reckoning of their number. - Lat. ratus, determined; see Rate(1). Der. ration-al, reasonable, Minsheu, ed. 1627, from F. rational, 'reasonable,' Cot.; hence, ration-al-!y, ration-al-ise, -ism, -ist, -ist-ic; ration-al-i-ty. Also ratio-cin-at-ion, Minsheu, from F. ratiocination, 'a discoursing, discussion,' from Lat. ratiocinationem, acc. of ratiocinatio, which from the pp. of ratiocinari, to reckon, compute, a verb formed from the sb. ratiocinium, a computation = ratio-ci-ni-um, formed by various suffixes from the base of ratio. Doublets, ratio, reason.

RATLINES, RATLINS, RATTLINGS, the small transverse ropes traversing the shrouds of a ship and forming a ladder. (Hybrid: E. and F., - L.) 'Rare-lines or Rattlings, in a ship, those lines with which are made the steps ladderwise to get up the shrouds, &c.; Phillips, ed. 1710. The origin is uncertain, but as the word appears to be truly English, it probably means rat-lines, a seaman's jocular name, as if forming ladders for the rats to climb by. See Bat and Line. β. The Du. word is weeflijn, i. e. weaving line or web-line, prob. because they cross the shrouds as if interwoven with them. There is a Dan, word ralline, but it means a tiller-rope, lit. a wheel-line, from Dan. rat, a wheel, and can hardly be connected. Rare-lines, i. e. thin lines, is obviously a corruption.

RATTAN, a Malacca cane. (Malay.) In Sir T. Herbert, Travels, ed. 1065, p. 95. Spelt ratas in Todd's Johnson. – Malay rotas, 'the rattan-cane, Calamus rotang ;' Marsden's Dict., p. 152.

RATTEN, to take away a workman's tools for not paying his contribution to the trades' union, or for having offended the union. F. - Low Lat., - Teut.) Modern; in Halliwell, and in Chambers' Dict., where the etymology is said to be unknown. But it is simple enough. The word is frequently heard in connection with Sheffield, where ratten is the local word for a rat. 'Ratten, a rat;' Hunter's Hallamshire Glossary. Hence to ratten is to rat, in connection with which we find, in Webster, 'ratting, the act of deserting one's former party, and going over to the opposite; also, the act of working for less than the established prices, a term used among printers.' But the usual sense is ' to do secret mischief,' which is afterwards attributed to the rations or rats. 'I have been rationed; I had just put a ratten is the same as M. E. raton, ratoun, a rat, P. Plowman, B. prol. 158. - F. raton, ' a little rat;' Cot. - Low Lat. ratonem, acc. of rato, the same as ratus, a rat; a word of Teut. origin. See Rat.

RATTLE, to clatter, to make a din. (E.) Put for krattle, initial being lost. M. E. ratelen, Arthur and Merlin, 7858 (Stratmann). -A. S. Aratelan \*, only preserved in A. S. Aratele, hratele, or Aratelwyrt, rattle-wort, a plant which derives its name from the rattling of the seeds in the capsules; A.S. Leechdoms, ed. Cockayne, iii. 333. + Du. ratelen, to rattle; ratel, a rattle. + G. rasseln, to rattle; rassel, a rattle.  $\beta$ . The form of the word is frequentative; and the sense is 'to keep on making a noise represented by the syllable hrat,' this syllable being of imitative origin. Cf. rat-a-tat-tat as the imitation of a knock at a door. So also Gk. nooros, a loud knock, nooreiv, to knock, make to rattle, sporaliger, to rattle. All from a of KRAT, to knock; allied to 🖌 KRAG, KLAG, to make a noise, as in Gk.

verb araten, to reprove ; see P. Plowman, B. xi. 98 ; 'rebuked and and and to & KRAP, to make a noise, as in Lat. crepare. to rattle. See Fick, i. 538. Der. rattle, sb.; rattle-snake, a snake with a rattle at the end of its tail. Also rattle-traps, small knickknacks, from traps = goods; see Trap (2). Also rail (3).

BAUGHT, pt. t. and pp. of Beach, q. v. BAVAGE, plunder, devastation, ruin. (F., - L.) The sb. is the more orig. word. Both sb. and verb are in Minshen, ed. 1617. - F. ravage, 'ravage, havocke, spoil;' Cot. Formed, with the usual suffix -age ( = Lat. -aticum), from rav-ir, to bear away suddenly ; the sb. rav-age was esp. used of the devastation caused by storms and torrents; see Littré. - Lat. rapere, to seize, snatch, bear away; see Der. ravage, vb., from F. ravager, 'to ravage,' Cot.; Ravish.

ravag-er. BAVE, to be mad, talk like a madman. (F., - L.) M. E. raven, Chaucer, C. T. 16427. - O. F. raver, cited by Diez (s. v. réver), as a to rave to talk idly, is Lorraine word; the derivative ravasser, 'to rave, to talk idly,' is given in Cotgrave, who also explains resver (F. rever) by ' to rave, dote. speak idly. β. The word presents great difficulties ; see rever in Diez and Scheler; but the solution offered by Diez is satisfactory, viz. that O. F. raver answers to Span. rabiar, to rave, both verbs being formed from the Low Lat. and Span. rabia, rage, allied to Lat. rabies, rage. Thus raver - Low Lat. rabiare*, from rabia. - Lat. rabere, to rage. See Rage.

RAVEL, to untwist, unweave, entangle. (O. Du.) The orig. sense has reference to the untwisting of a string or woven texture, the ends of the threads of which become entangled together in a confused mass. To unravel is to disentangle, to separate the confused threads.

'The ravelled sleave [the entangled floss silk] of care;' Mach. ii. 2. 37. To ravel out is not exactly to disentangle (as in Schmidt), but to unweave. 'Must I ravel out My weaved up folly;' Rich. II, iv. 228; cf. Haml. iii. 4. 186; and see examples in Richardson. 'To rauell or untwist;' Minsheu, ed. 1627. Cf. 'I ryvell out, as sylke dothe, je riule ;' Palsgrave. - O. Du. ravelen, 'to ravell, or cadgell,' Hexham; he also explains verwerren by 'to embroile, to entangle, to bring into confusion or disorder, or to cadgill.' The same as mod. Du. rafelen, to fray out, to unweave ; Low G. reffein, to fray out, ravel, pronounced rebeln or rebeln in Hanover and Brunswick (Bremen Wörterbuch).  $\beta$ . Of unknown origin; possibly connected with G. raffen, to snatch; cf. G. raffel, an iron rake, grate of flax; see Raffle. ¶ The O. Du. ravelen, Du. revelen, to dote, from O.F. raver (see Rave), cannot be the same word. Der. un-ravel.

RAVELIN, a detached work in fortification, with two embankments raised before the counterscarp. (F.,-Ital.) 'In bulwarks, the Poems of Sir J. Beaumont, l. 4. — F. ravelina, 'a ravelin, 'Cot. Cf. Span. rebellin, Port. rebelim, Ital. rivellino, a ravelin.  $\beta$ . It is supposed that the Ital. word is the original, as seems indicated by the old spelling in that language. - O. Ital. ravellino, revellino, 'a rauelin. a wicket, or a posterne-gate; also the uttermost bounds of the wals of a castle, or sconces without the wals;' Florio. Y. But the origin of the Ital. word is unknown. The suggestion, from Lat. re-, back, and wallum, a rampart, is not quite satisfactory, as the old sense seems to be postern-gate; but it may be right.

BAVEN (1), a well-known bird. (E.) For Araven, an initial A being lost. M. E. raven, Chaucer, C. T. 2146. - A. S. Arafn, Arefn, a raven, Grein, ii. 100. + Du. raaf, raven. + Icel. krafn. + Dan. ram. + G. rabe, O. H. G. hraban. β. No doubt named from its cry. - A KRAP, to make a noise; whence also Lat. crepare, to rattle. The crow is similarly named.

RAVEN (2), to plunder with violence, to devour voraciously. (F., - L.) Quite unconnected with the word above, and differently pronounced. The verb is made from an obsolete sb., viz. M. E. ravine, plunder, which accounts for the spelling ravin in Shak. Meas. for Meas. i. 2. 133. 'Foules of ravine' = birds of prey, Chancer, Parl. of Foules, l. 323. So also rawyne, plunder, Ch. tr. of Boethius, b. i. pr. 4, l. 302; rawiner, a plunderer, id. b. i. pr. 3, l. 228. – O. F. rawine, rapidity, impetuosity (Burguy); mod. F. ravine; see Ravine. This O.F. ravine must orig. have had the sense of plunder, as in Latin. - Lat. rapina, plunder, pillage ; see Rapine. Der. raven-ing ; raven-ous, in Levins, from F. ravineux, 'ravenous, violent, impetuous, like a forcible stream,' Cot.; raven-ous-ly, -ness. Note that M.E. ravine, mod. E. ravine, and E. rapine are all one and the same. [†]

RAVINE, a hollow gorge among mountains. (F., -L.) Modern; added by Todd to Johnson. - F. ravine, a hollow worn away by floods; explained by Cotgrave to mean 'a great floud, a ravine or inundation of waters;' shewing that, even in E., a rovine was a flood. In still older French, it means impetuosity, violence. - Lat. rapina, plunder, hence violence; see Rapine. And see Raven (2).

RAVISH, to seize with violence, fill with ecstasy. (F., - L.) M. E. rauischen (with u for v), Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. i. pr. 3, l. "poleur (= "poly-yeur), Lat. clangor, and prov. E. rackle, to rattle; (190; ravissen, id. b. iv. pr. 5, l. 3774; b. i. met. 5, l. 504. - F. ravis.

stem of pres. part. of rovir, to ravish, snatch away hastily. Cf. Ital. & -A. S. rode, ready, Grein, ii. 366. [In this instance the suffix - was rapire. - Lat. rapere, to snatch; but with a change of conjugation; see Rapine, Rapid. Der. ravish-er, ravish-ing, Mach. ii. 1. 55; ravish-ment, All's Well, iv. 3. 281, from F. ravissement, 'a ravishing, a ravishment,' Cot.

BAW, uncooked, unprepared, sore. (E.) For kraw, an initial k being lost. M. E. raw, K. Alisaunder, 4932. – A. S. kreáw; spelt kráw, Cockayne's Leechdoms, i. 254, l. 4. + Du. ramw. + Icel. krár. + Dan. roa, raw, crude. + Swed. rd, raw, green. + O. H. G. rdo (declined as rawer, rowwer), M. H. G. row, G. rok. B. Allied to Lat. crudus, raw, and to Skt. krúra, sore, cruel, hard. - V KRU, of which the fundamental notion is 'to be hard;' Curtius, i. 191. See Crude. Der. raw-ly, raw-ness, raw-boned.

RAY (1), a beam of light or heat. (F., -L.) The M. E. ray is used of striped cloth; see note to P. Plowman, C. vii. 217. The pl. \* rayes or beames ' occurs in Sir T. Elyot, The Governour, b. ii. c. 12 (R.) - O. F. raye, 'a ray, line,' Cot.; mod. F. rai. Cf. Span. rayo, Ital. raggio. - Lat. radium, acc. of radius, a ray, radius. Root uncertain. Doublet, radius. RAY (2), a class of fishes, such as the skate. (F., -L.) M. E. raye. 'Hec ragadia, raye;' Wright's Vocab. i. 222, col. 2, l. 2. -O. F. raye, 'a ray, skate,' Cot. ; mod. F. raie. - Lat. rāia, a ray; Pliny, ix. 24. β. The Lat. rāia = ragya, cognate with G. rocke, and E. ix. 24.  $\beta$ . The Lat.  $r\bar{a}ia = ragya$ , cognate with G. rocks, and roack. The G. rocks means (1) a roach, (2) a ray. See Roach.

BAYAH, a person, not a Mahometan, who pays the capitation-tax; a word in use in Turkey. (Arab.) It may be explained as tax; a word in use in Turkey. (Arab.) It may be explained as 'subject,' though the real meaning is 'a flock,' or pastured cattle.— Arab. ra' iyat (also ra' iyak), a flock; from ra't, feeding, guarding, pasturing, ra'y, pasturing, feeding, tending flocks; Rich. Dict. pp. 716, 739. Doublet, ryat, from the form ra' iyat. [†] BAZE, to lay level with the ground, destroy. (F., -L.) In Shak.

Meas. ii. 2. 171. Also 'to graze, strike on the surface,' Rich. III, 3. 2. 11. Also 'to erase,' K. Lear, i. 4. 4. All various uses of the verb which is also spelt rase; see Rase. Der. razer, q. v., ras-ori-al, q. v. BAZOR, a knife for shaving. (F., -L.) M. E. rasour, Chaucer, C. T. 2419. - F. rasour, 'a rasour,' Cot. Lit. 'a shaver;' from F. raser, to shave; see Rase, Rase. Der. razor-strop.

RE-, RED-, prefix, again. (F., -L.; or L.) F. re-, red-; from Lat. re-, red-, again. The form re- is most common, and is prefixed even to E. words, as in re-bellow, re-word (Shak.), but this is unusual ; remarkable words of this class are rely (=relie), re-mind, re-new. The form red- occurs in red-eem, red-olent, red-dition. The true ety-¶ As this prefix can be mology of this prefix is still unsolved. arbitrarily set before almost any verb, it is unnecessary to give all the words which are found with it. For the etymology of re-address, readjust, re-arrange, re-bellow, &c., &c., see the simple forms address, adjust, arrange, &cc.

REACH (1), to attain, extend to, arrive at, gain. (E.) M. E. rechen, pt. t. raghte, raughte, pp. raught; P. Plowman, B. xi. 353; Chaucer, C. T. 136. We even find raught in Shak, L. L. L. iv. 2.41, &c. – A. S. rácan, rácean, to reach; pt. t. rákte; Grein, ii. 364. + O. Friesic reka, retsia, resza. + G. reichen. B. The A. S. rácan B. The A. S. rácan (=raikian) seems to mean ' to get into one's power,' and is connected with the sb. rice, power, answering to Goth. reiki, power, authority, and is from the same root as Rich, Regal, Right, &c. γ. It it still more closely connected with the rare sb. ge-rác, occasion, due time, occurring in Ps. ix. 9, ed. Spelman. This would give the orig. sense 'to seize the opportunity' or 'to attain to;' it comes to much the same thing. We may thus trace rdcan to the sb. rde (gerde), occasion, allied to rice, sb., power, and to the adj. rice, powerful; from Teut. base RAK = ~ RAG, to rule. See Regal. Der. reach, sb., Oth. iii. 3. 219; also a 'stretch' of a river. And see rack (1), rank (2), rake (3).

REACH (2), to try to vomit; see Retch.

READ, to interpret, esp. to interpret written words. (E.) M. E. reden, pt. t. redde, radde, pp. red, rad; P. Plowman, B. iii. 334; Chancer, C. T. 6371, 6373. - A. S. radan, to discern, advise, read; a weak verb, pt. t. rædde, pp. geræd, Grein, il. 366. – A. S. ræd, counsel, advice, id. 365. – A. S. rædan, to advise, persuade; a strong verb, with the remarkable reduplicated pt. t. reord. B. This strong verb answers to Goth. redan, in comp. garedan, to provide, a strong verb; also to Icel. ráda, to advise, pt. t. réd, pp. rádinn; also to G. rathen, pt. t. rieth, pp. gerathen. Observe also G. berathen, to assist. y. All from Teut. base RAD, to assist, be favourable to. -ADH, to be favourable to, assist; whence also Skt. radk, to make favourable, propitiate, to be favourable to, Russ. rade, ready, willing to help, Lithuan. ródas, willing, also as sb. counsel. See Fick, turned into -i by confusion with the A.S. suffix -ig (answering to M. E. -i, -y, E. -y); this may have been due to the influence of O. Swed. redig, plain, evident, clear, though this word is really from a different root, viz. from O. Swed. reda (= E. read), to explain. The O. Swed. adj. reda, ready, is the right cognate word, connected with reda, to prepare. So also Dan. rede, ready.]+O. H. G. reiti, ready; mod. G. bereit. β. The Icel. greiðr (= ga-reiðr), ready, only differs in the prefix and suffix; so also Goth. garaids, commanded. y. These adjectives are closely related to Icel. reio, harness, outfit, implements, gear, and to O. H. G. reita, Icel. reio, a raid. We may look upon ready as expressing either 'prepared for a raid' or 'prepared for riding, equipped.' All from a Teut, base RID (RAID), to ride; see Ride, Raid. ¶ The use of ready in the sense of 'dressed' is found as late as the beginning of the 17th century. 'Is she ready?' = is she dressed; Cymb. ii. 3. 86. Der. readi-ly, readi-ness, readymade.

REAL (1), actual, true, genuine.  $(F_{.,}-L_{.}; or L_{.})$  Spelt reall in Levins; and in Tyndall's Works, p. 104, col. 1, l. 5, where it is opposed to nominall. M. E. real; Prompt. Parv. The famous disputes between Realists and the Nominalists render it probable that the word was taken immediately from the familiar Low Lat. realis rather than the O. F. real, 'reall,' given by Cotgrave. The mod. F. form is real, also given by Cotgrave. B. The Low Lat. realis, 'belonging to the thing itself,' is formed from re-, stem of res, a thing, with suffix alis.  $\gamma$ . The etymology of res, property, substance, a thing, is by no means clear; it may be related to Skt. rá, to give. Der. real-iy; real-ise, from O.F. realiser, 'to realize,' Cot.; real-is-able; real-is-at-ion, from O.F. realisation, 'a realization, a making reall,' Cot.; real-ism, real-ist, real-ist-ic; real-i-ty, from F. réalité (Littré).

REAL (2), a small Spanish coin. (Span., -L.) In Swinburne's Travels through Spain (1779), letter 9, p. 56. – Span. real, lit. 'a royal' coin. – Lat. regalis, royal. See Bogal.

See Rich. Dict., pp. 759, 1040. This etymology is due to Dozy; and see Devic, supp. to Littré. REALM, a kingdom. (F., -L.) M. E. roialme, Gower, C. A. iii.

199, l. 3; ryalme, Sir Gawain and the Grene Knight, l. 691; reaume, Will. of Palerne, 1964; realme, Rom. of the Rose, 495. - O. F. realme, reaume, roialme (Burguy); mod. F. royaume, a kingdom; answering to a Low Lat. form regalimen*, not found. - O. F. real, roial, mod. F. royal, royal; see Royal.

REAM, a bundle of paper, usually twenty quires. (F., - Span., -Arab.) In Skelton, Works, i. 131, l. 174; spelt reme. Spelt reame, in Minsheu, ed. 1627, and in Levins. We even find M. Ital. risma.) - Arab. rizmat (pl. rizam), a bundle, esp. a bundle of clothes; Rich. Dict. p. 731. See Littré, Devic's supp. to Littré, and Scheler's note on Diez; all agree that this etymology has been completely established by Dozy. Devic remarks that we even find the F. expression ' coton en rame, cotton in a bundle, and that it is hopeless to connect this, as Diez proposes, with the Gk. ἀριθμόs, number. Cotton paper was manufactured in Spain, where it was introduced by the Moors.

BEAP, to cut, as grain, gather a crop. (E.) M.E. repen, some-times a strong verb; pt. t. rep, pl. ropen, P. Reader, Glossary, and introduction; i or y is put for e, when e is a mutation of ea (ed). Cf. A.S. rip, rjp, a reaping. harvest; id. Allied to Du. rapen, to gather, reap, glean; G. raujen, to pluck; Goth. raupjan, to pluck, Mark, ii. 23; Luke, vi. 1.  $\beta$ . Allied to words from a base RUP, which appears to be a variant of the Teut. base RUB, to break, and an unchanged form of  $\checkmark$  RUP, to break; see Rupture, Reave.

Der. reap-er, ripe. REAR (1), to raise. (E.) M. E. reren, Rob. of Glouc. p. 28, l. 5. - A. S. ráran, to rear, Deut. xxviii. 30. The form ráran stands for rásan, with the common substitution of r for s, and is cognate with Icel. reisa (mod. E. raise). It is the causal of rise; and means 'to make to rise.' Thus retran = retsan = raisian, causal of risan. See Rise. Doublet, raise.

To the abject rear; 'Toul. iii. 3. 162. But usually in phr. 'in the rear,' Hamlet, i. 3. 34. M.E. rere, but perhaps only in the spelt radi, Layamon, 8651 (later text readi); radia; Ormulum, 2527.

F. ariere (Burguy), F. arrière, 'behind, backward,' adv. - Lat. retro, backward; ad retro = O. F. ariere. - Lat. re-, prefix, back; and -tro, extension from Aryan suffix -TAR ; see Schleicher, Compend. § 225. And see Re-. Der. rear-admiral, rear-guard, rear-rank; also rear-ward, q.v.

Leechdoms, ed. Cockayne, ii. 272. A connection with raw has been suggested, but it is very doubtful.

REARMOUSE, the same as Reremouse, q.

REARWARD, the same as Refenduated, q.v. REARWARD, the rear-guard. (F., -L. and G.) Spelt rere-ward, 1 Sam. xxix. 2, Isaiah lii, 12, lviii. 8; this is merely the old spelling preserved. [Not to be read re-reward, as is sometimes done.] M.E. rerewarde, Gower, C.A. i. 220, l. 25; Morte Arthure, ed. Brock, 1430. Short for arere-warde, compounded of M.E. arere, behind, and warde, a guard; see Rear (2) and Ward. Warde is an O. F. form of garde; cf. arriere-garde, 'the reregard of an army,' Cot. Doublet, rear-guard. [+]

Errors, i. 1. 116, Much Ado, iv. 1. 198; &c. M. E. reven (with u=v), Chaucer, C. T. 4009; pt. t. rafte, id. 14104; pp. raft, reft, 11329. – A. S. reofan *, to deprive, a strong verb (pt. t. reaf, pp. rofen), only in the comp. bireofan, bereofan (Grein). + Icel. raufa, to rob, from sb. rauf, spoil; which from rjufa (pt. t. rauf, pp. rofinn), to break, rip up, violate. + G. raufen, to rob, from raudo, plunder. REBOUND, to bound back. (F., -L.) 'I rebounds, as a ball dothe, je bondys; 'Palsgrave. And in Surrey, The Lover describes his state, l. 19; in Tottell's Misc., ed. REBUKE, to reprove, chide. (F., -L.) M.E. rebuten, P. Plowman, B. xi. 419.-O.F. rebuguer (13th cent., Littré), later reboucher, 'to dull, to blunt,' Cot. It was used of armour that turned back a weapon; hence, metaphorically, of refusing or turning aside a request (see an example in Littré, who adds that, in Normandy, they say rebouquer for to reject). - F. re-, back; and bouque, Picard form of F. bouche, the mouth, whence bouquer - F. boucher, 'to stop, obstruct, shut up, also to hoodwinke,' Cot. - Lat. re, back; and bucca, the cheek, esp. the puffed cheek (hence, the mouth), which Fick (i. 151) connects with buceina, a trumper, and Skt. bubb, to sound. - A BUK, to puff, of imitative origin; from the sound of blowing. It will be seen that the sense of rebuke depends on that of boucher, to stop one's mouth, to obstruct; hence, to reject. But it is remarkable that the radical sense is 'to puff or blow back,' which is just the sense of to rebuff. Thus, to rebuke and to rebuff are.

which is just the same of to ready. Link, to rease and to reasy ac, radically, much the same. Der. rebuke, sb., Sir Degrevant, 863; rebuker. [+] REBUS, an enigmatical representation of words by pictures of things. (L.) It refers to representing names, &c., by things; thus a bolt and two expresses Bolton; and so on. - Lat. robus, by things; thus a bott and tom expresses Bolton; and so on. - Lat. robus, by things, by means of things; abl. pl. of res, a thing; see Beal. ¶ Cf. omnibus. REBUT, to oppose by argument or proof. (F., -M. H. G.; with L. prefix). Der. recant-er, recant-at-icn. (IF) This throws some light on the word cant, and renders the derivation of cant from Lat. cantare more easy and probable; recant seems to have been the older word, and it was one of the commonest of words in the time of Mary.

RECAST, to cast or mould anew. (Scand.; with L. prefix.) Also, to throw back again; 'they would cast and recast themselves from one to another horse;' Florio, tr. of Montaigne, p. 155 (R.) From Re- and Cast.

The Lat. condere (in which the prefix is con-, for com- = cum, with), is often referred to the VDHA, to put; but this root is represented in Latin by fac-ere. We must rather refer condere (pt. t. condidi) to dare (pt. t. dedi), to give ; just as edere (pt. t. edidi) and addere (pt. t. addidi) may be referred to the same root, viz. DA, to give. Some confusion of the senses of the roots DA and DHA seems to have taken place in Latin; see Curtius, i. 316. ¶ The root of Abscond requires amendment accordingly.

Der. recover-able; recover-y, All's Well, iv. 1. 38, a coined word.

RECREANT, cowardly, apostate. (F., - L.) M. E. recreant, Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 9. 1. 24; recreatint, P. Plowman, B. xviii. 100. – O.F. recreat, 'tired, toyled, faint-hearted,' Cot.;

RECRUIT. to enlist new soldiers. (F., -L.) 'To recrute and maintain their army when raised ;' Prynne, Treachery and Disloyalty, Famil. Letters, vol. i. pt. i. let. 38, § 7. – F. recruiter, not given in Cotgrave, but explained by Littre by 'to levy troops.' He tells us that it is an ill-formed word, first found in the 17th century. Formed from recrute, a mistaken or provincial form for recrue, fem. of recru, pp. of recroive, to grow again.  $\beta$ . The word recrue is used as a sb., and means 'a levy of troops.' REDEEM, to ransom, atone for. (F., -L.) Lit. to buy back. Latimer has redemed and redeming, sb., Seven Sermons, ed. Arber, p. 202. Wyclif has redempeion, Luke, i. 68 - F. redimer, 'to redeem, ransom,' Cot. [But the change of vowel is remarkable; perhaps partly due to accent, or to the influence of the sb. redemption.] - Lat. redimers, to buy back, redeem. - Lat. red-, back ; and emere, to buy, orig. to take, from ~ AM, to take. See Ro- and Example. Dor. redeem-er, redeem-able ; redempt-ion, from F. redemption - Lat. acc. redemptionem, nom. redemptio, from redempt-us, pp. of redimere ; redempt-ive, redempt-or-y. Doublet (of redemption), ransom.

REDINTEGRATION, renovation. (L.) Minsheu has redistegration and redintegrate, verb. - Lat. redintegratio, sb. - Lat. redintegratus, pp. of redintegrare, to restore, renovate. - Lat. red. again; and integrare, to renew, from integr-, stem of integer, whole. See Re- and Integer.

REDOLENT, fragrant. (F.,-L.) In the Tale of Beryn, ed. Furnivall, l. 2765. – F. redolent, 'redolent;' Cot. – Lat. redolent, stem of pres. part. of redolere, to emit odour. – Lat. red., again; and olere, to be odorous. See Be- and Olfactory. Der. redolence, redolenc-y

REIDOUBLE, to double again. (F., -L.) 'I redoubyll, I doubyll agayne, je redouble; 'Palsgrave. -F. redoubler; from re- and doubler. See Re- and Double.

REDOUBT, an intrenched place of retreat. (Ital., -L.) Used by Bacon, according to Todd's Johnson, but no reference is given. Phillips, ed. 1706, gives the spellings reduit (which is the F. form) and reduct (which is Latin). - Ital. ridotto, 'a withdrawing-place;' Florio. Formed as sb. from ridotto, ' reduced, brought or led vnto, brought back safe and sound againe;' Florio. This is the same word as ridutto, pp. of ridurre, to bring back, bring home. - Lat. re-ducere, to bring back; see Roduce. If The spelling redoubt is due to confusion with O. F. redoubler, to dread, as if a redoubt were a place into which men retire out of fear! See Redoubtable. [†]

REDOUBTABLE, terrible. (F., -L.) In Cotgrave ; the verb to redoubt, to fear, was formerly in use, as in Minsheu. M. E. redoutable, Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. iv. pr. 5, l. 3763. - O. F. redoubleble, 'redoubtable,' Cot. - O. F. redoubter, to fear; orig. form redouter. See Re- and Doubt.

BEDOUND, to abound, be replete with, result. (F., -L.) 'Re-dounding teares; 'Spenser, F. Q. i. 3. 8. 'I redounde, je redonde;' Palsgrave. - F. redonder, 'to redound;' Cot. - Lat. redundare, to overflow, abound. - Lat. red-, again, back, hence over; and undare, to surge, flow, abound, from unda, a wave. See Re- and Undulate. Der. redund-ant, from the stem of the pres. part. of redundare; redund-ant-ly, redund-ance, redund-anc-y. REDRESS, to set right again. (F., - L.) M. E. redressen, Chaucer, C. T. 8307. - F. redresser, 'to redresse, straighten,' Cot. -F. re- (= Lat. re-) again; and dresser; see Bo- and Dress. redress, sb., Skelton, Magnificence, 2438; redress-ible, redress-ive. Der.

REDUCE, to bring down, subdue, arrange. (L.) In Palsgrave. Used in the sense 'to bring back;' Rich. III, v. 5. 36. – Lat. reducere, to bring back, restore, reduce. – Lat. re, back; and ducere, to lead, bring. See Be- and Duot, Duke. Der. reduction, 'a reducer-able in Levins; also reduct-ion, from F. reduction, 'a reduction reducing,' Cot. = Lat. acc. reductionern, from nom. reductio, which from reduct-us, pp. of reducere. REDUNDANT; see under Redound.

REDUPLICATE, to multiply, repeat. (L.) In Levins. - Lat. reduplicatus, pp. of obsolete reduplicare, to redouble. See Re- and Duplicate.

reeky. In Shak. Cor. ii. 1. 225, Hamlet, iii. 4. 184; Much Ado, iii. 3. 143. Cf. 'Auld reekie' as a name for Edinburgh. See Reek.

REED. REED, a common name for certain grasses. (E.) M.E. reed, Wyclif, Matt. xii. 7. - A.S. Areód, Matt. xii. 7. + Du. riet. + G. riet, ried. Root unknown. Der. reed ed, reed-y.

RELEF(1), a ridge of rocks. (Du.) Formerly riff. 'A riff or ridge of rocks;' Dampier's Voyages, vol. i. an. 1681 (R.) Of late introduction. - Du. rif, a reef, riff, sand. Sewel (ed. 1754) explains it by 'a flat in sea, a riff.' Hexham has rif, riffe, 'a foard, or a shallow place.' + Icel. rif, a reef in the sea; cf. rifa, a rift, rent, fissure. + Dan. rev, a reef, bank; cf. revle, a shoal: revne, to crack, split. Note also Swed. refva, a strip, cleft, gap, refvel, a sand-bank. The G. rif, a reef, is prob. borrowed from Dutch.  $\beta$ . The orig. notion seems to be either 'strip' or 'rift ;' it seems to be connected with Icel. rise, to rive, and to be derived from the pl. of the past tense, of which the base is ris. See Rift, Rive. Der. rest.y.

REEF (a), a portion of a sail that can be drawn close together. (Du.) Fully explained in Phillips, ed. 1706. 'Up, aloft, lads; come, reg both topsails; 'Dryden, Enchanted Island, Act i. sc. 1 (R.) M. E. riff, Gower, C. A. iii. 341, l. 21. - Du. reef, 'a riff in a sail ; Sewel, ed. 1754. O. Du. rif, also rifi (Kilian). 'Een rif van een zeyl inbinden, to binde up a pecce of a saile when the wind blows too hard;' Hexham. Hence is formed Du. reven, to reeve. + Low G. reff, riff, a little sail, which is added to a large one when there is little wind ; cf. reffer, to reeve. + Swed. ref, a reef; refua, to reeve. + Dan. reb, a reef; rebe, to reeve. + Icel. rif, a reef in a sail.  $\beta$ . Of uncertain origin; it is usual to compare A.S. ry/, a veil, Levit. iv. 17; but Ettmüller accents this word as ryft, and connects it with E. reave. It seems simpler to connect it with rift, with the orig. notion of strip. The Icel. rif means (1) a rib, (2) a reef or rock, (3) a reef in a sail; cf. also rifrildi, a shred. Y. I suppose reef (1) and reef (2) to be the same word, in the sense of 'rift' or 'strip;' and that both are to be connected with rive. Surrey writes ryf for reef (of a sail); Praise of Meane Estate, last line, in Tottell's Misc., ed. Arber, p. 28, 1. 4; cf. O. Du. rift above. See Rive. Der. reef, verb; also reeve, verb, q. v.

REEK, vapour, smoke. (E.) M. E. reke, Cursor Mundi, 2744; where the Trinity MS. has reeck. - A. S. rec, vapour ; Grein, ii. 369.+ Du. rook.+Icel. roykr.+Swed. rok.+Dan. rog.+G. rauch; O.H. G. β. From the Teut. base RUK, to smoke, reek, appearing rouk. rows. B. From the leut. base KUK, to smoke, reek, appearing in the strong A. S. verb reócan, to reek (pt. t. redc, pl. rucon, Lye); as also in the Icel. verb rjúka (pt. t. rauk, pl. ruku), and in the G. riechen, O. H. G. riokhan. Y. This Teut. base answers to an Aryan base RUG, prob. allied to A RAG, to dye, to colour, whence Skt. raja, rajas, dimness, sky, dust, pollen, rajani, night, and the verb ranj, to dye, as well as Goth. rikuis, darkness, and Icel. rökr, twirany, to dye, as well as Goth. rikuis, darkness, and ice. rowr, twi-light. If so, the orig. sense of resk is 'that which dims,' mist. See Fick, iii. 256, i. 738. Der. resk, verb = A.S. récan, weak verb (Grein); resk-y; also resck-y, q.v. And see lac (1), lac (2). REFEL (1), a small spindle for winding yarn. (E.) M.E. rele. 'Hoc alabrum, a rele;' Wright's Voc., p. 269, col. 1. At. p. 180 of the same vol., alabrum is again glossed by reele. - A.S. hreol; 'alibrum (sic), hreal; 'Wright's Voc. p. 59, col. 1. Ducange explains the Low Lat. alabrum as a reel. Cf. Icel. hrall or rall, a weaver's rod or sley. It is doubtful whether the A.S. and Icel. forms should have an initial k. Root unknown. Der. reel, verb, M. E. relien, relen, orig. to wind on a reel (P. Plowman, C. x. SI, Prompt. Parv.), hence to turn round and round (Allit. Poems, C. 147), and so to stagger, Temp. v. 279. Im Not allied to roll. REFEL (2), a Highland dance. (Gaelic.) Commonly called 'a Scotch reel.' Todd gives the following: 'Geilles Duncane did goe before them, playing this reill or dance upon a small trump;' News from Scotland (1591), sig. B. iii. - Gael. righil, a reel, a Scottish dance.

RE-ELECT, RE-EMBARK, RE-ENACT, RE-EN-FORCE, RE-ENTER, RE-ESTABLISH, RE-EX-AMINE: see Elect, Embark, &c.

REEVE (1), to pass the end of a rope through a hole or ring. (Du.) A nautical word; not in Todd's Johnson. - Du. reven, to perly a weak one.

REEVE (2), an officer, steward, governor. (E.) See Chaucer's Reve's Tale. – A. S. geréfa, an officer, governor; Grein, i. 441. The orig. sense is simply 'excellent' or 'famous;' formed (by the usual change from  $\delta$  to  $\epsilon$  or long  $\delta$ ) from A. S. róf, active, excellent,

RE-ECHO, to echo back. (L. and Gk.) In Spenser's Fairie famous. Cf. O. Sax. rdf, famous. Root unknown. Der. borough-queene, Mutability, c. vi. st. 52. From Re- and Echo. REECHY, dirty. (E) Lit. 'smoky;' a weakened form of The second se refection; 'Sir T. Elyot, The Governour, b. iii. c. 21 (R.) - F. refection, 'a refection, repast;' Cot. - Lat. refectionem, a restoring, refreshment; it a remaking. - Lat. refectus, pp. of reficers, to remake, restore. - Lat. re, again, and facers, to make. See Re- and Fact. Der. refect-or-y, Dryden, Hind and Panther, iii. 530, spelt refectoris in Minshen, from Low Lat. refectorium, a hall for meals in a convent. REFEL, to refute. (L.) In Shak. Meas. v. 94; and Palsgrave. = Lat. refellere, to shew to be false, refute. - Lat. re, back again, in reply; and fallere, to deceive, &c. See Ro- and Fail, Falso.

REFER, to reduce, assign, direct to an umpire. (F., - L.) 'Re-ferre you' - betake yourself; Henrysoun, Test. of Creseide, st. 43. -O. F. referer (14th cent., Littré), F. référer, to refer. - Lat. referre, to bear back, relate, refer. = Lat. re-, back ; and ferre, cognate with E. bear. See Re- and Bear(1). Der. refer-able, also spelt referr-ible (see exx. in Richardson); refer-se, in which the suffix answers to F. pp. suffix -6, as in other cases ; reference, Oth. i. 3. 238; reference, J. a. a referee, Bacon, Essay 49, from F. referendaire, which see in Cotgrave. REFINE, to purify, make elegant. (F., - L.) In Spenser, Hymn 2, l. 47. Coined from re- and fine, but imitated from F. raffiner, 'to refine,' Cot. The F. raffiner is from re- and affiner, 'to refine, to fine as metalls,' Cot.; where af- = Lat. af-, put for ad, to, before following; also finer is due to F. fin, fine. The E. word ignores the second element. See Re- and Fine(1). Der. refiner. refin-er-y; also refine-ment, imitated from F. raffinement, 'a refining. Čot.

REFLECT, to throw or bend back, to ponder, think. (L.) In Shak. Rich. III, i. 4. 31. 'I reflecte, as the sonne beames do;' Palsgrave. [The sb. reflexion is in Chaucer, C. T. 10544.] - Lat. reflectere, to bend backwards. - Lat. re-, back ; and flectere, to bend. See Re- and Floxible. Der. reflecting; reflector; reflective, also reflexive, from F. reflexif, 'reflexive, reflexing,' Cot.; reflective.ly, -ness; reflex, adj., from Lat. reflexus, pp. of reflectere; reflex.ible, reflex-ibil-i-ty.

REFLUENT, flowing back. (L.) Rare; a late word, not in Phillips. - Lat. refluent-, stem of pres. part. of refluere, to flow back. - Lat. re-, back ; and fluere, to flow ; see Re- and Fluent. Der. reflux, sb., in Phillips, ed. 1706, from F. reflux, ' the ebbe of the sea,' Cot. ; see Flux.

REFORM, to shape anew, amend. (F., -L.) M. E. reformen, Gower, C. A. i. 273, last line. - F. reformer, 'to reforme,' Cot. - Lat. re-, again; and formare, to form, from forma, form ; see Be- and Form. Der. reformer ; reforment-ion, Skelton, Garland of Laurel, 411, from F. reformation, reformation, Cot. = Lat. acc. reformationem, from reformatus, pp. of reformare; reform-at-ive, reformat-or-v

REFRACT, to bend aside rays of light. (L.) 'Visual beams refracted through another's eye;' Selden, Introd. to Drayton's Poly-olbion (R.) - Lat. refractus, pp. of refringere, to break back, hence, to turn aside. - Lat. re, back; and frangere, to break, cognate with E. break; see Ro- and Broak. Dor. refract-ion, Chapman, E. break; see Ro- and Break. Der. refract-ion, Chapman, Monsieur D'Olive, Act ii. sc. 1 (Vandome's 6th speech), from F. refraction, 'a rebound,' Cot. ; refract-ive, refract-ive-ness. Also refract-or-y, Troil. ii. 2. 182, a mistaken form for refractary, from F. refractarie, 'refractary,' Cot. = Lat. refractaries, stubborn, obstinate. Hence refract-or-i-ly, refract-or-i-ness. Also refrang-ible, a mistaken form for refring-ible, from Lat. refringere; refrang-ibil-i-ity, Phillips, ed. 1706; cf. mod. F. réfrangible, réfrangibilité; but it is quite possible that the F. words were borrowed from English works on optics. And see refrain (2).

REFRAIN (1), to restrain, forbear. (F., -L.) M.E. refreinen, refreynen ; Wyclif, James, i. 26. - F. refrener, 'to bridle, repress : Cot. [Cf. E. ordain = F. ordener.] - Lat. refrenare, to bridle, hold in with a bit. - Lat. re, back ; and frenum, a bit, curb, pl. frena, curb  $\beta$ . The Lat. fre-num is from  $\checkmark$  DHAR, to and reins, a bridle. support, maintain, whence also Skt. dkri, to support, maintain, and Lat. firmus, firm. The sense is 'holder' or 'keeper,' from its restraint upon the horse. See Ro- and Firm. ¶ As Littré well remarks, Cotgrave also has O. F. refreindre, 'to bridle, restraine, hold in;' this is from Lat. refringere, to break back, and it seems probable that refrener and refreindre were sometimes confused; see Refract and Refrain (2).

REFRAIN (2), the burden of a song. (F., -L.) M. E. refraine, Chaucer, Troil. ii. 1571. The sb. refraining, i. e. singing of the burden of a song, occurs in the Rom. of the Rose, 749. - F. refrain; 'refrain d'une balade, the refret, or burden of a ballade,' Cot. Cf. Prov. refranks, a refrain, refranker, to repeat (Bartsch); Port. refrão, Span. refran, a proverb, short saying in common use. So called from frequent repetition ; the O. F. refreindre, to hold in, pull back (Cot-Kk from Lat. refringere, to break back, hence, to pull back (and so to β. So also the O.F. refret, used in the come back to, to repeat). same sense (whence E. refret as in Cotgrave above), is from the Lat. refractus, pp. of refringere; see Refract. y. It is probable that F. refrain was borrowed from Provençal rather than from Lat.  $\gamma$ . It is probable that directly.

REFRESH, to enliven, revive. (F., - L. and G.) M. E. refreshen, refrescher; Chaucer, C. T. 5620; Gower, C. A. iii. 25, 1, 16. – O. F. refrescher; Chaucer, C. T. 5620; Gower, C. A. iii. 25, 1, 16. – O. F. refreschir, 'to refresh, coole; 'Cot. – F. re- (= Lat. re-), again; and O. F. frez (fem. fresche), 'new, fresh, recent,'Cot.  $\beta$ . The O. F. frez, mod. F. frais, is from O.H.G. frise (G. frisch), cognate with E. ¶ The element fresh is, in fact, also native English; fresh. a. v. but the compound refresh was nevertheless borrowed from French, as shewn further by the early use of the derived sb. refreshment. Der. refreshment, in the Testament of Love, pt. ii (according to Richardson), shortened from O.F. refreschissement, 'a refreshment,' Cot.

REFRIGERATE, to cool. (L.) 'Their fury was asswaged and refrigerate ;' Hall, Chronicle, Henny VII, an. 4; where it is again. - Lat. refrigeratus, pp. of refrigerare, to make cool again. - Lat. ref. again; and frigerare, to cool, from friger = friger, stem of frigus, sb., cold. See Ro- and Frigid. Der. refrigerat-or, refrigerat-ion, refrigerat-ive, refrigerat-or-y; also refriger-ant, from the stem of the pres. part. of refrigerare.

REFU, pt. t. and pp. of Reave, q. v. REFUGE, a shelter, retreat. (F., -L.) M. E. refuge, Chaucer, C. T. 1722. - F. refuge, 'a refuge,' Cot. - Lat. refugium, an escape, a refuge. - Lat. refugere, to flee back, retreat. - Lat. re-, back ; and fugere, to flee. See Ro- and Fugitive. Der. refug-ee, Dryden, tr. of Juvenal, Sat. iii. 129, from F. refugié, pp. of se refugier, to take shelter.

REFULGENT, shining, brilliant. (L.) In Minsheu, ed. 1627. -Lat. refulgent, stem of pres. part. of refulgere, to shine back, glitter. - Lat. re-, back; and fulgere, to shine. See Ro- and Fulgent. Der. refulgent-ly, refulgence.

REFUND, to repay. (L.) 'Refund, to melt again, reflow, cast out again, pay back;' Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. [The sense answers to that of O.F. refonder, 'to restore, pay back,' Cot. It was, not improbably, borrowed from French, and accommodated to the Lat. spelling.] - Lat. refundere, to pour back, restore. - Lat. re-, back; and fundere, to pour. See Re- and Fuse (1). Perhaps allied to refuse, q. v.

REFUSE, to reject, deny a request. (F.,-L.) M.E. refusen, Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 103, l. 21. - F. refuser, 'to refuse,' Cot. Cf. Port. refusar, Span. rekusar (for refusar), Ital. rifusare,  $\beta$ . Of disputed origin. Diez supposes it to have arisen as another form of refute (Lat. refutare), by confusion with Lat. recusare, to refuse, which passed into French in the form reuser, afterwards y. But Scheler well suggests shortened to ruser; see Ruse. that F. refuser may answer to a Low Lat. form refusere\*, a frequentative form of refundere (pp. refusus). The Lat. refundere meant to pour back, repay, restore, give back; and the sense of ' refusing' may have arisen from giving back a present. 8. Or again, since F. refus meant not only 'a refusal' but also 'refuse, outcasts, leavings' (Cotgrave), it may be that refuse, as a sb., meant what was rejected in fusing metals, and was used for being re-fused or fused again. It is remarkable that Florio gives no verb rifusare, but only the sb. rifuso, 'a refusall,' with the adverb a rifuso, 'careleslie, refusingly, heedlesslie.' . For the origin of refute, see that word. For the etymology of refundere, see Refund. Either way, the root is V GHU, to pour. Der. réfuse, sb. (Levins), M. E. refuce, Prompt. Parv., from F. refus, as above. Also refus-al (Levins), in which the suffix was added by analogy with protos-al, &c. BEFUTE, to oppose, disprove.  $(F_{..}-L_{.})$  In Minsheu, ed. 1627.-F. refuter, 'to refute, confute,' Cot.-Lat. refutare, to repel. repress, rebut, refute. The orig. sense was probably 'to pour back.' See Re- and Confute; also Futile. Der. refut-able; refut-at-ion. from F. refutation, 'a refutation,' Cot.; refut-at-or-y, from Lat. adj. refutatorius.

REGAIN, to gain back. (F., - L., and O. H.G.) In Hall's Chron. Hen. VI, an. 15 (R.) - O. F. regaigner, 'to regaine;' Cot. - F. re-(=Lat. re., again); and O. F. gaigner (F. gagner), to gain, a word of German origin, as shewn under Gain (2). ¶ It is clear that regain is merely the O.F. regaigner; and hence regain is not a compound of re- with gain in the orig, sense of 'profit.' The latter is a Scand. word, as explained under Gain (1).

REGAL, royal, kingly. (F., -L.) Regall occurs as a sb. in The Plowman's Tale, st. 19; but as an adj. not (perhaps) much earlier than in Levins, ed. 1570. - O. F. regal, 'regall, royal,' Cot. - Lat. regalis, royal, kingly.-Lat. reg., stem of res, a king, with suffix direct. See Regal.

739; whence Skt. ráj, to govern, rij, to stretch, Gk. opérece, to stretch, Goth, uf-rakjan, to stretch out, &c. Cf. Skt. rájan, a king. Der. regal-ly, regal-i-ty; also regal-ia, q.v. From the same root are numerous words, such as cor-rect, di-rect, e-rect, rect-itude, rectify, rect-or; rajah; reach, right, rack (1); rig-id, reg-ent, regi-cide, regi-men, regi-ment, reg-ion, reg-ular, reign, rule; also dress, drake, bishopric (as relates to the suffix), &c. Doublet, royal.

REGALE, to entertain, refresh. (F., -L.?) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. - F. régaler, to entertain; see Littré. Cotgrave only gives se regaler, 'to make as much account of himself as if he were a king;' evidently in order to connect the word with F. regal, regal, royal: but the word was in use in F. in the 14th century as a  $\beta$ . The connection with regal is transitive verb; see Littré. almost certainly wrong; but the word offers great difficulties. Minsheu's Span. Dict. gives regalar, 'to cocker, to make much of, to melt.' Diez takes the sense 'to melt' to be the orig. one ; whence to warm, cherish, entertain. He makes the Span. regalar = Lat. regelare, to thaw, to melt, supposing that it was a very old word, adopted at a time when g had the same sound before both a and e.  $\gamma$ . The Lat. regelare is from re., again, back, and gelare, to freeze; the orig. sense being 'to unfreeze,' i. e. to thaw. See Be- and Gelatine, 8. But Scheler inclines to connect regale with O. F. galer, to rejoice; cf. Span. gala, parade; see Gala. This seems the simpler solution. See further in Diez and Littré. Der. regale-ment.

REGARD, to observe, respect, consider. (F., -L. and O. H. G.) In Palsgrave, spelt regarde. The sb. regard seems to be in earlier use in E., occurring in Chaucer, in the phr. at regard of, Pers. Tale, (Six-text, Group I, 788); but the verb is the orig. word in French.-F. regarder, 'to look, eye, see, view;' Cot.-F. re-, again; and garder, 'to keep, heed, mark;' Cot. See Be- and Guard. Der. regard, sb., as above; regard-er; regard-ful; regard-ful-ly, Timon, iv. 3. 81; regard-less, regard-less-ly, -ness. Doublet, reward, vb. REGATTA, a rowing or sailing match. (Ital.) Properly a rowing match; a Venetian word, as explained in the quotation from Drummond's Travels, p. 84, in Todd's Johnson; a book which Todd dates A.D. 1744, but Lowndes in 1754. - Ital. regatia, 'a strife or contention for the maistrie;' Florio. Cf. O. Ital. rigatiare, 'to wrangle, sell by retail as hucksters do, to contend, to cope or fight;' Florio. This is allied to Span. regateer, to haggle, retail provisions, also to rival in sailing (Neuman); Span. regaio, a hageling, a regatta. β. Referred in Mahn's Webster to Ital. riga, a line; but I do not see any connection. Rather, O. Ital. rigatture is pet for Ital. recatare, to retail. So also Span. regatear is for recatear, to haggle, to proceed slowly; prob. allied to recatar, to take care, be cautious, compounded of re-, again, and catar, to taste, try, view = Lat. captare. See Re- and Cater.

REGENERATE, to renew, produce anew. (L.) In Levins. -Lat. regeneratus, pp. of regenerare, to generate again. - Lat. re-, again; and generare ; see Re- and Generate. Der. regenerat-ion, M. E. regeneracioun, Wyclif, Matt. xix. 28, from O. F. regeneration (14th cent., Littré) = Lat. acc. regenerationem; regenerat-ive. REGENT, invested with authority for an interim period. (F.,- L.) In Skelton, Against the Scottes, l. 114. - F. regent, 'a regent, protector, vice-gerent;' Cot. - Lat. regent-, stem of pres. part. of regere, to rule. See Begal. Der. regent-ship; also regenc-y, formed with suffix -y from F. regence, ' the regency,' Cot.

REGICIDE, the slayer of a king; or, the slaying of a king. (F.,-L.) 1. The former is the older sense. 'Regicide, a king-(F.,-L.) 1. The former is the older sense. 'Regicide, a king-killer;' Minsheu.-F. regicide, omitted by Cotgrave, but cited by Minsheu. Coined from Lat. regi-, crude form of rex, a king; and -cida, a slayer, as in fratri-cida, matri-cida. See Fratricide, Matricide, Parricide. 2. The latter answers to a word coined from Lat. regi- and -cidium, a slaying. Der. regicid-al. REGIMEN, a prescribed rule, rule of diet. (L.) In Ph In Phillips. d. 1706.-Lat. regimen, guidance; formed with suffix -men from regere, to rule; see Regal. REGIMENT, a body of soldiers commanded by a colonel. (F.,-L.) Shak. has it in this sense, All's Well, ii, 1. 42; and also in the sense of 'government,' or sway; Antony, iii. 6. 95. In the latter sense, the word is old, and occurs in Gower, C. A. i. 218, 1. 9.-F. regiment, 'a regiment of souldiers,' Cot. In older F., it meant 'government;' see Littré. - Lat. regimentum, rule, government; formed with suffixes -men-to- (Aryan -mon-ta) from regere, to rule; see Regimen, Regal. Der. regiment-al.

REGION, a district, country. (F.,-L.) M.E. regious, King Alisaunder, 1. 82. - F. region, 'a region,' Cot. - Lat. regionem, acc. of regio, a direction, line, boundary, territory. - Lat. regere, to rule,

REGISTER, a written record of past events. (F., -L.) M. E. A. S. Aria, in Alfred's tr. of Orosius, i. 1. § 15. [The A. S. Arán registre, P. Plowman, B. xx. 269. - F. registre, 'a record, register;' would give a form ron, just as sián gives E. stone.] Cf. O. Swed. ren, Cot. Cf. Ital. and Span. registro, Port. registro, registo, the last a reindeer. We find also Dan. rensdyr, Du. rendier, G. rennthier, in registre, P. Plowman, B. xx. 269.-F. registre, 'a record, register;' Cot. Cf. Ital. and Span. registro, Port. registro, registo, the last being the best form. - Low Lat. registrum, more correctly regestum, a book in which things are recorded (regeruntur); see Ducange. -Lat. regestum, neut. of regestus, pp. of regerere, to record, lit. to bring back. — Lat. re, back; and gerere, to bring; see Ro- and Jest. Der. register, verb, L. L. L. i. 1. 2, and in Palsgrave; registr-ar. M. E. registrere, P. Plowman, B. xix. 254; registr-ar-ship; registr-ar-y (Low Lat. registrar-ius); registr-y; registr-at-ion. REGNANT, reigning. (L.) Mere Latin. - Lat. regnant., stem of pres. pt. of regnare, to reign. - Lat. regnum, a kingdom; see Reign.

Beign. Der. regnancy. REGREISS, return. (L.) In Shak. Merry Wives, ii. 1. 226; and in Minsheu, ed. 1627 .- Lat. regressus, a return. - Lat. regressus, pp. of regredi, to go back .- Lat. re., back; and gradi, to go. See Reand Grade. Der. regress, verb; regress-ion (Lat. regressio); regress-ive.

REGRET, sorrow, grief. (F., - L. and O. Low G.) As a verb, the word is late; it is used by Cotton (R.), and occurs in Pope, Epitaph on Fenton, l. 8. In old authors, it is only used as a sb., as in Spenser, F. Q. i. 7. 20. 'Hie regrate And still mourning;' Henrysoun, Test. of Creseide, st. 57. - F. regret, 'desire, wille, also griefe, sorrow; Cot. He also gives: à regret, 'loathly, unwillingly, with an ill stomach, hardly, mauger his head, full sore against his will;' Cot. Cf. regretter, 'to desire, affect, wish for, bewaile, bemoane, lament;' id. The F. regretter corresponds to an O. F. regrater, of which Scheler cites two examples. β. The etymology is much disputed; but, as the word occurs in no other Romance language, it is prob. of Teut. origin, the prefix re- being, of course, Latin. Perhaps from the verb which appears in Goth. grétan, to weep, Icel. gráta, to weep, bewail, mourn. Swed. gréta, Dan. græde, A.S. grétan, M.E. greten, Lowland Sc. greit. See Greet (2). Wedgwood well cites from Palsgrave: 'I mone as a chylde doth for the wantyng of his nourse or mother, je regrete.' Y. This is approved by of his nourse or mother, je regrete. γ. This is approved by Diez and Scheler; Littré suggests a Lat. form regradus, the return (of a disease), to suit the Walloon expression li r'gret d'an mau = the return of a disease. Mahn suggests Lat. re- and gratus, pleasing. Others suggest Lat. requiritari, but quiritari became F. crier; see Cry. See the whole discussion in Scheler. Der. regret, verb, as above; regrei-fui, regrei-fui-ly. [†] REGULAR, according to rule. (L.) 'And as these canouns regulars,' i.e. regular canons; Rom. of the Rose, 6696. Rather directly from Lat. regularis than from O. F. regulier. - Lat. regula, a rule. - Lat. reg-ere, to rule, govern ; see Regal. Der. regular-ly; regular-i-iy, from O. F. regularité (14th cent., Littré) ; regul-ate, from

Lat. regulatus, pp. of regulare; regul-at-ion, regulat-ive, regulat-or. REHEARSE, to repeat what has been said. (F., - L.) M. E. rehercen, rehersen ; P. Plowman, C. xviii. 25 ; A. i. 22. - O. F. reherser, 'to harrow over again,' Cot.; better spelt reherser. From the sense of harrowing again we easily pass to the sense of 'going again over the same ground,' and hence to that of repetition. Cf. the phrase 'to rake up an old story.' - F. re. (= Lat. re.), again; and hercer, 'to harrow,' Cot., from herce, a harrow. The sb. herce, whence E. hearse, changed its meaning far more than the present word did; see Reand Hearse. Der. rehears-al, spelt rehersall in Palsgrave.

REIGN, rule, dominion. (F., - L.) M. E. regne, Chaucer, C. T. 1638; spelt rengne, King Horn, ed. Lumby, 901, 908. - F. regne, a realme, Cot. - Lat. regnum, a kingdom. - Lat. reg-sre, to rule; see Rogal. Dor. reign, verb, M. E. regnen, Havelok, 2586, from F. regner = Lat. regnare. And see regn-ant. REIMBURSE, to refund, repay for a loss. (F., - L. and Gk.)

In Cotgrave; and in Phillips, ed. 1706. An adaptation of F. rembourser, made more full in order to be more explicit; the F. prefix rem- answering to Lat. re-im-, where im- stands for in before b following. 'Rembourser, to re-imburse, to restore money spent;' Cot. For the rest of the word, see Purse. Der. reimburse-ment, from F. rem-bwrsement, 'a re-imbursement;' Cot. REIN, the strap of a bridle. (F.,-L.) M. E. reine, reyne, King Alisaunder, 786. - O. F. reine, 'the reigne of a bridle ;' Cot. Mod. F. réne. The O.F. also has resne, resgne, corresponding to Ital. redina, and to Span. rienda (a transposed form, put for redina); and these further correspond to a Low Lat. type refina*, not found, but easily evolved from Lat. retinere, to hold back, restrain, whence was formed the classical Lat. retinaculum, a tether, halter, rein. See Rotain. Dor. rein, verb, rein-less.

REINDEER, RAINDEER, a kind of deer. (Scand., - Lapp; and E_) Spelt raymedere, Morte Arthure, ed. Brock, 932. Perhaps the obscure word ron, in An Old Eng. Miscellany, ed. Morris, p. 92, all of which, as in E. and Scand., the main part of the word is borrowed from Lapp, with a change of meaning. B. Diez refers us to the Lapp and Finnish word raingo, but this is a mere misspelling of Swed. renko, lit. 'rein-cow,' the female of the reindeer. The true Lapp word for reindeer is falso, but it happens to be continually associated with reino, pasturage or herding of cattle, or with derivatives of reino; so that reino was wrongly applied by the Swedes to the animal itself. For proof of this, see Ihre, Lexicon Lapponicum, p. 374; where we find reino, pasturage; reinohet, to pasture; reinohatte, frequentative of reinohet; reinohem piädnak, a dog kept for the purpose of collecting reindeer together. Hence such sentences as the following. Lapp reinon läh mija påtsoh, Swed. våra renar äro i herdarnes skötsel, our herdsmen are taking care of the reindeer, or, our reindeer are in charge of the herdsmen. Lapp pdtsoit warin reinohet, to pasture reindeer on the fells. Lapp reinohatte swainasebt patsoitat, Swed. Idt din dreng valla din renar, let thy servant pasture thy reindeer. This is the solution of a difficulty of long standing

REINS, the lower part of the back. (F., -L.) M. E. reines; spelt reynes in Wyclif, Wisdom, i. 6, later version; reenus, earlier ver-sion. -O. F. reins, 'the reines;' Cot. - Lat. renes, s. pl., the kidneys, about the heart, or about the liver. See Frenzy. Der. ren-pl. REINSTATE, REINVEST, REINVIGORATE, RE-

ISSUE, REITERATE; see Instate, Invest, &c. REJECT, to throw away or aside. (F., - L.) 'I rejecte, I caste awaye, je rejecte; 'Palsgrave, ed. 1530. - O. F. rejecter; mod. F. rejeter. The F. word was spelt rejecter in the 16th century, and our word seems to have been borrowed from it rather than from Latin directly; the still older spelling in O. F. was regeter. - O. F. re- (- Lat. re-), back; and O. F. geter, getter, mod. F. jeter, to throw, from Lat. iactare. See Ro- and Jot (1). Cf. Lat. rejectus, pp. of reicere, to reject, compounded of re- and iacere, to throw. Der. reject-ion, from F. rejection, 'a rejection; ' Cot.

REJOICE, to feel glad, exult. (F., -L.) M. E. reioisen, reioicen (with i=j), to rejoice; Chaucer, C. T. 9867; P. Plowman, C. xviii. 198.-O. F. resjoir, stem of pres. part. of resjoir, mod. F. réjouir, to gladden, rejoice. - O. F. re- (= Lat. re-), again; and esjoir (mod. F. ejouir), to rejoice, used reflexively.  $\beta$ . Again, the O. F. esjoir is from Lat. ex-, and the vb. joir (mod. F. jouir), derived, like Ital. godere, from Lat. gaudere, to rejoice. See Ro-, Ex-, and Joy. Der. rejoic-ing, rejoic-ing-ly.

BEJOIN, to join again. (F., -L.) Esp. used in the legal sense 'to answer to a reply.' 'I rejoyne, as men do that answere to the lawe and make answere to the byll that is put up agaynst them;' Palsgrave. - F. rejoindre, 'to rejoine;' Cot. See Re- and Join. Der. rejoinder, Sir T. Elyot, The Governour, b. i. c. 14, which appears to be the F. infin. mood used substantively, like attainder, remainder.

RELAPSE, to slide back into a former state. (L.) As sb. in Minsheu, ed. 1627, and in Shak. Per. iii. 2. 110. Cotgrave translates the O. F. relaps by 'relapsed.' [There is no classical Lat. sb. relap-sus.] = Lat. relapsus, pp. of relabi, to slide back. See Re- and Lapse. Der. relapse, sb. RELATE, to describe, tell. (F., -L.) In Spenser, F. Q. iii. 8. 51; and in Palsgrave. = F. relater, 'to relate;' Cot. = Low Lat. relatare in relative relative and a surface to relate relative relative relative and in Palsgrave. = F. relater, 'to relate;' Cot. = Low Lat. relatare to relate. - Lat. relatum, used as supine of referre, to relate; which is, however, from a different root. - Lat. re., back; and latum, supine, latus, pp., put for ilatus, from A TAL, to lift. See Re-; and see Elate. Der. related; relation, P. Plowman, C. iv. 363, from F. relation, 'a relation,' Cot.; relat-ive, M. E. relatif, P. Plowman, C. iv, 301, from F. relatif; relat-ive-ly.

RELAX, to slacken, loosen. (L.) In Milton, P. L. vi. 599. [Bacon has relax as an adj., Nat. Hist. § 381.] - Lat. relaxare, to re-lax. - Lat. re-, back; and laware, to loosen, from laws, loose; see Re- and Lax. Der. relax-at-ion, in Minsheu, from F. relaxation, a relaxation,' Cot. Doublet, release. RELAY (1), a set of fresh dogs or horses, a fresh supply. (F.,-L.?) Orig. used of dogs. 'What relays set you? None at all, we laid not in one fresh dog;' Ben Jonson, Sad Shepherd, Acti.sc. 2. M. E. relays, in the same sense, Chaucer, Book of the Duchess, 362. - F. relais, a relay; par relais, 'by turnes,' i.e. by relays, Cot. He also gives : 'chiens de relais, 'dogs layd for a backset,' i. e. kept in reserve; gives: charms as relative do ga may do a backact, i.e. kept in features  $relatives relatives a relative do a contract of the more haste making. He explains relatives as 'a seat or standing for such as hold chieres de relatives,' i.e. a station. <math>\beta$ . The word presents much difficulty. Mr. Wedgwood quotes from a late edition of Flow of the formula the difficulty. of Florio : 'Cani di rilasso, fresh hounds laid for a supply set upon a 1. 71, means a reindeer, as suggested by Stratmann. Formed by deer already hunted by other dogs.' Unless this be an accommoda-adding deer (an E. word) to Icel. hreinn, a reindeer, answering to tion of the F. word, it links it to Ital. rilassiare (from Lat. relassare), Kk 2

leier, common in the same sense as F. laisser; see Burguy. This form answers rather to Du. laten (E. let), and it would seem difficult to derive it from lazare; but Diez suggests that the future tense laisserai (of laisser) may have been contracted into lairai, which might have influenced the form of the infinitive. He cites gerrai for  $\gamma$ . We are thus left in some gesirai as the future of O. F. gesir. uncertainty as to whether the latter syllable of the word is due to Lat. lazare or to Du. laten, Goth. letan, words of similar meaning ; see Let(1). The sense is clearly 'a rest,' and a relay of dogs is a set of fresh dogs kept at rest and in readiness. Cf. à relais, 'spared, at rest, that is not used,' Cot.; relayer, 'to succeed in the place of the weary, to refiesh, relieve,' id. RELAY (2), to lay again. (Hybrid; L. and E.) Simply compounded of Re- and Lay; and distinct from the word above.

RELEASE, to set free, relieve, let go. (F., - L.) M. E. relessen, P. Plowman, B. iii. 58; relesen, Chaucer, C. T. 8029 - O. F. relessier, F. relaisser, 'to release,' Cot. - Lat. relaxare, to relax ; see Relax. Doublet, relax.

Der. release, sb. Doublet, relax. RELEGATE, to consign to exile. (L.) 'To relegate, or exile;' Minsheu, ed. 1627. - Lat. relegatus, pp. of relegare, to send away, dispatch, remove. - Lat. re-, back, away; and legare, to send. See Ro- and Legate. Der. relegation, from F. relegation, 'a relegation,' Cot.

RELENT, to grow tender, feel compassion. (F.,-L.) In The Lamentacion of Mary Magdalene, st. 70. Altered from F. ralentir, 'to slacken... to relent in ;' Cot. Cf. Lat. relentescere, to slacken. -F. re- and a (shortened to ra-), from Lat. re- and ad-; and lentus, slack, slow, also tenacious, pliant, akin to lenis, gentle, and E. lithe ; see Lonity, Lithe. The Lat. relentescere is simply from re- and lentus, omitting ad. Der. relent-less, -ly, -ness. RELEVANT, relating to the matter in hand. (F.,-L.)

• To make our probations and arguments relevant; ' King Chas. I, Letter to A. Henderson (R.) It means 'assisting' or helpful. - F. relevant, pres. part. of relever, 'to raise up, also to assist;' Cot. - Lat. relevare, to lift up again. - Lat. re-, again; and leware, to lift; see Re- and Levant, Lever; also Relieve. Der. relevance, relevanc-y; irrelevant.

RELIC, a memorial, remnant, esp. a memorial of a saint. (F., -L.) Chiefly in the plural; M. E. relykes, s. pl., Rob. of Glouc. p. 177, last line; Chaucer, C. T. 703. - F. reliques, s. pl., 'reliques;' Cot. - Lat. reliquias, acc. of reliquiæ, pl., remains, relics. - Lat. relinquere (pt. t. reliqui, pp. relictus), to leave behind. - Lat. rs-, back, behind; and linquere, to leave, allied to licere, to be allowable. See Be- and Ideonse. And see Relinquish, Relict. Der. reliquear-y, q. v.

RELICT, a widow. (L.) A late word ; accented relict in a quotation from Garth, in Johnson's Dict. - Lat. relicta, fem. of relictus, left behind, pp. of relinguere; see Rolic, Rolinguish. RELIEVE, to ease, help, free from oppression. (F., -L.) M. E. releven (with u = v), P. Plowman, B. vii, 32; Chaucer, C. T. 4180. F. relever, 'to raise up, relieve,' Cot. - Lat. relevare, to lift up. - Lat. re-, again; an i levare, to lift; see Ro- and Lover. Der. relief, M. E. relefe, Gower, C. A. iii. 23, 1. 4, from O. F. relef, mod. F. relief, a sb. due to the verb relever; hence bas-relief; also rilievo, from Ital. rilievo, the relief or projection of a sculptured figure. And see relev-ant.

RELIGION, piety, the performance of duties to God and man. (F., - L.) In early use. Spelt religium, O. Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, ii. 49, 1. 13; Ancren Riwle, p. 8. - F. religion. - Lat. religionem, acc. of religio, piety. Allied to religens, fearing the gods, pious. [And therefore not derived from religare, to bind; as often suggested, contrary to grammatical order.]  $\beta$ . 'It is clear that  $d\lambda e \gamma \omega$  is the contrary to grammatical order.]  $\beta$ . 'It is clear that  $d\lambda \dot{\epsilon} \gamma \omega$  is the opposite of Lat. nec-lego [neglego, negligo], and  $\theta \epsilon \hat{\omega} \nu \sigma n \omega \delta \lambda \dot{\epsilon} \gamma \sigma r \epsilon \epsilon$  (Homer, Il. xvi. 388) is the exact counterpart of Lat. religens and religio;' Curtius, i. 454. Thus religion and neglect are from the same root LAG; but it is a little uncertain in what sense. They seem to be connected with E. reck rather than with legend. See Reck, Negleot. Der. religion-ist; religious, from F. reli, religious, Cot., which from Lat. religiosus; religious-ly. [+] Der. religion-ist ; religious, from F. religioux, RELINQUISH, to leave, abandon. (F., - L.) In Levins, ed. 1570. - O. F. relinquis-, stem of pres. part. of relinquir (Burguy). -Lat. relinquere, to leave; by a change of conjugation, of which there are several other examples. See Bolio. Dor. relinquist-ment. [†] RELIQUARY, a casket for holding relics. (F., -L.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. - F. reliquaire, 'a casket wherein reliques be kept ;' Cot. - Low Lat. reliquiare, neut. sb., or reliquiarium, a reliquary; Ducange. - Lat. reliquia-, crude form of reliquia, relics. See Rolic. RELIQUE, the same as Relic, q. v.

RELISH, to have a pleasing taste, to taste with pleasure. (F., -L. and G.) In Shak. Temp. v. 23; Wint. Tale, v. 2. 132. As sb.

and E. Bolax, c.v. The difficulty lies in explaining the O. F. laier, Pagain; ' Cot. - Lat. re., again; and O. F. lecher, mod. F. lecher, to lick, from O. H.G. lecchón, lechón (G. lechen), cognate with E. Lick. See Re- and Lecher. Der. relish. sb.

RELUCTANT, striving against, unwilling. (L.) In Milton, P. L. iv. 311. - Lat. reluctant-, stem of pres. part. of reluctare, relactari, to struggle against. - Lat. re-, back, against; and luctori, to struggle, wrestle, from lucta, a wrestling. B. Luc-1a stands for lug-ta; cf. Gk. Aug-ifew, to bend, twist, writhe in wrestling, overmaster. - VRUG, to break; as in Skt. ruj, to break, bend, hart. Ber. reluctant-ly, reluctance, Milton, P. L. ü. 3,7; reluctanc-y. RELY, to rest or repose on, trust fully. (Hybrid; L. and E.) A

A similar compounded of Lat. re- and E. lie, verb, to rest. [A similar compound is re-mind.] Shakespeare is an early authority for it, and he always uses it with the prep. on (five times) or spon (once). He also has reliance, followed by on, Timon, ii. 1. 22. So also to rely on, Drayton, Miseries of Q. Margaret (R.); Dryden, Epistle to J. Dryden, 139; relying in, Fletcher, Eliza, An Elegy (R.); reliers on, Beaum. and Fletcher, Woman's Prize, i. 3 (Petruchio's 24th speech). Thus to rely on is to lie back on, to lean on. See Re- and Lie (1).  $\P$  Not from O. F. relayer, 'to succeed to in Re- and Lie (I). the place of the weary, to refresh, relieve, or ease another by an under-taking of his task ' Cot: as suggested by Wedgwood. This saits taking of his task.' Cot.; as suggested by Wedgwood. neither in sound nor sense, and certainly could not be followed by on. Der. reli-able, a compound adj. which has completely established itself, and is by no means a new word, to which many frivolous and ignorant objections have been made; it was used by Coleridge in 1800, in the Morning Post of Feb. 18; see F. Hall, On Eng. Adjectives in -able, with special reference to Reliable, p. 29. Hence reliabil-i-ty, used by Coleridge in 1817; reli-able-ness, also used by the same writer. Also reli-ance, in Shak, as above, a doubly barbarous word, since both prefix and suffix are F., formed by analogy with appliance, compliance, &c. Also reli-er, as above. [+]

REMAIN, to stay or be left behind. (F.,-L.) Spelt remayne in Palsgrave. Due to the O. F. impers. verb il remaint, as in the proverb ' beaucoup remaint de ce que foi pense, much is behind of that a fool accounts of, a foole comes ever short of his intentions,' Cot. The infin. remaindre is preserved in our sb. remainder ; cf. E. rejoinder from F. rejoindre, E. attainder from F. attaindre. - Lat. remanet, it remains; remanere, to remain. - Lat. re., behind; and manere, to remain; see Bo- and Manor. Der. remains, s. pl., Titus Andron.,

'Wherevpon he was remaunded ;' Berners, tr. of Froissart, v. ii. c. 206 (R.) - F. remander, 'to send for back again ;' Cot. - Lat. remandare, to send back word. = Lat. re-, back ; and mandare, to enjoin, send word ; see Ro- and Mandate.

REMARK, to take notice of. (F., - L. and Teut.) Shak. has remark'd, Hen. VIII, 5. i. 33; and remarkable, Antony, iv. 15. 67. -F. remarquer, 'to mark, note, heed ;' Cot. - Lat. re-, again ; and marguer, to mark, from margue. sb., a mark, which is from G. mark, cognate with E. mark; see Ro- and Mark. Der. remark-able. from F. remarquable, 'remarkable,' Cot. ; remark-abl-y ; remark-able-

REMEDY, that which restores, repairs, or heals. (F., - L.) M.E. remedie, Chaucer, C. T. 1276; Ancren Riwle, p. 124, L 22. -O. F. remedie*, not recorded, only found as remede, mod. F. remede, a remedy. Cf. O. F. remedier, verb, to remedy. - Lat. remedium, a remedy; lit. that which heals again. - Lat. re., again; and mederi, to heal; see Ro- and Modical. Dor. remedy, verb (Levins, Palsgrave), from F. remedier ; remedi-able (Levins) ; remedi-al, a coined word ; remedi-al-ly.

REMEMBER, to recall to mind. (F., - L.) M. E. remembren, Chaucer, C. T. 1503 .- O. F. remembrer, used reflexively, 'to remember;' Cot. Formed, with excrescent b after m, due to stress, from Lat. rememorari, to remember. - Lat. re-, again; and memorare, to make mention of, from memor, mindful. See Ro- and Momory. Der. remembr-ance, Chaucer, C. T. 8799, from F. remembrance; remembranc-er, Macb. iii. 4. 37. REMIND, to bring to the mind again. (Hybrid; L. and E.) A barbarous compound (like rely) from Lat. re., again, and E. mind. Rather a late word ; in Bailey's Dict. vol. ii. ed. 1731. See Ro- and Mind.

REMINISCENCE, recollection. (F., -L.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. - F. reminiscence, 'remembrance of things;' Cot. - Lat. reminiscentia, remembrance. - Lat. reminiscenti-, crude form of pres. part. of reminisci, to remember, an inceptive verb, with suffix sci. – Lat. re-, again ; and min-, base of mo-min i, I remember, think over again, from  $\checkmark$  MAN, to think. Also remiss-ion, M.E. remission, Ancren Riwle, p. 346, l. 21, from F. remission (Cot.) - Lat. acc. remissionem, from nom. remissio.

D. 1482 (Ducange); hence, to produce arguments. - Lat. re, again; and monstrare, to shew, exhibit; see Bo- and Monster. Der. remonstrant, from the stem of the pres. part.; remonstrance, from F. remonstrance, 'a remonstrance,' Cot. = Low Lat. remonstrancia.

REMORSE, pain or anguish for guilt. (F., - L.) M.E. remors. 'But for she had a maner remors;' Lydgate, Storie of Thebes, pt. iii (Of the wife of Amphiorax). - O. F. remore ; Cot. - Low Lat. remorsus (also remorsio), remorse ; Ducange. - Lat. remorsus, pp. of remordere, to bite again, vex. - Lat. re-, again ; and morders, to bite; see Ro- and Mordacious. ¶ Chaucer has the verb rernord (= O. F. remordre), tr. of Boethius, b. 4, pr. 6, Der. remorse-ful, Rich. III, i. 2. 156; remorse-ful-ly; l. 4030.

REMOTE, distant. (F., -L.) In Spenser, F. Q. iii. 4. 6.-O. F. remot, m., remote, f., 'remote, removed;' Cot. Or directly, from Lat. remote s, pp. of removere, to remove; see Romove. Der. remote-ly, -mess ; also remot-ion = removal, Timon, iv. 3. 346.

REMOUNT, to mount again. (F., - L.) Also transitively, to cause to rise again, as in M. E. remounten, Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. iii. pr. 1, l. 1706. - F. remonter, 'to remount,' Cot. - F. re-, again; and monter, to mount; see Re- and Mount (2).

REMOVE, to move away, withdraw. (F.,-L.) M. E. remeuen (remeven), Chaucer, Troil. i. 691, where remeve rimes with preve, a proof. Just as we find M. E. remeven for mod. E. remove, so we find M. E. preven for mod. E. prove, preve for proof. Palsgrave uses remeve and remove convertibly: 'I remeve, as an armye ... removeth from one place to an other.' - O. F. remouvoir, 'to remove, retire; Cot. - F. re., again; and mouvoir, to move; see Re- and Move. ¶ The M.E. remuen, to remove, Chaucer, C. T. 10495, though it has nearly the same sense, is quite a different word, answering to O. F. remuër, 'to move, stir,' Cot., from Lat. rs- and mutare, to change. Richardson confuses the matter. Der. remov-able (Levins), remov-abil-i-ty; remov-al, a coined word; remov-er, Shak. Sonn. 116, remov-ed-ness, Wint. Tale, iv. 2. 41. Also remove, q. v. REMUNERATE, to recompense. (L.) In Shak. Titus, i. 398.

- Lat. remuneratus, pp. of remunerare, remunerari, to reward. - Lat. re-, again; and munerare, munerari, to discharge an office, also to give, from muner-, stem of munus, a gift. See Ro- and Munificent. Dor. remuner-able, remunerat ion, L. L. L. iii. 133, from F. remuneration, 'a remuneration,' Cot. = Lat. remunerationem, acc. of remuneratio; remunerat-ive.

RENAL, pertaining to the reins. (F., -L.) Medical. - F. renal, belonging to the kidneyes;' Cot. - Lat. renalis, adj., formed from ren-es, the reins ; see Reins.

RENARD, a fox; see Reynard.

RENASCENT; from Re- and Nascent. RENCOUNTER, RENCONTRE, a meeting, collision, chance combat. (F., - L.) Now commonly rencontre; formerly rencounter, used as a verb by Spenser, F. Q. i. 4. 30, ii. 1. 36. - F. rencounter, 'a meeting, or incounter. by chance;' Cot. Cf. ren-contrer, verb, 'to incounter. meet;' id. Contracted forms for reëncontre, reëncontrer. - F. re (= Lat. re), again ; and encontrer, to meet ; see Bo- and Encounter. ¶ Hence the spelling reencounter in Berners, tr. of Froissart, v. ii. c. 29 (R.)

REND, to tear, split. (E.) M.E. renden, pt. t. rente, pp. rent; Chaucer, C. T. 6217. – A.S. hrendan, rendan, not common. In the O. Northumb. versions of Luke, xiii. 7, succidite [cut it down] is glossed by Arendas vel scearfaö in the Lindisfarne MS., and by ceorfas vel rendas in the Rushworth MS. Again, in Mark, xi. 8, the Lat. eadebant [they cut down] is glossed by gebugun vel rendon. Thus the orig. sense seems to be to cut or tear down. + O. Fries. renda, randa, to tear, break.  $\beta$ . The A.S. Arendan answers to a theoretical form hrandian \*, which may be connected with hrand, the pt. t. of (see kertu in Nesselmann); and cf. Lat. crēna (= cret-na), whence 8. If this be right, we have a remarkable connection E. cranny. between the words rent and cranny, both implying 'cut' or 'slit;' see Cranny. Der. rent, sb., Jul. Cæsar, iii. 2. 179; apparently quite a late word, obviously formed from the pp. rent.

RENDER, to restore, give up. (F., - L.) M. E. rendren, P. Plowman, B. xv. 601. - F. rendre, 'to render, yield;' Cot. - Low Lat. rendere, nasalised form of Lat. reddere, to restore, give back. -Lat. red-, back; and dare, to give. See Ro-, Rod-, and Date (1). Der. render-ing. Also rent (2), q.v. Also redd-it-ion, q.v. Also rendez-vous, q. v. RENDEZVOUS, an appointed place of meeting. (F., -L.) In Hamlet, iv. 4. 4. – F. rendezvous, 'a rendevous, a place appointed for the assemblie of souldiers;' Cot. A substantival use of the phrase rendervous, i. e. render yourselves, or assemble yourselves, viz. at the place appointed.  $\beta$ . Render is the imperative plural and person, of render, to render; and vous (= Lat. uos) is the pl. of the and pers. pronoun. See Bender. RENEGADE, RENEGADO, an apostate, vagabond. (Span.,

-L.) Massinger's play called The Renegado was first acted in 1624. In Shak. Tw. Nt. iii. 2. 74, the first folio has 'a verie Renegatho; 'a spelling which represents the sound of the Spanish d. The word was at first renegado, and afterwards renegade by loss of the final syllable. - Span. renegado, 'an apostata,' Minsheu; lit. one who has denied the faith ; pp. of renegar, ' to forsake the faith,' id. - Low Lat. renegare, to deny again. - Lat. re-, again ; and negare, to deny ; see Bo-and Negative. ¶ 1. The word was not really new to the lan-guage, as it appears in M.E. as renegat ; but the M.E. renegat having been corrupted into runagate, the way was cleared for introducing the word over again; see Runagate. 2. The odd word renege (with g hard), in King Lear, ii. 2. 84, = Low Lat. renegare; so also M. E. reneye, P. Plowman, B. xi. 120. Doublet, runagate.

REINEW, to make new again. (Hybrid; L. and E.) M. E. renewen, Wyclif, 2 Cor. iv. 16; where the Lat. renovatur is translated by is renewid. From Re- and New. Der. renew-al, a coined word ; renew-able, also coined. Doublet, renovate.

RENNET (1), the prepared inner membrane of a calf's stomach. used to make milk coagulate. (E.) "Renet, for chese, coagulum; Levins. The word is found with various suffixes, but is in each case formed from M.E. rennen, A.S. rinnan, rennan, to run, because rennet causes milk to run, i. e. to coagulate or congeal. This singular use of E. run in the sense ' to congeal' does not seem to be noticed in the Dictionaries. Pegge, in his Kenticisms (E. D. S. Gloss. C. 3) uses it; he says : 'Runnet, the herb gallium [Galium verum], called in Derbyshire erning, Anglicè cheese-runnet; it runs the milk together, i. e. makes it curdle. 'Earn, Yearn, to coagulate milk; earning, yearning, cheese-rennet, or that which curdles milk;' Brockett. Here earn (better ern) is put, by shifting of r, for ren; just as A. S. yrnan (irnan) is another form of rinnan, to run. Cf. Gloucestersh. running, rennet (E. D. S. Gloss. B. 4). 'Renlys, or rendlys, for mylke, [also] renels, Coagulum; ' Prompt. Parv. 'As nourishing milk, when runnel is put in, Runs all in heaps of tough thick curd, though in his nature thin;' Chapman, tr. of Homer, Il. v, near the end. So also A.S. 'rynning, coagulum; gerunnen, coagulatus;' Wright's Vocab. i. 27. last line, i. 28, first line. All from A. S. rinnan, to run; also found as reman, A. S. Chron. an 656, in the late MS E.; see Thorpe's edition, p. 52, l. 7 from bottom. See Run. + O. Du. rinsel, runsel, or renninge, 'curds, or milk-runnet,' Hexbam; from rinnen, 'to presse, curdle;' id. Cf. geronnen melck, 'curded or rennet milke;' id. Cf. G. rinnen, to run, curdle, coagulate.

RENNET (2). a sweet kind of apple. (F., -L.) Formerly spelt renat or renate, from a mistaken notion that it was derived from Lat. renatus, renewed or born again. 'The renat, which though first it from the pippin came. Grown through his pureness nice, assume that curious name; 'Drayton, Polyolbion, song 18. – F. reinette, rainette, a pippin, rennet; Hamilton. Scheler and Littré agree to connect it with O. F. rainette, 'a little frog' (Cot.), the dimin. of raine, a frog, because the apple is speckled like the skin of a frog. In this case, it is derived from Lat. rana, a frog. See Ranunculus.

RENOUNCE, to give up, reject, disown. (F., -L.) M. E renouncen, Gower, C. A. i. 258, l. 3. - F. renoncer, 'to renounce; Cot. - Lat. renunciare, better renuntiare, to bring back a report, also, to disclaim, renounce. - Lat. re., back; and nuntiare, to bring a message, from nuntius, a messenger; see Re- and Nuncio. Der.

BENOVATE, to renew. (L.) A late word; in Thomson's Seasons, Winter, 704. But the sb. renovation is in Bacon, Life of Henry VII, ed. Lumby, p. 203, l. 33.—Lat. renovatios, pp. of the Icel, strong verb Arinda, to push, kick, throw, which Fick (iii. 83) refers to  $\sqrt{KART}$ , 40 cut.  $\gamma$ . The meaning suits exactly, and we may therefore prob. connect E. rend with Skt. krit, to cut, cut be renoware, to renew. - Lat re-, again; and nonus, new, cognate with

E. new: see Re- and New. Der. renovation, from F. renovation, & REPENT, to feel sorrow for what one has done, to rue. (F.,-*a renovation,' Cot.; renovat-or. Doublet, renew. BENOWN, celebrity, fame. (F., -L.) Put fo

Put for renowm; by the influence of the former a, which assimilated the final letter to itself. M. E. renoun, Chaucer, C. T. 14553; Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 131, l. 5; King Alisaunder, 1448. [But also renome, renomme, in three syllables, with final e as F. 6; Gower, C. A. ii. 43, l. 26; Barbour's Bruce, iv. 774; renownee, Barbour's Bruce, viii. 290.] In Bruce, ix. 503, one MS. has the pp. renownit, spelt renommy in the other. - F. renown [also renommie], 'renowne, fame;' Cot. Cf. renownee, 'renowneed, famous;' Cot. And observe that renon occurs in O.F. of the 12th and 13th centuries (Littré), so that the change to final a is rather F. than E. Cf. Port. renome, renown; Span. renombre, renown, also a surname; and Span. renombrar, to renown. -F. re- (=Lat. re-), again; and nom, a name; hence renoum = a renaming, repetition or celebration of a name. See Re- and Noun. Der. renown, verb, in Barbour, as above.

RENT (1), a tear, fissure, breach. (E.) See Rend.

RENT (2), annual payment for land, &c. (F.,-L.) In very early use; occurring, spelt rente, in the A.S. Chron. an. 1137; see Thorpe's edition, p. 383, 1 12. - F. rente, 'rent, revenue;' Cot. Cf. Ital. rendita, rent; which shews the full form of the word. From a nasalised form (rendita) of Lat. reddita, i.e. reddita pecunia, money paid; fem. of redditus, pp. of reddere, to give back, whence F. rendre, and E. render. Rent = that which is rendered; see Rondor. Dor.

RENUNCIATION, a renouncing. (F. - L.) In Cotgrave. It is neither true F. nor true Lat., but prob. taken from F., and modified by a knowledge of the Lat. word. - F. renonciation, 'a re-Cot. - Lat. renuntiationem, acc. of renuntiatio, a renunciation; nouncing. - Lat. renuntiatus, pp. of renuntiare; see Ronounce. REPAIR (I), to restore, fill up anew, amend. REPAIR (2), to resort, go to. (F.,-L.) M. E. repairen, Chaucer, C. T. 5387. - F. repairer, ' to haunt, frequent, lodge' in ;' Cot. Older form repairier (Burguy); cf. Span. repatriar, Ital. ripatriare, to return to one's country. - Lat. repatriare, to return to one's country. -Lat. re-, back; and patria, one's native land, from patri-, crude form of pater, a father, cognate with E. father. See Ro- and Father. Der. repair, sb., Hamlet, v. 2. 228.

REPARTEE, a witty reply. (F., -L.) A misspelling for repartie or reparty. 'Some reparty, some witty strain;' Howell, Famil. Letters, b. i. sect. I. let. 18 .- F. repartie, 'a reply;' Cot. Orig. fem. of reparti, pp. of repartir, 'to redivide, to answer a thrust with a thrust, to reply;' Cot. - F. re- (= Lat. re-), again; and partir, to part, divide, also to dart off, rush, burst out laughing = Lat. partire, BEPAST, a taking of food; the food taken. REPINE, to be discontented. (L.) Spelt repyne in Palsgrave; compounded of re- (again) and time, to fret. No doubt pine was, at the time, supposed to be a true E. word, its derivation from the Latin having been forgotten. But, by a fortunate accident, the word is not a hybrid one, but wholly Latin. See Ro- and Pine. (For hybrid words, see re-mind, re-new, re-ly.)

REPLACE, to put back. (F., -L.) 'To chase th'usurper, and replace the king; Daniel, Civil Wars, b. iii (R.) From Re and Place. Suggested by F. remplacer, 'to re-implace ;' Cot. Der. replace-ment

Butler has replevin as a verb. Hudibras, The Lady's Answer, l. 4. - F. re- (= Lat. re-), again; and plaw, to warrant, be surety, give pledges; Cot. The E. word follows the form of the pp. plevi.  $\beta$ . The suggestion of Diez, that O.F. plevir is due to Lat. præbere, to afford (hence, to offer a pledge), is the most likely solution. See Re- and Pledge. Der. ref. ref. properly a sb., from F. re- and O. F. plevine, 'a warranty,' Cot. [†] REPLY, to answer. (F.,-L.) M. See POBO. Dor. repose, sb., Spenser, F.Q. iii. 4. 6, from F. repos, 'repose,' Cot.; repose, al, King Lear, ii. 1. 70. REPOSITORY, a place in which things are stored up, store-house. (F., -L.) pp. of reponere, to lay up. See Re- and Position. REPREHEND, to blame, reprove. (L.) M. E. reprehenden, Chaucer, Troilus, i. 510. It must have been taken from Lat., as the O. F. form was reprendre in the 12th century. - Lat. reprehendere (pp. reprehensus), to hold back, check, blame. - Lat. re-, back; and prekendere, to hold, seize. See Bo- and Comprehend. Der. repre-Aension, Chaucer, Troil. i. 684, prob. direct from Lat. acc. reprehensionem, as the O.F. represension does not seem to be older than the 16th century ; reprehens-ive ; reprehens-ible, from Lat. reprehensibilis ; reprehens-ibl-y. And see reprisal.

REPRESS, to restrain, check. (F., -L.) M.E. repressen. Gower, C. A. iii, 166, I. 26. Coined from Bo- and Press (1), with the sense of Lat. reprimere. The F. represser merely means to press again. Dor. repress-ion, repress-ive. And see reprimand. REPRIEVE, to delay the execution of a criminal. (F.,-L.)

In Spenser, F. Q. iv. 12. 21. It is really the same word as reprove, of which the M. E. form was commonly represen (-repreven), with the sense to reject, put aside, disallow. To reprieve a sentence is to disallow or reject it. Palsgrave has repreve for reprove. 'The stoon which men bildynge represeden' = the stone which the builders rejected; Wyclif, Luke, xx. 17. See Reprove. Der. reprieve, sb., Cor. v. 2. 53. Doublet, reprove. REPRIMAND, a reproof, rebuke. (F., -L.) In the Spectator, no. 112. - F. réprimande, formerly reprimende, 'a check, reprehension, reproof,' Cot. - Lat. reprimenda, a thing that ought to be repressed ; fem. of fut. part. pass. of reprimere, to repress ; see Ro- and Pross (1). Der. reprimand, verb.

BEPRINT, to print again. (F., -L.) Prynne refers to a book 'printed 1599, and now reprinted 1629;' Histrio-mastix, part i. p. 358 (R.) From Re- and Print. Der. reprint, sb. BEPRISAL, anything seized in return, retaliation. (F., -Ital., -L.) It means 'a prize' in Shak. I Hen. IV, iv. I. 118. Spelt reprisels, pl., in Minsheu, ed. 1627. = O. F. represaille, 'a taking or seising on, a prise, or a reprisall; 'Cot. [The change of vowel is due to the obsolete verb reprise, to seize in return, Spenser, F. Q. iv. 4.8, from the pp. repris of O. F. reprendere Lat. reprehendere.] – Ital. ripresaglia, 'booties, preyes, prisals, or anything gotten by prize, bribing, or bootie;' Florio. – Ital. ripresa, 'a reprisall or taking again;' id. Fem. of ripreso, pp. of riprendere, 'to reprehend, also to take again, retake;' id. - Lat. reprehendere; see Reprehend. And see Prize (1).

REPROACH, to upbraid, revile, rebuke. (F., -L.) In Shak Meas. for Meas. v. 426. [But it is tolerably certain that the sb. reproack was in use, in E., before the verb; it occurs, spelt reprocke, in Skelton, Bowge of Courte, 1. 26.] - F. reprocher, 'to reproach, ... object or impute unto,' Cot.; whence the sb. reproche, 'a reproach, imputation, or casting in the teeth;' id. Cf. Span. reprochar, vb., reproche, sb.; Prov. repropehar, to reproach (cited by Diez). We also find Prov. repropehiers, reprojers, sb., a proverb (Bartsch). β. The etymology is disputed, yet it is not doubtful; the late Lat. appropiare became O. F. aprocher and E. approach, so that reproach answers to a Lat. type repropiare\*, not found, to bring near to, hence to cast in one's teeth, impute, object. See Diez, who shews that other proposed solutions of the word are phonetically imposy. Scheler well explains the matter, when he suggests sible. that repropiare \* is, in fact, a mere translation or equivalent of Lat. obicere (objicere), to cast before one, to bring under one's notice, to reproach. So also the G. vorwerfen, to cast before, to reproach. 8. And hence we can explain the Prov. repropehiers, lit. a bringing under one's notice, a hint, a proverb. e. Cf. Lat. lex talionis, the law of retaliation.  $\beta$ . It is usual to connect these words with Lat. talis, such, like; but this is by no means certain. Vanicek connects them with Skt. twl, to lift, weigh, compare, equal; cf. Skt. tula, a balance, equality, tulya, equal; these words are from  $\checkmark$  TAL, to lift, weigh, make equal, for which see Tolerate. RETORT, a censure returned; a tube used in distillation. (F., -L.) In both senses, it is the same word. RETRACT, to revoke. (F., - L.) In Levins, ed. 1570. [The remark in Trench, Study of Words, lect. iii, that the primary meaning is 'to reconsider,' is not borne out by the etymology; 'to draw back' is the older sense.] - O. F. retracter, 'to recant, revoke,' Cot. - Lat. retractare, to retract ; frequentative of retrakere (pp. retractus), to draw back. - Lat. re-, back ; and trahere, to draw ; see Re- and Trace. Der. retribut-ive. RETRIEVE, to recover, bring back to a former state. (F., - L.) 'I retreve, I fynde agayne, as houndes do their game, je retrouwe;' Palsgrave. Levins has: 'retrive, retrudere;' he must mean the same word. Prob. in still earlier use as a term of the chase. Just as in the case of contrive, the spelling has been altered ; probably retreve was meant to represent the occasional form retreaver of the O. F. retrover, later retrouver. - F. retrouver, 'to find again; 'Cot. - F. re-, again; and trouver, to find. See Contrive and Trover. Thus the successive spellings are retreve (for retreave), retrive, retrieve. Dor. retriev-er, retriev-able. [†] RETRO-, backwards, prefix. (L.; or F., - L.) Lat. retro-, backwards. A comparative form, with comp. suffix -tro (from Aryan -tar), as in ul-tro, ci-tro, in-tro; from red- or re-, back. Thus the sense is 'more backward.' See Re-.

RETROGRADE, going backwards, from better to worse. (L.) In early astronomical use, with respect to a planet's apparent backward motion. M. E. retrograd, Chaucer, On the Astrolabe, ed. REVEAL, to unveil, make known. (F., -L.) Spelt revele, Spenser, F. Q. iii. 2. 48. - F. reveler, 'to reveale ;' Cot. - Lat. revelare, to unveil, draw back a veil. - Lat. re-, back ; and welare, to veil, from using, a veil; see Bo- and Veil. Dec. revel-at-ion, M.E. revelacion, Wychi, Rom. xvi. 25, from F. revelation, 'a revelation,' Cot. - Lat. revelationerm, REVEILLE, an alarum at break of day. (F., -L.) 'Sound a reweille, sound, sound;' Dryden, A Secular Masque, 61. 'Save where the fife its shrill reveille screams; ' Campbell, Gertrude, pt. iii. st. 7. Now a trisyllabic word. The last syllable is difficult of explanation, as the F. word is reveil, an awaking, reveille; as in battre le réveil, sonner le réveil, to beat, to sound the reveille (Hamilton). It is perhaps due to some misconception by Englishmen with respect to the F. word rather than to a derivation from rewille, pp. of reweilter, to rouse, which is the allied verb.  $\beta$ . The sb. reweil = O. F. reweil. 'a hunt's-up or morning-song for a new married wife, the day after the marriage.' The verb réveiller = O. F. resveiller, 'to awake;' Cot. - F. re- (= Lat. re-), again; and O. F. esveiller, to wake; Col., from Low Lat. exvigilare \*, not found, but a mere compound of ex, out, and uigilare, to wake, watch, from uigil, wakeful. See Be, Eix-, and Vigil. [†]

REVEL, a carouse, noisy feast, riotous or luxurious banquet. (F., -L.) The sb. is older than the verb in English. M. E. read (= revel), Chaucer, C. T. 2710, 4400, Legend of Good Women, 2251; P. Plowman, B. xiii, 442; Will. of Palerne, 1953. [On the strength of Chaucer's expression, 'And made revel al the longe night' (C. T. 2719), Tyrwhitt explained revel as 'an entertainment, properly during the night.' This is an attempt at forcing an etymology from F. réveiller, to wake, which is almost certainly wrong; and a little research shews that the dictum is entirely groundless. In Will of Palerne, 1953, the revels are distinctly said to have taken place in the forenoon; and in Chaucer, Legend of Good Women, 2251, Lasted a fourtenight, or little lasse,' which quite precludes a special reference to the night.] - O. F. revel, which Roquefort explains by 'pride, rebellion, sport, jest, disturbance, disorder, delay.' 'Plans est de joie et de revel '= is full of joy and revelry; Le Vair Palefroy, 1. 760; id. 'La doucors de tens novel Fait changier ire en revel = the sweetness of the fresh season changes anger into sport ; Bartsch, Chrestomathie, col. 323, l. 28. According to Diez, it also appears as rivel.  $\beta$ . The word presents great difficulty. The opinion of Diez seems best, viz. that it is connected with O. F. reveler, to rebel, revolt (Roquefort); so that the orig. sense would be 'revolt, uproar, riot, tumult.' Cf. also O. F. revele, proud, i. e. orig. rebellious. See the passage in the Roman de la Rose, 8615, cited by Roquefort and in Bartsch, col. 382, l. 35: 'Quil vous fust avis que la terre Vousist enprendre estrif ou guerre Au ciel destre mice estellee ; Tant ert par ses fleurs revelee' = that you would have thought that the earth wished to enter into a strife or war with heaven as to being better adorned with stars; so greatly was it puffed up by its flowers. Here revelae -rendered rebellious, made conceited. The adj. reveleux (Roquefort) meant blustering, riotous; from which it is an easy step to the sense of 'indulging in revelry.' Y. The word also occurs in Provenceal; in Bartsch, Chrest. Prov., col. 133, 1. 19, we have: 'e rics hour ab in Bartson, Onest, Flow, con 255, 1.19, it the hospitality, i.e. it pauc de revel' = and a rich man with but little hospitality, i.e. it given to revelry. 8. If this view be right, the sb. revel is from the given to revelry. 8. If this view be right, the sb. reverb reveler - Lat. rebellare, to rebel; see Bebel. opposes this solution, and links revel to F. rever, to dreams e in rever seems to have been long, and the form rivel ( as a variant of revel) can hardly be explained except that re- (= ri-) is the ordinary prefix; just as prebellare and ribellare as the Ital. verb ' to rebut article on F. rover. Der. revel, verb, M. E. rof Saints, ed. Furnivall, xxx. 15 (Stratmrebel, be riotous, as above; revell-er, \*

REVENCE, to injure in return, avenge. (F., -L.) In Palsgrave. 'To revenge the dethe of our fathers ;' Berners, tr. of Froissart, vol. ii. C. 240 (R.) = O. F. revenger (Palsgrave), later revencher, 'to wreak, or revenge himselfe,' Cot., who gives the form revenge for the pp. Mod. F. revancher ; whence the phrase on revanche, in return, to make amends; by a bettering of the sense. - F. re, again; and warger, older form wengier, to take vengeance, from Lat. windicare. See Re- and Vongeance; also Avenge, Vindicate. Der. revenge, sb., Spenser, F.Q. i. 6. 44; revenge-ful Hamlet, iii. 1. 126; revenge-ful ly; revenge-ment, 1 Hen. IV, iii. 2. 7. REVERBERATE, to re-echo, reflect sound. (L.) In Levins, ed. 1570. - Lat. reverberatus, pp. of reverberare, to beat back. - Lat. re-, back ; and werberare, to beat, from werber, a scourge, lash, whip, of uncertain origin. Dor. reverberat-ion, M. E. reverberacioum, Chaucer, C. T. 7815, from F. reverberation, 'a reverberation,' Cot. = Lat. acc. reverberationem. Also reverberat-or-y; and reverb (a coined word, by contraction), K. Lear, i. 1. 156.

REVERE, to venerate, regard with awe. (F., -L.) Not an early word, to reverence being used instead. In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. -O. F. reverer (mod. révérer), ' to reverence,' Cot. - Lat. revereri, to revere, stand in awe of. - Lat. re-, again (here intensive); and wereri, to fear, feel awe (corresponding to the E. phrase to be wary, to beware), from the same root as wary. See Re- and Wary. Der. rever-nece, in early use, M. E. reverence, Rob. of Glouc., p. 553, l. 18, King Alisaunder, 793, from O. F. reverence, 'reverence,' Cot. = Lat. reverentia, respect. Hence reverence, vb., Minsheu, ed. 1627, P. Plowman, C. xiv. 248, from O. F. reverencer, 'to reverence,' Cot. ; reverenti-al, from F. reverential, 'reverent,' Cot. Also rever-ent, Chaucer, C. T. 8063, from O. F. reverent (14th century, see Littre, s. v. révérend), which from Lat. reverendus, fut. pass. part. of revereri : later form rever-end, Frith's Works, p. 105, col. 2, l. 40.

REVERIE, REVERY, a dreaming, irregular train of thought. (F., -L.) 'When ideas float in the mind without any reflection or regard of the understanding, it is that which the French call resvery; our language has scarce a name for it;' Locke, Human Understanding, b. ii. c. 19 (R.) = F. réverie, formerly resverie, 'a raving, idle talking, dotage, vain fancy, fond imagination;' Cot. = F. réver, formerly resver, ' to rave, dote, speak idly, talke like an asse;' id. β. The F. rever is the same word as the Lorraine raver, whence E. rave; see Rave. Cotgrave's explanation of rever by the E. rave is thus justified. [+] REVERSE, opposite, contrary, having an opposite direction. (F.,-L.) The adj. use seems to be the oldest in E.; it precedes the other uses etymologically. M.E. reuers (= revers). 'A vice revers unto this' = a vice opposite this; Gower, C. A. i. 167, l. 2. 'Al the revers sayn' = say just the contrary; Chaucer, C. T. 14983. -O.F. revers, 'strange, uncoth, crosse ;' Cot. - Lat. reversus, lit. turned O.F. REVILE, to calumniate, reproach. (F., -L.) M.E. revilen (with s=v), Gower, C.A. iii. 247, l. 23; Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 161, l. 11. There is no O.F. reviler, nor viler; the word was coined by prefixing F. re- (= Lat. re-, again) to O. F. aviler, thus producing a form raviler \*, easily weakened into reviler, just as in the case of Repeal, q.v. β. The O. F. aviler (mod. F. avilir) is ' to disprise, disesteeme, imbase, make vile or cheap.' &c.; Cot. - F. e = Lat. ad, to; and wil, vile, from Lat. wilis. See Vile. Der. revil-er. REVISE, to review and amend. (F., - L.) Also reward, sb., used exactly in the sense of regard, of which it is a mere doublet. 'Took reward of no man' = paid regard to no one, P. Plowman, C. v. 40; see Chaucer, Legend of Good Women, prol. 399; Hampole, Pricke of Conscience, 1831; Will. of Palerne, 3339.—O.F. rewarder, the same as regarder, to regard (Burguy).— O.F. re-(=Lat. re-), back; and warder, the same as garder, a word of Teut. origin. See Begard, Guard, Ward. The orig. sense is to mark or heed, as a lord who observes a vassal, and regards him as worthy of honour or punishment; hence, to requite. Der. reward, sb., O. F. reward, the same as regard. Gr Not connected with guerdon, as suggested in Richardson. Doublet, regard. [†] REYNARD, RENARD, a fox. (F., - Teut.) In Dryden, The Cock and the Fox, 581, 663, 721, 768, 794, 805. 'Hyer [here] begynneth thystorye [the history] of reynard the foxe;' Caxton, tr. of Reynard the Fox, A.D. 1481. See the Introductory Sketch to The History of Reynard the Fox, ed. W. J. Thoms, Percy Soc., 1844.-F. renard, regnard (mod. F. renard), 'a fox;' Cot.  $\beta$ . Of Teut. origin; the famous epic is of Low G. origin, and was composed in Flanders in the 12th century; see the edition. by Herr Ernst Martin, Paderborn, 1874, of Willems, Gedicht von den vos Reinaerde (poem of the fox Reynard). Thus the E. and F. words are due to the Flemish name reinaerd or reinacrt. This is the same as the O. H. G. reginkari, used as a Christian name, meaning literally 'strong in counsel,' an excellent name for the animal. Y. The O.H.G. regin, ragin, counsel, is the same as Goth. ragin, an opinion, judgment, advice, decree. This is not to be connected with Lat. regere, to rule, but with Skt. rachana, orderly arrangement, from rach, to arrange; see Fick, iii. 250. S. The O. H.G. hard, strong, lit. hard, is cognate with E. Hard, q.v. The O. H.G. raginkart became later reinhart, a reynard, fox. We also meet with the mod. G. reinsche, a fox; this seems to be a mere corruption.

RHAPSODY, a wild, disconnected composition. (F., -L., -Gk.) Ben Jonson uses 'a rhapsody Of Homer's' to translate Iliacum carmen, Horace, Ars Poetica, I. 129. Spelt rapsodie in Minsheu, ed. 1627.-F. rapsodie, 'a rapsodie,' Cot.-Lat. rhapsodia.-Gk. happolia, the songs together, a reciter of epic poetry, a bard who recites his own  $\bigoplus$  poetry. The term merely means 'one who strings odes or songs together,' without any necessary reference to the actual stitching together of leaves. – Gk.  $\beta a\psi$ , stem of fut. tense of  $\beta d\pi \pi \epsilon v$ , to stitch together, fasten together; and  $\psi \delta \eta$ , an ode, for which see Ode. Der. rhapsodi-c, Gk.  $\beta a\psi \psi \delta v \delta s$ , adj., rhapsodi-c-al, rhapsodi-c-al-ly; rhapsodi-st, sb.

RHETORIC, the art of speaking with propriety and elegance. (F., -L., -Gk.) M. E. retorikė (4 syllables), Chaucer, C. T. 7908. -F. rhetorique, 'rhetorick,' Cot. - Lat. rhetorica, put for rhetorica ars, i. e. rhetorical art; fem. of rhetoricus, rhetorical. - Gk. hyropush, put for hyropush réxen, i. e. rhetorical art; fem. of hyropush, she torical. - Gk. hyropus, crude form of hyropus, an orator. - Gk. elpew, to say, of which the pt. t. is ei-pn-ka; so that hyrop is formed from the base hy-. with the suffix rwp (= Lat. -tor) of the agent; the sense being 'speaker.'  $\beta$ . The base of eipew is  $fep = \sqrt{WAR}$ , to speak; whence also the E. werb; see Verb. See Curtius, i. 428. Der. rhetoric-al, -al-ly; rhatoric-ian.

RHEUM, discharge from the lungs or nostrils caused by a cold. (F., -L., -Gk.) Frequent in Shak. Meas. iii. 1. 31; &c. 'Reumes and moystures do increase;' Sir T. Elyot, Castel of Helth, b. ii. c. 24. Spelt reume, Palsgrave. -F. rheume, 'a rheume, catarth;' Cot. - Lat. rheuma. -Gk.  $h e \psi_{\mu} a$  (stem  $h e \psi_{\mu} a \tau$ -), a flow, flood, flux, rheum. -Gk.  $h e \psi_{-}$ , occurring in  $h e b - \sigma \rho a_i$ , fut. t. of h e e w, to flow, which stands for h e f e w; the base of the verb being h w (for  $\sigma \rho w$ ), to flow, cognate with Skt. sru, to flow. - $\sqrt{SRU}$ , to flow; see Ruminate and Stream. Fick, i. 837; Curtius, i. 439. Der. rheumey, Jul. Cæsar, ii. 1. 206; rheumat-ic, Mids. Nt. Dr. ii. 1. 105, from Lat. rheumatieus = Gk.  $h e v \mu a \tau i \sigma \mu \phi s$ , liability to rheum.

RHINOCEROS, a large quadruped. (L., -Gk.) In Shak. Macb. iii. 4. 101. Named from the remarkable horn (sometimes double) on the nose. -Lat. rhinoceros (Pliny). -Gk. hirónepos, a rhinoceros, lit. 'nose-horn.' -Gk. hiro. crude form of his (gen. hirós), the nose; and mip-os, a horn, allied to E. horn; see Horn. Gur See the description of the rinocertis and monoceros, supposed to be different animals, in K Alisaunder, 6529, 6539; cf. Wright, Popular Treatises on Science, p. 81.

animals, in K Ausanney, 2019, 2019 on Science, p. 81. RHODODENDRON, a genus of plants with evergreen leaves. (L., = Gk.) Lit. 'rose-tree.' In Phillips, ed. 1706. – Lat. rhododendron (Pliny). – Gk.  $fo\delta\delta\delta er\delta\rho or$ , lit. 'rose-tree.' – Gk.  $fo\delta o$ -, crude form of  $f\delta\delta or$ , a rose; and  $\delta\ell r\delta\rho or$ , a tree.  $\beta$ . As to  $f\delta\delta or$ , see ROSE.  $\Delta\ell r \delta\rho or$  appears to be a reduplicated form, connected with  $\delta\rho v r$ , a tree, and therefore with E. tree; see Tree.

RHODOMONTADE; the same as Rodomontade, q.v. RHOMB, RHOMBUS, a quadrilateral figure, having all its sides equal, but not all its angles right angles.  $(F_{-}-L_{-}-G_{k})$ ; or  $L_{-}-G_{k}$ .) The F. form rhomb is now less common than the Lat. form rhombus; but it appears in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674, and in Milton, P. R. iii. 309. – F. rhombe, 'a spinning wheel; also, a figure that hath equall sides and unequall angles, as a quarry of glass,' &c.; Cot. – Lat. rhombus. – Gk.  $\beta \mu \beta \sigma s$ , anything that may be spun or twirled round, a spinning-wheel; also a rhomb, or rhombus, from a certain likeness to a whirling spindle, when the adjacent angles are very unequal. – Gk.  $\beta \mu \beta \sigma s$ , to revolve, totter; nasalised form from  $\beta \sigma \sigma s$ , is to sink, fall, be unsteady, which is allied to G. wer/en, to throw, and E. warp; see Warp. The root is  $\sqrt{WARP}$ , to throw. Der. rhomb-ic; rhombo-id, i. e. rhomb-shaped, from  $\beta \mu \beta \sigma s$ , crude form of  $\beta \mu \beta \sigma s$ , and  $\sigma \sigma s$ , form, shape; rhombo-id-al. Doublet, rumb, q. v.

BHUBARB, the name of an edible plant. (F., - Low Lat., - Gk.) Spelt reubarbe by Sir T. Elyot, Castel of Helth, b. iv. c. I (R.); also Reubarbarum, id. b. iii. c. 5; rubarbe, Skelton, Magnificence, 2385.-O. F. rheubarbe, 'rewbarb;' Cot. Mod. F. rhubarbe. Cf. Ital. robarbaro, rhubarb; spelt rabbarbaro in Florio. The botanical name is rhöum. - Low Lat. rheubarbarum (=rheum barbarum), used by Isidore of Seville (Brachet). - Gk. βη̃ον βάρβαρον, rhubarb; lit. the Rheum from the barbarian country. β. Gk. βηov appears to be an adjectival form, from Ad, the RAa or Volga, the name of a river in Pontus; so that Añov means 'belonging to the Rha;' and the word rhubarb means 'barbarian Rha-plant.' The word Ad also denoted rhubarb, and the plant was also called Rha Ponticum, whence the Linnæan name Rheum Rhaponticum, which is tautological. 'Huic Rha uicinus est amnis, in cujus superciliis quædam uegetabilis eiusdem nominis gignitur radix, proficiens ad usus multiplices medelarum;' Ammianus Marcellinus, xxii. 8. 28; a passage which Holland translates by: 'Neere unto this is the river Rha, on the sides whereof groweth a comfortable and holsom root, so named, good for many uses in physick.' See Taylor's Words and Places, White's Lat. Dict. (s. v. rha), and Richardson. γ. As some y. As some river-names are Celtic, it is just possible that rha may be related to W. rhe, fleet, speedy, rhean, a rill. [+]

RHUMB, the same as Rumb, q.v.

RHYME, the same as Rime (1), q. v.

RHYTHM, flowing metre, true cadence of verse, harmony (F., -L., -Gk.) Formerly spelt rithme, as in Minsheu, ed. 1627.-F. rithme, 'rime, or meeter;' Cot.-Lat. rhythmum, acc. of rhythmum. -Gk. βυθμόs, measured motion, time, measure, proportion: Ionic form, βυσμόs. Cf. Gk. βυσίs, a stream, βύμα, a stream, βυτόs, flowing; all from the base βυ-; cf. βίειν (for βίFειν), to flow.- of SRU, to flow; see Rhoum. ¶ Quite distinct from rhyme; see Rime(1). Der. rhythmic, Gk. βυθμικόs; rhythmic-al.

RIB, one of the bones from the back-bone encircling the chest. (E.) M. E. ribbe, Rob. of Glouc., p. 22, l. 15; P. Plowman, B. vi. 180. – A. S. ribb, Gen. ii. 21. + Du. rib. + Icel. rif. + Swed. ref-been, a rib-bone; Dan. rib-been. + O. H. G. rippi, G. rippe. + Russ. rebro.  $\beta$ . Root uncertain; Fick gives the theoretical Teut. base as REBYA; iii. 254. Perhaps from the base of the verb to rive; whence the orig. sense of 'stripe' or 'narrow strip;' see Rive. Der. rib, verb; ribb-ing; spare-rib; rib-wort, Palsgrave, a plantain, called simply ribbe (rib) in A. S.; see A. S. Leechdoms, Glossary.

RIBALD, a low, licentious fellow. (F., – Teut.) M. E. ribald, but almost always spelt riband, P. Plowman, B. xvi. 151. v. 513; King Alisaunder, 1578; pl. riband, O. Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, i 279, last line but one. – O. F. ribald, riband (riband in Cot.), a ribald, ruffan; mod. F. riband. The Low Lat. form is ribaldus; see Ducange. And see a long note in Polit. Songs, ed. Wright, 1839, p. 369. We also find Low Lat. ribalda, fem., a prostitute.  $\beta$ . Of uncertain origin; but the suffix -ald shews the word to be Teutonic; it answers to O. H. G. wall, power, and was (1) a common suffix in Frankish proper names, and (2) a common suffix in F. words, where it is used as a masc. termination denoting character, and commonly has a depreciatory sense, as in the present instance.  $\gamma$ . Dize connects ribald with O. H. G. kripá, M. H. G. ribe, a prostitute, and cites from Matthew Paris: 'fures, exules, fugitiui, excommunicati, quos omnes ribaldos Francia unlgariter consuent appellare.' Hence also O. F. riber, to toy with a female (Roquefort); which fully explains the sense. 5. Scheler suggests O. H. G. riba (G. reiben), which not only means to rub, but to paint, to put rouge on the face; see Rive. The arily history of the word appears to be lost. Der. ribald-ry, M. E. ribaldrie, commonly written ribamdrie, RIBAND, RIBBAND, RIBBON, a narrow strip, esp. of

RIBAND, RIBBAND, RIBBON, a narrow strip. esp. of silk. (C.) Spelt riband from a fancied connection with band, with which it has nothing to do; also ribband, Spenser, F. Q. iv. to. 8. But the d is merely excressent and is not always found in the M. E. period, though occurring in the Prompt. Parv. M. E. riban, P. Plowman, B. ii. 16; 'with ribanes of red golde'with golden threads. 'Ragges ribaned with gold '= rags adorned with gold thread; Rom. of the Rose, 4754. Again, in Rom. of the Rose, 1077, Riches wears a purple robe, adorned with orfreis (goldembroidery) and ribaninges. It is thus clear that the early sense was 'embroidered work in gold,' and not so much a ribbon as a thread. Of Celtic origin. – Irish ribin, a ribbon; from ribe, a flake, a hair, a Of celtic origin. – Irish ribin, a ribbon; from ribe, a flake, a hair, a tatter, gin, snare, whence also ribeag, a hair, little hair, small rag, tassel, tringe, bunch of anything hairy; W. rkibin, a streak, from rkib, a streak. Also Breton ruban, cited by Stratmann, but not in Legonidec, ed. 1821. Cf. F. ruban, spelt riban in the 15th century, ruben in Cotgrave, rubant in Palsgrave; this may have been derived from Breton. ¶ I think this etymology, given in Stratmann, is conclusive, and that the suggestions of any connection with G. ring and band, or Du. rijg (a lace) and band, may as well be given up. The second syllable is due to the common Celtic dimin. suffix, as in W. byck-an, little, dimin. of back little; see Spurrell, Welsh Gr. p. 93. [†]

RIBIE, the same as Rebeck, q. v. RICE, a kind of edible grain. (F, -Ital., -L, -Gk., -O. Pers.)In Shak. Wint. Tale, iv. 3. 41; spelt rize in Bacon, Nat. Hist. § 49; rize in Levins; ryce in Palsgrave.-O. F. ris, 'rice,' Cot; mod. F. riz.-Ital. rizo.- Lat. oryza, rice.-Gk.  $\delta pv \zeta o,$  rice; both the plant and grain.  $\beta$ . Doubtless borrowed from an O. Pers. word, not recorded, but related to Skt. wriki, rice, of which the root is supposed to be Skt. wriki, to grow, increase, answering to an Aryan  $\checkmark$  WARDH, to grow. Curtius (ii. 199) remarks that  $\delta \rho v \zeta a$ 'is clearly a borrowed word; and, as is recognised by Pott, ii. 1. 168, and Benfey, i. 87 (cf. Hehn, 369), seems not so much directly to resemble the Skt. wriki in sound, as to be an attempt at reproducing a related Persian form which has a sibilant instead of a. It is worth noticing as a proof that the Greeks tried to express a foreign v by o. Pictet, i. 273, gives the Afghan uriski, which also has a vowel in the place of v.' Raverty, in his Dict. of the Pushto or Afghan language, writes wrijzey, wrijey, pl., rice; wrijza'A, a grain of rice; pp. 1019, 1017.  $\gamma$ . The word passed also into Arabic, in the forms wraz, MTNZZ, aruzz, rice, sometimes also ruzz; Rich. Dict. pp. 56, 736; and BID, to free, deliver, disencumber (E.) M.E. ridden, to separate the Span. arroz, rice, was borrowed from Arabic. [+] two combatants, Gawain and the Grene Knight, 2246; also to de-

BICH, wealthy, abounding in possessions. [†] RICH, wealthy, abounding in possessions. (E.) M. E. ricks (12th cent.), O. Eng. Homilies, i. 53, 1. 10; Ancren Riwle, p. 66; Layamon, 128. (Not borrowed from F., but an E. word.) = A.S. rice, rich, powerful; Luke, i. 52; Mark, x. 25. The change from final c to ck is just as in Norwick from Norbwie, pitck from A.S. pic, &c.; see Mätrner, i. 145; and cf. beseeck with seek, speeck with speak, &c. +Du. rijk. +Icel. rikr. +Swed. rik. + Dan. rig. + Goth. reiks. + G. reick.  $\beta$ . All from a Teut. type RIKA, rich, lit. powerful, ruling; Fick, iii. 248. Allied to Lat. rex., Skt. rija, a king, from  $\checkmark$  RAG, to rule (Lat. regere). ¶ The fact that the word might have come into the language from F. ricks which is from M. H.G. ricke (G. reick), does not do away with the fact that it has always existed in our language. But the deriv. ricks is really of F. origin; see Biches. Der. rick-Jy, A.S. riclice, Luke, xvi. 19; rick-ness, M. E. ricknesse, Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 155, l. 14. Also -rie in bishop-rie, where -rie = A.S. rice, a kingdom, dominion; cf. Icel. riki, Goth. reiki, G. reick, sb., dominion, allied to Lat. reg-num, and even to C. realm. And see Riches.

BICHES, wealth. (F, -O. H. G.) Now often regarded as a pl. sb. Shak. bas it as a pl. sb., Timon, iv. 2. 32, Per. i. I. 52; but usually as a sing. sb., Oth. ii. I. 83, iii. 3. 173, Sonnet 87. M. E. rickesse, a sing. sb.; 'Mykel was the rickesse,' Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoff, p. 30, l. 24. The pl. is rickesse,' Ayenbite of Inwyt, p. 24, l. 21; Ancren Riwle, p. 168, l. 13. The word first appears (spelt rickes) in Layamon, 8091. - F. rickesse, 'riches, wealth;' Cot. Formed with suffix -esse (cf. Port. and Span. rigu-eza, Ital. ricck ezza) from the adj. ricke, rich. - M. H. G. ricke, O. H. G. rikhi (G. reick), rich; a heap or pile of hay or wheat. (E.) The vowel was

BICK, a heap or pile of hay or wheat. (E.) The vowel was formerly long, and an has been lost; rick stands for reek. Areak. M. E. reek, Prompt. Parv. p. 428, col. 1, last line. - A. S. Areac, to translate Lat. aceruus, a heap; Wright's Vocab. i. 74, col. 2, l. 5 from bottom. Also corn-Arycea, a corn-rick; Ælfric's Homilies, ii. 178. + Icel. Araukr, a rick, small stack. Root unknown. Doublet, prov. E. ruck, a heap, the Scand. form, from Icel. Araukr, O. Swed. ruka, ruga, a heap (lhre).

BICKETS, a disease of children, accompanied with softness of the bones and great weakness. (E.) The name was first given to this disease, about 1620, by the country-people in Dorsetshire and Somersetshire. This we learn from a treatise by Dr. Glisson, De Rachitide, cap. 1. The pseudo-Gk. term rachitis was invented by him, as he tells us, in partial imitation of the prov. E. name, as well as to denote the fact that it is sometimes accompanied by spinal disease; the word rachitis being founded on Gk.  $Ax_i$ s, the spine, a word probably cognate with E. Ridge, q. v. By a singular blunder, it is now usual to derive rickets from 'Greek rachitis,' there being no such word in existence till A. D. 1650, which is the date of Glisson's treatise. See an excellent account in Rees' Encycl., 1819, vol. 30. 'Cavil 7. Hospitals generally have the rickets... Assuer. Surely there is some other cure for a ricketist body than to kill it ;' Fuller, Worthies of England, 1662; repr. 1840, vol. i. p. 47. A still earlier notice of rickets is in Fuller, Meditations on the Times (first pub. 1647), xx. p. 163, in Good Thoughts, &c., Oxford, 1810; see N. and Q. 6 S. ii. 219. The prov. E. 'rickety (unsteady) table' is well known. B. Formed, with pl. suffix -ets, from E. wrick, M. F. wrikken, to twist, used in the phr. 'to wrick (i. e. to twist) one's ancle.' Thus the word denotes a disease accompanied by distortion. 'The deuel wrikked her and ther,' i. e. the devil (when seized by St. Dunstan) twisted hither and thither; Spec. of Eng., ed. Morris and Skeat, p. 22, L 82. Allied to A. S. wringan, to wring; see Wring. + Du, wrikken, to stir to and fro; de bank wrikt nog, 'the bench stands totteringly still' (i. e. is rickety); Sewel. See Wriggle.

RICOCHET, the rebound of a cannon-ball fired at a slight elevation. (F.) Not in Todd's Johnson. – F. ricochet, 'the sport of skimming a thin stone on the water, called a Duck and a Drake;' Cot. Rabelais (Pantagruel, iii. 10) uses the phrase chanson de ricochet, which Cot. explains: 'an idle or endlesse tale or song.' Littré quotes from a writer of the 15th century: 'Mais que il cede je cederai, et semblablement respond l'autre, et ainsi est la fable du ricochet.'  $\beta$ . There is also a F. verb ricocher, to ricochet, make ducks and drakes; and Scheler and Littré derive ricochet from ricocher. I suspect the derivation runs the other way, and that ricocher is merely a short form for ricocheter\*. y. The prefix is plainly the Lat. re, again. The O.F. cochet is 'a cockerell, or cock-chick, also a shote or shetepig' [young pig], Cotgrave; in the former sense, it is a dimin. of coq, a cock. We cannot tell more till we know what the fable du ricochet was; the English duck and drake is more intelligible, viz. from the ducking under water and coming up again; see Duck. Der. ricochet, verb.

ELD, to free, deliver, discnet moder (E.) M.E. ridden, to separate two combatants, Gawain and the Grene Knight, 2246; also to deliver, O. Eng. Homilies, i. 273; also spelt redden, id. ii. 19, l. 20. (Rid stands for red, and that for hred.) – A. S. hreddan, to snatch away, deliver; Grein, ii. Tot. + O. Freisic hredda. + Du. redden. + Dan redde. + Swed. rädde. + G. retten.  $\beta$ . Root uncertain; it is proposed to connect A. S. hreddan with A. S. hred, and G. retten with M. H. G. hrat, rad, quick; for which see Bather. If this be right, as is probable, the orig, sense is 'to be quick,' to rush to the rescue. Der. ridd-ance, Spenser, Daphnaida, 364; a hybrid word, with F. suffix -ance (Lat. -antia).

RIDDLE (1), a puzzling question, enigma. (E.) Strange as it may seem, it is certain that the word has lost a final s, and stands for riddles, with a plural riddles-es, if it were rightly formed. The loss of s was easy and natural, as it must have appeared like the sign of the plural number. M. E. redels; we find F. un devinal explained by a redels in Wright's Vocab. i. 160. 'The kynge putte forth a rydels,' other MSS. redels; Trevisa, iii. 181; and see P. Plowman, B. xiii. 184. - A. S. rédelse, pl. rédelsan, Ælfred, tr. of Boethius, c. xxvii. § 3 (bk. iii. pr. 4), c. xxvv. § 5 (bk. iii. pr. 12), where it means 'ambiguity.' The pl. rédelsas also occurs, Numb. xii. 8, where the A. V. has 'dark speeches.' The lit. sense is 'something requiring explanation.' Formed with suffixes -el-s (for -el-sa, March, A. S. Gram. § 228), from A. S. réd-an, to read, interpret; we still use the phr. 'to read a riddle.' See Read. + Du. raadsel (for raad-se-la, by inversion of the suffixes); from raden, to counsel, to guess. + G. räthsel (for rä/k-se-la); from raken. Der. riddle, verb.

reached (for räck-se-la); from rachen. Der. riddle, verb. RIDDLE (2), a large sieve. (E.) For hriddle, by loss of initial k. M. E. riddl, Prompt. Parv. p. 433. The suffixes -il (or -el) and -er being of equal force, we find the corresponding word in the A. S. kridder, a vessel for winnowing corn; Wright's Vocab. i. 34, col. 2. Cognate forms appear in Irish ereathair, Gael. criathar, Corn. croider, Bret. krouer, a sieve; see Williams, Corn. Dict. Instead of connecting these with Lat. cribrum (connected with cernere, from  $\sqrt{SKAR}$ ), it seems better to adopt the suggestion in Williams, that the Celtic forms are simply derived from Irish and Gael. cratk, to shake, brandish; cf. W. crydio, crydu, to tremble, Bret. kridien, a trembling. The Gk. spačáes, to shake, wave, brandish, presents a striking similarity to the above Celtic words. The orig. sense was perhaps 'shaker.' Der. riddle, verb; cf. A. S. kridian, to sift, Luke, xxii. 31.

RIDE, to be borne along, esp. on a horse. (E.) M. E. riden, pt. t. rood, pp. riden (with short i); Chaucer, C. T. 94, 169, 624, 782, &c. -A.S. ridan, pt. t. råd, pp. riden, Grein, ii. 37<sup>A</sup> + Du. rijden. + Icel. rida. + Dan. ride. + Swed. rida. + G. reiten; O. H.G. ritan. B. All from Teut. base RID, to ride. Cf. Lat. rheda (a Celtic word), a four-wheeled carriage. Der. ride, sb., rider, rid-ing; also bedridden, q. v., raid, q. v., ready, q. v., road, q. v.

RIDCE, anything resembling the top of a quadruped's back, an extended protuberance. (E.) M. E. rigge, a back, esp. a quadruped's back, King Alisaunder, 5722; whence mod. E. rigge in the dative; confusion of these resulted in the extension of the dat. form to all cases. We find ' upon his rig' = upon his back, Havelok, 1775. We also find rug, Ancren Riwle, p. 264; pl. rugges, Layamon, 540. The double form is due to the A. S. y. - A. S. Aryeg, the back of a man or beast; Grein, ii. 100. + Du, rug, back, ridge. + Dan. ryg. + Swed. rygg. + Icel. Aryggr. + G. rücken; O. H. G. krucki. B. All from Teut. base HRUGYA, Fick, iii, 85. It seems to answer exactly to Gk. Aixis, the back, chine, ridge of a hill; the correspondence of Gk. A with Teut. Ar shews that an initial n has been lost in the Gk. word; Curtius. i. 436. Der. ridg-y. Doublet, rig (3). RIDICULOUS, laughable, droll. (L.) In Shak. Temp. ii. 2.

RIDICULOUS, laughable, droll. (L.) In Shak. Temp. ii. 2. 169. Englished (by the common change from -us to -ous) from Lat. ridiculus, laughable. — Lat. ridere, to laugh; see Risible. Der. ridiculous-ly, -ness. Also ridicule, orig. ridicle, as in Foxe, Acts and Monuments, pp. 132, 747 (R.), from Lat. ridiculum, a jest, neut. of ridiculus, but changed to ridicule by confusion with F. ridicule, ridiculous, which is not a sb. but an adj.

RIDING, one of the three divisions of the county of York. (Scand.) Put for thriding; the loss of the th being due to the misdivision of the compound words North-thriding, East-thriding, and West-thriding; or it may be put for triding, in a similar way, if belonging to the Norwegian dialect. - Icel. pridjungr, the third part of a thing, the third part of a shire; see Cleasby and Vigfusson. - Icel. pridi, third, cognate with E. Third, q. v. + Norweg. tridjung, a third part; from tridje, third; Aasen.

RLFE, abundant, prevalent. (Scand.) M. E. rif (with long i), also rife, rive, ry/e, ry/e; adv. rive, ryve. ' pere was sorwe rive' = there was abundant sorrow, Will. of Paleme, 5414. ' Balu per wes rive' = evil was abundant there; Layamon, 20079. = Icel. rifr, munifirif, abundant, is given by Ettmüller; but it is an extremely scarce word, and borrowed; his reference (Obs. xii. dierum fest. nat.) I do not understand. B. Allied to O. Du. rijf, rijve, 'abundant, copious, or large,' Hexham ; Low G. rive, abundant, munificent, extravagant. of lag, right to bestow, reif, a giver. Fick (iii 254) derives this adj. from the verb to rive; if this be so, it meant 'rubbing away,' wasteful, extravagant; see Rive. Der. rife-ly, rife-ness. RIFF-BAFF, refuse, rubbish, the off-scourings of the populace. (F., - Teut.) 'Lines, and circles, and triangles, and rhombus, and rifferaffe; ' Gosson, School of Abuse, 1579, ed. Arber, p. 49, l. 26. Due to M. E. rif and raf, every particle, things of small value. 'The Sarazins, ilk man, he slouh, alle rif and raf' = He slew the Saracens, every man of them, every particle of them; Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 151. And again: 'That noither he no hise suld chalange rif no raf' = That neither he nor his should claim a single bit of it; id. p. 111, l. 2. - F. rif et raf; as, 'Il ne luy lairra rif ny raf, he will strip him of all;' Cot. So also: 'On n'y a laisse ne rifle, ne rafle, they have swept all away, they have left no manner of thing behind them;' id. The lit, sense of rif is 'a piece of plunder of small value;' it is closely related to F. rifler, 'to rifle, ransack, spoile, make havock or clean work, sweep all away before him; ' id. So also O. F. raffler. 'to rifle. ravage, to sweep all away,' id. The conalso O. F. raffer, 'to rifle, ravage, to sweep all away' before him, 'to.' on nected E. words are Rifle (1) and Raffle, q. v. Cf. O. Ital. raffola ruffola, 'by riffraffe, by hooke or crooke, by pinching or scraping;' Florio.

RIFLE (1), to carry off as plunder, spoil, strip, rob. (F., - Teut.) M. E. riflen, P. Plowman, B. v. 234. – F. rifler, 'to tifle, ransack, spoile, make havock, Cot. A word prob due to the Norse sea-grapple, sense, Fig (usu, spect arga), to put up, scratcu, grasp; re-lated to which are Arifsa, to rob, pillage, Arifs, sb., plunder.  $\beta$ . We also find Icel. Arifa, a rake, O. Du. rijf, rieve, a small rake (Hexham); the form of the base would be harf-, answering to Lat. carpere; so that the root is probably  $\checkmark$  KARP, to seize; see Harvest.  $\gamma$ . The F. rifler (from Icel. Arifa) and rafter (from G. raffen) may not have been connected in the first instance, but the similarity of sound drew them together, as recorded in the E. riff-raff, q. v. Der. rifl-er.

RIFLE (2), a musket with a barrel spirally grooved to give the bullet a rotary motion. (Scand.) A modern word; rifle and rifleman appear in Todd's Johnson, ed. 1827. 'Rifled arms were known on the continent about the middle of the 17th century; they do not appear to have been introduced into the British service till the time of the American revolutionary war; Engl. Cycl.  $\beta$ . The sb. rife is a short form for rifled gun, and is due to the technical word rifle, to groove. This is a dimin, form from the Scand. form of the verb to rive, and means 'to tear slightly,' hence to channel, to groove. See Ripple (1). - Dan. rifle, to rifle, groove, channel, as in riflede söiler, fluted columns; cf. rifle, a groove, flute; riffel, a rifled gun; Swed. reffla, to rifle; cf. reffelbössa, a rifled gun. - Dan. rive (for rife), to tear; Swed. rifua, to scratch, tear, grate, grind; Icel. rifa, to rive; see Rive. So also G. riefe, a furrow, riefen, to rifle. ¶ The A. S. geriflian rests only on the authority of Somner, and is explained by 'ragare,' i. e. to wrinkle. If a true word, it does not correspond to E. rifle, but to the old verb rivel, to wrinkle; see  $\mathbf{Bivel}$ . It is, however, a closely related word. Der. rifle-man.

BIFT, a fissure. (Scand.) In Spenser, F. Q. i. 2. 30. M. E. reft, Rom. of the Rose, 2661; ryfte, Prompt. Parv. p. 433. – Dan. rift, a rift, rent, crevice, from rive, to rive; Norw. rift, a rift; Icel. ript, a breach of contract. Cf. Swed. refua, a rift, strip, cleft, gap; from Swed. rifua, to tear, rive. See Rive. Dor. rift, verb, Temp. v. 45, spelt ryft in Palsgrave.

BIG (1), to fit up a ship with tackle. (Scand.) Also to dress up a person, but this is merely the jocular use of the word, and not the old sense, as supposed by Johnson. In Shak., only in the nautical sense; Temp. i. 2. 146, v. 224, &c. 'High rigged ships;' Surrey, tr. of Virgil; Lat. text, celsas naues, En. iv. 396. 'I rygge a shyppe, I make it redye;' Palsgrave. Of Scand. origin; the traces of the word are very slight. - Norweg. rigga, to bind up, wrap round; in some districts, to rig a ship; rigg, sb., rigging of a ship; Aasen. Cf. Swed. dial. rigga pd, to harness a horse, put harness on him (which presupposes a sb. rigg, with the sense of harness or covering, just as the Swed. sela på, to harness, is from sele, sb., harness); Rietz. Perhaps related to A.S. wrihan, to cover. ¶ It is impossible that rig can be derived from A.S. wrikan, as has been suggested, because that verb became wrien in M. E., all trace of the guttural disappearing. Der. rig, sb., rigg-ing.

BIG (2), a frolic; prank. (E.?) 'Of running such a rig; 'Cowper, John Gilpin. 'Rig, a frolic; 'Halliwell. Riggish, wanton; Shak.
 i. 2. 245. The verb rigge, to be wanton, occurs in Levins, 'Certainly connected with Rickets, and Wriggle, Cf. W. rkim, rkimp, rkimp, a rim, edge, rkimpym, an extremity; wriggle; 'Sewel; Dan. wrikke, to wriggle. BIG (3), a ridge. (E.) 'Amang the rigs o' barley; 'Burns. M. E.

rig, a ridge; see Ridge. RIGHT, erect, straight, correct, true, just, proper, exact. (E.) M. E. right, Wyclif, Matt. iii, 3; &c. - A. S. riht, adj., Grein, ii. 378. + Du. regt. + Icel. réttr (for rektr). + Dan. ret. + Swed. rát. + G. reckt, O. H. G. rekt. + Goth. raits. B. All from Teut. base REHTA, right; Fick, iii. 248. A participial form from the base RAK, to rule, answering to  $\checkmark$  RAG, to rule, direct, whence Lat. rectus (for reg-tus), right, direct, answering to the pp. of regere, to rule. See Reotitude. Der. right, adv., A.S. rikte; right, sb., A.S. rikt; right-ly, right-ness, A. S. riktnes; right, verb, A. S. riktan; right-ful, P. Plowman, B. prol. 127; right-ful-ly, right-ful-ness. Also right-rous, well known to be a corruption of M. E. right-wis, Pricke of Conscience, 9154, A. S. riktwis, Grein, ii. 381, a compound of rikt and wis = wise, i. e. wise as to what is right. Palsgrave has the curious intermediate form ryghtuous. Hence right-cous-ly, A.S. rihtwisitce (Grein); right-cous-ness, M. E. rightwisnesse, Wyclif, Matt. vi. 1, Lukc, i. 75, A.S. rihtwisnes (Grein). From the same root are rect-i-tude, rect-i-fy, rect-or, rect-angle. rect-i-lineal, as well as reg-al, RIGID, stiff, severe, strict. (L.) In Ben Jonson, Epistle to a Friend, Underwoods, lv. 17. - Lat. rigidus, stiff. - Lat. rigere, to be stiff. Perhaps the orig. sense was 'to be straight;' cf. Lat. rechus, direct, right, straight. If so, it may be referred to  $\checkmark$  RAG, to rule, direct. Der. rigid-ly, ness, rigid-i-ty. Also rig-our, Chaucer, C. T. 11087, from O. F. rigour (mod. F. rigueur) - Lat. rigorem, acc. of rigor, harshness; rigor-ous, Cor. iii. 1. 267, from F. rigoreux, 'rigor-ous,' Cot.; rigor-ous-ly, ness. RIGMAROLE, a long unintelligible story. (Hybrid : Scand.; and F., - L.) The word is certainly a corruption of ragman-roll, once a very common expression for a long list of names, hence a long unconnected story. See my note to P. Plowman, C. i. 73, where it occurs as rageman; Anecdota Literaria, by T. Wright, 1844, p. 83, where a poem called Ragman roll is printed; Wright's Homes of Other Days, p. 247; Jamieson's Dict., where we learn that the Scottish nobles gave the name of ragman-rolls to the collection of deeds by which they were constrained to subscribe allegiance to Edw. I. A. D. 1396; Towneley Mysteries, D. 311, where a catalogue of sins is called a rolle of ragman; Skelton, Garl. of Laurell, l. 1490, and Dyce's note; P. Plowman's Crede, l. 180; Cowel's Law Dict., and Todd's Johnson, s. v. rigmarole. Also the long note on ragmanroll in Halliwell.  $\beta$ . In the next place, ragman was a name for the devil; and ragman-roll is the devil's roll, the devil's list. For an example of ragman in this sense, see P. Plowman, C. xix. 122, and the note; it was also a contemptuous name for a coward. y. The word roll is F.; see Roll. The word ragman is Scandinavian. Cf. Icel. ragmenni, a craven person, coward, ragmennska, cowardice; from Icel. ragr, a coward, and madr (= mannr), a man. Swed. raggen, the devil; Rietz cites O. Icel. ragvættr, an evil spirit, lit. 'a cowardly wight,' where vættr is our E. wight = G. wicht in bösemicht, a bad spirit. To call a person ragr was to offer him the greatest possible insult. 3. The Icel. ragr is believed to be the same word as Icel. argr, effeminate, by a shifting of r, as in E. Run, q.v. For a notice of the Icel. argr, see Arch (2). ¶ The word roll was sometimes pronounced row (see Jamieson); hence we find in Levins, ed. 1570: 'Ragmanrew, series,' where row - row.

RILE, to vex; see Roil.

RILL, a streamlet, small brook. (C.?) 'The bourns, the brooks, the becks, the rills, the rivulets;' Drayton, Polyolbion, Song 1. (He also has the dimin. rill-et in the same Song.) - W. rhill, a row, trench, drill ; contracted form of rhigol, a trench, groove ; dimin. of rhig, a notch, a groove. If this be right, the true sense is 'shallow trench' or ' channel ; ' there is no difficulty in the transference of the sense to the water in the channel, since the words channel, canal, and kennel are used in a like ambiguous manner.  $\boldsymbol{\beta}$ . There is also a Low G. rille, used in the sense of a small channel made by rain-water running off meadows, also, a rill ; see Bremen Wörterbuch. This is obviously the same word; but it may likewise be of Celtic origin, as there is no assignable Teutonic root for it. On the other hand, the W. rhill has an intelligible Celtic origin in the W. rhig above cited ; and, just as W. deg (ten) is cognate with Lat. decem, we may refer rhig to the Aryan A RIK, to tear, hence, to score, scratch, furrow; cf. Skt. lill. to scratch, lekhá, a stroke, mark, Gk. epeineur, to rend, Lat. rima (for ric-ma), a chink; see Fick, i. 195. Der. rill-et, rill, verb. ger See remarks on Drill (2).

rhimio, to edge ; rhimynu, to form a rim. Root unknown ; it is possible that the E. word was borrowed from Celtic. 2. We also find rim used in the sense of peritoncum or inner membrane of the belly, as in Shak. Hen. V, iv. 4. 15; and see Pricke of Conscience, l. 520, Sir Gawain and the Green Knight, 1343; the sense may be 'border,' hence envelope or integument. This is probably the same word. Otherwise, cf. A.S. Arif, the belly; see Midriff.

RIME(1), verse, poetry; the correspondence of sounds at the ends of verses. (E.) Usually spelt rhyme, in which case it is one of the worst spelt words in the language. This ridiculous spelling was probably due to confusion with the Gk. word rhythm, and it is. I believe, utterly impossible to find an instance of the spelling rkyme before A. D. 1550; perhaps not so soon. Dr. Schmidt omits to state that the first folio of Shak. has the spelling rime, Two Gent. of Verona, iii. 2. 69, Merry Wives, v. 5. 99, L. L. L. 2. 190; &c. It is rime in Minsbeu, ed. 1627, and in Cotgrave; ryme in Palsgrave. M. E. rime, ryme, Chaucer, C. T. 13639, 13852, 13853, 13856; &c. - A. S. rim, number, computation, reckoning (Grein); the present peculiar use of the word is in a secondary sense, from the numerical regularity of verses as to syllables and accents, hence at last used to denote a particular accident of verse, viz. the consonance of final syllables. + Du. rijm. + Icel. rima. + Dan. rim. + Swed. rim. + G. reim. O. H. G. rim, hrim, number (to which are due Ital. rima, F. rime, Span. and Port. rima). + Irish rimh; W. rhif, number. β. Curtius, i. 424, shews these words to be cognate with Gk.  $d\rho_i\theta_{\mu}\delta_s$ , number, in which the  $\theta$  is intrusive, as in  $\pi o \rho \theta \mu \delta s$ , a ferry, as compared with  $\pi \delta \rho \sigma s$ , a ferry. Irish not only has rimA, a number, but also aireamh in the same sense. which is also the Gaelic form; W. has both rhif and eirif; and these words go to shew that, in the Gk. apropuls, the initial a is rather a part of the root than merely prosthetic, as supposed by Fick, i. 737. That is, the root is Aryan  $\checkmark$  AR, to fit; whence also Harmony, q. v.; and see Arithmetic, Art.  $\gamma$ . This ultimate connection of the words art, harmony, arithmetic, and rime is highly interesting. The root of rhythm is SRU, to flow; which is quite a different matter. Dor. rime, verb (usually rhyme), M.E. rymen, rimen, Chaucer, C. T. 1461, from A.S. riman (Grein); rimeless (usually rhyme-less); rim-er (usually rhymer), spelt rimer in the first folio ed. of Shak. Antony, v. 2. 215; rime-ster (usually rhymester), the suffix of which is discussed under Spinster.

BIME (2), hoarfrost, frozen dew. (E.) Whilst the word above has no title to an A, the present word, conversely, has such a title; the word has lost initial h, and stands for hrime. M. E. rime, ryme. *Ryme, frost, pruina; * Prompt. Parv. - A. S. Arim, to translate Lat. pruina; Ps. cxviii. 83, ed. Spelman (margin). + Du. rijm. + Icel. Arim. + Dan. riim. + Swed. rim. Cl. also G. reif, M. H. G. rife, O. H. G. hrife. hoar-frost; Lithuan. szarmá, hoar-frost. B. The orig. sense was prob. 'ice;' or literally, 'that which is hardened;' Curtius connects E. rime with Gk. κρυμ-be, κρύ-os, frost. κρύσταλλοs, ice, from / KRU, to be hard ; see Crystal, Crude, Crust, Raw. Der. rim-y.

BIND, the external covering, as the bark of trees, skin of fruit. (E.) M. E. rind, rinde; Ancren Riwle, p. 150, ll. 4, 8. – A. S. rinde, the bark of a tree, Wright's Vocab. i. 285, col. 2; also, a crust (of bread), Ælfric's Hom. ii. 114, last line but one. + O. Du. rinde, 'the barke of a tree;' Hexham. + G. rinde, O. H. G. rinta. Root unknown.

BING (1), a circle. (E.) Put for Aring, initial A being lost. M. E. ring, Chaucer, C. T. 10561. - A. S. hring; Grein, ii. 106. + Du. ring. + Low G. ring, rink; Bremen Wörterbuch. + Icel. Aringr. + Swed. and Dan. ring. + G. ring, O. H. G. Arine. Further allied to Lat. circus; Gk. spinos, sipnos; see Circus. Also to Skt. chakra (for kakra), a wheel, a circle; Russ. krug', a ring. Der. ring, verb, K. John, iii. 4. 31; ring-dove, so named from the ring on its neck; ring-er; ring-lead-er, 2 Hen. VI, ii. 1. 170; ring-let, used to mean 'a small circle,' Temp. v. 37; ring-straked, i. e. streaked with rings, Gen. xxx. 35; ring-worm, a skin disease in which rings appear, as if formed by a worm, Levins, ed. 1570. And see rink, circus, cycle, rank, range, harangue.

RING (2), to sound a bell, to tinkle. M.E. ringen, Chaucer, C. T. 3894. – A. S. Aringan, to clash, ring; byrnan hringdon, breastplates clashed, Beowulf, 327, ed. Grein; ringdon ha belle, they rang the hells, A. S. Chron. an. 1131. The verb is weak, and appears to be so in all Teutonic tongues except modern E., which has pt. t. rang, pp. rung (by analogy with sing); we also find pp. rongen, rungen, in Allit. Morte Arthure, 11. 462, 976, 1587, + Du. ringen. + Icel. Aringja; cf. hrang, sb., a din. + Dan. ringe. + Swed. ringa. Lat. clangor, a din; see Clang. Der. ring, sb., ring-er β. Allied to

BINK, a space for skating on wheels, a course for the game of curling. (E.) The former use is modern; the latter is mentioned in Jamieson's Dict. It appears to be a mere variation of ring; compare the use of ring in the compound prize-ring, and the cognate Latin word circus. As to the form, we may note the Low Dutch rink used bover the stones;' Gray, to Dr. Wharton, Oct. 18, 1769. As pointed

RINSE, to cleanse with clean water, make quite clean. (F., -Scand.) 'He may ryase a pycher;' Skelton, Magnificence, 2194. O. F. rinser, 'to reinse linnen clothes;' Cot. - Icel. Areinsa, to make clean, cleanse; from hreinn, adj., clean, pure (the suffix -sa is exactly the same as in E. clean-se from clean); so also Dan. rense, to purify, from reen, clean; Swed. rensa, to purify, from ren, clean. B. The adj. is further cognate with G. rein, Goth. hrains, pure, clean; from the Teut. base HRAINYA, pure; Fick, iii. 82. Root unknown. The prov. E. rench, to rinse, a Northern word, and the form reinse, in Cotgrave, as above, are from Icel. hreinsa, directly.

BIOT, tumult, uproar. (F., = O. H. G. ?) M. E. riote, Chaucer, C. T. 4390, 4418; Ancren Riwle, p. 198, last line. = F. riote. 'a brab-bling, brawling;' Cot. Cf. Prov. riota, dispute, strife (Bartsch); Ital. riotta, quarrel, dispute, riot, uproar. B. The orig. sense seems to be 'dispute;' of uncertain origin. Diez conjectures F. riote to stand for rivote; cf. O. Du. revot, ravot, 'caterua nebulonum, et lupanar, luxus, luxuria;' Kilian. And he refers it to O. H. G. riben (G. reiben), to grate, rub (orig. perhaps to rive, rend); cf. G. sich an einem reiben, to mock, attack, provoke one, lit. to rub oneself against one. The word ribald appears to be of like origin; see Ribald, Rive. Der. riot, verb, M. E. rioton, Chaucer, C. T. 4412, from F. rioter, 'to chide,' Cot.; riot-er, M. E. riotour, Chaucer, C. T.

12595; riot-ous, id. 4406, from F. rioteux; riot-ous-ly, -ness. BIP, to divide by tearing open, cut open, tear open for searching into. (Scand.) 'Rip up griete; Spenser, F. Q. i. 7. 39. [It does not seem to be the same word as M. E. rippen, used in the Ormulum in the sense of 'rob;' this is a variant of M. E. ruppen, to rob, Layamon, 10584, and allied rather to Rob than to the present word.] It corresponds to M. E. ripen, used in the secondary sense of to grope, probe, search into, also used occasionally (like the mod. word) with the prep. wp. 'Rypande . the reynes and hert' = search-ing the reins and heart (said of God), Allit, Poems, B. 592. 'To rype upe the Romayns' = to search out the Romans, Morte Arthure, 1877. 'The riche kinge ransales... and up rypes the renkes' = the rich king seeks for and searches out the men, id. 3940. 'To ripe thair war' = to search their ware (where two MSS. have ransake), Cursor Mundi, 4893. 'I rype in olde maters, je fouble;' also, 'I rype a seame that is sowed;' Palsgrave. A Northern word, of Scand. origin - Norweg. ripa, to scratch, score with the point of a knife (Aasen); Swed. dial. ripa, to scratch, also to pluck asunder (cf. E. rip open), Rietz; Swed. repa, to scratch, to ripple flax; repa up, to rip up; repa, sb., a scratch; Dan. oprippe, to rip up. Allied to Icel. rifa, (1) to rive, tear, rend, whence rifa appr, to rip up; (2) to scratch, grasp, whence rifa upp, to pull up. Thus the word appears to be no more than a variant of Rive, q. v.  $\P$  The comparison, often made, with A.S. ripan (mod. E. reap) does not seem to be well founded; I suppose the root to be different; see Reap. Der. rip. sb.; ripp-le (1), q.v., ripple (3), q.v.

BIPE, developed, mature, arrived at perfection. (E.) M. E. ripe, rype, Chaucer, C. T. 17032. – A. S. ripe; 'and swa swa ripe yro fortreddon' = and trod [all] down like ripe com; Ælfred, tr. of Beda, i. 12. This adj. signifies ' fit for reaping,' and (like the sb. rip, harvest) is derived from the strong verb ripan, to reap; see Reap. + Du. rijp; whence rijpen, to ripen. + G. reif, O.H.G. rif; whence reifen, to ripen. Der. ripe ly, -ness; also ripen, verb, from A.S. ripian, Gen. xviii. 12. RIPPLE (1), to pluck the seeds from stalks of flax by drawing

Jamieson. M. E. rippien, ripelen. (Scand.) A Northern word; see Jamieson. M. E. rippien, ripelen. 'Rypelynge of flax, or other lyke, Awwlsio;' Prompt. Parv. 'Hoc rupestre, a repylle-stok,' i. e. an im-plement for cleaning flax; Wright's Vocab. i. 269, col. 2. The cleaning of flax was also termed ribbing (a weakened form of ripping); see Prompt. Parv., p. 432, note 2. B. Ripple is not to be taken as the frequentative form of rip, but as verbalised from the sb. β. Ripple is not to be ripple, a flax-comb (Jamieson); and this sb. is derived from rip by help of the suffix -le, sometimes used to express the instrument by which a thing is done, as in beet-le = a beat-er; stopp-le, used for stopping, lad-le, used for lading out, gird-le, used for girding. So ripple = an instrument for ripping off the flax-seeds, from Swed. repa, to ripple an instrument of ripping on the marsetus, non owen, repr., to ripple flax; see Rip.+Du. repel, a ripple, from repen, to beat flax (Hexham); whence repelen, to ripple.+Low G. repe, a ripple; in the dialect of Brunswick called repel, reppel; Bremen Wörterbuch. + G. riffel, a ripple; whence riffeln, to strip flax. See Ripple(3), Riffe(2). RIPPLE (2), to cause or shew wrinkles on the surface, like The essential idea in the rippling of water running water. (E.) is that it shews wrinkles on the surface. It appears to be quite a modern word. The earliest quotation in Richardson and Johnson is the following: 'Left the Keswick road, and turned to the left through shady lanes along the vale of Eeman, which runs rippling rimple; 'As gilds the moon the rimpling of the brook,' Crabbe, Parish Register, part 1, ed. 1807; where the edition of 1834 has ripplration Aregister, part 1, co. 1607; where the collidon of 1634 has rippl-ing. M. E. rimplen, to wrinkle, whence the pp. rymplyd, explained by 'Rugatus' in Frompt. Parv.; cf. 'a rimpled vecke' = a wrinkled old woman, Rom. of the Rose, 4495. This verb is from the sb. rimple or rimpil; 'Rympyl, or rymple, or wrynkyl, Ruga;' Prompt. Parv. = A. S. Arympelle, to translate Lat. ruga, a wrinkle, in a gloss (Bosworth). See Rumple. + O. Du. rimpel, 'a wrinckle, or a folde,' Hexham; rimpelen, 'to wrinckle;' id. B. The A.S. hrympelle is derived from the strong verb krimpan, to wrinkle, of which the only trace (in A.S.) is the pp. gerumpen (miswritten for or a late form of gehrumpen), occurring in a gloss (Bosworth). + O. H. G. hrimfan, M. H. G. rimpfen, to bend together, crook, wrinkle; cf. mod. G. rumpfun, to crook, bend, winkle. Y. As the verb is a strong one (pt. t. hramp), the Teut. base is HRAMP, a nasalised form of HKAP, answering to Aryan KRAP or KARP, as in Gk. rappew, to wrinkle. The base KRAP is preserved also, in a nasalised form, in the E. Crimp, Cramp, q. v. 8. Closely allied to Rumple, as also to Crumple. Der. ripple, sb., though this (in the form rimple) is really a more orig. word than the verb.

BIPPLE (3), to scratch slightly. (Scand.) In the Whitby Glossary, by F. K. Robinson (E. D. S.). 'Having slightly rippled the skin of his left arm;' Holland, tr. of Ammianus, p. 264; see Trench, Scleet Glossary (where it is wrongly connected with the word above). 'Ripple, rescindere;' Levins. This is merely a dimin. form of Rip, q. v.

BISE, to ascend, go upward. (E.) M.E. risen, pt. t. ross (pl. risen), pp. risen; Chaucer, C. T. 825, 1501. - A.S. risan, pt. t. ras (pl. rison), pp. risen; Grein, ii. 382. + Du. rijzen. + Icel. risa. + O. H. G. risan, to move up, rise; also to move down, fall. + Goth. reisan, pt. t. rais (pl. risum), pp. risans; only in the comp. ur-reisan (=A.S. á-risan, mod. E. arise).  $\beta$ . All from Teut. base RIS, to slip away, orig. expressive of motion only; cf. Skt. ri, to distil, ooze (we speak of the rise of a river); see Rivulet. The Du. rijzen even means 'to fall;' het loof rijst, the leaves fall (Hexham). Der. rise, sb., Hen. V, iv. 1. 289 ; a-rise, q. v. ; ric-ing, a tumult, also a tumour, Levit, xiii. 2; also raise, q. v., rear, q. v. RISIBLE, laughable, amusing. (F., -L.) In Minsheu, ed. 1627. -F. risible, 'fit or worthy to be laughed at;' Cot. - Lat. risibilis, laughable. – Lat. risi-, from ris-um, supine of ridere, to laugh; with suffix -bilis.  $\beta$ . Perhaps ridere is related to Gk.  $\kappa p(\zeta_{uv}, to creak; and is of imitative origin. Der. risibil-y, risibil-i-ty. From the same$ Lat. verb (pp. risus) are ar-ride (rare, = Lat. arridere, to laugh at), de-ride, de-ris-ion, de-ris-ive, ir-ris-ion, rid-ic-ul-ous.

BISK, hazard, danger, peril. (F., Span., -L.) Spelt risque in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. - F. risque, 'perill;' Cot. Cf. Ital. risico, (in Ariosto, risco), formerly risigo, as in Florio; Span. risgo, risk; Low Lat. risigus, riscus, risk. β. A maritime word, borrowed from Spanish. - Span. risco, a steep abrupt rock; from whence the sense of 'danger' may easily have arisen among sailors. Hence Span. arriesgar (arrisear in Minsheu), to venture into danger, lit. 'to go against a rock,' where the prefix ar- stands for Lat. ad- before r following, as usual; also arriscado, bold, forward (lit. venturesome); Ital. arrischiarsi, to venture oneself, arrischiato, hazardous. - Lat. resecare, to cut back, to cut off short or abruptly; whence the Span. sb. risco (Ital. risico) was formed in the same way as E. scar, an abrupt rock, is formed from the root of the verb to shear or cut off. = Lat. re-, back; and secare, to cut; see Re- and Section. γ. This suggestion, due to Diez, is satisfactory; he strongly supports it by citing mod. Prov. rezeque, risk, rezegá, to cut off; resega, risk, also a saw, in the dialect of Como; Port. risco, risk, also a rock, crag, also a dash with the pen, riscar, to raze out with the pen (- Lat. resecare, i. e. to cut out). And cf. Ital. risico, risk, with risega, a jutting out, risegare, risecare, to cast off; &c. ¶ Devic attempts a connection with Arab. rizg, riches, good fortune, Rich. Dict. p. 731, but a risk is bad fortune; and, when he relies on the Span. arriesgar as shewing a prefix ar-= Arab. def. article al-, he forgets that this prefix really represents the Lat. ad. Besides, the Ital. word is risico, spelt risigo in Florio. Der. risk, verb, risk-y.

RITE, a religious ceremony. (L.) 'With sacred rites ;' Spenser, F. Q. i. 12. 36. - Lat. ritus, a custom, esp. a religious custom. Cf. Skt. riti, a going, also way, usage, manner; from ri, to go. - A RI. ¶ The F. rit or to go, run, let flow; Fick, i. 193; see Rivulet. rite seems to be quite a modern word. Der. ritu-al, from F. ritual, 'rituall,' Cot., from Lat. ritu-alis, from ritu-, stem of ritus; ritu-al-ly; ritu-al-ism, ritu-al-ist.

BIVAL, a competitor. (F.,-L.) For the sense, see Trench, On the Study of Words. In Shak. Two Gent. ii. 4. 174. - F. rival, sb., 'a rival, corrival, competitor in love;' Cot. - Lat. rivalis, sb., out by Richardson, it is a by-form or contraction of the older verb to Lat. rivalis, adj., belonging to a brook. - Lat. rivals, a brook. stream ; with suffix -alis. See Rivulet. Der. rival, adj., rival, verb, K. Lear, i. 1. 194; rival-ry, a coined word.

BIVE, to split, tear, slit, rend. (Scand.) M. E. river, ry-ex (with u=v), Chaucer, C. T. 12762. - Icel. rifa, pt. t. rif, pp. ryses (= E. riven), to rive, tear; Dan. rive; Swed. rifva, to scratch, tear. + Du. rijven, to grate, to rake. + G. reiben, O. H. G. riban, to grate, β. Allied to Gk. epsines, to throw or dash down, tear rnh. down; from a base RIP.  $\gamma$ . Further, the form ipeistur appears to be parallel to ipeineur, to tear, break, rend, rive, from  $\sqrt{RIK}$ , to tear, whence also Skt. likk, to scratch, Lithuan. rekti, to cut, to plough a field for the first time. Der. rif-t, Q. v. And see ray, ripple (1), ripple (3), rifle (2), rivel; perhaps rib-ald, riv-er. RIVEL, to wrinkle. (E.) 'Praise from the rivell'd lips of toothless, bald Decreptude; 'Cowper, Task, b. ii. 1. 488. 'And rivell'd up with heat;' Dryden, Flower and the Leaf, 378. M.E. rivelen (with u for v); 'Al my chekes ... So riveled;' Gower, C.A. iii. 370. - A. S. gerifian, to wrinkle (Somner); a frequentative form from Rive, q. v. See note to Bifle (2).

RIVER, a large stream of running water. (F., -L.) M. E. river (with u = v); Chaucer, C. T. 3026; Rob. of Glouc., p. 1, 1. 14 -O. F. riviere, mod. F. rivière, a river, stream. It is the same word as Span. ribera, a shore, strand, sea-coast, Port. ribeira, a meadow near the bank of a river (whence ribeiro, a brook), Ital. riviera, the β. Thus the sense of 'river' is sea-shore, a bank, also a river. unoriginal, and was perhaps due to confusion between Low Lat. (and Ital.) riva, a bank (= Lat. ripa), and Lat. rises (Ital. rise), a river. -Low Lat. riparia, (1) sea-shore or river-bank, (2) a river, Doy. The cange: fem. of riparius, adj., formed from ripa, a bank. etymology of ripa is doubtful; Corssen derives it from RI, to flow, with a suffix -pa. It seems far better to consider it as equivalent to Gk. coin-vn, a broken cliff, scaur (hence, a steep edge or bank), from the base RIP, to rive, rend, tear off, seen in Gk. epeinen, to tear down, and in E. rive; see Rive. Cf. E. rift, a fissure, from the same source. Der. river-horse, the hippopotamus, Holland, tr of Pliny, b. viii. c. 25. Also (from Lat. ripa) ar-rive, q. v. ter Nat allied to rivulet.

RIVET, an iron pin for fastening armour, &c. together. (F.,-Scand.) 'The armourers, With busy hammers closing rivets up.' Hen. V, iv. chor. 13. 'With a palsy-fumbling at his gorget Shake in and out the rivet;' Troil. i. 3. 175. Ryvet, revet, Palsgrave - F. rivet, 'the welt of a shooe,' Cot. It also meant a rivet, as in 's la broche n'est pas rivée à deux rivectz en couverture,' since it is here joined to the verb river; this occurs in a quotation dated by Littre August, 1489. In Hamilton's F. Dict. river is explained by 'rivet,' and marked as a farrier's term. - F. river, 'to rivet, or clench, to fasten or turne back the point of a naile, &c.; also, to thrust the clothes of a bed in at the sides;' Cot.  $\beta$ . The F. etymologists give no satisfactory account of the word; Littré gives it up, and considers that the suggestion of Diez, viz, to connect the word with Icel. krifa, a rake, does not much help us; there being no obvious connection in the sense. y. But the word is Scand., as shewa by the Aberdeen word riv, to rivet, clench, Shetland riv, to sew coarsely and slightly; which see in Jamieson. - Icel. rifa, to tack together, sew loosely together; rifa saman, to stitch together, an expression which occurs in the Edda, i. 346. Der. rivel, verb, Der. rivet, verb, Hamlet, iii. 2. 90; Palsgrave has: 'I revet a nayle, Je rive;' also: Ryvet this nayle, and then it wyll holde faste.

BIVULET, a small stream. (L.) In Milton, P. L. ix. 420; Drayton, Muses' Elysium, Nymph. 6 (R.); and see quotation s.v. Bill. Not F., but an E. dimin., formed with suffix -et from Lat. riuul-us, a small stream, dimin. of riuus, a stream, river. (Prob. suggested by the similar word riveret, for which see Richardson, which is, however, a dimin. of River, and therefore from a different source, viz. Lat. ripa, a bank.)  $\beta$ . The Lat. rives is from  $\checkmark$  RI. to distil; cf. Skt. ri, to distil, ooze, drop; whence also Liquid, q.v. Der. (from Lat. riu-us) riv-al, q. v., de rive, q. v. And see riu.

RIX-DOLLAR, the name of a coin. (Du., -G.) 'He accepted of a rix-dollar;' Evelyn's Diary, Aug. 28, 1641; Evelyn was then at Leyden. - Du. rijks-daalder, a rix-dollar. Hexham gives rijcksdaelder, 'a rix-daller, a peece of money of five schillings, or 50 stivers.'-G. reichsthaler, 'a dollar of the empire.'-G. reichs, gen. case of reich. empire, allied to reick, rich, powerful; and thaler, a dollar; see Rich and Dollar.

ROACH, a kind of fish. (E.) Allied to the carp, but confused with the ray and the skate; fish names being very vaguely used. M. E. rocks. 'Rocks, fysche, Rocka, Rockia;' Prompt. Parv.-A.S. rookke (perhaps for rokke, as suggested by Ettmiller); we find 'Fanns, rookke' in a list of fishes, in Wright's Vocab. i. 56, col. 1; spelt a rival, corrival, competitor in love;' Cot. - Lat. rivalis, sb., reokche, id. 77, col. 2. + Du. rog, a ray; O. Du. rock, 'a fish called a book as another, a near neighbour, a rival. - scait,' Hexham. + Dan. rokke, a ray. + Swed. rocka, a ray. thomback. + G. roche, a roach, ray, thom-back. + Lat. rūia (for rag-ia), a the Span. form.

ray; see Ray (2). Root unknown. Doublet, ray (2). BOAD, a way for passengers. (E) Also used of a pl Also used of a place where ships ride at anchor; this is the same word, the F. rade being borrowed from Teutonic. Also used in the sense of raid or foray; 1 Sam. xxvii. 10. Shak has the word in all three senses; (1) Much Ado, v. 2. 33; (2) Two Gent i. 1. 53; (3) Cor. iii. 1. 5. M. E. roods (for ships), Prompt. Parv.; rods (for horses); Cursor Mundi, 11427.-A. S. rád, a journey, riding expedition, road; Grein, ii. 362. – A. S. rád, pt. t. of rídan, to ride; see Ride. Der. road-stead, road-way, road-ster (for the suffix, see Spinster); also in-road. Doublet, raid. ROAM, to rove about, to ramble, wander. (E.) M.E. roman, P. Plowman, B. xi. 124; K. Alisaunder, 7207; Seven Sages, 1429 (in Weber's Met. Romances, vol. iii); Havelok, 64; Will. of Paleme, 1608. The older form is ramen, preserved in the derivative Ramble, q. v. In Layamon, 7854, in a description of a shipwreck, we are told that the ships sank, and the Romans 'rameden geond upen,' i. e. roamed (or floated about) over the waves. Here the vowel a is long, and the corresponding A.S. vowels can only be  $\delta$ , d, or d.  $\beta$ . The etymology is (I think) from an A.S. (theoretical) form rámian \*, to stretch out after, tend towards, spread, hence, to try to reach, go towards, and so to journey or rove about. The evidences for the existence of such a verb are considerable, as will presently appear. We still have rame, to roam, ramble, as a Yorkshire word (Halliwell); Ray, in 1691, mentions ream, to stretch out the hand to take anything, to reach after, rame, to reach ; Thoresby, in 1703, mentions ramme, to reach; Brockett has rame, raim, rawm, to reach anything greedily, to stretch after; the Holdeness Glossary (E.D.S.) has rame, to gad about, to sprawl, to spread out too much; 'These branches is ramin all ower walk ommost [almost], we mun hev 'em y. In Anglo-Saxon cut.' Cf. Exmoor ream, to stretch (Grose). we find the derived verb a-raman, explained by Grein 'se erigere, surgere, se levare;' but it may be better explained by the notion of spreading or stretching out ; thus, in Cædmon, ed. Thorpe, p. 174, 1. 10, we have ' dæges briddan up ofer deop wæter ord áræmde ' = up over the deep water the beginning of the third day extended (or spread out like a growing light). Again, in Cædmon, ed. Thorpe, p. 203, 1. 29, we have 'up aramde se eorl'= the earl (Abraham) stretched himself up (i. e. arose). Again, in the same, p. 23, l. 15, we have the passage, where Satan laments the loss of heaven : ' beah we hine, for bam alwealdan, agan ne moston, rómigan úres ríces, which may mean ' though we, because of the Almighty's opposition, cannot get possession of it (heaven), cannot win our kingdom (or even perhaps, cannot roam over our kingdom).' That is, there is nothing against our taking A.S. rómigan as nearly the equivalent of mod. E. roam; it only occurs in this sole passage, but it is believed to be borrowed from the O. Sax. romon, mentioned below. 8. In cognate languages, the word is clearer, but not too clear. We have O. Du. ramen, to stretch cloth (Hexham); Du. ramen, to hit, plan, aim; O. Sax. rómún, to aim at, strive after; O. Fries. ramia, to strive after; O. H. G. rámén, to aim at, strive after. The O. H. G. rámén (also ráman) is a weak verb, and derived from the sb. rám, an aim, object, a striving after; the orig. sb., preserved in no other language. I may add that this view, as to the source of the E. roam, agrees with that given by E. Müller; it deserves to be further worked out. Wedgwood suggests a connection with E. room, A. S. rúm; this is obviously wrong, and deals with the wrong vowel-sound, as shewn by the derivative ramble; the form of the base is RAM, not RÛM, which excludes that theory at once. B. At the same time, it can hardly be doubted, that the use of the word was largely and early. influenced by the word Rome, on account of the frequent pilgrimages to it. Not only the Ital. romeo, a pilgrim, is derived from Roma, Rome, and denoted a pilgrim to Rome; but even in P. Plowman we have religious romares = religious pilgrims, B. iv. 120, which the author probably himself regarded as an equivalent to Rome-renneres = runners to Rome, B. v. 128 (only 8 lines below). This is probably why the orig sense of 'extend' or 'seek after' or 'strive after' or 'reach towards' is now utterly lost sight of, and the sense of purpossiess wandering alone left. But we can still say 'a great rambling house' in the sense of a house that is spread over a considerable space of ground. Der. roam-er, as above ; and ram-b-le. BOAN, the name of a mixed colour, with a decided shade of red. (F.) 'Roen, colour of an horse, roven;' Palsgrave. In Shak. Rich. II, v. 5, 78; 1 Hen. IV, ii. 4, 120. Explained by Schmidt as 'dark dappled-bay.' = O. F. rouën; 'Cheval rouën, a roane horse;' Cot. Perhaps there was an O. F. form roas \*, as intimated by Scheler; the mod. F. word is rouan. Cf. Span. ruano, sorrel-coloured, roan; Ital. roano, rovano, 'roane,' Florio. β. Origin unknown; the Ital. rovano looks like an extension from O. Ital. rufo, red (Florio); which is from Lat. rufus, red. Mahn (in Webster) suggests Lat. ranne, gray-yellow, which seems impossible, esp. as compared with cent., Littre), commonly rocks, a rock; the masc. form roc is later, Taylor (Words and Places) says: 'A curious instance of change of application in a name occurs in the case of the strong Normand horses which were imported from Rouen. They were called Rouss or Roans, a word which has now come to denote the colour of the horse rather than the breed.' He does not adduce one tittle of evidence, nor deign to name any authority. It was suggested by the fact that the name of Rouen is spelt Roan in 1 Hen. VI. i. 1. 65 (first folio), and in Minsheu's Dictionary, &c. But if this be the right solution, it is strange indeed that the French dictionaries should know nothing about it. Nares mentions this 'etymology' only to declare against it. [†] ROAN-TREE, ROWAN-TREE, the mountain-ash. (Scand.)

A Northern term, and of Scand. origin. Spelt roun-tree, roan-tree, rowan-tree in Jamieson. - Swed. ronn, O. Swed. ronn, runn (Ihre), the mountain-ash; Dan. rön, the service, sorb, mountain-ash; Icel. reynir, the same. Cf. Lat. ornus, the same.

BOAR, to cry aloud, bellow. (E.) M. E. roren. Wyclif, Rev. n. g. - A. S. rúrian, Ælfric's Homilies, i. 66, l. 18; and in Sweet's A. S. Reader. + M. H. G. réren.  $\beta$ . A reduplicated imitative word from  $\sqrt{RA}$ , to bellow, whence Skt. rá, to bellow, Lithuan. rēju, I scold, chide, and Lat. latrare, to bark. Der. roar. sb. ; roar-ing. But not up-roar.

BOAST, to cook meat before a fire. (F., -G.?)M.E. rosten. Legends of the Holy Rood, ed. Morris, p. 58, I. 504; Legend of St. Christopher, I. 203; Chaucer, C. T. 385.-O.F. rostir, 'to rost, broile, tost,'Cot. Mod. F. rótir. Prob. from G. rösten, to roast, a weak verb formed from rost, a grate, grid-iron.  $\boldsymbol{\beta}$ . But the word may be Celtic; we find Irish roisin, a grid-iron, rosdam, I roast, rost, roast meat; Gael. rost, roist, W. rhostio, Bret. ro.ta, to roast. The difficulty is to assign the root of it. Der. roast, sb.; roast-meat ( = roast-ed meat).

BOB, to plunder, steal, spoil. (F.,=O. H. G.) In early use, M. E. robber, Havelok, 1958; Ancren Riwle, p. 86, l. 13.=O. F. robber, 'to rob,' Cot. Usually spelt rober. The orig. senve was to despoil the slain in battle, to strip, disrobe; so that the verb is merely formed from the sb. robe, spelt robbe in Cotgrave, a robe. See Robe. ¶ The E. verb reave (usually bereave) is formed, in a precisely similar way, from the A.S. sb. reaf, clothing. Der. robber, M. E. robbour, Rob. of Glouc., p. 94, l. 17, from O. F. rcbbeur, 'a robber,' Cot.; robb-er-y, M. E. roberie, O. Eng. Homilies, ii. 61, l. 27, ROBE, a garment, dress. (F., = O. H. G.) M. E. robe, Rob. of Glouc., p. 313, l. 1; P. Plowman, B. ii. 15. = F. robe, a robe; spelt robbe in Cotgrave. - M. H. G. roub, roup, O. H. G. raup (G. raub), booty, spoil; hence, a garment, because the spoils of the slain con-sisted chiefly of clothing. + A.S. reaf, spoil, clothing. + Icel. rauf, spoil. β. All from the Teut. base RUB, to break (use violence). - VRUP, to break ; see Rupture. And see Reave. Der. robe,

- V RUF, to break; see Eugentes. And see Roave. Der. row, verb; rob-ed, K. Lear, iii. 6. 38. Also rob, q. v. EOBIN, a singing-bird, the red-breast. (F., -O. H. G.) 'Robyn redbrest;' Skelton, Phyllyp Sparowe, 399. 'The most familiar of our wild birds, called Robin red-breast, from Robin (the familiar version of Robert), on the same principle that the pie and the daw are christened Mag (for Mirgery) and Jack. In the same way the parrot takes its name from Pierrot, the familiar version of Pierre; Wedgwood. Robin Hood is mentioned in P. Plowman. B. v. 402.-F. Robin, a proper name (Cotgrave); a pet name for Robert, which was early known in England, because it was the name of the eldest son of Will. I. B. Robert is a Frankish name, from O. H. G. Rwodperkt (G. Ruprecht, whence our Rupert), meaning 'fame-bright.' i. e. illustrious in fame. Y. The syllable perkt is cognate with E. Bright, q. v. The syllable Ruod- is cognate with Icel. króthr, praise, fame; it occurs also in Rud-olf, Rud-iger, Ro-ger. Cf. Goth. hrokings, victorious, triumphant, 2 Cor. ii. 14. And see Hobgoblin. BOBUST, vigorous, in sound health. (F., -L.) 'A robust boysterous rogue knockt him down; ' Howell, Famil. Letters, b. i. sect. 3. let. 21; dated 1623. - F. robuste, 'strong, tough ;' Cot. - Lat. robustus, strong; formed by adding -tus (Aryan -ta) to O. Lat. robust (later robur), strength.  $\beta$ . The O. Lat. robus is allied to Skt. rabhas, strength, force, from  $\sqrt{RABH}$  (Skt. rabh), to seize. Der. robust-ly, robust-ness. Also (obsolete) robust-i-ous, Shak. Haml. iii. 2. 10, better spelt robusteous, as in Blount, directly from Lat. robusteus, oaken (hence, strong), by the change of -us into -ous, as in numerous other words.

ROC, a huge bird. (Pers.) See Rook (2). ROCHET, a surplice worn by bishops. (F., = O.H.G.) In the Rom. of the Rose, 4757. - F. rochet, 'a frock, loose gaberdine; .. also, a pre-lates rochet; Cot. - O.H.G. roch, brock (G. rock), a coat, frock. Root unknown. Cf. Irish rocan, a mantle, cloak, Gael, rockell, a coverlet, BOCK (1), a large mass of stone. (F.,-C.?) The pl. rockes or rokkes occurs in Chaucer, C. T. 11305, 11308 .- O. F. roke (13th of Celtic origin .- Irish and Gael. roc, a rock; Breton rock, pronounced with guttural ch, indicating that the word is Celtic, and not borrowed from French. That the word is lost in W. may be due to the use of eraig, a crag, in preference.  $\beta$ . Macleod and Dewar note that the Gael. roe, in the sense of 'rock,' is Engβ. Macleod lish; however, the word occurs in Irish and Breton. The Gael. and Irish roc, in the sense of 'wrinkle' (E. ruck), are certainly purple Celtic, being cognate with Lat. ruga. Whether there is any con-nection between these latter words and rock, I cannot say.  $\gamma$ . Diez suggests a theoretical Low Lat. rupica \* (from rupes, a rock), to account for Ital. rocea, and a form rupea \* to account for F. rocke; which is hardly satisfactory. [†] ¶ The M.E. rocke, in Gower, C.A.i. 314, is from F. rocke. Der. rock-pigeon, salt, -work; rock-y, rock-i-ness. BOCK (2), to move backward and forward, to cause to totter, to totter. (Scand.) M. E. rokken, Chaucer, C. T. 4155; Ancren Riwle, p. 82, l. 19. - Dan. rokke, to rock, shake; allied to Dan. rykke, to pull, tug, from ryk, a pull, a tug; Swed. rockera, a frequentative form, to rock, allied to rycka, to pull, from ryck, a pull, jerk. Cf. Icel. rykkja, to pull roughly and hastily, from ryckr, a hasty pull, also a spasm. Also G. rücken, to move by pushing; from ruck, a pull, jolt, jerk. Note also Icel. rugga, to rock a cradle. All from a Teut. base RUK, descriptive of a jolt, jerk, sudden movement. Der. rock-er, Perhaps from Dan. rokke, to rock; see Rock (2). Der. rock-et (1), q. v. ROCKET (1), a kind of fire-work. (Ital., - G.) In Skinner's Dict., ed. 1671. - O. Ital. racchetto, 'a bobbin to winde silke upon; also, any kinde of squib of wilde fier;' Florio. The rocket seems to have been named from its long thin shape, bearing some resemblance to a quill or bobbin for winding silk, and so to a distaff. The Ital. rocchetto is the dimin. of rocca, 'a distaffe or rocke to spinne with ;'

Florio. – M. H. G. rocks, a distaff; see Book (3). BOCKETT (2), a plant of the genus Eruca. (F., – Ital., – L.) In Levins. Spelt rokat in Sir T. Elyot, Castle of Helth, b. ii. c. 9. – F. roquette, 'the herb rocket;' Cot. - Ital. rucketta, 'the herb called rocket;' Florio. Dimin. of ruca, garden-rocket, Meadows (omitted in Florio).- Lat. sruca, a sort of cole-wort (White); whence the Ital. ruca, by loss of e. Root unknown.

BOD, a slender stick. (E.) M. E. rod, Gower, C. A. i. 310, l. 4. The word is a mere variant of rood, by a shortening of the vowelsound of which we have a few other examples, viz. in gosling from A.S. gosling, blossom from A.S. blossma, shod from A.S. gescod, fodder from A.S. fodor; not very dissimilar are blood, mother, from A.S. blod, modor. In the Owl and Nightingale, l. 1644 (or 1646), we have rod used in the sense of rood or gallows. 'Thou seist that gromes the i-foö, An heie on rodde the an-hoo' = thou (the owl) sayest that men take thee, and hang thee high on a rod (rood). See further under Rood. Doublet, rood.

RODEINT, gnawing. (L.) A scientific term. - Lat. rodent-, stem of pres. part. of rodere, to gnaw. Akin to radere, to scratch; from RAD, to scratch; see Base. Cf. Skt. rada, a tooth. Der. (from Lat. rodere) cor-rode, e-rode. And see rostrum, rat.

BODOMONTADE, vain boasting. (F., – Ital.) 'Crites. And most terribly he comes off, like your rodomontado;' Ben Jonson, Cynthia's Revels, Act v. sc. 2. 'And triumph' our whole nation In his rodomout fashion;' id. Masque of Owls, Owl 5. - F. rodomout-ade, 'a brag, boast;' Cot. - Ital. rodomontada, 'a boaste, brag;' Florio. A proverbial expression, due to the boastful character of Rodomonte, in the Orlando Furioso of Ariosto, bk. xiv; called Rodamonte by Bojardo, Orlando Innamorato, ii. 1. 56. Said to be coined from Lombard rodare (= Ital. rotare), to turn about, and monte, a mountain. See Rotary and Mount (1).

ROE(1), a female deer. (E.) M. E. ro; Chaucer, C. T. 4084, purposely gives the Northern E. ra. = A. S. rák; 'Capreus, rak-deor;' Ælfric's Gloss., Nomina Ferarum. + Icel. rá; whence rábukkr, a roe-buck. + Dan. raa; whence raabuk, a roe-buck, raadyr, roe-deer. Toe-buck, → Dan. ras; whence radous, a roe-buck, raday, roe-deer.
 + Swed. rd; whence rdbock, roe-buck. → Du. res; reebok, roe-buck.
 + G. rab; rehbock. B. Fick gives the Tent. type as RAIHA, iii.
 253. Der. roe-buck, M. E. roobukte, Trevisa, i. 337; see Buck.
 BOE (2), the eggs or spawn of fishes. (Scand.) The form roe is in Shak. Rom. ii. 4. 39. But it is due to a curious mistake. The true form is roan (with oa as in oak), but it seems to have been regarded as a olural, like onen, eyne (eyes), shoon (shoes), so that the n was dropped.

ROMANCE.

and only dates from the 16th century. Cf. Prov. roca, Span. roca, & cock's Glossary (Lincoln). "Round, roc," Whitby Glossary; where Port. roca, rocha, Ital. rocca, roccia, a rock. Perhaps (says Littré) the word has actually acquired an excrescent d. M. E. round, Prompt. Parv. - Icel. Arogn, Dan. rogn, Swed. rom, roe, spawn. + G. rogen, roe.  $\beta$ . Fick gives the Teut. type as HROGNA, iii. 83. It is not improbable that the orig. sense was 'gravel;' cf. Gk. spiny, sponda, a rounded pebble, Lat. calculus, Skt. carkard, gravel. ROGATION, supplication.  $(F_{\cdot, -} L_{\cdot})$  Particularly used in the phr. Rogation-days; see the Prayer-book, Hooker, Eccl. Polity. b. v. s. 41, Foxe, Acts and Monuments, p. 914, Hen. VIII (R.) - F. regetion; pl. rogations, 'rogation-daies;' Cot. - Lat. rogationens, acc. ot rogatio, a supplication, an asking. - Lat. rogatus, pp. of rogars, to ask. Root uncertain. Der. rogation-days. Also (from rogare) ab-rogane, ar-rogate, ar-rogant, de-rogate, inter-rogate, pre-rogat-ive, pro-rogue, super-e-rogal-ion, sur-rogate.

ROGUE, a knave, vagabond. (F., - C.) The word sometimes ROGUE, a knave, vagabond.  $(F_{11} - C_{21})$  The word sometimes meant merely a wandering mendicant; see K. Lear, iv. 7. 39, and Trench's Select Glossary. Shak, also has roguing, roguish, vagrant; Per. iv. 1. 97; K. Lear, iii. 7. 104. Cotgrave has: 'Roder, to roam, wander, vagabondize it, rogue abroad.' But the E. roguish also has the sense of arch, pert, and this can only be due to F. rogue, 'arro-gant, proud, presumptuous, malapert, saucie, rude, surly;' Cot. Thus the sense of 'surly fellow' would seem to be the original one, active transformed to begrave as a const term - and then the worth m easily transferred to beggars as a cant term; and then the verb to rogue abroad would mean 'to go about as a beggar.' <sup>(6)</sup> That a rogue was a common cant term may be seen in Harman's Causat. ed. Furnivall; he devotes cap. iv (pp. 36-41) to the description of 'a roge,' and cap. v to the description of 'a wylde roge.' He concludes by saying: 'I once rebuking a wyld roge because he went idelly about, he shewed me that he was a begger by inheritance; his grandfather was a begger, his father was one, and he must nedes be one by good reason. It just corresponds to the modern tramp.  $\gamma$ . [The M.E. roge, cited in Halliwell, is of unknown meaning; it rimes with dog, so that it may not be the same word ; the M. E. roge, in Morte Arthure, 3273, seems to be O. Swed. roge, a crowd. I do not think these words belong here at all.] 5. The F. rogw is referred by Diez to Icel. hrokr, but this word means lit. 'a rook.' and secondarily, a croaker, long-winded talker; which does not suit the sense. Littré and Scheler refer it, much more suitably, to Bret. rok, rog, arrogant, proud, haughty, brusque, which is obviously right. e. The Bret. form rok could not have come out of the F. form, and that the word is Celtic is borne out by Irish and Gael. rucas, pride, arrogance. Der. rogu-isk, -ly, -ness; rogu-er-y. BOIL, BILE, to vex. (F., ? - L. ?) That rile is the same word as roil, to vex, is certain; similarly toil, soil, are occasionally pronounced tile, sile. But the old word roil seems to shew two distinct meanings: (1) to disturb, vex, trouble, and (2) to wander about, to romp. I have given numerous examples in my note to P. Plowman, C. vi. 151. Mr. Atkinson suggests Icel. rugla, to disturb, as the possible origin of roil in the former sense; but this is not satisfactory, for it is difficult to see how the diphthong of could have come out of sg. β. It occurs to me that the suggestion in Stratmann as to roil, to wander about, may perhaps serve for the word in all its senses. His suggestion is that it arose from O. F. roeler, another form of O. F. roler, whence E. roll. To roll a thing about is to disturb it; to roll oneself about is to wander. See Roll.

BOISTERING, turbulent, blustering. (F., - L.) Todd cites from Swift (no reference): 'Among a crew of roist'ring fellows. Shak. has roisting, Troil. ii. 2. 208; and Levins has royst, vb. We have Udall's play of Roister Doister, written before 1553; and the sb. roister is in the Mirror for Magistrates (Nares). Roister, a bully, a ruffian or turbulent fellow, seems to be the orig. word which gave rise to the verb roist on the one hand, and the adj. roistering, i.e. ruffianly, on the other. - F. rustre, 'a ruffin, royster, hackster, swaggerer, sawcie fellow; 'Cot. This Littré explains as being another form of O. F. ruste, a rustic, the r being 'epenthetic.' – Lat. rusticus, acc. of rusticus, rustic, hence clownish. See Rustic.

ROLL, to turn on an axis, revolve, move round and round. (F.,-L.) In early use; M. E. rolles, Layamon, 22287, later text; Chancer, C. T. 12772. -O. F. roler, later rouler, to roll. - Low Lat. roulare, to roll, revolve. - Lat. rotula, a little wheel; dimin. of rota, a wheel. See Rotary. Der. roll, sb., M. E. rolle, Ancren Riwle, p. 344, l. 11, from O. F. rolle, later roule, 'a rowle,' Cot., which from Low Lat. rotulum, acc. of rotulus, a roll (preserved in the phraze custos rotuhorum). Also roll-er, roll-ing, roll-ing-pin, rolling-press. Also (from F. roule) roul-eau, roul-ette. Also cont-rol, q.v.; perhaps roil. BOMANCE, a fictitious narrative. (F., - L.) The French originals from which some E. poems were translated or imitated are often referred to by the name of the romance. Rob. of Glouc. (p. nusual (perhaps unique) in the case of apparent plurals in but common with plurals (or rather supposed plurals) in -s; nder cherry, sherry, pea. 'Roan, the roe of a fish;' Pea-de Lion is extant in E. verse; see Weber's Met. Romances. - O.F. romans, a romance (Burguy). This peculiar form is believed to have arisen from the late Lat. adv. romanice, so that romanice loqui was translated into O.F. by parler romans. It then became a sb, and passed into common use. The Prov. romans occurs (1) as an adj.= Lat. Romanus, (2) as a sb, the 'Roman' language, and (3) as a sb, a romance.  $\beta$ . By the 'Roman' language was meant the vulgar tongue used by the people in everyday life, as distinguished from the 'Latin' of books. We now give the name of Romance Languages to the languages which are chiefly founded on Latin, or, as they are also called, the Neo-Latin language.  $\gamma$ . The late Lat. Romanice, i. e. Roman-like, is formed from the adj. Romanus, Roman. = Lat. Roma, Rome. Der. romance, verb, romancer. Also (from Romanus) Roman, Roman-ist, Roman, Roman-ise; also roman-esque, from F. romanesque, 'Romish, Roman,' Cot., from Ital. Romanesco, Romanish. Also (from Roma) Rom-ist. And see Romaunt.

BOMAUNT, a romance. (F., -L.) The Romaunt of the Rose, usually attributed, on insufficient grounds, to Chaucer, is a wellknown poem. It is a translation of the French poem Le Roman de la Rose. Thus romaunt answers to F. roman. The final t is excrescent after n, as in tyrant, but is found in F. as well as E.; the O. F. form was (occasionally) romant, or even roumant, as in Bartsch, Chrestomathie Française, col. 401, l. 10. Another O. F. form of the same word was romans (whence E. romance), so that romans, romant are three forms of the same word; I have here mentioned them in their chronological order. See further under Romanceo. Der. romant-ic, spelt romantick in Phillips, ed. 1706, from mod. F. romantique, romantic, an adj. formed from romant, another form of roman, as explained above; romant-ie-al-ly.

plained above; roman:-ic-cai-iy. ROMP, to play noisily. (F., = Teut.) In the Spectator, no. 187, we find 'a romping girl,' and rompickness. The older spelling was Ramp, q. v. Pethaps we may compare A. S. rempend, hasty, Ælfred, Past. Care, c. xx (p. 148, l. 10). ¶ The change from a to o before m occurs also in from (orig. fram), comb (orig. camm), womb (Scotch wame); before n, it is tolerably common. Der. romp, sb., romp-isk, romp-isk-ly, romp-isk-ness.

BONDEAU, a kind of poem. (F., - L.) Borrowed from mod. F. rondeau. The M.E. word was Boundel, q.v. Doublet, roundel.

ROOD, the holy cross; a measure of land. (E.) The same word as rod, as shewn under Rod. Hence its use as a measure of land, because measured with a measuring-rod or 'pole,' of the length of 54 yards, giving a square rod of 302 square yards, and a square rood of 40 square rods, or a quarter of an acre. For the sense of 'cross,' see Legends of the Holy Rood, ed. Morris. – A. S. ród, a gallows, cross, properly a rod or pole; Matt. xxvii. 40, John, xix. 17.  $\pm 0$ . Fries. rode, O. Sax. róda, gallows, cross.  $\pm Du.$  roade, a rod, perch, wand, yard.  $\pm G.$  ruthe, O. H. G. riuti, a rod of land.  $\pm$  Lat. rudis (for rudhis?), a rod, staff. Cf. Skt. nyag-rodha, the Indian fig-tree, lit. 'growing downwards,' from nyaūch, downwards, and rudh, old form of rute, to grow. 'Rudis, a staff, certainly belongs to the  $\sqrt{RUDH}$  (also Skt. ruh), to grow; for it corresponds to A.S. ród-(a), O. H. G. ruota, which require an ante-Teutonic dh. Add Zend. rud, grow, liudan, to grow (with I), Church Slav. roditi, parere;' Curtius, i. 430. Der. rood-loft (Nares). [ $\pm$ ]

BOOF, the covering of a house. (E.) Put for kroof, initial k being lost. M. E. rof, Havelok, 2082; rkof, Ormulum, 11351. – A. S. króf, a roof, Mark, ii. 4. + O. Fries. krof. + Du. roef, a cabin. + Icel. Aróf, a shed under which ships are built or kept.  $\beta$ . We find also Russ. krov', a roof. Perhaps allied to Gk. movm-rese, to hide; see Crypt. Der. roof, verb; roof-ing, roof-less. BOOK (1), a kind of crow. (E.) M. E. rook, Prompt. Parv. –

BOOK (1), a kind of crow. (E.) M. E. rook, Prompt. Parv. – A.S. Aróc; Ps. 146, 10; ed. Spelman. + Icel. Arókr. + Dan. raage. + Swed. roka. + Irish and Gael. rocas. + M. H. G. rwock, O. H. G. Arwok; cf. G. ruchert, a jackdaw (Flügel).  $\beta$ . The word means 'croaker;' cf. Goth. hrwhjan, to crow as a cock; Skt. kruo, to cry out; Gael. roc, to croak. A word of imitative origin; see Croak, Crow. Der. rook-er-y.

BOOK (2), a castle, at chess.  $(F_{..} - Pers.)$  'Roke of the chesse, roc;' Palsgrave. M. E. rook, Prompt. Parv. = F. roc, 'a rook at chesse,' Cot. - Pers. rokk, 'the rook or tower at chess;' Rich. Dict. p. 737. The remoter origin of this word is unknown; Devic cites d'Herbelot as saying that in the language of the ancient Persians, it signified a warrior who sought warlike adventures, a sort of knighterrant. The piece was orig. denoted by an elephant carrying a castle on his back; we have suppressed the elephant. There seems to be nothing to connect this with the famous bird called the roe or rukk; except that the same word rukk, in Persian, means 'a hero, a knight-errant (as in d'Herbelot), a rhinoceros, the name of a bird of mighty wing, a beast resembling the camel, but very fierce,' &cc.; Rich. (as above). [†]

BOOM, space, a chamber. (E.) The older meaning is simply Claudius.

<sup>60</sup> 'space;' hence a place at table, Luke, xiv. 7. M. E. roum; 'and hath roum and eek space,' Chaucer, Legend of Good Women, 1995. – A. S. rúm; 'næfdon rúm' = they had no room, Luke, ii. 7. We also find A. S. rúm, adj., spacious; 'se weg is swide rúm' = the way is very broad or spacious, Matt. vii. 13. + Du. ruim, adj., spacious; sb., room. + Icel. rúmr, spacious; rúm, space. + Dan. and Swed. rum, adj. and sb., + Goth. rums, adj. and sb., Matt. vii. 13; Luke, ii, 7. + G. raum, O.H. G. rúm, space. B. All from the Teut. type RO-MA, spacious; or, as a sb., space; Fick, iii. 258. Allied to Lat. rūs, open country, Russ. ravina, a plain, Zend ravanh, wide, free, open, ravan, a plain; Fick, i. 197. Der. room-y, Dryden, Annus Mirabilis, st. 153, l. 609, a late word, substituted for the M. E. adj. roum (room); rcom-i-ness. Also room-th (Nares), obsolete. Also rumm-age, q. v.

BOOST, a place where fowls rest at night. (E.) Frequently applied to the perch on which fowls rest; as to which see below. Most common in the phr. to go to roost, i. e. to seek a sleeping-place. 'They go to roost;' Skelton, Elynour Rummyng, 191. 'Roost for capons or hennes;' Palsgrave. - A.S. hróst; Lye gives henna hróst, a hen-roost, but without authority. Yet it would appear to be the correct form, as Arist appears again in an obscure passage in the Exter-book; see Grein.  $\beta$ . We also have O.S. Arist in the Heliand, 2316, where the palsied man healed by Christ is let down through the roof; or, as in the original, thurk thes kuses krout, through the housetop. Here Heyne prints Arost, from a notion that the word is cognate with G. horst, which he explains by 'underwood;' but the latter is the familiar Kentish word Aurst, and is a different word altogether. + O. Du. roest, or kinnen-kot, 'a hen-roest;' roesten, 'to goe to roest, as hens;' Hexham. Y. In the Heliand, the sense y. In the Heliand, the sense of króst comes close to that of 'roof;' and I suspect that A.S. kró-st and A.S. hro-f are from the same source, and are related words. At any rate, roost is certainly related to Goth. hrot, Icel. hrot, a roof; we also find Icel. rot, the inner part of a roof of a house, where fish are hung up to dry, and this is the same as Norweg. rot, the inner part of a roof, a cock-loft (Aasen); cf. rost, a roofing (id.), Scotch roost, the inner roof of a cottage, composed of spars reaching from one wall to the other (Jamieson) 8. We may here find the exone wall to the other (Jamieson). planation of the whole matter; roo-st, Goth. hro-t, and roo-f are related words; and the orig. roosting-place for fowls was on the rafters of the inner roof. This is how roost acquired the sense of perch. Der. roost, verb.

BOOT (1), the part of a plant in the earth, which draws up sap from the soil, a source, cause of a matter. (Scand.) M. E. role, Chaucer, C. T. 2; Ancren Riwle, p. 54, l. 12. – Icel. role, a root; Swed. rol; Dan. rod.  $\beta$ . Hence Icel. role, to to root up, rout up, as a swine, corresponding to prov. E. wrowl, to dig up like a hog (E. D. S. Gloss. B. 7), M. E. wrown, a word used by Chaucer of a sow, Persones Tale (Six-text, Group I, 157), A. S. wrólan; see Boot (2). This proves that the Icel. rol stands for wrol, it being a characteristic of that language to drop v in the (initial) combination wr.  $\gamma$ . Further, wrol = wort.  $\delta$ . Also E. wort is cognate with Lat. radix, W. gwreiddym, O. Corn. gruetien, a root, and with Gk.  $\beta l_{\alpha}$  (for  $\rho l \delta_{\gamma \alpha}$ ), a root. Fick gives the Teut. base of root as WRÔTA, and that of wort as WORTI, iii. 294; thus they are not quite the same, but come very near together. The orig. sense was perhaps 'twig;' see Curtius, i. 438. The form of the root is WRAD or WARD; we can hardly compare the above words with Skt. wids, to grow. Der. root, verb, Wint. Tale, i. 1. 25; also root, vb., in the sense 'to grub up,' see BOOT (2): root-lets. Doublets. radix. word.

see Root (2); root-less, root-let. Doublets, radix, wort. ROOT (2), BOUT, to grub up, as a hog. (E.) In Shak. Rich. III, i. 3. 228, - A. S. wrotan, to grub up, Ælfric's Grammar, ed. Zupitza, p. 176, l. 12. + O. Du. wroten, 'to grub or root in the earth as hogs doe;' Hexham. + Icel. rota, to grub up, from rot, a root; Dan. rode, to root up, from rod, a root. See Root (1). BOPE, a thick twisted cord. (E.) M. E. rope, roop; spelt rop, Rob. of Glouc., p. 488, l. 17. – A. S. ráp, Judges, xv. 14, xvi. 9. + Du. reep. + Icel. reip. + Swed. rep. + Dan. reb. + G. reif, a circle, hoop (of a barrel), ring, wheel, ferrule; occasionally, a rope.  $\beta$ . All from the Teut. base RAIPA, a rope, hoop; Fick, jii. 247. Root uncertain. Perhaps related to Gk. paugos, bent, péµBeur, to turn round; so that the sense may be 'twisted.' Der. rope, vb., roper, a rope-maker, P. Plowman, B. v. 336, roper-y, rope-maker, rope-walk; also rop-y, adj., stringy, glutinous, adhesive, lit. rope-like, Skelton, Elinour Rummyng, 24; rop-ing, Hen. flower, petal, flowering shrub; Rich. Dict. 1638. This word, in passing into Gk., became, as a matter of course, Bópbor, Apôbor, bidor. See Curtius, i. 438; Max Müller, letter in Academy for 1874, v. 488, 576. Der. ros-ac-e-ous, from Lat. rosaceus (Pliny); ros-ar-y, M. E. rosarie, Chaucer, C. T. 16897, from O. F. rosarie\* (not recorded), later form rosaire = Low Lat. rosarium, a chaplet, also the title of a treatise on alchemy by Arnoldus de Villa Nova and of other treatises; ros-eale, a coined word; ros-ette, from F. rosette, 'a little rose,' Cot.; rose-water, rose-wood, ros-y, ros-i-ness. ROSEMARY, a small evergreen shrub. (F.,-L.) In Skelton, Garl, of Laurel, 980; and in Sir T. Elyot, Castel of Helth, b. ii. c. 9. Gower has the form rosmarine, C. A. iii. 132, where the Lat. marginal note has rosa marina. - O. F. rosmarin, 'rosemary,' Cot.; mod. F. romarin. - Lat. rosmarinus, rosmarinum, rosemary; lit. marine dew, or sea-dew; called in Ovid ros maris, Metam. xii. 410. - Lat. ros, dew; and marinus, marine. + Russ. rosa, dew. + Lithuan. rasa, dew (Nesselmann). + Skt. rasa, juice, essence; cf. ras, to taste. And see Marine. ¶ Named from some fancied connection with 'sea-Marine. spray;' in English, it seems to have been altered from rosmarine to rosemary from a popular etymology connecting it with a rose of Mary

ROSIN, the same as Resin, q. v.

ROSTRUM, a platform for an orator to speak from. (L.) Rostrum, the beak of a bird, prow of a ship, nose of an alembic; Phillips, ed. 1706.-Lat. rostrum, a beak, prow; pl. rostra, the Rostra, an erection for speakers in the forum, so called because adorned with the beaks of ships taken from the Antiates, A.U.C. 416; Livy, viii. 14 (White). Put for rod-trum, as being the organ where-with the bird pecks.-Lat. roders, to gnaw, peck; see Bodent. Der. rostr-ate, rostri-form.

BOT, to puttefy. (E.) A weak verb; pt. t. rotted; pp. rotted, as in Shak. Mid. Nt. Dream, ii. 1. 95. This pp. is little used, its place being supplied by rotten, a Scand. form; see Rotton. M. E. roten, rotien, Chaucer, C. T. 4405; pt. t. rotede, Genesis and Exod., ed. Morris, 3342; pp. roted, Will. of Palerne, 4124. – A. S. rotian, pt. t. rotode, pp. rotod; Exod. xvi. 24. + Du. rotten. B. Further allied to Icel. rotna, Swed. rutina, Dan. raadne, to become rotten, verbs which are formed from the old strong pp. appearing in Icel. rotinn, Swed. rutten, Dan. raaden, rotten. See Rotten, which belongs to a more original type. Der. rot, sb., dry-rot.

ROTARY, turning like a wheel. (L.) A modern coined word; in Bailey's Dict., vol. ii. ed. 1731. As if from a Lat. rotarius \*, from rota, a wheel. + Gael. and Irish roth, W. rhod, a wheel. + Lithuan. ratas, a wheel; pl. ratai, a cart, wheeled vehicle. + G. rad, a wheel. Cf. Skt. ratha, a car, chariot, vehicle; formed with suffix -tha from ri, to go (Benfey)  $- \sqrt{RA}$ , for older  $\sqrt{AR}$ , prob. in the sense to go, to run; cf. Skt. ri, to go.  $\P$  Fick proposes  $\sqrt{AR}$ , to fit, and compares Gk.  $\delta\rho\mu a$ , a chariot. The sense of 'runner' seems more consistent with the idea of 'wheel.' For the metathesis of r, see Run. Der. rot-ate, from Lat. rotatus, pp. of rotare, to revolve like a wheel; rot-at-ion, from Lat. acc. rotationem; rot-at-or-y, formed with suffix -y from Lat. rotator, a whirler round. And see rotund-i-ty, rond-eau, round, round-el, rund-let, roué, roll, row-el, rouleau, roulette.

ROTE (1), routine, repetition of the same words. (F., -L.) 'And euery statute coude he plaine bi role = and he knew the whole of every statute by role; Chaucer, C. T. 329. '[He] can noust wel reden His rewle . . . but be pure role' = he cannot well read the rule of his order except merely by rote; P. Plowman's Crede, 377. = O. F. rote (Burguy), mod. F. route, a road, way, beaten track. Hence the dimin. O. F. rotine, mod. F. routine, as in the proverbial expression par rotine, 'by rote;' Cot. Hence by rote = along a beaten track, or with constant repetition; see Rut (1).  $\beta$ . The orig. sense of O. F. rote is 'a great highway in a forest,' Cot., cognate with Ital. rotta, which, however, means a breaking up, a rout, defeat. The O.F. rote is really the fem. of rot, old pp. of rompre, to break (see Burguy), and thus rote = Lat. rupta, lit. broken. As Diez says, the F. route, a street, way = uia rupta, a way broken through, just as the O. F. brisée (lit. broken) means a way. Orig. applied to a way broken or cut rote, a musical instrument, as some suppose; see Rote (2). By way of further illustration, we may note that the Dict. of the French Academy (1813) gives : 'Router, habituer quelqu'un à une chose, l'y exercer. Les cartes se routent, pour dire qu'On a beau les mêler, les mêmes combinaisons, les mêmes suites de cartes reviennent souvent. And again : 'Il ne sait point de musique, mais il chante par routine ;' id. The latter passage expressly shews that to sing by rote is to sing without a musical instrument ! 'Playing on a role;' Spenser, F. Q. iv. 9. 6. - O. F. role, a musical instrument mentioned in Le Roman de la Rose, as cited by Roquefort. Burguy explains that there were two kinds of rotes, one a sort of psaltery or harp played with a plectrum or quill, the other much the same as the F. vielle, which Cotgrave calls 'a rude instrument of music, usually played by fidlers and blind men,' i. e. a kind of fiddle. Roquefort absurdly connects rote with the Lat. rota, as if it were a kind of hurdy-gurdy, which it never was, and this has pro-bably helped on the notion that E. rote in the phr. by rote must also have to do with the turning of a wheel, which is certainly not the case. = O. H. G. Arota, rota, M. H. G. rotte, a rote; spelt chrotta in Low Lat. (Ducange). Of Celtic origin; W. crwth, Gael. crwit, a harp, violin; see Crowd (2). Middle Ages, p. 217 of E. translation. Apparently Icel. rotian is the pp. of a lost verb rjóta\*, pr. t. raut \*, of which the base would be DIT to base would be RUT, to decay. Fick (iii. 255) further suggests that this base may be related to Lat. ruere; see Ruin. And see Bot. Der. rotten and ROTUNDITY, roundness. (F., - L.) In K. Lear, iii. 2. 7. ROUBLE, RUBLE, a Russian coin. (Russ.) Spelt rubble, Hackluyt's Voyages, vol. i. p. 256; roble, id. i. 280, under the date Aug. 1, 1556. - Russ. ruble, a ruble, 100 copeks; worth about 31. 4d.

The orig sense is 'a piece cut off.' – Russ. rubile, to cut. BOUE, a profligate. (F., -L.) Merely F. roue, lit. broken on the wheel; a name given, under the regency (A.D. 1715-1723), to the companions of the duke of Orleans, men worthy of being broken on the wheel, a punishment for the greatest criminals. Pp. of rower, lit. to turn round (Lat. rotare). - F. roue, a wheel. - Lat. rota, a wheel. See Rotary.

BOUGE, red paint. (F., - L.) Modern ; added by Todd to Johnson. - F. rouge, red. - Lat. rubeus, red ; whence rouge is formed like rage from Lat. rabies (Littré). Allied to ruber, rufus, red ; from a stem RUBH, parallel to RUDH ; the latter appears in Gk. épulpia, red, cognate with E. red ; see Rod, Buby. Der. rouge. verb.

BOUGH, shaggy, not smooth, uneven, violent, harsh, coarse, rugged. (E.) In Chaucer, C. T. 3736 (Six-text, A. 3738), the MSS. have rough, rogh, row. Other spellings are ruh, rugh. ru, row, ra; see Stratmann, s. v. ruk. – A. S. rúk, rough, hairy; Gen. xxvii. 11. Cf. A. S. rúw, rough; Gen. xxvii. 23.+Du. rug, hairy; rough, harsh, rude; O. Du. ru (Oudemans). + Dan. ru. + Low G. rung (Bremen Wörterbuch).  $\neq$  O. H.G. rúk, M. H. G. rúch, hairy; cf. G. rosa, rough.  $\beta$ . Cf. also Lithuan. raukas, a fold, wrinkle, rukti, to wrinkle; the orig. sense may have been uneven, like a ploughed field, or newly dug up ground; as suggested by Gk.  $\delta \rho \omega \sigma \sigma \omega \sigma = \delta \rho \omega \kappa \gamma \epsilon \omega \kappa$ , to dig up. ¶ In German, there is a tendency to confuse rauk, rough, with rok, raw, but they are quite distinct; the latter should rather be ro, the final & being unoriginal. Moreover raw stands for hraw, with initial h (Aryan base KRU); whilst rough is A.S. ruh with final & (Aryan base RUK). ROULETTE, a game of chance. (F., - L.) From F. roulette, named from the ball which rolls on a turning table; fem. of roulet, dimin. of F. roule, a roll; see Roll.

ROUSE (1), to raise up, excite, awaken, rise up. (Scand.) • To rouse a deare' [deer]; Levins. It was a term of the chase; cf. Rich. II, ii. 3. 128. 'Some like wilde bores, new rouz'd out of the brakes ;' Spenser, F. Q. ii. 11. 10. But the verb was orig. intransitive; and an animal was said to rouse when it rushed out of its covert. At the laste This hart rused, and staal away Fro alle the houndes a prevy way '= the hart roused (rushed out) and stole away; Chaucer, Book of the Duchess, 380. 'I rouse, I stretche myselfe; 'Palsgrave. -Swed, rusa, to rush ; rusa frem, to rush forward ; O. Swed. rusa, to rush, go hastily (Ihre); Dan. ruse, to rush. Cognate with A. S. Areósan, to rush, also to fall down, 'to come down with a rush :' Grein. β. The base is clearly HRUS, to shake, push, Fick, iii. ii. 104. 84; the orig. sense was prob. to start forward suddenly, to burst out. See further under Rush (1), which is not quite the same word as the present, but an extension of it. Hence also rouse is to wake a sleeper, ¶ Not connected with raise or rise; viz. by a sudden movement. nor with the Lowland Scotch roose, to praise, from Icel. Arosa, Swed. rosa, Dan. rose, to praise, which is rather connected with Rouse (2) below. Der. a-rouse.

ROUSE (2), a drinking-bout. (Scand.) In Shak. Hamlet, i. 2. 127; i. 4. 8; ii. 1. 58; Oth. ii. 3. 66. - Swed. rus, a drunken fit, drunkeness; runs, to fuddle; Dan. runs, intoxication, some russn ud (to sleep out one's rouse), to sleep oneself sober. We find also Du. roes, drunkenness; eenen roes drinken (to drink a rouse), 'to drink till one is fuddled' (Sewel); but it does not seem to be an old drink till one is fuddled ' (Sewet); put it toos not the word in Dutch, being omitted by Hexham.  $\beta$ . I have little doubt that the orig. sense was simply 'noise,' or uproar; and that it is connected with Icel. Arosa, to praise, Swed. ros, Dan. ros, praise, fame. These words are probably allied to Icel. kroor, praise, fame, from the proclaim: see Fick, i. 521, iii.85. That we got the Todd's Johnson: word from Denmark is shewn by a curious quotation in Todd's Johnson : 'Thou noblest drunkard Bacchus, teach me how to take the Danish rouza; Brand's Pop. Antiq. il. 228 (ed. Bohn, ii. 330). See Row (3). BOUT, (1) a defeat, (2) a troop or crowd of people. (F., - L.) Notwithstanding the wide difference of sense, the word is but one. More than that, it is the same word as Route, q. v. 1. Shak. has rout, i. e. disordered flight, 2 Hen. VI, v. 2, 31; Cymb. v. 3, 41; and rout, verb, to defeat and put to disorderly flight, Cymb. v. 2. 12. This does not seem to occur much earlier. 2. M. E. route, a number of people, troop, Chaucer, C. T. 624, Will. of Palerne, 1213; Layamon, 2598, later text. - F. route, ' a rowt, overthrow, defeature ; . also, a rowt, heard, flock, troope, company, multitude of men or beasts ; . . also, a rutt, way, path, street, course ; Cot. - Lat. rupta, fem. of ruptus, broken. B. The different senses may be thus exfem. of ruptus, broken. plained. 1. A defeat is a breaking up of a host, a broken mass of flying men. 2. A small troop of men is a fragment or broken piece of an army; and the word is generally used in contempt, of a company in broken ranks or disorderly array. The phrase in disorder nearly expresses both these results. 3. A route was, originally, a way broken or cut out through a wood or forest. See Rote (I), Route. ¶ The G. route, a troop, is merely borrowed from the Romance languages. Cf. Ital. route, Span. rote, a rout, defeat. It is remarkable that the mod. F. route has lost the senses both of defeat' and 'troop.' Der. rout, verb, as above. BOUTE, a way, course, line of march. (F.,-L.) Not much used in later authors, but it occurs very early. M. E. route, spelt rute, Ancren Riwle, p. 350, l. 1. – F. route, 'a way, path, street, course . . . also, a glade in a wood; 'Cot.  $\beta$ . The sense of 'glade' is the earliest; it meant a way broken or cut through a forest. - Lat. rupta, fem. of ruptus, pp. of rumpere, to break. See Rote (1), Rout, Rupture. Der. rout-ine. Doublets, rote (1), rout, rut (1).

BOVER, a pirate, wanderer. (Du.) M. E. rover, rovare. 'Robare, or robbar yn the see, rovare, or thef of the se, Pirata;' Prompt. Der. rove, verb; 'To rowe, robbe, Rapere; to rove about, Errare, vagari;' Levins. Perhaps from  $\sqrt{RA}$ , to fit.  $\P$  Quite distinct from Du. rij, O. Du, rijg, rijge (Oudemans), Low G. rige, rege, G. reike, a row. The G. reike is from O. H. RUB, to move over a surface with pressure, scour, wipe. (C.) M. E. rubben, Chaucer, C. T. 3745; P. Plowman, B. xiii. 99. Of Celtic origin. – Gael. rub, to rub, Irish and Gael. rubadh, a rubbing; W. rhubio, to rub, rhub, a rub. Cf. Irish ruboir, Gael. rubair, a rubber. (Hence also Dan. rubbe, to rub.) Der. rub, sb., Mach. iii, I. 134; rubber. Gr Not connected with G. reiben, which is I. 134; rubb-er. related to Rive.

RUBBISH, broken stones, waste matter, refuse; nonsense. (F.,-O. H. G.) Prov. E. rubbage, as in Norfolk (Forby). Palsgrave has 'robrishe of stones, plastras;' and Cotgrave explains the F. plastras by 'rubbish, clods or pieces of old and dry plaister.' Horman, in his Vulgaria (as cited by Way, note to Prompt. Parv., 1, 435) says that 'Battz [brick-bats] and great rubbrysske scruch to fyl up in the myddell of the wall.' These quotations shew that rubbrish was used in the exact sense of what we now usually call rubble; and the two words, rubble and rubbish, are closely connected.  $\beta$ . In the form rubbrish, the latter r is intrusive, since it disappears in earlier, as well as in later English. The M.E. form is robours, or robeun ; as, 'Robours, or coldyr, Petrosa, petro,' where coldyr is an old word for rubble; Prompt. Parv. Way adds: in the Wardrobe Account of Piers Courteys, Keeper of the Wardrobe 20 Edw. IV. (1480), occurs a payment to ' John Carter, for cariage away of a grete loode of robeux, that was left in the strete after the warderobe; 'Harl. MS. 4780. Y. The spelling robews furnishes the key to the solution of the word. It is a F. plural form, from a sing, robel\*, dimin. of robe. Here robel\* is exactly the mod. E. rubble, and the pl. robeum (or robeaum) became robours, as in the Prompt. Parv., and was easily corrupted into rubbage and rubbish, and even into rubbrisk (with intrusive r). In this view, rubbisk is the pl. of rubble, and was accordingly at first used in the same sense. 8. At what time the word robews first appeared in English we have no exact means of knowing, but I find an earlier trace of it in the fact that it was absurdly Latinised as rubbosa (as if it were a neuter plural), in accordance with its plural form, as early as A. D. 1392 or 1393. Blount, in his Nomolexicon, s. v. lastage, cites an act against throwing rubbish into the Thames, in which are the words 'aut fimos, fimaria, sterquilinia, sordes, mucos, rubbosa, lastagium, aut alia sordida;' Claus. 16 Rich. II. dors. 11. . The only difficulty is that the O. F. robel \* is not preserved; but it must have been a dimin. of robe in the sense of 'trash' which is found in the cognate Ital. robe, though lost in French. The lit. sense is 'spoil,' hence a garment, or any odds and ends seized as booty. It may be noted shortened, though orig. long; hence E. rob. 5. The whole matter is cleared up by comparison with Italian, which has preserved the corresponding word to this day. Florio explains Ital. robba (mod. Ital. roba) by 'a gowne, a roabe, a mantle; also wealth, goods, geare; also trash, or pelle.' Hence Ital. robaccia, old goods, stuff, filth, rubbish; robiccia, trifles, trash, rubbish. See further under Robe, Rob. ¶ It is doubtless the case that rubble and rubbisk have long been associated in the popular mind with the verb to rub; but it is equally certain that the words rubble and rubbish can only be explained by French. The sense of 'broken stones' is still preserved; see examples in Todd's Johnson. [†] BUBBLE, broken stones, rubbish. (F., -O. H. G.) Rubble, or

RUBRIC, a direction printed in red. (F., - L.) The rubrics in the Book of Common Prayer, and (earlier) in the Missal, &c., were so called from being usually written or printed in red letters. [M. E. rubriche, Chaucer, C. T. 5928; this is an O. F. form; cf. rubriche, 'rudle, oaker;' Cot.] = F. rubrique, 'a rubrick; a speciall title or sentence of the law, written or printed in red;' Cot. = Lat. rubrica, red earth : also a rubric, a title of law written in red. RUE (2), a plant with bitter taste. (F., - L., - Gk.) M. E. rue, Wyclif, Luke, xi. 42. - F. rue, 'rue, herb grace;' Cot. - Lat. ruea, rue; Luke, xi. 42. - Gk. purth, rue; a Peloponnesian word. ¶ The A. S. rude (Luke, si. 42) is merely borrowed from Lat. rula. BUFF (1), a kind of frill, formerly much worn by both sexes. (E.)

In Shak. Tam. of the Shrew, iv. 3. 56; Spenser, F. Q. i. 4. 14. Also as a verb: 'Whilst the proud bird, ruffing [ruffing] his fethers wyde; F. Q. iii. 11. 32. 'Ruffe of a shirt;' Levins. B. So called from A. Q. 11. 11. 37. 'Ruffe of a shirt;' Levins. β. So called from its uneven surface; the root appears in Icel. rjufa (pt. t. rauf), to break, rip up, break a hole in, A. S. redra (pt. t. pl. rufon), to reave, from  $\sqrt{RUP}$ , to break. See Reave.  $\gamma$ . This is verified by the cognate Lithuan. ruface add sources cognate Lithuan. rupas, adj. rough, uneven, rugged, esp. used of a rough road or a broken surface; whence ruple, the rough bark of trees, corresponding to E. ruffle (1). Cf. also Icel. rufinn, rough, uncombed; Ital. arruffare, to disorder, ruffle the hair, a word of BUFF (2), the name of a bird. (E. ?) Said to be so named from the male having a ruff round its neck in the breeding season; see Ruff (1). The female is called a reeve, which would appear to be formed by vowel-change; this is a very remarkable form, but has not been explained.

BUFF (3), the name of a fish. (E.?) M. E. ruffe, Prompt. Parv., p. 438. Palsgrave has 'Ruffe, a fysshe ; ' without any French equivalent. Origin unknown.

RUFFIAN, a bully, violent, brutal fellow. (F., - Teut.) 'A commune and notable rufyan or thefe; ' Sir T. Elyot, The Governour, b. ii. c. 12 (R.) - O. F. rufien, ruffien, 'a bawd, a pandar,' Cot. Cl. Ital. ruffiano, Span. rufian, a rufian, pimp, bully. β. Formed from the base roff- of O. Du. roffen, cited under Ruffie (2), q. v. Der. ruffian-ly, ruffian-ism. BUFFLE (1), to wrinkle, disorder a dress. (E.) 'I ruffie clothe or sylke, I bring them out of their playne foldynge, Je plicane; Palsgrave. M. E. ruffelen; 'Ruffelyn, or snarlyn [i. e. to entangle or run into knots], Innodo, illaqueo; 'Prompt. Parv. The word is probably E.; it is parallel to O. Du. rayffelen, 'to ruffle, wrinckle, or crumple.' Hexham; cf. rayffel, 'a wrinckle, a crumple, or a ruffle, id. β. The Lithuan. ruple, the rough bark on old trees, is a cognate word; so also is rauple, a rough scab or blister; both of which are extensions from Lithuan. rupa, rough, uneven. See Ruff (1). A parallel form is Rumple, q. v. Der. ruffle, sb., a wrinkle, a ruff.

RUFFLE (2), to be noisy and turbulent, to bluster. (O. Du.) 'To ruffle in the commonwealth of Rome; Titus Andron. i. 313. Cf. 'the ruffle [bustle] ... of court ;' Shak. Lover's Complaint, :8. 'Twenty or more persons were sleyne in the ruffle;' Hall's Chron. Hen. VIII, an. 19 (R.) Nares has: 'A ruffler, a cheating bully, so termed in several acts of parliament,' particularly in one of the 27th year of Hen. VIII, as explained in Harman's Caveat, ed. Furnivall, p. 29. They were highway robbers, ready to use violence ; any lawless or violent person was so named. It seems to have been a cant term, not in very early use; and borrowed, like several other cant terms, from the Low Countries. - O. Du. roffelen, to pandar, of which the shorter form roffen is also found (Oudemans); so also Low G. ruffela, to pandar, ruffeler, a pimp, a person who carries on secret intrigues (Bremen Wörterbuch); prov. G. ruffela, to pimp (Flügel); Dan. ruffer, a pandar. β. The words ruff-ler and ruff-ian are closely related and mean much the same thing; see Ruffian. Der, ruffl-er, as above.

BUG, a coarse, rough woollen covering, a mat. (Scand.) 'Ap-parelled in diuers coloured rugs; 'Hackluyt's Voyages, vol. ii. pt. ii. p. 87, last line but one. - Swed. rugg, rough entangled hair. The orig. sense of Swed. rugg was, doubtless, simply 'rough,' as it is cognate with Low G. rung, Du. ruig, rough, and so also with A.S. ruid, rough; see Bough. [In mod. Swed. rd, raw, is used also in the sense of rough, by the confusion noted under Rough.] And see Rugged. Der. rugg-ed; also rug-keaded, Rich. II, ii. 1. 156. RUGGED, rough, shaggy. (Scand.) M. E. rugged, Prompt. Parv. Chaucer has ruggy, C. T. 2885. The latter form is from Swed, ruggig, rugged, rough, hairy; cf. rugga, to raise the nap on cloth, i. e. to roughen it. - Swed. rugg, rough entangled hair; orig. 'rough,' cognate with E. Bough, q. v. See also Rug. Der. rugged-ly, rugged-ness.

BUGOSE, full of wrinkles. (L.) The form rugosous is in Blount's which is the simple and natural order. Milton has the very word Gloss., ed. 1674; Phillips has the sb. rugosity. - Lat. rugosus, wrinkled. - Lat. ruga, a wrinkle. + Irish and Gael. rug, a wrinkle. Root uncertain. Der. rugos-i-ty. BUIN, destruction, overthrow. (F., - L.) M. E. ruine, Chaucer, C. T. 2465. - F. ruine, 'ruine;' Cot. - Lat. ruina, overthrow. - Lat. ruere, to fall down, tumble, sink in ruin, rush. Root uncertain. Der. ruin. verb. Rich. II, iii. 4. 45; ruin-ous, Timon, iv. 3. 465, from F. ruineux, 'ruinous,' Cot.; ruin-ous-ly. Also ruin-ate (obsolete), Titus Andron. v. 3. 204.

RULE, a maxim, state, order, government. (F., -L.) M.E. reule, Chaucer, C. T. 173. Earlier riwle, as in the Ancren Riwle = Rule of (female) Anchorites. - O. F. riule, reule, also riegle (Burguy); mod. F. règle, a rule. - Lat. regula, a rule (whence also was borrowed A.S. regol, a rule). - Lat. regere, to govern ; see Rogal. Dor. rule, verb,

M. E. reules, earlier riwlen, Ancren Riwle, p. 4; rul-er, rul-ing. BUM (1), a kind of spirituous liquor. (Malay?) In Dampier's Voyages; Voyage to Campeachy, au. 1675; see quotation in R. We find also Port. rom, Span. ron, Ital. rum, F. rhum. Sometimes said to be a W. Indian or American word, for which there is not the slightest evidence. The etymology of this word has never been pointed out; I think it is obviously a corruption of the Malay brum, or bram, the loss of b being due to want of familiarity with the Malay language. – Malay bram, brum, 'an intoxicating liquor made from burat palm-sugar or molasses, and fermented rice;' Marsden's Dict. p. 39. This is precisely what rum is, viz, a liquor made from sugar or molasses. Moreover, the probability that rum is a Malay word, is rendered almost a certainty by the fact that it is much the same as ratefia, which is certainly Malay. See Ratafia.  $\beta$ . Wedgwood suggests that rum is due to the cant term rum booze, good drink, wine, noticed under Rum (2). Perhaps this cant term modified the Malay word.

BUM (2), strange, queer. (Hindi.) 'Rum, gallant; a cant word; 'Bailey's Dict., vol. i. ed. 1735. I suppose that rum means no more than 'Gypsy'; and hence would mean 'good' or 'gallant' from a Gypsy point of view, and 'strange' and 'suspicious' from an outsider's point of view. Hence rome bouse, wine, Harman's Constitution of view. Caveat, ed. Furnivall, p. 83, spelt rambooz in Phillips; rome mort, the queen, id. p. 84 (where mort = a female). Cf. rom, a husband, a Gypsy, rémmani, adj. Gypsy. The Gypsy word rom answers to the Hindi word dom (with initial cerebral d); see English-Gipsy Songs, by Leland, Palmer, and Tuckey, pp. 2, 269. Cf. Skt. domba (with cerebral d), 'a man of a low caste, who gains his livelihood by singing and dancing; 'Benfey. Also Hindustani dom, 'the name of a low caste, apparently one of the aboriginal races;' H. H. Wilson, Gloss. of Indian Terms, p. 147. RUMB, RHUMB, a line for directing a ship's course on a map; a point of the compass.  $(F_{..}-Span, -L_{.}-Gk.?)$  This is a very difficult word, both to explain and derive. The view which I here present runs counter to that in Littré and Scheler, but is recognised as possible by Diez. 'Rumb or Rhumb, the course of a ship ... also, one point of the mariner's compass, or II degrees . . . Rumbline, a line described by the ship's motion on the surface of the sea, steering by the compass, so as to make the same, or equal angles with every meridian. These rumbs are spiral lines proceeding from the point where we stand, and winding about the globe of the earth, till they come to the pole, where at last they lose themselves; but in Mercator's charts, and the plain ones, they are represented by straight lines,' &c.; Phillips, ed. 1706. These lines are called rumb-lines. See Rumb in the Engl. Encyc. (Div. Arts and Sciences), where it is said to be a Portuguese word, and where we find: 'a rumb certainly came to mean any vertical circle, meridian or not, and hence any point of the compass. . . . To sail on a rumb is to sail continually on one course. Hence a rumb-line is a line drawn in [on ?] the sphere, such as would be described by a moving point which always keeps one course; it is therefore the spiral of Mercator's projection, and is that which is also called the loxodromic course.' It is spelt roomb, roumb, and roumbe in Minshen, ed. 1627. - F. rumb, 'a roomb, or point of the compasse, a line drawn directly from wind to wind in a compasse, travers-boord, or sea-card; 'Cot. He adds the phr. soguer de rumb en rumb, 'to saile by travers.' – Span. rumbo, 'a course, a way; rumbo derecho, the right course;' Minsheu's Span. Dict., ed. 1623; also, a point of the compass, intersection of the plane of the horizon, represented by the card of a compass, the course of a ship; Neuman. Cf. Port. rumbo, rumo, a ship's course; quarto do rumo, a point of the compass; Ital. rombo. - Lat. rhombum, acc. of rhombus, a magician's circle, a rhombus (White).-Gk. pousses, a top, a magic wheel, whirling motion of a top, swoop of an eagle; also, a rhombus; see Bhomb. β. In this view, the ship; ruimen, to empty. clear, lit. to make room. Der. prov. E. sense of spiral motion comes first; then the delineation of such motion on a chart; and lastly, the sense of a point of a compass; RUMMER, a sort of drinking-glass. (Du., -G., -L.?) 'Rummer, komb in the sense of the revolution of the sphere; see Paradise Lost, viii. 134, and uses wheel as a synonym. That the word arose among the early Spanish and Portuguese navigators, is in the highest degree probable. y. The view taken by Scheler and Littré seems to me obviously wrong; they refer F. rumb (also spelt rum) to the Du. ruim, E. room, on the ground that a rumb is the 'room' or space between two winds; thus taking the last sense first. I cannot find that the Du. ruim ever had this sense; indeed Sewel, as late as 1754, can only render rumb into Dutch by een punt van't kompas; and Hexham mentions no such use of the O. Du. ruym. I therefore hold to the simple solution of the word from Gk. βύμβοs, instead of regarding the final b (found in Ital., Span., Port., and F.) as merely excrescent 8. The fact seems to be that Littre and Scheler are thinking of quite another matter, viz. the O. F. rum, 'the hold of a ship,' Cot. This is certainly the Du. ruim, since Sewel gives the very phrase ruim van een schip, the hold of a ship, i.e. its room, capacity for stowage. The very fact that the Dutch used ruim as a seaphrase in this connection renders it very improbable that they would also have used it in a totally different connection. Until at least some evidence can be shewn for the alleged use of Du. ruim, I do not see why the assertion is to be admitted. e. I also regard as purely fabulous the suggestion that a rumb was so named because, in old charts, the points of the compass were marked by lozenges or rhombs; the mark for the north-point, with which we are familiar, reminds one more of a fleur-de-lis than a rhombus, and there is nothing in the F., Span., Ital., or Port. words to suggest this very limited sense of them. 5. Finally, the spelling rumb seems better than rhumb; it is more usual, and suits the Spanish; the Greek word being only the ultimate source. ¶ Brachet derives F. rumb from E. rumb, evading the difficulty. Yet this is quite possible, as we may have taken the word immediately from the Spanish. Der. rumb-line. Doublet, rhomb. [†] RUMBLE, to make a low and heavy sound. (E.)

M.E. rom. blen, to mutter, Chaucer, C. T. 14453; to rumble like thunder, Legend of Good Women, 1216. Cf. prov. E. rommle, to speak low or secretly (Halliwell); rummle, to rumble; id. The word romblen likewise stands for romlen, the b being excrescent, as usual after m; and the suffix -len has the usual frequentative force. Thus the word signifies 'to repeat the sound rom or rum;' from the base RUM. significant of a low sound; which from  $\checkmark$  RU, to make a humming or lowing noise. Cf. Skt. ru, to hum, to bray; Lat. ad-rum-are, to make a murmuring noise (Festus); see Rumour. + Du. rommelen, to rumble, buzz. + Dan. rumle, to rumble. And cf. Swed. ramla, to rattle, Ital. rombare, to rumble, hum, buzz. Der. rumble, sb.,

BUMINATE, to chew the cud, meditate. (L.) 'Let hym . . . ruminate it in his mynde a good space after; 'Sir T. Elyot, Castel of Helth, b. i. c. 2(R)-Lat. ruminates, pp. of ruminare or ruminari, to chew the cud, ruminate. - Lat. rumin-, stem of rumen, the throat, gullet; cf. rūmare, used (according to Festus) in the same sense as ruminare,  $\beta$ . Probably rümen = rug-men \*, allied to O. Lat. erugare, to belch, rugire, to roar, bray; from  $\checkmark$  RU, to hum, bray. See Rumble, Rumour. Der. ruminat-ion, As You Like It, iv. 1. 19, from Lat. acc. ruminationem; also rumin-ant, from the stem of the pres. part. of ruminare.

RUMMAGE, to search thoroughly among things stowed away. (E.; with F. suffix.) 'Searcheth his pockets, and takes his keyes, and so rummageth all his closets and trunks;' Howell, Famil. 'Searcheth his pockets, and takes his keyes, Letters, vol. i. sect. 5. let. last. This is altogether a secondary sense; the word is merely due to the sb. room-age, formed by suffix -age (of F. origin) from E. room, space. Roomage is a similar formation to stowage, and means much the same thing. It is an old nautical term for the close packing of things in a ship; hence was formed the verb to roomage or romage, i. e. to find room for or stow away packages; and the mariner who attended to this business was called the roomager or romager.  $\beta$ . The history of the word is in Hackluyt's Voyages. 'To looke and foresee substantially to the roomaging of the shippe ; vol. i. p. 274. 'They might bring away [in their ships] a great deale more then they doe, if they would take paine in the romaging;' vol. i. p. 308. 'The master must prouide a perfect mariner called a romager, to raunge and bestow all merchandize in such place as is conuenient;' vol. iii. p. 862. 'To rummage (sea-term), to remove any goods or luggage from one place to another, esp. to clear the ship's hold of any goods or lading, in order to their being hand-somely stowed and placed; whence the word is us'd upon other occasions, for to rake into, or to search narrowly;' Phillips, ed. 1706. See further under Room. Cf. Du. ruim, room, also the hold of a a sort of drinking-glass, such as Rhenish wine is usually drunk in;  $\frac{\partial}{\partial}r_{u-mor}$ , a rumour) from  $\checkmark$  RU, to buzz, hum, bray; see Rumour. also, a brimmer, or glass of any liquor filled to the top; 'Phillips ed. 1706. 'Rhenish rummers walk the round;' Dryden, Ep. to Sir G. Etherege, 1. 45. - Du. roemer, romer, a wine-glass (Sewel); römer, s sort of large wine-glass (Brem. Wörterbuch). So also G. römer; Swed. remmare. The G. römer also means 'Roman;' I am told that the glasses were so called because used in former times in the Römersaal at Frankfort, when they drank the new emperor's health. If so, the word is really Latin, from Lat. Roma, Rome.

RUMOUR, report, current story. (F.,-L.) M.E. rumour, Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. ii. pr. 7, l. 1577. - F. rumeur, 'a rumor; Cot. - Lat. acc. rumorem, from nom. rumor, a noise, rumour, murmur. Cf. Lat. rumificare, to proclaim; rumitare, to spread reports; all from the base RUM, significant of a buzzing sound. - V RU, to make a humming or braying noise. See Rumble. Der. rumour, verb. Rich. III, iv. 2. 51. [†]

BUMP, the end of the backbone of an animal with the parts adjacent. (Scand.) M. E. rumpe, Prompt. Parv.-Icel. rumpr; Swed. rumpa; Dan. rumpe. + Du. rompe, 'the bulke of a body or corps, or a body without a head ;' Hexham. Dor. rump-steak.

BUMPLE, to wrinkle, crease. (E.) Cotgrave explains F. foupir by 'to rumple, or crumple.' The M. E. form is rimplen; rimple and rumple are parallel forms, like wrinkle and prov. E. runkle. Of these, rimple is derived from the A.S. hrimpan, to wrinkle, and rumple from the pp. gehrumpen of the same verb; see further under Ripple (2). + Du. rompelen, or rompen, 'to wrinckle,' Hexham; rompel, or rimpel, 'a wrinckle;' id. And cf. G. rümpfen, to crook, bend, wrinkle. Der. rumple, sb.

BUN, to move swiftly, flee, flow, dart. (E.) M. E. rinnen, rennen, pt. t. ran, pp. runnen, ronnen; Chaucer, C. T. 4098, 4103, 15389, 15394. The mod. E. verb has usurped the vowel of the pp. throughout, except in the pt. t. ran. By the transposition of r, we also find M. E. ernen, eornen, to run; Ancren Riwle, pp. 42, 74, 80, 86, 363, 360. – A. S. rinnan, pt. t. ran, pp. gerunnen; Grein, ii. 382; also irnan, yrnan, pt. 4. arn; id. 146 + Du. rennen. + Icel. renna; older form, rinna. + Dan. rinde (for rinne). + Swed. rinna. + Goth. rinnan.  $\beta$ . The Teut. base is RANN, standing for an + G. rennen. older base ARN; Fick, iii. 251. Allied to Gk. Spruu, I stir up, lp-xoual, I go; Lat. or-iri, to arise; Skt. rinomi, I go, rise, ri, to go. - AR, to rise, drive; Fick, i 19. Der. run, sb., Tam. Shrew, iv. 1. 16; run-away, Mids. Nt. Dr. iii. 2. 405; runn-er, runn-ing. Also runn-el, a small stream, Collins, Ode on the Passions; run, a small stream. Also renn-et (1); old form also runn-et.

RUNAGATE, a vagabond. (F., -L.) In Ps. lxviii. 6, Prayer-Book version; Shak. Rich. III, iv. 4, 465. "The A.V. has rebellious, as in Isaiah xxx. 1, which is quoted by Latimer (Remains, p. 434) in this form: "Wo be unto you, runagate children;" Bible Word-book. In the Coventry Mysteries, p. 384, it is written renogat: "Ys there ony renogat among us;" id.  $\beta$ . It so happens that gate in many E. dialects signifies a way; whilst at the same time the M. E. verb rennen passed into the form run, as at present. Hence the M.E. renegat, a renegade, was popularly supposed to stand for renne a gate, i. e. to run on the way, and was turned into runagate accordingly; r.e. to full of the way, and was turned into rangula accordingly; esp. as we also have the word runaway. But it is certain that the org. sense of M.E. renegat was 'apostate' or 'villain;' see Chaucer, C. T. 5353. - O.F. renegat, 'a renegadoe, one that abjures his re-ligion;' Cot. - Low Lat. renegatus, pp. of renegare, to deny again, to deny the faith. See Renegado. ¶ It is remarkable that when renegate had been corrupted into runagate, we borrowed the word over again, in the form renegade, from Span. renegado. It is a pity we could not do without it altogether.

RUNDLET, RUNLET, a small barrel. (F., = L.) Runlet is a later form, corrupted from the older rundelet or runlet; spelt rundlet in Levins, ed. 1570. 'Rundelet, or lytle pot, orcula;' Huloet (cited by Wheatley). 'Roundlet, a certaine measure of wine, oyle, &c., containing 184 gallons; An. 1. Rich. III. cap. 13; so called of his roundness; Minsheu. Formed with dimin. suffix -et from O. F. rondele, a little tun or barrel (Roquefort); the same word as O.F. rondelle, a buckler or round target (shield), in Cotgrave. This is again formed, with dimin. suffix -ele, -elle, from ronde, a circle, or from rond, round ; see Round.

RUNE, one of the old characters used for cutting inscriptions on stone. (E.) M. E. rune, counsel, a letter, Layamon, 25332, 25340, 32000; later roun, whence roun or round in Shakespeare; see Roun. -A. S. rún, a rune, mystery, secret colloquy, whisper; Grein, ii. 385. The orig. sense seems to be 'whisper' or 'buzz; 'hence, a low talk, secret colloquy, a mystery, and lastly a writing, because written characters were regarded as a mystery known to the few. + Icel. run, a secret, a runc. + Goth. runa, a mystery, counsel. + O. H. G. rúna, a secret, counsel; whence G. raunen, to whisper. from the Teut. base RU-NA, a murmur, whisper; formed (like Lat.  $_{\odot}\beta$ . Lat. russus = rud-tus, for rud+:us, from the base RUDH appearing

Der. run-ic, roun.

RUNG, one of the rounds of a ladder. (E.) Also a staff (Halljwell); one of the stakes of a cart, a spar (Webster). M.E. ronge, P. Plowman, B. xvi. 44; Chaucer, C. T. 3625 (where Tyrwhit's edition wrongly has renges for ronges). - A.S. krung, apparently one of the stakes of a cart; Grein, ii. 109. + O. Du. rouge, the beam upon which the coulter of a plough, or of a wagon rests; Hexham. + Icel. röng, a rib in a ship. + G. runge, a short thick piece of iroa or wood, a pin, bolt. + Goth. Arugga (= Arunga), a staff, Mark, vi 8. We find also Irish ronga, a rung, joining spar, Gael. rong, a joining spar, rib of a boat, staff; these seem to be borrowed from Eoglish. Prob. connected with A. S. Aring, a ring; see Ring.

BUPEE, an Indian coin, worth about two shillings. (Hind., - Skt.) In silver, 14 roopers make a masse;' Sir T. Herbert, Travels, ed. 1665, p. 46; cf. p. 67. The gold rupe is worth about 29. - Hindustani rupiyak, a rupee; Rich. Arab. and Pers. Dict. p. 753. - Skt. rupe. handsome ; also, as sh. silver, wrought silver, or wrought gold. - Skt. rupa, natural state, form, beauty. Supposed to be derived from res. in ropaya, causal of ruh, to grow (Beuley).

RUPTURE, a bursting, breach, breakage. (F., - I.) 'No peryll of obstruction or rupture;' Sir T. Elyot, Castel of Helth, b. ii. c. 32 (R.) - F. rupture, 'a rupture, breach;' Cot. - Lat. rupture, fem. of fut. part. of rumpere (pt. t. rupi), to break, burst. - / RUP, to break, violate, rob; cf. Lithuan. rupas, rough, A.S. reifan, to reave, Ski. rup, to confound, lup, to break, destroy, spoil; Fick, iii. 746. Der. rupture, verb. From the same root are ab-rupt, bank-rupt, cor-rupt, dis-ruption, e-ruption, inter-rupt, ir-ruption, pro-ruption, rote (1), route, BURAL, belonging to the country. (F., -L.) 'In a person rest. Course and Second Sec rus (gen. ruris), the country; see Rustic. Der. rural-ly, rural-ise. BUSE, a trick. (F. - L.) Used by Ray (died A. D. 1705), according to Todd (no reference). Phillips, ed. 1706, gives the adj. raw, full of tricks. - F. ruse, a stratagem. - F. ruser, 'to beguile, use tricks,' Cot. β. This F. ruser is a contraction of O. F. reiser, to refuse, recoil, retreat, escape; hence, to use tricks for escaping (Burguy) -Lat. recusare, to refuse ; whence the O. F. reuser was formed, precisely as O. F. seur, later súr (E. sure), from Lat. securus ; see Scheler. - Lat. re-, back; and cause, a cause, statement; so that recusare is to decline a statement. See Ro- and Cause.

RUSH (1), to move forward violently. (Scand.) M. E. ruschen, rushen, Chaucer, C. T. 1641; Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, B. 368; Sir Gawayn and the Grene Knight, 2204. - O. Swed. ruska, to rush; Ihre gives the example: 'Tha kommo the alle ruskande inn,' thea they all came rushing in; Chron. Rhythm. p. 40. This is clearly connected with O. Swed. rusa, to rush; whence E. BOUSO (1), q. v.  $\beta$ . The O. Swed. rusa also means to shake (cf. Swed. rusa, to stir, to make a riot); this is the same as Icel. rusha, to shake violently, Dan. ruske, to pull, shake, twitch. Y. Another sense of O. Swed. ruska (like G. rauschen) is to rustle; perhaps all three senses are connected, and the original notion may have been 'to shake with a sudden rush about; Bremen Wörterbuch. Low G. rusch, risch, a rush; Brem. Wörterbuch; Du. and G. rusch, rush, reed, small  $\beta$ . Also rush-candle, Tam. Shrew, iv. 5. 14; rush-light. RUSK, a kind of light, hard cake or bread. (Span.) 'The lady sent me divers presents of fruit, sugar, and rusk;' Ralegh, cited by Todd (no reference). - Span. rosca de mar, sea-rusks, a kind of biscuit, Meadows; rosca, a roll of bread, Minsheu, ed. 1623. - Minsheu also has rosquete, a pancake, rosquilla, a clue of threed, a little roll of bread, also lying round like a snake. Cf. Port. rosca, the winding of a serpent, a screw; fazer roseas, to wriggle. Thus the rusk was orig. a twist, a twisted roll of bread. Origin unknown (Diez).

S. rust stands for rud-st; at any rate, we may consider it as allied to A. S. rud-v. ruddiness, and E. ruddy and red; cf. Icel. ryd, rust, lit. redness; M. H. G. rol, rust, allied to G. rolk, red. RUSTLE, to make a low whispering sound. (Scand.) In Shak. Meas. for Meas. iv. 3. 38. The form is frequentative; and it seems best to consider it as the frequentative of Swed. rusta, to stir, to make a noise. This is a mere variant of O. Swed. ruska, to rustle; cf. G. ruscheln, ruschen, to rustle, rush, G. rauschen, to rustle, rush. β. Hence rustle is, practically, little else than the frequentative of Rush (1), q. v. γ. The A. S. krustle, a rustling, kristlan, to rustle, are unauthorised words, given by Somner, but they may be related; as also Swed. rysa, to shudder, and the Icel. strong verb krjosa, to shudder, A. S. hreosan, to fall with a rush. If so, the Teut. base is HRUS, to shake or shudder ; Fick, iii. 84. Dor. rustle, sb. ; rustl-ing. RUT (1), a track left by a wheel. (F., - L.) The verb rutien is formed from the sb. rut. = F. rut (so spelt even in the 14th century, Littré), better spelt ruit, as in Cotgrave, who explains it by 'the rut of deer or boars, their lust, and the season wherein they ingender.' - Lat. rugitum, acc. of rugitus, the roaring of lions; hence, the noise of deer in rat-time. Cf. F. ruir, 'to roar,' Cot., from Lat. rugire, to roar. - V RU, to make a noise, whence also Lithuan. ruja, ruttingtime; see Rumour.

SABLE, an animal of the weasel kind, with dark or black fur; also, the fur. (F.,-Slavonic.) M. E. sable, Chaucer, Compl. of Mars, 284; the adj. sabeline occurs much earlier, O. Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, i. 181, l. 362. - O. F. sable, the sable (Burguy); 'the colour sables, or black, in blazon;' Cot. Cf. Low Lat. sabelum, the sable; sabelinus, sable-fur, whence the O.F. sebelin, M.E. sabeline; the mod. The Russ. sobole, a sable, does not resemble Sibire, Siberia; nor does the adj. form sabeline (in O. F.) approach Sibirskii or Sibiriak, Siberian. [†] SABRE, SABER, a kind of sword. (F.,-G.,-Hungarian.)

A late word. 'Sable or Sabre, a kind of simetar, hanger, or broad sword;' Phillips, ed. 1706. - F. sabre, a sabre. - G. sabel, a sabre, falchion. B. Thus Diez, who says that at least the F. form was borrowed from German; cf. Ital. sciabla, sciabola, Span. sable. y. He adds that the G. word was also borrowed; and compares Hungarian száblya, Servian sablja, Wallachian sabie, a sabre. I find Hung. szablya, a sabre, szabni, to cut, szabo, a cutter, in Dankovsky, Magyar Lexicon, 1833, p. 327. At p. 863, Dankovsky considers szabni, to cut, to be of Wallachian origin. Der. sabre-task, F. sabretache, from G. säbeltasche, a sabretash, loose pouch hanging near the sabre, worn by hussars (Flügel); from G. säbel, a sabre, and tasche, a pocket. BACCHARINE, sugar-like. SACERDOTAL, priestly. (F.,-L.) In Minsheu, ed. 1627. -F. sacerdotal, 'sacerdotall;' Cot.-Lat. sacerdotalis, belonging to a priest. - Lat. sacerdol-, stem of sacerdos, a priest; lit. ' presenter of offerings or sacred gifts' (Corssen). - Lat. sacer, sacred; and dare, to give; cf. Lat. dos (gen. dotis), a dowry, from the same verb. The fem. form sacerdota, a priestess, occurs in an inscription. See Sacred and Date (1). Der. sacerdotal-ly, -ism.

S. sace, Gen. xlii. 25, 28. - Lat. saccus. -Gk. saknos. - Heb. saq, stuff made of hair-cloth, sack-cloth; also, a $sack for corn. <math>\beta$ . A borrowed word in Hebrew, and prob. of Egyptian origin; cf. Coptic sok, sack-cloth, Gent xxxvii. 34, Matt. xi. 21; see Peyron's Coptic Lexicon. E. Müller cites sak as being the Æthiopic form. Y. This remarkable word has travelled everywhere, together (as I suppose) with the story of Joseph; the reason why it is the same in all languages is because it is, in them all, a borrowed word from Hebrew. We find Du. zak, G. sack, Icel. sekkr, Swed. säkk, Dan. säk, Goth. sakkus (sack-cloth, Matt. xi. 21), Ital. sacco, Span. and Port. saco, F. sac, Irish and Gael. sac, W. sack. And see Sack (2). Der. sack-cloth, Gen. xxxvii. 34 ; sack-ing, cloth of which sacks are made, coarse stuff; sack-ful. Also sack (2), q. v. ; satch-el, q. v. Doublet, sac, a bag or receptacle for a liquid, borrowed from F. sac.

BACK (2), plunder; as a verb, to plunder. (F., -L., -Gk., -Heb., - Egyptian?) 'The plenteous houses sackt;' Surrey, Ec-Heb., - Egyptian?) 'The plenteous nouses succes, out of, and clesiastes, c. v; l. 45. Formed from the sb. sack, pillage. 'And Troië brought;' Turbervile, Dispraise of Women (R.) - F. sac, 'a sack, waste, ruine, havock, spoile;' Cot. Cf. F. saccager, 'to sack, pillage,' Cot.; also O. F. sacquer, 'to draw hastily, to pull out speedily or apace;' Cot. We also find Low Lat. saccare, to put into a bag; a common word; and Low Lat. saccus, a garment, robe, treasure, purse.  $\beta$ . There seems to be little doubt that the F. sac, pillage, is connected with, and due to, the F. sac, a sack, from Lat. saccus; see Sack (1). The simplest solution is that in Wedgwood, ' from the use of a sack in removing plunder;' though the sense is probably rather metaphorical than exact. In the same way we talk of bagging, i.e. pilfering a thing, or of pocketing it, and of baggage as a general term, whether bags be actually used or not. Thus Hexham gives O. Du. zacken, 'to put in a sack, or fill a sack;' zacken ende packen, 'to put up bagg and baggage, or to trusse up.' Y. The use of O.F. sacquer is remarky. The use of O. F. sacquer is remarkable, as it seems to express, at first sight, just the opposite to packing up; but perhaps it meant, originally, to search in a sack, to pull out of a purse; for the sacking of a town involves the two processes: (1) that of taking things out of their old receptacles, and (2) that of putting them into new ones; note the Low Lat. saccus in the senses of 'treasure' and 'purse.' Burguy notes that the O.F. desacher, lit. to draw out of a sack, was used in the same way as the 8. It deserves to be added that Cotgrave gives simple verb. 17 proverbs involving the word sae, clearly proving its common use in phrases. One of them is: 'On luy a donné son sac et ses quilles, he hath his passport given him, he is turned out to grazing, said of a servant whom his master hath put away;' hence the E. phrase, 'to give one the sack.' And again : 'Acheter un chat en sac, to buy a pig in a poak.' SACK (3), the name of an old Spanish wine. (F., -L.) See the account in Nares. He notices that it was also called seck, a better an old account-book of the city of Worcester: "Anno Eliz. xxxiii]. BaD, heavy. serious, sorrowful. (E.) Item, for a gallon of claret wine, and seck, and a pound of sugar." Other instances have been found.' By Sherris sack, Falstaff meant 'sack from Xeres,' our sherry; see Shorry. Sack was a Spanish wine of the dry or rough kind. - F. sec, dry; in the phrase via sec; Sherwood (in his index to Cotgrave) has: 'Sack (wine), vin d'Espagne, vin sec.' Cf. Span. seco, dry. - Lat. siecum, acc. of siccus, dry. Root uncertain.  $\P$  We may note Du. sek, sack, a sort of wine (Sewel), as illustrating the fact that sack stands for seck; this also is from F. sec. So also G. sek, sack; Swed. seck (Widegren). [†]

SACKBUT, a kind of wind-instrument. (F., – Span, – Hybrid of Heb. and Teutonic.) In Dan. iii, 5. The sack-but resembled the modern trombone, and was a wind instrument; the word is used to translate the Heb. sabbeká (with initial samech), Gk. oaµβύκη, Lat. sambuca, which was a stringed instrument. There is no connection between these words and the sackbut. - F. saquebute, a sackbut, trombone; Littré - Span. sacabuche (nautical word), a tube or pipe which serves as a pump; also, a sackbut; Neuman. Cf. Port.  $\beta$ . The origin is doubtful; the sacabuxa, saquebuxo, a sackbut. first part of the word is plainly derived from Span. sacar, to draw out, with reference to the tube of the instrument; but I can find no satisfactory solution of the whole word. The Span. bucke means the maw, crop, or stomach of an animal, and, colloquially, the human stomach. Hence the suggestion in Webster, that sacabuche means ' that which exhausts the stomach or chest ;' a name possibly given in derision from the exertion used in playing it.  $\gamma$ . Adopting this etymology, we may further note that secar, to draw out, extract, empty, is the same word as the O.F. sacquer, to draw out hastily, and also has the same sense as O. F. desacher, to draw out of a sack, all of these being derived from Low Lat. saccus, a sack, of Heb. origin; see Sack (2) and Sack (1). 8. The word bucke is derived by Diez from the Teutonic. viz. from O. H. G. bozo, a bunch, which from bozen, to teat ; see Boss.

SACRAMENT, a solemn religious rite, the eucharist. (L.) M.E. sacrament, Chaucer, C.T. 9576. – Lat. sacramentum, an engagement, military oath ; in ecclesiastical writers, a mystery, sacrament. Formed with suffix -mentum from sacrare, to dedicate, consecrate, render sacred or solemn. – Lat. sacr., stem of sacer, sacred; see Sacred. Der. sacrament-al, sacrament-al-y.

BACRED, made holy, religious. (F., -L.) Sacred is the pp. of M. E. sacren, to render holy, consecrate, a verb now obsolete. We find sacreth = consecrates, in Ancren Riwle, p. 268, 1.5. The pp. issacred, consecrated, occurs in Rob. of Glouc. p. 330, where the prefix i- (=A.S. ge-) is merely the mark of the Southern dialect. 'He was . . sacryd or enoynted emperoure of Rome;' Fabyan's Chron. cap. 155, last line. [Hence too sacring-bell, Hen. VIII, iii, 2. 295.] = O.F. sacrer, 'to consecrate;' Cot. = Lat. sacrare, to consecrate. = Lat. sacr., stem of sacer, sacred, holy. = Lat. base SAC, appearing in a nasalised form in sancire, to render inviolable, establish, confirm; see Saint. Der. sacred-ly, sacred-ness; and see sacra-ment, sacri-fice, sacri-lege, sacrist-an, sext-on; sacer-dotal; consecrate, de-secrate, ex-crate, obsecrate.

SACRIFICE, an offering to a deity. (F., -L.) M. E. sacrifise, Ancren Riwle, p. 138, ll. 9, 11; also sacrifice. - F. sacrifice, 'a sacrifice;' Cot. - Lat. sacrificium, a sacrifice, lit. a rendering sacred; cf. sacrificare, to sacrifice. - Lat. sacri-, for sacro-, crude form of sacer, sacred; and facere, to make; see Sacred and Fact. Der. sacrifice, vb., sacrific-er; sacrific-er; sacrifici-al.

SACRILECE, profanzion of what is holy. (F., -L.) M. E. sacrilege, spelt sacrilegge, Gower, C. Der. sacrilegi-ous, Mach. ii. 3. 72, a coined word; sacrileg-i-ous-ly, -ness. BACRISTAN, SEXTON, an officer in a church who has

SACRISTAN, SEXTON, an officer in a church who has charge of the sacred vessels and vestments. (F., -L.) The corruption of sacristan into sexton took place so early that it is not easy to find the spelling sacristan, though it appears in Blount's Glossographia, ed. 1674. The duties of the sacristan have suffered alteration; he is now the grave-digger rather than the keeper of the vestments. The form sexteins in Chaucer, C. T. 13042; the collateral form Saxton survives as a proper name; I find it in the Clergy List for 1873. – F. sacristain, 'a sexton, or vestry-keeper, in a church;' Cot. Formed as if from Low Lat. sacristanss*, but the usual Low Lat. word is simply sacrista, without the suffix; cf. 'Sexteyne, Sacrista,' Prompt. Parv.; and see Ducange. Formed with suffix -ista (=Gk. -tarns) from Lat. sacristaie, 'a vestry, or sextry in a church,' Cot.; cf. 'Sextrye, Sacristia,' Prompt. Parv.

SAD, heavy. serious, sorrowful. (E.) 'Sadde, tristis;' Levins. M. E. sad, with very various meanings; Halliwell explains it by 'serious, discreet, sober, heavy (said of bread), dark (of coloar), heavy, solid, close, firm (said of iron and stone).' The W. sad means 'firm, steady, discreet;' and may have been borrowed from E. during the M. E. period.  $\beta$ . But the oldest meaning is 'sated.' Thus, in Layamon, 20830, we have 'sad of mine londe' = sated, or tired, of my land. Hence seem to have resulted the senses of satisfied, fixed, firm, steadfast, &c.; see examples in Stratmann and in the Glossary to Will. of Palerne, &c. The mod. E. sad is directly from the sense of sated, tired, weary. -A. S. sad, sated, satiated; Grein, ii. 394. +O. Sax: sad, sated. + Icel. saddr, old form sadr, sated, having got one's fill. + Goth. satks, full, filled, sated. + G. satt, satiated, fiul, satisfied, weary.  $\beta$ . All from the Trut. type SADA, sated, Fick, iii. 318. Cognate words are found in Lithuan. solus, satiated; Fick, iii. 318. Cognate words are found in Lithuan. solus, satiated; Fick, iii. 318. See Satisto, Satisfy. ness. Also sadd-en, verb, from M.E. sadden, to settle, confirm, P. Plowman, B. x. 242; cf. A.S. gesadian, to fill (Grein), A.S. sadian, to feel weary or sad, Ælfred, tr. of Boethius, cap. xxxix, § 4.

SADDLE, a leathern seat, put on a horse's back. (E.) M.E. sadel (with one d), Chaucer, C. T. 2164. - A. S. sadol; Grein, ii. 387. + Du. zadel. + Icel. sööull. + Swed. and Dan. sadel. + G. sattel; O. H. G. satul. + Russ. siedlo. + Lat. sella (put for sed-la).  $\beta$ . The form of the word is abnormal; some suppose it not to be Teutonic, but borrowed from the Lat. sedile; this we may confidently reject, as the Lat. sedile is not a saddle, but a chair, the true Lat. word being sella. Perhaps the Teutonic form was borrowed from Slavonic ; it is quite clear that the Russ, siedlo, a saddle. is from the verb sidiete, to sit (or from the root of that verb); and that the Lat. sella is from sedere, to sit. Y. Hence, though we cannot derive saddle immediately from the E. verb to sit. we may safely refer it, and all its cognates (or borrowed forms) to  $\checkmark$  SAD, to sit; cf. (Vedic) Skt. sad, to sit down, Skt. sadas, a seat, abode, 8. As we cannot well determine by what route the word came to us, we may call it an E. word; it is, doubtless, of great antiquity. e. It is worth noting, that the A.S. setl, i.e. a settle, throne, appears in the Northumbrian version of Matt. xxv. 31 as sedel, and in the Mercian version as sedle, shewing a like confusion between t and d in another word from the same root. Saduceis is in Wyclif, Deeds [Acts], xxiii. 8; &c.-Lat. pl. Sadducei. - Gk. pl. Zabbowealor. - Heb. pl. tredditim, in the Mishna; see Smith, Concise Dict. of the Bible. It is the pl. of treddity, lit. 'the just one,' and so might mean 'the righteous;' but it is generally supposed that the sect was not named from their assumed righteousness, but from the name of their founder Tsdd/q (Zadoł); thus the right sense of the word is Zadokites.  $\beta$ . But it makes no difference to the etymology; either way we are led to Heb. tsaddq, just, from the Heb. root tsddaq, to be just.

Is divergent to the Heb. root isidag, to be just. SAFE, unharmed, secure, free from danger. (F., -L.) M.E. sauf, Will. of Palerne, 868, 1339; we also find the phr. sauf and sound, id. 868, 2816. – F. sauf, 'safe;' Cot. – Lat. saluum, acc. of saluus, whole, safe; put for saruus \*, whence Lat. serware. to keep safe; see Serve. –  $\checkmark$  SAR, to keep, protect; preserved in the Zend har (for sar), to protect, Fick, i. 797. Swed. sacka is used of the settling of dregs; so also Low G. sakken, in the Bremen Worterbuch. It seems to be an unnasalised form of sink, with the same sense; see Sink. The Icel. sokkning, a sinking, is from sökkva (=sankva), to sink.  $\P$  We cannot well connect it with A.S. sigan, to sink; though there may have been some confusion with it.

The Salic tribe was a Frankish (High German) tribe, prob. named from the river Sala (now the Yssel, not pronounce it.] = O.F. saumon, spelt saulmon in Cot. - Lat.

The E. word is saw. Saga is & flowing into the Zuyder Zee). There are several rivers called Saale or Saar; cf. Skt. salila, sara, water, from sri, to flow.

SALIENT, springing forward. (L.) In Pope, Dunciad, ii. 162. But it really took the place of saliant (Skinner, Phillips), which was an heraldic term for animals represented as springing forward; and this was due to F. saillant, pres. part. of saillir, instead of to the times used of water.  $-\sqrt{SAR}$ , to go, flow; cf. SALLET, a kind of helmet. (F., - Ital., - L.) In Shak. 2 Hen. V1, iv. 10. 12; and in Baret (1580). Palsgrave has: 'Salet of har-nesse, salade.' Sallet is a corruption of salade, due to the fact that a salad of herbs was also corrupted to sallet. 'Sallet, a helmet ; Sallet oil, salad oil;' Glossary to Shakespeare's [North's] Plutarch. ed. Skeat. - O. F. salade, 'a salade, helmet, headpiece; also a sallet of herbs;' Cot. [Here the spellings salade and sallet are interchanged; however, the two words are of different origin.]-Ital. celata, a helmet - Lat. calata, that which is engraved or ornamented; Diez cites cassis calata, an ornamented helmet, from Cicero. Cf. Span. celar, to engrave, celadura, enamel, inlaying, celada, a helmet. Lat. calata is the fem. of the pp. of calare, to engrave, ornament. - Lat. calum, a chisel, graver; perhaps allied to cadere, to cut. SALLOW (1), SALLY, a kind of willow. (E.)

M. E. salwe, Chaucer, C. T. 6237. 'Saluke, tree, Salix, 'Prompt. Parv. = A.S. sealk; we find 'Amera, sealk; Salix, weig' mentioned together in Wright's Vocab. i. 285, col. 2. The suffix -ow = M.E. we = A.S. -ge, suffix of the oblique cases from nom. in -A, just as E. farrow is from A. S. feark, and the prov. E. barrow-pig from A. S. beark. In Lowland Sc. the word became sauch, saugh, by loss of l. + Icel. selja. + Swed. sälg, sälj. + Dan. selje. + G. sahlweide (O.H.G. salaka), the round-leaved willow; see Fick, iii. 370. + Lat. solix, a willow. + Gael. seileach, a willow. + Irish sail, saileach. + W. helyg, pl., willows. + Gk. exim. β. Named from growing near the water; cf. Skt. sari, water, saras, a large pond, a piece of water in which the lotus grows, sarasiya, a lotus, sarit, a river. - VSAR, to flow; cf. Skt. sri, to flow.

BALLOW (2), of a pale, yellowish colour. (E.) M. E. salow with one l); we find: 'Salwke, salowe, of colour, Croceus;' Prompt. Parv. p. 441. - A.S. salu, sallow, Grein, ii. 388; whence the compounds saloneb, with pale beak, salupid, with pale garment, sealobrun, sallow-brown; id. + Du. zaluw, tawny, sallow. + Icel. sölr, yellow-ish. + M. H. G. sal, O. H. G. salo, dusky (whence F. sals, dirty). Root uncertain. Der. sallow-ness.

SALLY, to rush out suddenly.  $(F_{..}-L.)$  'Guyon salied forth to land;' Spenser, F. Q. ii. 6. 28. M. E. salien, to dance, is the same word; Prompt. Parv. p. 441; P. Plowman, B. xiii. 233. – F. saillir, ' to go out, issue, issue forth; also to leap, jump, bound;' Cot. – Lat. salire, to leap; see Salient. Der. saily, sb., with which cf. F. saillie, 'a sally,' Cot.; from the fem. of the pp. sailli. Also sallyport, a gate whence a sally may be made. SALMAGUNDI, a seasoned hodge-podge or mixture. (F., - Ital.,-L.) 'Salmagundi, or Salmigund, an Italian dish made of cold turkey, anchovies, lemmons, oil, and other ingredients; also, a kind of hotch-potch or ragoo,' &c.; Phillips, ed. 1706. But the word is French. - F. salmigondis; spelt salmigondin in Cotgrave, who describes the dish.  $\beta$ . Etym. disputed; but probably of Ital. origin, as stated by Phillips. We may fairly explain it from Ital. salame, salt meat, and condito, seasoned. This is the more likely, because the Ital. salame would make the pl. salami, and this was once the term in use. Thus Florio has: 'Salámi, any kinde of salt, y. This also explains pickled, or powdred meats or souse,' &c. the F. salmis (not in Cotgrave), which has proved a puzzle to etymologists; I think we may take salmis (=salted meats) to be a double plural, the s being the F. plural, and the i the Ital. plural; that is, the Ital. salami became F. salmi, and then the s was added. 8. The derivation of Ital. salami is clearly from Lat. sal, salt, though the suffix is obscure. The F. -gondi, for Ital. condito (or pl. conditi), is from Lat. conditus, seasoned, savoury, pp. of condire, to preserve, pickle, season. Thus the sense is 'savoury salt meats.

SALMON, a fish. (F., -L.) M. E. saumoun, King Alisaunder, I. 5446; salmon, salmond, Barbour's Bruce, ii. 576, xix. 664. [The introduction of the l is due to our knowledge of the Lat. form; we do salmonem, acc. of salmo, a salmon.  $\beta$ . It has been conjectured  $\delta$  that salmo means 'leaper;' from saline, to leap; which well accords with the fish's habits. See Salient. G. sal (G. saal), a dwelling, house, hall, room, t. Icel. sair, a hall. + A. S. seel, sele, a house, hall. The orig. sense is 'abode;' cf. Goth. saljan, to dwell; Russ. selo, a village.

SALT, a well-known substance. (E.) M. E. salt, P. Plowman, B. xv. 423, -A. S. seall, Grein, ii. 434, +Du. zout (with u for l). +Icel. salt. + Dan. and Swed. salt. +G. salz. +Goth. salt. B. All from Teut. type SALTA, salt; Fick, iii. 321. On comparing this with Lat. sal, salt, we see that the Teut. word is sal-ta, where -ta is the usual Aryan pp. suffix, of extreme antiquity; Schleicher, Compend. § 224. Accordingly we find that A. S. sealt (E. salt) is also used as an adj., in the sense of 'salted' or 'full of salt,' as in sealt water = salt water; Grein, ii. 434. So also Icel. salr, adj., salt; Du. zout, adj.; Dan. and Swed. salt, adj. γ. Removing the suffix, we find adj.; Dan. and Swed. salt, adj. y. Removing the suffix, we find cognate words in Lat. sal, salt, Gk. as, Russ. sole, W. kal, halen, Skt. sara, salt. The Skt. sara means also the coagulum of curds or milk, lit. 'that which runs together,' from  $sr_i$ , to  $go. - \checkmark$  SAR, to go, flow. It is possible that salt was named from the 'water' from which it was obtained; but this brings us back to the same root. The set of the set o this takes account of the adjectival use of the Teutonic word salt, nor of the fact that the E. adj. salt is represented in Lat. by sal-sus, clearly a pp. form. Cf. W. hallt, salt, adj., from halen, salt, sb. Der. salt-ly, salt-ness; salt-cellar, q. v.; salt, vb., salt-er, salt-ish, salt-less, salt-mine, salt-pan; salt-petre, q.v. Also (from sal) sal-ine, sal-ary, sal-ad, sauce, sausage, salmagundi.

SALTATION, dancing. (L.) Rare; merely formed (by analogy with F. words in -ion) from Lat. saltatio, a dance, a dancing. - Lat. saltatus, pp. of saltare, to dance, frequent. of salire, to leap; see Salient. Der. saltator-y, from Lat. saltatorius, adj.

SALT-CELLIAR, a vessel for holding salt. (E.; and F., - L.) The word salt is explained above. Cellar is an absurd corruption of saler or seller, derived from F. salière. Thus we find: 'Saliere, a saltseller;' Cot. Cf. Ital. saliera, a salt-cellar. 'Hoc selarism, a celare;' Wright's Vocab. i. 198, note 8. 'A saltsaler of sylver;' A. D. 1463, in Bury Wills, ed. Tymms, p. 23, l. 8. Formed from Lat. sal, salt; see Salt. ¶ Hence salt-cellar = salt-salt-holder; a tautological expression. [†] SALTIER, in heraldry, a St. Andrew's cross. (F., - L.) St.

SALTIER, in heraldry, a St. Andrew's cross. (F., -L.) St. Andrew's cross is one in this position X; when charged on a shield, it is called a saltier. -F. saultoir, 'Saint Andrew's crosse, tearmed so by heralds;' Cot. The old sense was stirrup (Littré, s. v. sautoir); the cross seems to have been named from the position of the sidepieces of a stirrup, formerly made in a triangle A. - Low Lat. saltatorium, a stirrup, a common word; Ducange. - Lat. saltatorius, belonging to dancing or leaping, suitable for mounting a horse. -Lat. saltator, a dancer, leaper. - Lat. saltare, to dance, leap; frequentative of salire; see Salient. [+]

SALT-PETRE, nitre. (E.; and F., -L, -Gk.) In Shak. I Hen. IV, i. 3. 60. For the former part of the word, see Salt. The E. word is a translation of O. F. solpestre, 'salt-petre;' Cot. Here pestre (mod. F. -pitre) is from Lat. petra; and salt-petre represents Lat. sal petra, lit. 'salt of the rock.' Lastly, Lat. petra is from Gk.  $\pi i r p a$ , rock; see Petrify.

SALUBRIOUS, healthful. (L.) A late word. In Phillips, ed. 1706. Coined as if from a Lat. salubrissus\*, extended from Lat. salubris, healthful.  $\beta$ . Lat. salübris appears to stand for salut-bris, where the suffix -bris prob. means 'bearing,' or bringing, as in G. fruckt-bar, fruitful; this suffix generally appears as -5 for in Latin, but both -ber and -fer may be referred to the root BHAR, to bring; and we find also the forms saluti-for, salu-ber. This gives the sense of 'health-bringing.'  $\gamma$ . Salut- is the stem of salus, health, allied to saluus, sound, in good health, whence E. safe; see Safe. Der. salubrious-ly. Also salubri-ty, Minsheu, from F. salubrité (Cot.), = Lat. acc. salubritatem.

SALUTARY, healthful, wholesome. (F., -L.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. - F. salutaire, 'healthful;' Cot. - Lat. salutaris, healthful. - Lat. salut, stem of salus, health, allied to saluus; see Mainherious, Safe.

SALVATION, preservation. (F., -L.) M. E. saluaciosm, saluacion, Chaucer, C. T. 7080; spelt samuacion, Ancren Riwle, p. 243. L. 26. - F. salvation. - Lat. saluationem, acc. of saluatio, a saving. - Lat. saluatus, pp. of saluare, to save; see Save. SALVE, ointment. (E.) M. E. salue (=salve), Chaucer, C. T.

SALVE, ointment. (E.) M. E. salue (=salue), Chaucer, C. T. 2714; older form salfe, Ormulum, 6477.-A. S. scalf, Mark, xiv. 5; John, xii. 3. + Du. zalf. + G. salue.  $\beta$ . From the Teut. type SALBA; Fick, iii. 321. The orig. sense was prob. 'oil' or 'grease:' it answers in form to the rare Gk. words iAwos, oil, iApor, butter, in Hesychius; and to Skt. sarpis, clarified butter, named from its slipperiness. -  $\checkmark$  SARP, to glide; see Slip. Der. salue, verb, from A. S. sealfan, cognate with Goth. salues.

SALVER, a plate on which anything is presented. (Span., -L) Properly salva, but misspelt salver by confusion with the old word salver in the sense of 'preserver,' or one who claims salvage for shipping. This is shewn by the following. 'Salver, from salvo, to save, is a new fashioned piece of wrought plate, broad and flat, with a foot underneath, and is used in giving beer, or other liquid thing, to save or preserve the carpit or clothes from drops ;' Blount's Gloss. ed. 1674. This invented explanation, oddly enough, does not affect the etymology. - Span. salva, a salver, a plate on which anything is presented; it also means 'pregustation, the previous tasting of viands before they are served up.' There is also the phrase kacer la salsa, 'to drink to one's health;' Neuman. We also find the dimin. salvilla, a salver. - Span. salvar, 'to save, free from risk; to taste, to prove the food or drink of nobles ;' Neuman. - Lat, saluars, to save ; see Save, Safe. ¶ Mr. Wedgwood says: 'as salva was the tasting of meat at a great man's table, salvar, to guarantee, to taste or make the essay of meat served at table, the name of salver is in all probability from the article having been used in connection with the essay. The Ital. name of the essay was credenza, and the same term was used for a cupboard or sideboard; credentiere, credenzere, a prince's taster, cup-bearer, butler, or cupboard-keeper (Florio). F. credence d'argent, silver plate, or a cupboard of silver plate ;' Cot. Thus a salver was the name of the plate or tray on which drink was presented to the taster, or to the drinker of a health.

T. 16923. – A.S. same, only as adv., as in swd same swd men, the same as men, just like men; Kllfred, tr. of Boethius, c. xxxiii, § 4 (bk. iii. met. 9). The adjectival use is Scand.; cf. See Dirnity, which is a word of similar origin. The mod. G. sammet, sammt, velvet, is the same word.

SAMPHIRE, the name of a herb. (F., -L. and Gk.) Spelt sampire in K. Lear, iv. 6. 15; and in Minsheu, ed. 1627; and this is a more correct spelling, representing a former pronunciation. So also Sherwood, in his index to Cotgrave, who gives kerbe de S. Pierre as a F. equivalent. Spelt sampier in Baret (1580), which is still better. - F. Saint Pierre, St. Peter; Cotgrave, s. v. kerbe, gives: 'Herbe de S. SASH (2), a scarf, band. (Pers.) Formerly spelt skask, with the sense of turban. 'His head was wreathed with a huge shash or tulipant [turban] of silk and gold;' Sir T. Herbert, Travels, 1638, p. 191; cited in Trench, Select Glossary. 'So much for the silk in Judzea, called shesk in Hebrew, whence haply that fine linen or silk is called shashes, worn at this day about the heads of Eastern people ;' Fuller, Pisgah Sight of Palestine, b. ii. c. 14, § 24. But it does not seem to be a Hebrew word. Trench, in his Eng. Past and Present, calls it a Turkish word; which is also not the case. The solution is, that the word is Persian. - Pers. shast, 'a thumb-stall worn by archers, ... a girdle worn by the Magi, &c., Rich. Dict. p. 891. In Vullers' Pers. Dict. ii. 425, 426, we find: shest, a thumb, archer's thumb-ring (to guard the thumb in shooting), a fish-hook, plectrum, fiddle-string, scalpel; also 'cingulum idolatrorum et igniscultorum,' i.e. a girdle worn by idolaters and fire-worshippers, thus accounting for our sask. SASSAFRAS, a kind of laurel. He proceeds to give the derivation from the Zend shôithrapaiti, ruler of a region, from shôithra, a region, and paiti, a chief. Of these words, the former is the same as Skt. kshetra, a field, region, landed property (Benfey, p. 240); and the latter is Skt. pati, Saturnien, 'sad, sowre, lumpish, melancholy; 'Cot. Both adjectives are from Lat. Saturnus, the god Saturn, also the planet Saturn. B. The peculiar sense is due to the supposed evil influence of the planet Saturn in y. Saturnus meant astrology; see Chaucer, C. T. 2455-2471. of salt, pungent, Twelfth Nt. iii. 4. 159; saue-i-ly, K. Lear, i. I. 22, iii. 4. 41; saue-i-ness, Com. Errors, ii. 2. 28. Also saus-age, q. v. BAUNTER, to lounge. (Unknown.) 'By saunstering still on some adventure;' Hudibras, pt. iii. c. 1. 1343 (ed. Bell, ii. 111). Not in early use. We find however, in the Romance of Partenay, ed. Skeat, 1. 4653, that Geoffrey 'santred and doubted,' i.e. hesitated and doubted as to whether he was of the lineage of Presine. Unfortunately this is not a very sure instance, as the MS. might be read as soutred, or even as jaured. Still it deserves to be noted. In the dialect of Cumberland the word is santer. 'Santer, saunter; [also], an onld wife santer - an unauthenticated tradition;' Dickin-son's Cumberland Glossary.  $\beta$ . No satisfactory account of son's Cumberland Glossary.  $\beta$ . No satisfactory account of this word has ever been given. Mr. Wedgwood thinks an i has been lost; cf. Icel. slentr, idle lounging, slen, sloth; Dan. slentre, to saunter, lounge about, slunte, to idle; Swed. slentra, to saunter, y. But a much loiter; slunt, a lubber, slunta, to loiter, idle. more likely solution is that proposed in Mr. Blackley's Wordgossip, 1869, p. 227, and by Dr. Morris, in the Academy, April 14, 1883, p. 259. This is, to connect it with M.E. amter, an adven-ture; cf. the quotation from Hudibras above. But I repudiate Mr. Blackley's suggestion that the prefixed s is 'intensive,' which explains nothing. The verb to aunter was commonly reflexive; see P. Plowman, C. xxi. 232, xxiii. 175. Hence saunter may be explained from F. s'aventurer, to adventure oneself, to go forth on an adventure; since M.E. aunter = F. aventure. Otherwise, the s- = O.F. es- = Lat. ex; so that s-aunter = venture forth. There is no difficulty in the change of sense; as Dr. Morris remarks, it is by no means a solitary example of degraded meaning; . . . the exploits or gests [of the old knights] have become our jests.' ¶ In any case, we may safely reject such wild guesses as a derivation from F. sainte terre (because men saunter if they visit jests." the Holy Land!), or from F. sans terre (because people saunter who are not possessed of landed property 11); yet these puerilities will long continue to be accepted by the inexperienced. SAXLFRAGE, a genus of plants. (F., -L.) In Cotgrave and Minsheu. - F. saxifrage, 'the herb saxifrage, or stone-break;' Cot. -Lat. saxifraga,' spleen-wort (White). The adiantwm or 'maidenhair' was also called saxifragws, lit. stone-breaking, because it was supposed to break stones in the bladder. 'They have a wonderful faculty... to break the stone, and to expel it out of the body; for which cause, rather than for growing on stones and rocks, I believe verily it was .. called in Lat. saxifrage;' Pliny, b. xxii. c. 21 (Holland's translation). - Lat. saxi- = saxo-, crude form of saxum, a stone, rock; and frag-, base of framgere, to break, cognate with E. break. F. sais; Cotgrave has saye, 'a long-skirted jacket, coat, or cassock;' also sayete, 'the stuffe sey.' Florio has Ital. saio, 'a long side coate,' and saistta, 'a kind of fine serge or cloth for coates; it is also called rask.' Neuman has Span. saya, sayo, a tunic; sayste, a thin light stuff.  $\beta$ . The stuff say was so called because used for making a kind of coat or tunic called in Lat. saga, sagum, or sagus; cf. Low Lat. sagum (1), a mantle, (2) a kind of cloth (Ducange). = Gk. sayo, a coarse cloak, a soddler's mantle; cf. say or sage cloak. These Gk. words are not of Celtic origin, as has been said, but allied to Skt. saij, sajj, to adhere, be attached, hang from; see Benfey, p. 996.

SCAB, a crust over a sore. (E.) M. E. scab, Chaucer, C. T. 12292. – A. S. scab, scab, A. S. Leechdoms, ed. Cockayne, i. 150, l. 6; i. 316, l. 22; i. 322, l. 17. + Dan. and Swed. skab. + G. schabe, a wood-louse, moth; also scab, itch, shaving tool, grater.  $\beta$ . The lit. sense is 'itch;' something that is scratched; cf. Lat. scabies, scab, itch, from scabere, to scratch. From the Teut. base SKAB, to scratch, whence mod. E. skaw; see Shave. Der. scabb-ed, scabb-y, scabb-i-ness. Also skabb-y, q. v.

SCABBARD, a sword sheath. (F., - Teut.) Spelt scabberd in Baret (1580), Scabbard is a corruption of M. E. scaubert, Rob. of toot, and a mere variant. And in fact, the word scole, though rare, Glouc, p. 273, 1. 17; and scaubert stands for scauberk, by the not uncommon change from k to t, as in O. Fries. matia = A. S. macian, tc make. In Prompt. Parv. p. 443, we find all three forms, scauberk, scaubert, scauberd. The form scauberk also appears as scaberke (Trevisa, v. 373, Stratmann); and is weakened to scalarge, Romance of Partenay, 3790.  $\beta$ . Scauberk is obviously, like kauberk, a French word of Teutonic origin; but it does not appear in O. French texts; except that Wedgwood cites vaginas, glossed by O. F. escaubers, from Johannes de Garlandia. We may easily see, however, that the termination -berk is from the Teutonic word appearing in G. bergen, O. H. G. bergan, to protect, hide. This is made doubly certain by noticing that the O. F. kalbere or kaubere, a hauberk, is also spelt haubert, just as scauberk is also scaubert; and corresponding to the form scaberge we have haberge on. Y. It remains to discuss the former syllable; we should expect to find an O. F. scalberc\* or escalbere \*. The prefix appears to answer to O. F. escale, mod. F. écale, écaille, a shell, scale, husk, derived from O. H. G. scala, G. scala, S. Now G. scala means a shell, peel, husk, rind, scale, outside, skull, cover of a book, haft (of a knife), bowl, vase. In composition schal means cover or outside: as in schalbrett, outside plank (of a tree), schalholz, outside of a tree cut into planks, schalwerk, a lining of planks. Cf. schalen, to plank, inlay; messer schalen, to haft knives. e. The prob. sense is 'shell-protection,' or 'covercover ;' it is one of those numerous reduplicated words in which the latter half repeats the sense of the former. The notion of putting a knife into a haft is much the same as that of putting a sword into a sheath. 3. Similarly, the Icel. skálpr, O. Swed. skalp, a scabbard, appears to be from Icel. skál, a scale, bowl. See Scalp. And I conclude that scabbard = scale-berk, with the reduplicated sense of

'cover-cover.' See Scale and Hauberk. SCAFFOLD, a temporary platform. (F., -L., and Teut.) M.E. scaffold, scafold, Chaucer, C. T. 2533, 3384.-O.F. escafalt\*, only found as escafaut, mod. F. échafaud. A still older form must have been escadafalt (Burguy), corresponding to Span. catafaleo, a funeral canopy over a bier, Ital. catafaleo, a funeral canopy, stage, scaffold (whence mod. F. catafaleys).  $\beta$ . The word is a hybrid one; the orig. sense is 'a stage for seeing,' or 'a stage on which a thing is displayed to view,' lit. a 'view-balk.' The former part of the word appears in O. Span. catar, to observe, see, behold, look (Minsheu), from Lat. captare, to strive after, watch, observe; and the latter part is put for balco, as in Ital. balco, a scaffold, stage, theatre (whence E. balcony), which is of Teut. origin. See Catch and Balcony, Balk. y. See further in Diez; cato-appears also in Ital. cata-letto, a bier, lit. 'view-bed;' cf. Parmese and Venetian catar, to find; Span cata, look! see! Der. scaffold, verb; scaffold ing.

SCALD (1), to burn with a hot liquid, to burn. (F., = L.) M. E. scalden, pp. ysealded, Chaucer, C. T. Six-text, A. 2020; Tyrwhitt (l. 2022) reads yskalled, but the 6 best MSS. have yscalded. 'Schaldinde soater, scalding water; 'Ancren Riwle, p. 246, l. 3.-O. F. escalder', later form eschauder, 'to scald;' Cot. Mod. F. échauder. - Lat. ex-caldare, to wash in hot water. - Lat. ex, out, very; and caldus, hot, contracted form of calidus, hot, from caldere, to be hot, See Ex- and Caldron. Der. scald, sb.

SCALD (2), scabby. (Scand.) In Shak. Hen. V, v. 1. 5. Con-tracted form of scalled, i.e. afflicted with the scall; see Scall. M. E. scalled, Chaucer, C. T. 629. Cf. Dan. skaldet, bald.

SCALD (3), a Scandinavian poet. (Scand.) M. E. seald, Or-mulum, 2192. Icel. skild, a poet. The orig. sense seems to be 'loud talker ;' see Soold.

SCALE (1), a shell, small thin plate or flake on a fish, flake. (E.) M. E. scale ; 'fisshes scales,' Gower, C. A. i. 275, l. 22, ii. 265, l. 18 scale (or skale), the shell of a nut, P. Plowman, C. xiii. 145, and footnote. - A. S. sceals, scale, pl. scealu, a shell or husk, in a gloss (Leo); whence bean-sceale, a husk of a bean (id.). + Dan, and Swed. skal, a shell, pod, husk. + G. schale, O. H. G. scala, a shell, husk. Cf. Goth. skalja, a tile.  $\beta$ . The E. word may have been mixed up with O.F. escale (mod. F. écale); but this is the same word, borrowed from O. H. G. scala. Y. All from Teut. base SKALA, Fick, iii. 334, lit. 'a flake,' that which can be peeled off; from Teut. base SKAL, to separate, peel off, whence also E. skill; see Skill. Der. scale, verb; scaled, scal-y, scal-i-ness. Allied to Scale (2), Shell, Scall, Scull, Skill. And see scall-op, scal-p. Doublet, skale. [†] SCALLE (2), a bowl or dish of a balance. (E.) M.E. skale, schale (also scoale), a bowl, Ancren Riwle, p. 214, note i; scale, Layamon, 5368. – A. S. scále, a scale of a balance; 'Lanx, scále; Bilances, sus scále (two scales); Wright's Vocab. i. 38, col. 2. The pl. scedla, bowls, is in Diplomatarium Ævi Saxonici, ed. Thorpe, p. 429, l. 30.  $\beta$ . The A.S. word scale (with long a) ought rather to have given an E. form scale (cf. M. E. scale above); but it root, and a mere variant. And in fact, the word word, though rare, occurs: 'Lanx, the scole of a balance,' Nomenclator, 1585 (Nares, ed. Wright and Halliwell). 'Then Jove his golden scoles weighed up;' Chapman, tr. of Homer, b. xxii. 1. 180.  $\gamma$ . The long a is supported by Icel. skál, a bowl, scale of a balance; Dan. shaal, Swed. skál, a bowl, cup; Du. schaal, a scale, bowl. Cf. G. schale, a cup, dish, bowl. All from Teut. base SKALA, Fick, iii. 334; allied to Scale (1).

BCALLE (3), a ladder, series of steps, graduated measure, gra-dation. (L.) M. E. scale, spelt skale, Chaucer, On the Astrolabe, dation. (L.) M. E. scale, spelt skale, Chaucer, On the Astrolabe, pt. i. § 12. Borrowed immediately from Lat. scala, usually in pl. scale, a flight of steps, ladder. (Hence also F. schelle.)  $\beta$ . Perhaps Lat, sca-la = scad-la or scand-la, that by which one ascends or descends: cf. Lat. scandere, to climb; see Scan. Der. scale, verb, to climb by a ladder; Surrey translates 'Hærent parietibus scala, postesque sub ipsos Nituntur gradibus' (Æneid, ii. 442) by 'And rered vp ladders against the walles, Under the windowes scaling by their steppes; clearly borrowed from Ital. scalars, to scale. See Escalado. SCALLEINE, having three unequal sides, said of a triangle. (L. - Gk.) Phillips, ed. 1706, has: 'Scalenum, or Scalenous Triangle.'-Lat. scalenus, adj. - Gk. σκαληνόs, scalene, uneven. Allied to  $\sigma \kappa \delta \lambda \delta s$ , crooked,  $\sigma \kappa \delta \lambda \delta s$ , crook-legged,  $\sigma \kappa \delta \lambda \delta s$ , a leg. The orig. sense is 'jumping,' hence, halting, uneven  $-\sqrt{SKAR}$ , to jump; whence  $\sigma \kappa a \delta \rho s$ , to skip. See Shallow. SCALL, a scab, scabbiness, eruption on the skin. (Scand.) In Levit, xiii. 30. 'Maist thou have the skalle;' Chaucer, Lines to Levit, Xiii. 30. "Maist thou have the statis;" Chaucer, Lines to Adam Scrivener. Gen. used with ref. to the head. "On his heued he has the skalls;" Cursor Mundi, 11819.— Icel. skalli, a bare head. The lit. sense is 'having a peeled head;" cf. Swed. skallig, bald, skala, to peel, so that the word is nearly related to Dan. and Swed. skal, a husk; see Soale. Dar. scald (2), q.v. SCALLOP, SCOLLOP, a bi-valvular shell-fish, with the edge of its shell in a waved form (F. Taut). Holland's Pliny h is of its shell in a waved form. (F., - Teut.) Holland's Pliny, b. iz. c. 33, treats 'Of Scallops.' M. E. skalop (with one 1), Prompt. Parv., p. 442. - O. F. escalope, a shell; a word used by Rutebuef; see quotation in Littré, under escalope, a term in cookery. B. Of Teut. origin; cf. O. Du. schelpe (Du. schelp), a shell; Hexham. Hexham has also; 'S. Iacobs schelpe, S. James his shell; ' and the shell worn by pilgrims who had been to St. James's shrine was of the kind which we call 'a seallop-shell;' Chambers, Book of Days, ii. 121. Thus Palsgrave has: 'scaloppe-skell, quocquille de saint lacques.' Cf. G. schelfe, a husk. y. The forms schel-pe, schel-fe are extensions from the word which appears in E. as scale or shell; see Scale (1), Shell. Der. scallop, verb, to cut an edge into waves or scallop-like curves. And see Scalp.

SCALP, the skin of the head on which the hair grows. (O. Low G.) 'Her scalpe, taken out of the chamel-house;' Sir T. More, p. 57 a. M. E. scalp. 'And his wiknes in his scalp downe falle;' Early Eng. Psalter, ed. Stevenson, vii. 17; where scalp means the top of the head, Lat. survey. Evidently an O. Low G. word, due to the very form whence we also have O. Du. scheipe, a shell, and O. F. sscalope, a shell; see Scallop. β. Thus scalp and scallop are doublets; the inserted o is a F. peculiarity, due to the difficulty which the French would find in pronouncing the word; just as they prefixed s, on account of their difficulty in sounding initial se. We may further compare O. Swed. shalp, a sheath, Icel. shalpr, a sheath.  $\gamma$ . The orig. sense is shell or scull (head-shell); and the word is a mere extension of that which appears in E. as scale; see Scale (1). Florio has O. Ital. scalpo della testa, ' the skalp of ones head;' but this is merely borrowed from Teutonic. Der. sealp, verb; which may have been confused with Lat. scalpers (see Scalpel).

SCALPEL, a small surgeon's knife for dissecting. (L.) Phillips, ed. 1706, has sealper or scalping-iron; Todd's Johnson has sealpel. Scalpel is from Lat. scalpere, to cut, carve, scratch, engrave; (whence E. scalping-irow). -  $\checkmark$  SKARP, to cut (Fick, iii. 811); whence also E. Sharp, q. v. SCAMBLE; see Scamper.

SCAMMONY, a cathartic gum-resin. (F., -L., -Gk.) Soelt scamony in Arnold's Chron. (1502), ed. 1811, p. 164, l. 16. - O.F. scammonie, scammonée, 'scammony, purging bind-weed;' Cot. - Lat. scammonia, scammonsa. - Gk. σκαμμωνία, or rather σκαμωνία, scammony, a kind of bind-weed. It grows in Mysia, Colophon, and Priene, in Asia Minor; Pliny, b. xxvi. c. 8.

SCAMP; see Scamper.

SCAMPER, to run with speed, flee away. (F.,-Ital.,-L.) 'We were forc'd to . . . scamper away as well as we could;' Dampier's Voyages, an. 1685 (R.) The suffix -er is, as usual, frequentative, so that the orig. form is scamp; but this is only found as a sb. in the sense of 'worthless fellow,' or 'cheat,' though the orig, -eadily confused with the word above, which is from the same meaning is merely 'fugitive' or 'vagabond,' one given to frequent shifts or decampings. - O. F. escamper, or rather s'escamper, 'to scape, <sup>(b)</sup> Fruites of Warre, st. 40, and st. 90; M. E. scar, Wyclif, Lev. xxii, 22. flie; 'Cot. - Ital. scampare, 'to escape, to shift away; 'Florio. - Lat. | -O. F. escare, 'a skar or scab; 'Cot. Cf. Span. and Ital. escara, scar, flie; 'Cot. - Ital. scampare, 'to escape, to shift away;' Florio. - Lat. ex, out; and campus, a field, esp. a field of battle. A parallel formation to decamp, q.v. See Ex- and Camp. Der. scamper, sb. A similar form is scamble, to struggle, K. John, iv. 3, 146, put for scamp-le. a parallel frequentative form from the same base. Cf. Du. schampelen, to stumble, trip (Hexham), from schampen, to escape (id.), a word of Romance origin. See Shamble.

SCAN, to count the measures in a poem, to scrutinise. (F.,-L.; FL.) In Shak. Oth. iii. 3. 245; Skelton, Bowge of Court, 245. or L.) In common use in the pp., which was frequently spelt seand, as in Spenser, F. Q. vii. 6. 8, where it is used in the sense of 'climbed.' The verb should rather have been scand, but the pp. was formed as scand (for scanded), and then the final d was taken to be the pp. termination, and was accordingly dropped. - O. F. escander, to climb (Roquefort); whence the use of the verb as in Spenser. [Or, in the grammatical sense particularly, derived directly from Latin.]-Lat. scanders, to climb; also, to scan a verse.  $-\sqrt{SKAND}$ , SKAD, to spring upwards; Skt. skand, to spring, ascend. Der. scansion, formed (by analogy) from Lat. scansio, a scanning, from the pp. Also scans-or-i-al, formed for climbing, from scansorius, scansus. belonging to climbing. From the same root, a-scend, a-scent, de-scend, de-scent, con-de-scend, tran-scend; perhaps scale (3), e-sca-lade.

SCANDAL, opprobrious censure, disgrace, offence. (F., -L., -Gk.) M. E. scandal; spelt scandle, Ancren Riwle, p. 13, l. 13. - F. scandale, 'a scandall, offence;' Cot. We also find O. F. scandle (Burguy); whence M. E. scandle. - Lat. scandalum. - Gk. σκάνδαλον, a snare; also scandal, offence, stumbling-block. The orig. sense seems to be that of onardáln@por also, viz. the spring of a trap, the stick on a trap on which the bait was placed, which sprang up and shut the trap. Prob. from ASKAND, to spring up; see Scan. Der. scandal-ise, from F. scandaliser, formerly scandalizer, 'to scandalize,' Cot. Also scandal-ous, from F. scandaloux, 'scandalous, offensive, 'Cot.; scandal-ous-ly, -ness. Doublet, slander. SCANSION, SCANSORIAL; see Scan.

SCANT, insufficient, sparing, very little. (Scand.) M. E. scant, Prompt. Parv. Chaucer speaks of 'the inordinate scantnesse' of clothing ; Pers. Tale, De Superbia (Six-text, I. 414). - Icel. skamt, neut. of skammr, short, brief ; whence skamta, to dole out, apportion meals (and so, to scant or stint). Cf. also Icel. skamtr, sb., a dole, share, portion (hence, short or scant measure). In Norwegian, the mt changes to nt, so that we find skantat, pp. measured or doled out, skanta, to measure narrowly, reckon closely; skant, a portion, dole, piece measured off (Aaseh). The m is preserved in the phrase 'to scamp work,' i. e. to do it insufficiently, and in the prov. E. to scamp work, i.e. to do it insunctionity, and in the prov. E. skimping, scanty (Halliwell).  $\beta$ . Fick (iii. 332) cites a cognate O. H. G. scam, short. Der. scant, adv., Romeo, i. 2. 104; scant, verb, Merch. Ven. ii. 1. 17; scant-ly, Antony, iii. 4. 6; scant-y, scant-i-ly, scant-i-ness.

SCANTLING, a piece of timber cut of a small size, sample, pattern. (F., - Teut.; with L. prefix.) The word has doubtless been confused with scant and scanty; but the old sense is 'pattern.' or ' sample,' or a small piece ; with reference to the old word cantle. As used in Shak. (Troil. i. 3. 341) and in Cotgrave, it is certainly a derivative of O. F. eschanteler, and answers to O. F. eschantillon, 'a small cantle or corner-piece, also a scantling, sample, pattern, proof of any sort of merchandise; ' Cot. = O. F. ecanteler \*, older form of eschanteler, 'to break into cantles,' to cut up into small pieces; Cotgrave, Burguy. = 0. F. es-, prefix, from Lat. es, out; and O. F. cantel (Burguy), a cantle, corner, piece, later chantel, chanteau, 'a corner-peece, or peece broken off from the corner;' Cot. Hence E. cantle, scantle, 1 Hen. IV, iii. I. 100.  $\beta$ . F. cantel is a dimin. of a form cant \*; cf. G. kante, a corner; see Cant (2). Cf. M. E. scantilon, a measure, Cursor Mundi, 2231.

SCAPEGOAT, a goat allowed to escape into the wilderness. F.,-L.; and E.) Levit. xvi. 8. From scape and goat; scape being (F.,-L.; and E.) a mutilated form of escape, in common use; see Temp. ii. 2. 117, &c. See Escape and Goat. So also scape-grace, one who has escaped grace or is out of favour, a graceless fellow.

SCAPULAR, belonging to the shoulder-blades. (L.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. [He also gives it as a sb., equivalent to the word generally spelt scapulary; see below ] - Low Lat. scapularis, adj. formed from Lat. pl. scapulæ, the shoulder-blades, from a sing-formed from Lat. pl. scapulæ, the shoulder-blades, from a sing-scapula, not in use.  $\beta$ . Prob. allied to Lat. scapus, a shaft, stem, shank, stalk; and to Sceptre. Der. scapular-y, spelt scapularie in Minsheu, a kind of scarf worn by friars and others, so called from passing over the shoulders ; M. E. scaplorye, scapelary, Prompt. Parv., chapolory, P. Plowman's Crede, 1. 550; from F. scapulaire, Low Lat. scatulare.

SCAR (1), the mark of a wound, blemish. (F., - L., - Gk.) to cut a notch in timber, Schmeller, 'Scarre of a wounde, consture;' Palsgrave. Spelt sharre, Gascoigne, small, from the same root; see Shear.

Cf. Icel. skor. a rift in a rock. So called because 'cut off' from the main land; allied to

B. Share, q. v. Doublet, stars; and cf. score. SCARAMOUCH, a buffoon. (F.,-Ital, - Teut.) 'Scaramouck and Harlequin at Paris;' Dryden, Kind Keeper, A. i. sc. I. 'Th' Italian merry-andrews took their place ... Stout Scaramoucha with rush lance rode in; ' Dryden, Epilogue to Silent Woman, spoken by Mr. Hart, ll. 11-15. 'Scaramoche, a famous Italian zani, or mountebank, who acted here in England 1673;' Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. Blount, writing at the time, is certainly right. The name was taken from a famous Italian buffoon, mentioned again in the Spectator, no. 283. He died at Paris in 1694; Chambers, Book of Days, ii. 671. His name was (rightly) Scaramuccia, altered by Dryden to Scaramoucha, and in French to Scaramouche (Littré). - F. scaramouche. -Ital. Scaramuccia, proper name; lit. 'a skirmish,' a word derived from Teutonic; see Skirmish.

SCARCE, rare, not plentiful. (F., - L.) M. E. scars, Rob. of Glouc. p. 334, l. 9. Chaucer has the adv. scarsly, C. T. 585. - O. F. escars (Burguy), later eschars, 'scarce, needy, scanty, saving, niggard,' Cot. Cf. Ital. scarso, scarce; mod. F. échars (Littré). β. Derived by Diez from Low Lat. scarpsus, shorter form of escarpsus, used A.D. 805 as a substitute for Lat. excerptus, pp. of excerpere, (prob. also excarpere in Low Latin), to pick out, select, extract. The lit. sense is selected, extracted, or picked out, hence 'select,' and so scarce; and Diez remarks that participles with -sws for -tws are common in Low Latin .- Lat. en, out; and carpere, to pluck, allied to E. harvest. See Excerpt; also Ex- and Harvest. Der. scarce-ly, M. E. scarse-licke, K. Alisaunder, 3552; scarce-ness, Deut. viii. 9, M. E. scarsese, Gower, C. A. ii. 284; scarc-i-ty, M. E. scarseté, K. from O. F. escarsete (escharsete in Burguy). [†] SCARE, to frighten away. (Scand.) M. E. sherren, sheren, Prompt. Parv. p. 457; Destruction of Troy, 13404. Cf. 'the skerre hors'= the scared horse, Ancren Riwle, p. 243, note d. The M. E. verb appears to be formed from the adj. skerre, scared, timid. - Icel. skjarr, shy, timid; skjarrt hross, a shy horse, just like M. E. skerre hors, and Sc. scar, skair, timorous (Jamieson). Cf. Icel. skirra, to bar, prevent; reflexive, skirrask, to shun, shrink from ; skirrast við, to shrink from. Allied to Du. scheren, to withdraw, go away; G. sich scheren, to withdraw, depart, schere dich weg, get you gone, like E. sheer off f $\beta$ . The Du. and G. scheren also means 'to shear;' the orig. sense of And I skjarr seems to have been 'separate,' keeping to one's self. think we may connect it with Share and Shear; and see Sheer (2). Der. scare-crow, something to scare crows away, Meas. for Meas. ii. I. I. SCARF(1), a light piece of dress worn on the shoulders or about the neck. (E.) Spenser has scarfs, F. Q. v. 2. 3. Though it does not appear in M. E., it is an E. word, and the orig. sense is simply a shred' or 'scrap,' or piece of stuff. - A. S. scearfe, a fragment, piece, in a gloss (Bosworth); hence the verb scearfian, to shred or scrape, A. S. Leechdoms, i. 70, l. 14. + Du. scherf, a shred. + G. scherbe, a shard, pot-sherd; cf. scharben, to cut small.  $\beta$ . All from a base SCARF, answering to Aryan SKARP, an extension of 🖌 SKAR, to cut, as seen in Lat. scalpere, to cut.  $\gamma$ . The particular sense is clearly borrowed from that of O. F. escharpe, 'a scarf, baudrick;' Cot. This is really the same word; it also meant a scrip for a pilgrim, and is derived from O. Du. scharpe, schaerpe, scerpe, a scrip, a scrip. pilgrim's wallet (Oudemans); Low G. schrap, a scrip (Bremen Wörterbuch). Cf. A. S. sceorp, a robe, Ælfred, tr. of Orosius, iv. 4. 3. G. scherbe, a shred; and see Sorip, Sorap. ¶ The G. schürpe, a scarf, sash, Swed. skärp, Dan. skjerf, skjærf, are not true Teut. words, but borrowed from French. Der. scarf, verb, Hamlet, v. 2. 13; scarf-

'In the joining of the stem, where it was scar/ed;' Anson's Voyage, b. ii. c. 7 (R.) And in Phillips, ed. 1706. The word is Swedish. – Swed. skarfva, to join together, piece out. – Swed. skarf, a scarf, scam, joint; of shortfour, a china ya, 'An actended form of Day, skar appearing cf. skarfyxa, a chip axe. An extended form of Dan. skar, appearing in skar-öxe, an adze, whence skarre, to scarf, join; allied to Icel. skör, a rim, edge, scarf, joint in a ship's planking, and Icel. skara, to jut out, to clinch the planks of a boat so that each plank overlaps the plank below it. β. From Icel. skera (pt. t. skar), to shear, cut, shape; from the cutting of the edge. So also Bavarian scharben, to cut a notch in timber, Schmeller, ii. 463; G. scharben, to cut fyng, called boxyng or cuppynge; Sir T. Elyo, Castel of Helth, b. iii. c. 7. = F. scarifier, 'to scarife; 'Cot. = Lat. scarificare, to scarify, scratch open; longer form of scarifare, which also occurs (White). B. Probably not merely cognate with, but absolutely borrowed from  $\beta$ . Probably not merely cognate with, but absolutely borrowed from drawing outlines (a sharp-pointed instrument). From the base SKARBH, extended from  $\sqrt{SKAR}$ , to cut; see Shear. Der.

scarific-at-ion, from F. scarification (Cot.) SOARLIET, a bright-red colour. (F., - Pers.) M. E. scarlat, O. Eng. Miscellany, p. 92, l. 69; skarlet, p. 168, l. 10; scarlet, P. Plowman, B. ii. 15. -O. F. escarlate, 'scarlet;' Cot. Mod. F. écarlate; Span. escarlata; Ital. scarlatto. - Pers. sagalát, sigalát, or suglát, scarlet cloth. Cf. Pers. saglátán, saglátán, scarlet cloth, saglán, cloth; Rich. Dict. p. 837. B. The Pers. saglatún is clearly the origin of M. E. ciclatown, Chaucer, C. T. Group B. 1. 1924, on which see my note, and Col. Yule's note to his edition of Marco Polo, i. 249. He remarks that suglat is applied, in the Punjab trade returns, to broadcloth ; it was used for banners, ladies' robes, quilts, leggings, housings, and pavilions. We find also Arab. sagarlát, a warm woollen cloth; Rich. Dict. p. 836; also Arab. siglat, a fine painted or figured cloth, a canopy over a litter. It seems to have been the name of a stuff, which was frequently of a scarlet colour; and hence to have become the name of the colour. So also Telugu sakaláti, sakalátu, woollen or broad-cloth; Wilson, Gloss. of Indian Terms, p. 455. This can hardly be from English, as Wilson suggests, but corresponds to the Pers. and Ital. forms. ¶ The Turkish iskerlat, scarlet, is merely a loan-word from Italian; Zenker, p. 49. Der. scarlet-runner, a climbing plant with scarlet flowers ; scarlat-ina, a disease named from the scarlet rash which accompanies it.

SCARP, part of a fortification. (F., - Ital., - Teut.) Formerly written scarf, as in Cotgrave, but this is an E. adaptation, by con-fusion with scarf, which is allied to O.F. escharge; see Scarf. 'Scarp, the inward slope of the moat or ditch of a place;' Phillips, ed. 1706. - F. scarpe, 'a scarf, or little wall without the main rampire of a fort;' Cot. - Ital. scarpa, 'a counter-scarfe or curtein of a wall;' Florio.  $\beta$ . So called because cut skarp or steep; cf. O. F. escarper, 'to cut smooth and steep;' Cot. - O. H. G. scharf, scharpf, sharp; Low G. scharp, sharp; cognate with E. Sharp, q. v. Der. counter-scarp, escarp-ment.

counter-scarp, escarp-ment. SCATHE, to harm, injure. (E.) In Romeo, i. 5. 86. M. E. scapen, Prompt. Parv. [The sb. scalke, harm, is in Chaucer, C. T. 448; Havelok, 2006.] – A. Y. This Aryan pp. appears in Skt. kshata, wounded, hurt, pp. of kshan, to wound, Benfey, pp. 233. Cf. Skt. kshati, hurting, kshataya, caused by wounding. Thus the root is  $\checkmark$  SKA, to cut; Fick, i. 802. Der. scathe, harm, injury, also spelt scath, Rich. III, i. 3. 317, from A.S. scato (Grein); scath-ful, Tw. Nr. v. 59, Chaucer, C. T. 4519; scathe-less, or scath-less,

Scaterful, 1W. 11. V. 59, Chauder, C. 1. 939, M. E. scatheles, Rom. of the Rose, 1550. SCATTER, to disperse, sprinkle. (E.) M. E. scateren (with one t), Chaucer, C.T. 16382. – A.S. scateran, A.S. Chron. an. 1137. Though rather a late word, it is certainly E., and the suffix -er is frequentative; the base is SKAT, answering to the Gk. base SKAD, appearing in onedávrum, I sprinkle, scatter, onedaois, a scattering, Lat. scandula, a shingle for a roof, Skt. skhad, to cut. β. This base is lengthened from 🖌 SKA, to cut, sever, whence also E. Shed, q. v. Der. scatter-ling, a vagrant, one of a scattered race, Spenser, F. Q. ii. 10. 63. Doublet, skatter, q. v. SCAVEINGEER, one who cleans the streets. (E.; with F. suffix.)

Spelt scavengere, Bp. Hall, Satires, b. iv. sat. 7. 1. 48. The word appears in the Act of 14 Ch. II, cap. 2 (Blount). As in the case of messenger (for messager) and passenger (for passager), the n before g is intrusive, and scavenger stands for scavager.  $\beta$ . The scavager was an officer who had formerly very different duties; see Liber Albus, ed. Riley, p. 34, where is mention of 'the scawagers, ale-con-ners, bedel, and other officials.' Riley says: 'scawagers, officers whose duty it was originally to take custom upon the scavage, i.e. inspection of the opening out, of imported goods. At a later date, part of their duty was to see that the streets were kept clean; and hence the modern word scavenger, whose office corresponds with that of the rakyer (raker) of former times.' As a fact, the old word for er is always rakyer; see P. Plowman, v. 322, and note. That ers had to see to the cleansing of the streets, is shewn in lbus, p. 272. Wedgwood cites the orig. French, which

BCARIFY, to cut the skin alightly. (F., -L., -Gk.) 'Of Scary & corruption of E. shew-age, formed by adding the F. suffix -age to the syng, called boxyng or cuppynge; Sir T. Elyot, Castel of Helth, b. | E. verb to shew; see Blount's Nomolexicon, where the various spellings scavage, schevage, schewage, and scheawing (shewing) are cited ; he says: 'In a charter of Hen. II it is written scewinga and (in Mon Ang. 2 par. fol. 890 b.) sceawing, and elsewhere I find it in Latia tributum ostensorium.' Hence the derivation is certainly from A.S. sceawing; to shew; see Show. See further in Riley. p. 196, 'Of sceawing; 'again, 'Scauage is the shewe,' &c., Arnold's Chron. (150), ed. 1811, p. 99, l. 1; and see Sceawing in the Glossary to Diplomatarium Ævi Saxonici, ed. Thorpe. ¶ Blount is quite wrong in deriving scavenger from Du. schaven, to shave; nor is there the slightest evidence for connecting it with the A.S. scafan, to shave, scrape.

SCENE, stage of a theatre, view, spectacle, place of action. (L., -Gk.) Common in the dramatists. 'A scene, or theater ;' Minshea. The old plays, as, e.g. that of Roister Doister, have the acts and scenes marked in Latin, by Actus and Scana or Scena; and we cer-tainly Anglicised the Latin word, instead of borrowing the F. one, which Cotgrave actually omits. - Lat. scena. - Gk. aunry, a sheltered place, tent, stage, scene. - A SKA, to cover; cf. Skt. chaiga (for skaya), shadowing, shade. See Shado. Der. scen-ic, Gk. organise; scen-er-y, written scenary by Dryden (R.), from Lat. scenarius, belonging to a play. SCENT, to discern by the smell. (F.,-L.) SCEINT, to discern by the smell.  $(F_{..}-L_{.})$  The spelling is false; it ought to be sent, as when first introduced. A similar take spelling occurs in scylke; so also we find scile for sile, scituation for situation, in the 17th century. 'To sent, to smell;' Minsheu, ed. 1627. 'I sent the mornings are;' Hamlet, i. g. 58 (ed. 1623). = F. 1027. If sent the montage agree; Frammer, i. 5, 50 (cc. 1023). = 1 sentir, 'to feel, also to sent, smell;' Cot. - Lat. sentire, to feel, per-ceive.  $\beta$ . The base appears to be SAN-T; cf. G. simular, to meditate, sinn, sense, feeling. See Sonso. Dor. scent, sb., spelt sent, i. e. discomment, Spenser, F. Q. i. 1. 43, last line.

SCEPTIC, doubting, hesitating; often as sb. (F., - L., - Gk.) 'The Philosophers, called Scepticks; 'Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. s. v. Sceptical. - F, sceptique, 'one that is ever seeking, and never finds ; begints. -1, we prove that is even becking, and here -1 and -1, the fortune, or humour of a Pyrrhonian philosopher; Cot. -1 at scepticus. -Gk.  $\sigma_{Keerrinos}$ , thoughtful, inquiring;  $\sigma_{Keerrinos}$ , pl. the Sceptics, followers of Pyrrho (died abt. s.c. 285). -Gk. root SKEP, as in  $\sigma_{Keerrinos}$ , I consider; Aryan  $\checkmark$  SPAK, to spy; see Spy. Der. sceptic-al (Blount); sceptic-ism.

SCEPTRE, a staff, as a mark of royal authority. (F., -L., -Gk.) M. E. sceptre, Chaucer, C. T. 14379. - F. sceptre, 'a royall scepter;' Cot. - Lat. sceptrum. - Gk. σκηπτρογ, a staff to lean on; also, a sceptre. - Gk. onfaren, to prop; also, to lean on. Cf. ourarie, a gust or squall of wind; outpreter is also used in the sense to harl, throw, shoot, dart. - & SKAP, to throw; cf. Skt. kshap, to throw. Der. sceptr-cd. Rich. 11, ii. 1. 40.

SCHEDULE, an inventory, list. (F.,-L.; or F.,-L.,-Gk.) In Shak. L. L. L. i. I. 18; spelt scedule in the first folio. - O. F. schedule, or cedule, 'a schedule, scroll, note, bill;' Cot. - Lat. schedula, a small leaf of paper; dimin. of scheda, also seida (Cicero, Att. i. 20 fin.), a strip of papyrus-bark.  $\beta$ . The Gk.  $\sigma_{\chi}$  in tablet, leaf, may have been borrowed from Lat. scheda (or sceda?), see Liddell; but we find also Gk.  $\sigma_{\chi}(\delta\eta)$ , a cleft piece of wood, a splint, which looks like the original of Lat. scida. The difficulty is to know whether the Lat. word is original (from scid-, base of scindere), or borrowed (from Gk. sxifer, to cleave). Either way, it is from SKID, to cleave; cf. Skt. chid, to cut. [+]

SCHEME, a plan, purpose, plot. (L.,-Gk.) ' Scheme (schema), the outward fashion or habit of anything, the adorning a speech with rhetorical figures;' Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. Borrowed directly, as a term in rhetoric, from Lat. schema. — Gk.  $\sigma_{\chi}\hat{\eta}\mu a$ , form, appearance; also, a term in rhetoric. — Gk.  $\sigma_{\chi}\eta$ -, base of  $\sigma_{\chi}\eta$ - $\sigma_{W}$ , future of  $\xi_{\chi}ess$ . to hold, have. The base is  $\sigma \in \chi$ , whence (by transposition)  $\sigma \chi \in -$ SAGH, to hold; whence also Skt. sak, to bear, endure. Der. scheme, vb.; schem-er, schem-ing. And see sail.

SCHISM, a division, due to opinion. (F., -L., -Gk.) Tyndall has 'schismes that were among our clergy;' Works, p. 176, col. 1. M. E. scisme, Gower, C. A. i. 15. - F. schisme, scisme, 'a scisme, a division in, or from, the church;' Cot. - Lat. schisma. - Gk. σχίσμα, a rent, split, schism. - Gk.  $\sigma_{\chi}ifew$  (fut.  $\sigma_{\chi}i\sigma_{w}$ , base  $\sigma_{\chi}i\delta_{-}$ ), to cleave, - $\sqrt{SKID}$ , to cleave, cut; Skt. chkid, Lat. scindere, to cut. Der. schismat-ic, from F. scismatique, 'scismaticall,' Cot., Lat. schismaticus, Gk. σχισματικόs, from σχισματ-, stem of σχίσμα; hence schismat-ic-al, -ly. Lat. schola, a school. - Gk.  $\sigma_{\chi o \lambda h}$ , rest, leisure, spare time, employ.<sup>4</sup> SCIOLIST, one whose knowledge is superficial. (L.) 'Though ment of leisure, disputation, philosophy, a place where lectures are they be but smatterers and meer sciolists;' Howell, Famil. Letters, ment of leisure, disputation, philosophy, a place where lectures are given, a school. The orig sense is a resting or pausing; from the base  $\sigma \chi_{2^{-}} = \sigma \chi_{e^{-}}$  or  $\sigma \chi_{\eta^{-}}$ , seen in  $\sigma \chi_{\eta^{-}} \sigma \omega$ , fut. of  $\xi \chi_{eu}$ , to have, hold, restrain, check, stop. - N SAGH, to hold; see Scheme. Also school-man, school-master, school-mistress. Doublet, shoal (1), q. v. SCHOONER, SCOONER, a two-masted vessel. (E.) The spelling schooner is a false one; it should be scooner. The mistake is due to a supposed derivation from the Du. schooner, a schooner, but, on the contrary, the Du word (like G. schoner) is borrowed from E. There is no mention of Du. schooner in Sewel's Du. Dict., ed. 1754. The E. schooner occurs in Ash's Dict., ed. 1775; and earlier in the following: 'Went to see Captain Robinson's lady ... This gentleman was the first contriver of schooners, and built the first of that sort about 8 years since;' extract from a letter written in 1721, in Babson's Hist. of Gloucester, Massachusetts, cited in Webster's Dict., whence all the information here given is copied. 'The first schooner . . . is said to have been built in Gloucester, Mass., about the year 1713, by a Captain Andrew Robinson, and to have received its name from the following trivial circumstance : When the vessel went off the stocks into the water, a bystander cried out, "O how she scoons 1" [i.e. glides, skims along]. Robinson instantly replied, "A scooner let her be;" and from that time, vessels thus masted and rigged have gone by this name. The word scoon is popularly used in some parts of New England to denote the act of making stones skip along the surface of water. . . . According to the New England records, the word appears to have been originally written scooner; Webster. The New England scoon was imported from Clydesdale, Scotland ; being the same as Lowland Sc. scon, 'to make flat stones skip along the surface of water; also, to skip in the above manner, applied to flat bodies; Clydesdale; Jamieson. So also scun, to throw a stone; North of England; E. D. S. Glos. B. I (A. D. 1781). -A.S. scunian, to shun, flee away; hence, to skip or speed along. See Shun. Allied words are Norweg. shunna, Icel. shunda, skynda, Dan. skynde, Swed. skynda sig, Swed. dial. skynna sig, to hasten, hurry, speed. Apparently from a base SKU, to speed, whence also E. scurd, E. shco-i, shu-ni. Gr As a rule, derivations which require a story to be told turn out to be false; in the present case, there seems to be no doubt that the story is true.

SCIATIC, pertaining to the hip-joint. (F.,-L.,-Gk.) · Sciatick vein;' Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. [The sb. sciatica is earlier, in Minsheu, ed. 1627.] - F. sciatique, 'of the sciatica; veine sciatique, the sciatica vein, seated above the outward ankle;' Cot. - Low Lat. sciaticus, corruption of Lat. ischiadicus, subject to gout in the hip (White). - Gk.  $lox_{100}$  discos, subject to pains in the loins. - Gk.  $lox_{100}$ , stem of  $lox_{100}$ , pain in the loins. - Gk.  $lox_{100}$ , the socket in which the thigh-bone turns. Der. sciatica, fem. of Lat. sciaticus.

SCIENCE, knowledge. (F., -L.) M. E. science, Chaucer, C. T. 11434; P. Plowman, B. x. 214.-F. science, 'science;' Cot.-Lat. scientia, science, knowledge. - Lat. scient-, stem of pres. part. of scire, to know, orig. to discern. From a base SKI, to discern, whence also E. shill; see Skill. Der. scienti-fic, from F. scientifique, 'scientificall,' Cot., from Lat. scientificus, made by science, where the suffix -ficus is from facere, to make ; scientific-al, -ly. Also a-scit-it-i-ous, scio-l-ist.

SCIMETAR, CIMETER, a curved sword. (F. or Ital., - Pers.?) Spelt semitar, used of a pointed sword; Titus Andron. iv. 2. 91.-F. cimeterre, 'a scymitar, or smyter, a kind of short and crooked sword, much in use among the Turks;' Cot. This accounts for the spelling cimeter. Also Ital. scimitarra, scimitara, 'a turkish or persian crooked sword, a simitar;' Florio. This accounts for the spelling scimetar.  $\beta$ . It was fully believed to be of Eastern origin. If so, it can hardly be other than a corruption of Pers. shimskir, skamskir, 'a cimeter, a Pers. sham, a nail; and shar, a lion; id. pp. 907, 921; Vullers, ii. 464. Y. The Span, is cimitarra, explained by Larramendi from Basque cimea, a fine point, and tarra, belonging to; prob. a mere invention, like his Basque etymology of cigar.

SCINTILLATION, a throwing out of sparks. (F., -L.) In Minsheu, ed. 1627. [The verb scintillate is much later.]-F. scintil-lation, 'a sparkling;' Cot.-Lat. scintillationem, acc. of scintillatio.-Lat. scintillatus, pp. of scintillare, to throw out sparks. - Lat. scintilla, a spark ; a dimin. form, as if from scinta*. Cf. Gk. on whether, a spark. Perhaps allied to A.S. scin-an, to shine; see Shine.

b. iii. let. 8 (about A. D. 1646). Formed with suffix -ist (Lat. -ista, Gk. -1077s) from Lat. sciolus, a smatterer. Here the suffix (in scio-lus) has a dimin. force, so that the sense is 'knowing little.'- Lat. scire, to know: see Science.

SCION, a cutting or twig for grafting; a young shoot, young member of a family. (F., -L.) Spelt scion, Minsheu, ed. 1627. Also spelt sion, syon, cion, 'Syon, a yong sette,' i. e. slip or graft; Palsgrave. 'Cyun of a tre, Surculus, vitulamen;' Prompt. Parv. Spelt sioun, Poems and Lives of Saints, ed. Furnivall, xxxv. 74 (Stratmann). - F. scion, 'a scion, a shoot, sprig, or twig;' Spelt cion in the 13th cent. (Littré). Diez connects it with F. scier (spelt size in Cot.), to cut, to saw, which is from Lat. secare, to cut. Thus scion means 'a cutting,' just as a slip or graft is called in E. a cutting, and in G. schnittling, from schnitt, a cut. See Section. [†] SCIRRHOUS, pertaining to a hard swelling. (L., -Gk.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. Englished as if from a Lat. scierhosus*, adj. formed from scirrhus, a late Lat. medical term given in Blount and Phillips, used in place of Lat. scirrhoma, a hard swelling. - Gk. ouippos, better ouipos, a hardened swelling, a 'scirrhus;' also called σκίρρωμα, or σκίρωμα; from the adj. σκιρόs, hard.

SCISSORS, a cutting instrument with two blades fastened at the middle. (F., -L.) Spelt cissers in Levins. 'Cysoure, forpex;' Prompt. Parv. M. E. sisoures (riming to koures), Chaucer, House of Fame, ii. 182. – O. F. cisciers, shears, scissors (Roqueor), The more usual F. form is ciscaux, 'sizars or little shears; 'Cot. The latter is the pl. of ciscau, older form cisci, a chisel, cutting instrument. The true base of these words is probably secare, to cut, as shewn  $\beta$ . But it certainly would seem that the derivative s.v. Chisel. of secare was confused with forms due to cadere and scindere. And it is quite clear that the mod. E. spelling of scissors is due to a supposed etymology (historically false) from Lat. scissor, a cutter, which is from scissus, pp. of scindere, to cleave. It is remarkable, however, that the Lat. seissor meant 'a person who cuts,' a carver, a kind of gladiator (White); whilst the Low Lat. scissor meant a carver, a butcher, and scisor meant a coin-engraver, a tailor. Y. There is absolutely not the slightest evidence for the use of scissor for a cutting instrument, and still less for the use of a plural seissores, which could only mean a couple of carvers, or butchers, or tailors. But popular etymology has triumphed, and the spelling seissors is the result. ¶ With Lat. scindere we may connect ab-scind, ab-scissa, re-scind; and see schism. With Lat. cadere we may connect circum-cise, con-cise, de-cide, de-cis-ion, ex-cis-ion, fratri-cide, homi-cide, in-cise, infanti-cide, matri-cide, parri-cide, pre-cise, regi-cide, sui-cide; cas-ura. For the derivatives of secare, see Section.

SCOFF, an expression of scorn, a taunt. (O. Low G.) M. E. scof, skof, Ayenbite of Inwyt, p. 128, l. 3 from bottom; 'nom a skof' = took it in scorn, K. Alisaunder, 6986. Not found in A.S.; except that A. S. scyle is a gloss upon pracipitationis in Ps. II. 4 (Bosworth). -O. Fries. schof, a scoff, taunt (Richtofen). + Icel. shaup, later skop, mockery, ridicule. Cf. also O. Du. schobben, schoppen, to scoff, mock (Hexham); Icel. skeypa, skopa, to scoff, mock, skopan, railing; and perhaps Dan. stuffe, to deceive. B. The orig. sense was pro-bably 'a shove' or 'a rub; cf. Low G. schubben, to rub, sik schubben, to rub oneself when one itches (Bremen Wörterbuch); M. H. G. schwyfen, to push, from the root of E. shows. See Showe. Der. scoff, verb, Rich. II, iii. 2. 163; scoff-er, As You Like It, iii. 5.62. SCOLD, to chide, rail at. (O. Low G.) M. E. scolden, P. Plow-man, B. ii. 81. Not in A. S. Formed from Du. schold, pt. t. of the strong verb scheldan, to scold. + G. schalt, pt. t. of the strong verb schellen, to scold. B. The orig. sense was prob. simply to make a loud noise; since we may consider these verbs as closely connected with Icel. skjalla (pt. t. skal, pp. skollinn), to clash, clatter, slam, make a noise; G. schallen, in comp. erschallen (pt. t. erscholl), to resound; Swed. skalla, to resound. - VSKAL, to resound, clash; Fick, iii. 334. Cf. Lithuan. skaliti, to bark, give tongue; said of a hound. Der. scold, sb., Tam. Shrew, i. 2. 188, and in Palsgrave ;

scold-er. And see scald (3). SCOLLOP, the same as Scallop, q. v. SCONCE (1), a small fort, bulwark. (Du., -F., -L.?) In Shak. Hen. V, iii. 6. 76; also applied to a helmet, Com. Errors, ii. 2. 37; and to the head itself, Com. Errors, i. 2. 79. - O. Du. schantse (Du. schans), 'a fortresse, or a sconce;' Hexham. We find also Swed. skans, fort, sconce, steerage; Dan. skandse, fort, quarter-deck; G. schanze, a sconce, fort, redoubt, bulwark; but none of these words β. They are seem to be original, nor to have any Teut. root. probably all derived from O. F. esconser, 'to hide, conceal, cover,' also absconser, 'to hide, keep secret;' Cot. We also find O. F. escons (Burguy) and absconse (Cotgrave) used as past participles.-Lat. absconsus, used (as well as absconditus) as pp. of abscondere, M m 2 find Span. esconderse, to hide oneself; and the E. to ensconce oneself simply means to lie hid in a corner, or to get into a secure nook. Y. Diez derives the Ital. scancia, a book-case, from Bavarian schanz -G. schanze, which is doubtless right; but the G. schanze may be none the less a borrowed word. It is singular that we also find G. schanze in the sense of 'chance;' and there can be no doubt as to its being borrowed from F. when used in that sense; for it is then from O.F. chance, chance. And see Sconce (2). Der. en-

BCONCE (a), a candle-stick.  $(F_i - L_i)$  Palsgrave has: 'Scone, to sette a candell in, lanterne a mayn.' M. E. scones. 'Scone, Sconsa, vel absconsa, lanternula;' Prompt. Parv. p. 450. 'Hee absconsa, a scons;' Wright's Vocab. i. 231, col. 1. This clearly shews that the word was used to mean a concealed or closely covered light; as also we find from Roquefort. - O. F. esconse, a dark lantern, Lat. absconsa ; Roquefort. Put for absconse. - Lat. absconsus, pp. of abscondere; see Abscond. And see Soonce (1). SCOOP, a hollow vessel for ladling out water, a large ladle. (Scand.)

M. E. scope. 'Scope, instrument, Vatila, Alveolus;' Prompt. Parv. The pl. scopes, and the verb scopen, to ladle out water, occur in Manning's Hist. of England, ed. Furnivall, 8164, 8168 (Stratmann). -Swed. skopa, a scoop; O. Swed. skopa, with sense of Lat. haustrum (Ihre). + O. Du. schoepe, schuppe, a scoop, shovel ; Hexham. + Dan. with Shovel, + G. schuppe, a slovel,  $\beta$ . Perhaps connected with Shovel, + G. schuppe, a shovel.  $\beta$ . Perhaps connected with Shovel, q.v.; though this is not quite clear. But cf. Gk.  $\sigma\kappa i \phi \sigma s$ , a cup, allied to  $\sigma\kappa \phi \sigma \sigma s$ , a hollow vessel, from  $\sigma\kappa i \pi \tau \epsilon \nu$ , to dig.  $-\checkmark$  SKAP, to dig. SCOPE, view, space surveyed, space for action, intention. (Ital., -Gk.; or L., -Gk.) In Spenser, F. Q. iii. 4. 52. 'Wherein ... we have given over large a stops;' Gascoigne's Works, ed. Hazlitt, i. 460. Florio has Ital. scope, 'a marke or but to shoote at, a scope, Furgoe, intent. We seem to have taken it from Ital, as it is not a F. word, and has a more limited sense in Gk. Otherwise, it is from a late Lat. scopus, of which I can find no good account. -Gk. σκοπόs, a watcher, spy; also a mark to shoot at. - Gk. root XKEII-, as in σκέπτομαι, I consider, see, spy. - & SPAK, to spy; see Spy. SCORBUTIC, pertaining to, or afflicted with scurvy. (Low L., -Low G.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674, we find: "Scorbute the scurve: scorbutical, pertaining, or (scorbusus), the disease called the scurvy; scorbusical, pertaining, or subject to that disease.' Formed with suffix -ic from Low Lat. scorbutus, which is merely a Latinised form of Low G. schorbock, scurvy, also spelt schärbunk, scharbock, scorbut; see Bremen Wörterbuch, s. v. schärbunk. Cf. O. Du. scheur-buyck, 'the scurvie in the gumms,' Hexham ; Du. scheurbuik. Also G. scharbock, scurvy, tartar on the teeth.  $\beta$ . The etymology seems to have caused difficulty; but it is really obvious. The forms with k must be older than those with t, and the senses of Low G. schärbuuk and of O. Du. scheur-buyck are identical. They can only mean 'rupture of the belly,' and must have been applied to denote rupture in the first instance. and afterwards to signify scurvy. That the two diseases are different, is no objection to the etymology; it merely proves that confusion between them at one time existed. Y. The Low G. schärbunk is from scheren, to separate, part aside, tear, rupture, and bunk, the belly; so also Du. scheur-buik, from scheuren, to tear, rend. crack, and buik, the belly. The verbs are allied to E. Shear. The Low G. buuk, Du. buik, G. bauck, are the same as Icel. buikr, the trunk of the body, for which see Bulk (2). And see Sourvy. Der. scorbutic-al.

SCORCH, to burn slightly, burn the surface of a thing. (F., -L.) M.E. scorchen, Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, bk. ii. met. 6, 1. 1477; Romans of Partenay, 3678. - O. F. escorcher, escorcer, 'to flay or pluck off the skin;' Cot. Cf. Span. escorchar, Ital. scorticare, to flay. β. These are probably due to Low Lat. excorticare, to take off the skin; Ducange. - Lat. ex, off; and cortic-, stem of cortex, bark, rind, husk. The verb took up the sense of Lat. excortare, to skin, from ex, and cortum, skin: though it is not possible to derive scorch from excoriare, as Diez justly remarks. β. We might, however, refer scorch to sn and scortum, with the sense of 'skin' or 'hide,' instead of to ex and cortex. However, it makes no very great difference, for the senses of scortum and cortex are not far removed, both being from the same & SKAR, to separate, to shear, to which we may also refer the word corium. y. Thus the orig. sense of scorch was to take off the scale or shell, hence, to take off the skin, to burn the surface of any thing; both scale and skell being from the same  $\checkmark$  SKAR. See Bhear. [†]

SCORE, a notch or line cut; a reckoning; twenty. (E.) M. E. score: 'ten score tymes;' P. Plowman, B. x. 180. It is supposed to hide; see Absoond. The Span esconder, Ital. ascondere, to hide, an number was denoted by a longer and deeper cut or score. At are directly from the infin. abscandere; with the reflexive sense, we | Lowestoft, narrow passages cut in the side of the slope towards the sea are called scores. - A. S. scor, twenty; which occurs, according to Bosworth, in the A.S. version of the Rule of St. Bennet, near the end. - A.S. scor-, stem of the pt. t. pl. and pp. of acaron, to shear, cut. See Shear. Cf. Icel. skor, skora, a score, notch, incision; Swed. skåra, Dan, skaar, the same. Der. score, to cut, Spenser, F. Q. i. 1. 2; also to count by scoring, Chaucer, C. T. [+]

3344. [†] SCORIA, dross, slag from burnt metal. (L., -Gk.) In Holland, tr. of Plinie, b. xxxiii. c. 4. - Lat. scoria. - Gk. anopia, filthy refuse, dross, scum. - Gk.  $\sigma \kappa \hat{\omega} \rho$ , dung, ordure. + A. S. scears, dung. + Sk. gabrit, dung. + Lat. stercus.  $\beta$ . All from  $\checkmark$  SKAR, to separate; see Curtius, i. 205. See Boorn.

BCORN, disdain, contempt. (F., = O. H. G.) M. E. scorn (dat. scorne), O. Eng. Homilies, ii. 169, l. 1; schorn, scharn, Ancrea Riwle, p. 126, l. 14; skarn, Ormulum, 4402; scarn, scorn, Layamon, 17307.-O. F. scarn, scorn, derision; Burguy. We find O. F. pp. pl. escharnys, glossed by E. secornid, in Wright's Vocab. i. 144, I. 6. Cf. Ital. scherno, derision - O. H. G. skern, mockery, scurrility. B. Some connect this word with Icel. sharn, dung, dirt; A. S. soearn, the same; the throwing of dirt being the readiest way of expressing scorn; see Scoria. But Fick (iii. 338) connects it with Gk. onic er, to skip, dance. Der. scorn, verb, M.E. scornen, P. Plowman, B, ii. 81, sharnen, Ormulum, 7307, from O.F. escarnir, escharnir, which from O.H.G. skernón, to mock, due to the sb. skern; also scorn-ful, K. Lear, ii. 4. 168; scorn-ful-ly; scorn-er, P. Plowman, B. xix. 27

SCORPION, a stinging insect, a sign of the zodiac. (F., -L., -Gk.) M.E. scorpion, K. Alisaunder, 5263. - F. scorpion, 'a scorpion:' Cot. - Lat. scorpionem, acc. of scorpio, another form of scorpins. a scorpion. - Gk. onoprios, a scorpion, a prickly sea-fish, a prickly plant; the lit. sense being 'sharp' or stinging - /SKARP, to cat, pierce; see Sharp. SCOTCH, to cut with narrow incisions. (Scand.) In Shak.

Cor. iv. 5. 198; Macb. iii. 2. 13; cf. scotch, sb., a slight cut. Antony, iv. 7. 10. The notion is taken from the slight cut inflicted by a scutcher or riding-whip; Cotgrave explains F. verge by 'a rod, wand, switch, or scutcher to ride with.' This connects scotch with prov. E. scutch, to strike or beat slightly, to cleanse flax; Halliwell. The variation of the vowel appears in Norw. skoka, skoko, or skuku, The variation of the vower appears in Noiw, show, of issue, a swingle for beating flax (Aasen), which is prob. further allied to Swed. skäckta, skäkta, to swingle. 'Skäckta lin eller hampa, to swingle or sewick flax or hemp;' Widegren.  $\beta$ . Perhaps further allied to Du schokken, to jolt, shake, and to E. Shock and Shake.

SCOT-FREE, free from payment. (E.) Scot means 'payment; we frequently find scot and lot, as in Shak 1 Hen. IV, v. 4, 115; Ben Jonson, Every Man, ed. Wheatley, iii. 7, 11; sce a paper by D. P. Fry on scot and lot, Phil. Soc. Trans. 1867, p. 167. The phrase occurs in Thorpe, Ancient Laws, i. 491, in the Laws of Will, I. § v; 'omnis Francigena, qui tempore Eadwardi propinqui nostri funt of another construction of the phrase of the phra in Anglia particeps consuetudinum Anglorum, quod ipsi dicunt as klote et an scote, persolvat secundum legem Anglorum.' Here en = on, in, by. See also Liber Albus, ed. Riley, pp. 114, 235. - A.S. scot, sceot; as in leoht-gesceot, leoht-sceot, money paid to supply light, Bosworth ; Róme-scott, money paid to Rome, A. S. Chron. an. 1127, spelt Rom-gescot, id. an. 1095. The lit. sense is 'contribution,' that which is 'shot' into the general fund. - A. S. scot-, stem of pp. of secotan, to shoot; see Shoot, Shot. + O. Fries. shot, a shot, also a payment or scot. + Du. schot. + Icel. shot, a shot, contribution, tax. + G. schoss, a shot, a scot. β. The Low G. forms originated O. F. escot, a shot, whence escotter, 'every one to pay his shot, or to contribute somewhat towards it,' Cot.; disner à escot, 'a dinner at an ordinary, or whereat every guest pays his part,' id.; so that scot = a tavern-score, is certainly the same word; cf. 'Simbo-lum, escot de taverne,' Wright's Voc. i. 134. ¶ The phrase scot and lot, as a whole, presents some difficulty, and has been variously interpreted; the lit. sense is 'contribution and share;' I suppose that originally, seof meant a contribution towards some object to which others contributed equally, and that lot meant the privilege and liability thereby incurred; mod. E. subscription and membership. Sce Mr. Fry's paper, which is full of information. Doublet, shot through fear." So also Jamieson has: 'Scunner, Scouner, to loathe,  $\beta$  skulk, keep aloof, skolli, a skulker, a fox, the devil; Du. schuilen, to shudder, hesitate, shrink back through fear; Scunner, Skonner, sb., loathing, a surfeit; also, any person or thing which excites disgust.' by Low G. schulen, to hide oneself, not to let oneself be seen, and the Also: 'Scunner, vb. trans., to disgust, cause loathing.' To which must be added, that, as the verb had the form scunner or scouner, it was obviously convenient to add the suffix -el of the agent, to turn it into a sb., for the sake of greater distinctness. This would give scounser-el, a fellow causing disgust, a loathsome rascal; and, with the usual insertion of d (which could not but be brought in by the emphasis) the form scoundrel would naturally result. Of course, the suffix -el (answering to -ol in A. S. wac-ol, -el in M. E. newefang-el) was preferable to the equivalent form -or in this case, to distinguish the agential suffix from the frequentative one. y. The verb scunner is the frequentative form from A.S. scunian, to shun; the se sound being preserved (as usual) in the North of England. Hence scound-r-el = scun-er-el, one whom one constantly shuns, or merely 'a shunner,' a coward. The word is E., not Scand., because shun is not a Scand. word; see Shun. In Barbour's Bruce, xvii. 651, we have: 'And skunnyrrit tharfor na kyn thing' = and did not shrink through fear one bit on that account; where the Edinb. MS. has scounryl; shewing that skunnyr = scouner. And again, in the same, v. 211, where one MS. has schonand (shunning), the other has shownrand (scunnering), both words meaning 'dreading;' shewing that showner is the frequentative of schon. ¶ I have no doubt that skowner is the frequentative of schon. this solution, here first proposed, is the right one. Wedgwood connects it with scumber or scummer, to dirty; which would only give scumbrel. E. Müller refers us to Ital. scondaruolo, but scondaruole (not scondaruolo) merely means blindman's buff (see Florio), and the vowel o would not pass into ou, not to mention that Florio probably put w for v, and meant Ital. scondarvole, as Blount understood it. Mahn refers us to G. schandkerl (which he seems to have invented), the true G. word being schandbube; and the passage of G. a into E. ou is simply impossible. Besides, we need not go to G. or Ital. when the word can be fairly explained as English.

SCOUNDREL, a rascal, worthless fellow. (E.) In Shak. Tw. Nt. i. 3. 36; and in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. Not common in old authors; used by Cotgrave to translate F. maraud. Formed, with agential suffix -el, from prov. E. and Scottish shunner or scunner, to loathe, shun; the d being excrescent, as usual after n. This word scunner was also used as a sb., with much the same sense as scoundrel. β. Thus Brockett gives: 'Scunner, to nauseate, feel disgust, to loathe, to shy, as a horse in harness. It is also applied, figuratively, ting numbers by notches on a stick, every twentieth to a man whose courage is not at the sticking place, one who shrink.

SCOUR, to cleanse by hard rubbing, to pass quickly over. (F., -L.) M. E. scouren; 'scouryn awey ruste;' Prompt. Parv. 'As any bason scoured newe;' Rom. of the Rose, 540.-O.F. escurer, 'to scowre; Cot. Cf. Span. escurare; O. Ital. schurare, 'to skoure dishes, to rub or cleanse harnesse,' Florio. [Hence also Swed. shura, Dan. shure, to scour; the word not occurring in Icelandic.] - Lat. excurare, to take great care of, of which the pp. excuratus occurs in Plautus; see Diez. - Lat. ex, here used as an intensive prefix; and curare, to take care, from cura, care. See Ex- and Cure. Der. scour-er.

SCOURGE, a whip, instrument of punishment. (F., -L.) M.E. scourge, Wyclif, John, ii. 15; schurge, O.E. Homilies, i. 283, l. 11; Ancren Riwle, p. 418. -O. F. escorgie (see Littré), mod. F. escourgée, écourgée, a scourge. Cot. has escourgée, 'a thong, latchet, scourge, or whip.' Cf. Ital. scuriata, scuriada, a scourging; O. Ital. scoria, 'a whip, scourge,' scoriare, 'to whip,' scoriata, scoriada, 'a whipping ; also, the same as scoria,' i. e. a whip; Florio. β. The Ital. scoriata answers to Lat. excoriata, lit. flayed off, hence a strip of skin or shread of leather for a whip; pp. of excoriare, to strip of skin. -Lat. ex, off; and corium, skin; see Ex- and Cuirass. Y. We y. We might explain the O. Ital. verb scoriare directly from Lat. excoriare, to excoriate, to flay by scourging. Der. scourge, M. E. scourgen, Rob.

SCOUT (2), to ridicule, reject an idea. (Scand.) In Todd's Johnson; noted as a vulgar word. Cf. Lowland Scotch scout, 'to pour forth any liquid forcibly;' Jamieson. The latter sense is closely related to theot.-Icel. shuta, shuit, a taunt; cf. skuta, to jut out, alled to shota, shotra, to shove, shot-yroi, scoffs, taunts, and to the strong verb shjota (pt. t. shaut, pl. shutu, pp. sholinn), to shoot. Cf. Swed, skjula, (1) to shoot, (2) to shove, pish; skjula skuldan på, to thrust the blame on; Dan. skyde, (1) to shoot, (2) to shove; skyde skylden paa, to thrust the blame on; skyde vand, to repel water. Thus the sense is to shoot, push away, reject. See Shoot.

SCOUT (3), a projecting rock. (Scand.) In place-names, as Raven-Scout. 'The steep ridges of rocks on Beetham-fell (Westmoreland) are called scouts; ' A Bran New Wark (E. D. S.), 1. 193, footnote. - Icel. skuta, to jut out ; see Scout (2).

SCOWL, to look angry, to lower or look gloomy. (Scand.) M. E. scoulen; spelt scoule, Prompt. Parv. The devils who gather round a dying man are said to 'shoul and stare;' Pricke of Conscience, 2225. - Dan. skule, to scowl, cast down the eyes. Cf. Icel. skolla, to prov. G. (Ditmarsch) schulen, to hide the eyes, to look slily as if peeping out of a hiding-place, look out, a word noticed by Fick, i. 337.  $\gamma$ . Fick connects these with Dan. skiwl, sneuer (wuence Dan. skiwle, to hide), Icel. skjól, a shelter, cover, which he refers to a Teut. base SKEULA, a hiding-place; from  $\checkmark$  SKU, to cover.  $\gamma$ . Cf. also Icel. skjól-eygr, goggle-eyed, squinting (skjól- in other compounds having reference to skjól, a shelter); A. S. seeól-eáge, intermed (Bosworth), spelt seýl-eágede in Wright's Vocab. i, 45, col. 2. Thus the sense is ' to peep out of a hiding-place,' or to look from under the covert of lowering brows. Der. scoul, sb.; also scul-k, q.v. SCRABBLE, to scrawl. (E.) In 1 Sam. xxi. 13; where the marginal note has 'made marks.' Put for scrapp-le, frequentative of Sorape, q. v. Cf. prov. E. scrable, to scratch, frequentative of scrab, to scratch, i.e. to scrape (Halliwell). See Soramble. SCRAGGY, lean, rough. (Scand.) Cotgrave translates F.

escharde by 'a little, lean, or skraggie girle, that looks as if she were starved.' It is the same word as M.E. scroggy, covered with underwood, or straggling bushes. 'The wey toward the Cite was strong. thorny, and scroggy;' Gesta Romanorum, ed. Herrtage, p. 19, 1. 19. Cf. Prov. E. serag, a crooked, forked branch, also, a lean thin person (Halliwell); skrags, the ends of sticks. Also prov. E. serog, a stunted bush, scroggy, abounding in underwood, scrogs, blackthom, scroggy, twisted, stunted, scrog-legs, bandy-legs. (id.) - Swed. dial. skraka, a great dry tree, also (sarcastically) a long lean man; whence gobb-skrakan, a weak old man (Rietz). Allied to Swed. dial. skrokk, anything wrinkled or deformed, skrukka, to shrink together, skrugeg, crooked, skrukkug, wrinkled (Rietz). Also to Norweg. skrokken, clocked, strakag, winkled (Act2). Also to low g. strokka, winkled, uneven, pp. of the strong verb skrakka (pt. t. skrakk), to shrink (Aasen).  $\beta$ . Evidently scraggy is for scrakky, formed from skrakk, pt. t. of skrekka, to shrink, which is cognate with E. Shrink, q.v. Mr. Wedgwood also notes : 'a lean scrag, which is nothing but skin and bones; Bailey. Frisian skrog is used in the same sense, whilst Dan. skrog signifies carcase, the hull of a ship. Scrag of mutton, the bony part of the neck ; scraggy, lean and bony. He also notes Gael. sgreag, to shrivel (also cognate with shrink), whence sgreagach, dry, rocky, sgreagag, an old shrivelled woman, sgreagan, anything dry, shrunk, or shrivelled. Cf. Irish sgreag, a rock.

ock. Der. scraggi-ness. SORAMBLE, to catch at or strive for rudely, struggle after, struggle. (E.) 'And then she'll scramble too;' Beaum. and Fletcher, Mons. Thomas, i. 3. 'I'll scramble yet amongst them;' id. Captain, ii. I (Jacomo). 'The cowardly wretch fell down, crying for succour, and scrambling through the legs of them that were about him;' Sidney, Arcadia, b. ii. (R.) Not found in M.E. A frequentative form of prov. E. scramb, to pull, or rake together with the hands (Yorks.), scramp, to catch at, to snatch (North; in Halliwell). It may also be regarded as a nasalised form of prov. E. scrabble, to scramble (Somersets.), allied to scraffle, to scramble (Halliwell), and scrapple, to grub about (Oxon.), which is the frequentative of prov. E. scrach, to scratch (East.) Halliwell cites 'to scrappe as a henne dose' from a MS. Dict. of A. D. 1540; which is merely E. scrape. Thus scramble is the frequentative of a nasalised form of Sorape, q.v. And see Sorabble. SCRAP, a small piece, shred. (Scand.) M. E. scrappe. 'And also sif I myst gadre any scrappes of the releef of the twelf cupes, i. e. any bits of the leavings of the twelve baskets (in the miracle of the loaves); Trevisa, tr. of Higden, i. 15. (Rather Scand. than E.) - Icel. skrap, scraps, trifles, from skrapa, to scrape, scratch; Dan. skrab, scrapings, trash, from skrabe, to scrape; Swed. afskrap, scrapings, refuse, dregs, from skrapa, to scrape. See Scrape.

SCRAPE, to remove a surface with a sharp instrument, shave, scratch, save up. (Scand.) M. E. scrapien, scrapen, also shrapien, shrapen (Stratmann). 'But ho so schrape my mawe'=unless one shrapen (Stratmann). But no so scarape my mawe = unless one were to scrape my maw; P. Plowman, B. v. 124. Spelt shreapien. Ancren Riwle, p. 116, l. 15. (Rather Scand. than E.) = Icel. shrapa, to scrape; Swed. shrapa; Dan. shrabe. + Du. schrapen, to scrape. + A.S. scearpian, to scarify; A.S. Leechdoms, ii. 76, l. 13.  $\beta$ . The A.S. form scearpian is clearly allied to A.S. scearp, sharp; thus to scrape is 'to use a sharp instrument ;' see Sharp. Der. scrap-ing, scrap-er; also scrap, q.v., scrabb-le, q.v., scramb-le, q.v.

SCRATCH, to scrape with a pointed instrument or with the nails. (Scand.) The word to scratch has resulted from the confusion of M.E. scratten, to scratch, with M.E. cracchen, with the same sense, 1. M.E. scratten, to scratch. Prompt. Parv.; Pricke of Conscience, 7378; Ancren Riwle, p. 186. note b. This form scratter is for scarter \*, from a base SKART, lengthened form of  $\checkmark$  SKAR, to shear, cut. A closely allied base SKARD appears in E. shard and

The word scrape runs parallel with it, from the base SKARP; and the difference in sense and form between scrape and scrat is very slight. Lastly, the form serat is rather Scand. than E.; cf. Dan. skrade, to creak; Norweg. and Swed. skratta, to laugh loudly or harshly, Nor-weg. skratla, to rattle (Aasen), Swed. dial. skrata, to frighten away animals; words significant of sharp, grating sounds. 2. M. E. cracchen, P. Plowman, B. prol. 154, 186. Apparently put for cratsen. -Swed. kratsa, to scrape, krats, a scraper, formed with suffix -sa from kratta, to rake, scrape, scratch, cf. kratta, sb., a rake; Dan. kradse, to scratch. So also Du. krassen (for kratsen?), to scratch; G. kratzen, to scratch; all from a base KART, to scratch, from & KAR, to cut, which is merely & SKAR, to cut, with loss of initial s, and appears in Gk. seipeur, to shear, Skt. kri, to injure, ori, to wound. ¶ Hence scratten and cracchen are from the same root and mean much the same thing, so that confusion between them was easy enough. Der.

scratch, sb., scratch-er. Doublet, grate (2). SCRAWL, to write hastily or irregularly. (E.) A late word, used by Swift and Pope (Rich., and Todd). The aw (= au) denotes a long vowel or diphthong; better spelt scrall, with a as in all. 'To scrall, or scrawl, to scribble, to write after a sorry careless manner;' Phillips, ed. 1706. It appears to be nothing but a careless form of Sorabble, q.v. Cf. also E. scribble, and prov. E. scribble-scrobble, scribbling (North). B. The peculiar form seems due to scrobble, scribbling (North).  $\beta$ . The peculiar form seems due to confusion with prov. E. scrawl, to crawl (West) in Halliwell; he cites 'To scrall, stir, motio' from Coles, Lat. Dict. To which add: 'The ryuer shall scraule [swarm] with frogges,' Exod, viii. 3; in Consultion motion' This word is word in which a scrawle and the scrawle in the scrawle is the scrawle in the scrawl Coverdale's version. This word is merely E. crawl, with prefixed s, added in some cases with the idea of giving greater emphasis; see Crawl. Der. scrawl, sb., scrawl-er.

SOREAM, to cry out shrilly. (Scand.) M. E. scremen, Polit. Songs, p. 158, l. 9; screamen. Hali Meidenhad, p. 37, last line but one. - Icel. strama, to scare, terrify; Swed. skräma, Dan. skræmme.  $\beta$ . Hence it appears that the E. word has preserved to scare. what was doubtless the oldest sense of these Scand. words, viz. 'to cry aloud,' as the means of imposing or of expressing terror; we still commonly use scream with especial reference to the effects of sudden fright. Cf. Swed. skrän, a scream, skräna, to whimper, which is merely a parallel form. Y. In precisely the same way, the Dan. skrakke, to scare, is related to E. skriek. The forms scream, screech, and Lowland Sc. skir-l, to cry shrilly, are all various extensions from the Teut. base SKRI, to cry aloud, occurring in G. schreien, Swed. skria, Du. schreijen, to cry aloud or shriek. -  $\checkmark$  SKAR, to make a noise; Fick, i. 242. Cf. G. schallen, to resound. See Screech, Shriek. Der. scream, sb.

SOREECH, to shriek, cry aloud. (Scand.) 'Whilst the screech-owl, screeching loud;' Mids. Nt. Dr. v. 383; where the first folio has scritch-owle, scritching. Also spelt scrike, Spenser, F. Q. vi. 5, 18. Baret (1580) has scriek. M. E. scriken, skryken, schrichen, schriken, Chaucer, C. T. 15406 (Six-text, B. 4590); spelt shriken, O. E. Homi-lies, ii. 181, l. 2. - Icel. shrækja, to shriek; cf. skrikja, to titter (said of suppressed laughter); Swed. skrika, to shriek; Dan. skrige, to shriek; skrige af Skræk, to shriek with terror. + Irish sgreach-aim, I shriek ; Gael. sgreach, sgreuch, to screech, scream; W. ysgrechio, to scream. β. All from VSKARK or SKARG, to make a noise ; whence Icel. skark, a noise, tumult, Skt. kharj, to creak, Russ. skrejetate, to gnash the teeth ; extended from  $\checkmark$  SKAR, to make a noise. See Scream. Der. screech, sb., answering to Swed. skrik, Dan. skrig, Irish sgreach, Gael. sgreuch. W. ysgréck; also screech-owl. And see shrike. And see shrike. Doublet, shriek, which is merely a variant, due to the alteration of se to sh at the beginning and the preservation of h at the end.

SCREEN, that which shelters from observation, a partition ; also, a coarse riddle or sieve. (F., - Teut.?) 1. M. E. scren; spelt screne, Prompt. Parv., p. 450; Wright's Vocab i. 197, col. 2. - O. F. escran, 'a skreen to set between one and the fire, a tester for a bed ;' Cot.  $\beta$ . Of doubtful origin; Diez refers it to G. Mod. F. écran. schragen, a trestle, stack (of wood); we may also note G. schranne, a railing (answering to the E. sense of partition made of open work); and G. schranks, a barrier, schranken, the lists (at a tournament) ; cf. schranken-fenster, a lattice or grate-window. y. Fick (i. 813) connects G. schragen and schranke with each other and with Lat. scrinium (whence E. Shrine). We cannot derive screen from Lat. scrinium, as we know that the latter word became escrin or escrain in O. F., and shrine in E. 2. In the sense of coarse riddle, it is spelt skreine in Tusser's Husbandry, sect. 17, st. 16 (E. D. S.), and is the same word as the above. 'A screen for gravel or corn is a grating which wards off the coarser particles and prevents them from coming through; 'Wedgwood. Der. screen, verb, Hamlet, iii. 4. 3.

stred. We may explain to scrat by to shear slightly, scrape, grate. I fusion with screw (2) below. Spelt screw in Minsheu, ed. 1627. -O.F. escroue, 'a scrue, the hole or hollow thing wherein the vice of a presse, &c. doth tum; 'Cot. Mod. F. écrou.  $\beta$ . Of uncertain origin. Diez derives it from Lat. scrobem, acc. of scrobs, a ditch, tench late the scrober of the scrober o trench, also a hole. This word appears to be from a base SKARBH. closely allied to SKARP, to cut, as in Lat. scalpere, sculpere; see Borofula, Sculpture. y. Diez thinks the F. word can hardly be derived from the Teutonic; we find G. schraube, a screw, Du schroef, Icel. skrufa, Swed. skruf, a screw, peg, Dan. skrue; words of which the root does not seem to be known; though they may be The E. word from the Teut. base SKRU, to cut; Fick, iii. 339. is certainly from the F., as Scheler rightly remarks. Wright, p. 153, 1.13. See Shrow. Doublet, shrew. SCRIBBLE, to write carelessly. (L.; with E. suffix.) 'Scribled forth in hast at aduenture;' Sir T. More, Works, p. 56e. Formed with the frequentative suffix -le from scribe, sb.; the suffix giving it a verbal force. Similarly, we find G. schreibler, a scribbler, from schreiben, to write. See Scribe. Der. scribble, sb., scribbl-er.

SCRIBE, a writer, a clerk, an expounder of the Jewish law. (L.) First in use as a scriptural term, and taken directly from Latin; Littre does not trace the F. scribe beyond the 16th century. M. E. scribe, Wyclif, Matt. viii. 19. – Lat. scriba, a writer, Matt. viii. 19 (Vulgate). - Lat. scribere, to write (pp. scriptus), orig. to scratch marks on a soft surface, to cut slightly; allied to scrobs, a ditch, and scalpere, to cut. - & SKARBH, extended form of & SKAR, to cut. whence also Gk. prápew, and A.S. grafan; see Grave (1). SCRIP (1), a small bag or wallet. (Scand.) M. E. scrippe, King Horn, ed. Lumby, 1061; Chaucer, C. T. 7319. – Icel. skreppa, a scrip, bag; Norweg. skreppa, a knapsack (Aasen); Swed. dial. skrappa, a bag (Rietz), Swed. skrappa, a scrip; O. Swed. skreppa (Ihre). + O. Du. scharpe, schaerpe, scerpe, a scrip, pilgrim's wallet Oudemans); Low G. schrap, a scrip. (Brem. Wort.) Allied to G. scherbe, a shred. The orig. sense is 'scrap,' because made of a scrap or shred of skin or other material. See Borap, Scarf (1).

SCRIP (2), a piece of writing, a schedule. (F., - L.) In Shak. Mids. Nt. Dr. i. 2. 3. The same word as script, the t dropping off in common talk; see Script.

SCRIPT, a piece of writing. (F.,-L.) 'Euery script and bond;' Chaucer, C. T. 9571. - O. F. escript, 'a writing; ' Cot. - Lat. scriptum, a thing written, neut. of scriptus, pp. of scribere, to write ; see Scribe. Der. manu-script, re-script, tran-script.

SCRIPTURE, writing, the Bible. (F., - L.) Scripture, in the sense of 'bible,' is short for holy scripture, or rather, The Holy Scriptures. M. Lat. scripturus, fut. part. of scribere, to write; sec Scribe. Der. scriptur-al.

SCRIVENER, a scribe, copyist, notary. (F., - L.) Properly a scriven; the suffix -er (of the agent) is an E. addition. M.E. skrivenere, Lydgate, Complaint of Black Knight, st. 28; formed with suffix -ere from M. E. scriwein, Ayenbite of Inwyt, p. 44, l. 30. - O. F. escrivain, 'a scrivener;' Cot. Cf. mod. F. écrivain, Span. escribano, Ital. scrivano. - Low Lat. scribanum, acc. of scribanus, a notary; extended from scriba, a scribe; see Sorlbe.

SCROFULA, a disease characterised by chronic swellings of the glands. (L.) Called 'the king's evil,' because it was supposed the touch of a king-could cure it; see Phillips, Dict., &c. In Phillips, ed. 1706; Blount (1674) has the adj. scrofulous. - Lat. scrofula; usually in pl. scrofula, scrofulous swellings. The lit. signification of scrofula is a little pig; dimin. of scrofa, a breeding sow. The reason for the name is not certainly known, but perhaps it is from the swollen appearance of the glands. It is remarkable that the Gk. swohen appearance of the grands,  $\chi_{\alpha\beta}$  substantial a digger,' from the habit of swine, who are fond of 'rooting' or turning up the earth; allied to scrobs, a ditch. The parallel Gk. SCREW (1), a cylinder with a spiral groove or ridge on its sur-face, used as a fastening or as a mechanical power. (F., -L.? or Teut.?) Word is  $\gamma po\mu\phi ds$ , allied to  $\gamma p \phi \phi sv$ , to scratch; and both  $\gamma p \phi \phi sv$  and scrota are from the same  $\checkmark$  SKARBH, extension of  $\checkmark$  SKAR, to Petter spelt scrue, as in Cotgrave; the spelling screw is due to con-group cut. See Grave (1). Der. scroful-ous; and see screw (1).

SCROLL, a roll of paper or parchment. a schedule. (F., -Teut.) Scroll, formerly also scrowl, is a contraction of scrow-el, a dimin. form (with suffix-el) of scrowe or scrowe, the earlier form of the word. The dimin. form does not appear to be earlier than about A.D. 1500, but the M. E. scrowe, scrowe, is much older. Palsgrave (A.D. 1530) gives both scrolle and scrowe, and equates both to F. rolle. Fabyon also has both forms: 'He [Rich. II.] therefore redde the scrowle of resignacyon hymselfe,' an. 1398 (ed. Ellis, p. 547); 'wherefore, knowynge that the sayd Baylly vsed to bere scrowys and prophecie aboute hym,' an. 1449 (id. p. 624). M. E. scrowe, scrowe ; spelt scrow, Prompt. Parv. ; pl. scrowis, Wyclif, Matt. xxiii. 5 (earlier version only); scrowe, Ancren Riwle, p. 282, last line. - O. F. escrowe, 'a scrowle;' Cot. Spelt escroe in the 14th cent. (Littré); mod. F. écrow; the Low Lat. escroa occurs A.D. 1386 (Ducange). To which must be added that the dimin, form escroels actually occurs, in the sense of strip, as cited by Littré, s.v. écrow; thus proving the origin of E. scroll beyond all doubt.  $\beta$ . Of Teut. origin. - O. Du. schroode, a strip, shred, slip of paper (Oudemans); allied to schroden, to-cut off (id.) Cf. Icel. skrá, a scroll; allied to Norweg. skraa, to cleave (shred), and Dan. skraae, to hull corn, in which the d has disappeared. Thus the orig sense is a 'shred,' i. e. strip or slip of parchment. See Shred, Shard. [†] ment. See Shrød, Shard. [†] SCRUB, to rub hard. (E.) M. E. serobben, to rub down a horse; King Alisaunder, 4310. Not found in A.S., but prob. an E. word, see below. + Du. schrobben, to scrub, wash, rub, chide. + Dan. skrubbe, to scrub, rub; cf. skrubbet, adj., rough, rugged, scabrous. + Swed. skrubba, to rub, scrub. β. The Norweg. skrubb means a scrubbing-brush (Aasen); and skrubba is a name for the dwarf corneltree, answering to E. shrub, A.S. scrobb, a shrub. The likeness between A.S. scrobb, a shrub, and M.E. scrobben, to scrub, can hardly be accidental; and, from the analogy of broom, we may conclude that the original scrubbing-brush was a branch of a shrub, and that the vb. is from the sb. In fact, we still use scrubby as an epithet of a plant, with the sense of shrubby, i. e. mean, small, or rough (cf. Dan. skrubbet, rough, cited above); and we even extend the same epithet to meanness of conduct, and the like. Cf. also Du. schrobber, 'a swabber, scrub, hog, scoundrel, fool, scrape-penny; 'O. Du. schrobber, 'a rubber, a scraper, a scurvie fellow; 'Hexham. And note Lowland Sc. scrubber, 'a handful of heath tied tightly together for cleaning culinary utensils, Teviotdale;' Jamieson. See Shrub. Der. scrub, sb., 'a mean fellow, a worn-out brush, low underwood,' Webster; scrubb-ed, mean, Merch. Ven. v. 162; scrubb-y, adj., mean; scrubb-er.

SCRUPLE, a small weight, a doubt, perplexity, reluctance to act. (F., -L.) 'It is no consience, but a foolish scruple;' Sir T. More, Works, p. 1435 cc. 'Would not have bene too scruptulous;' Frith, Works, p. 1435, col. 2.—F. scrupule, 'a little sharp stone falling into a mans shoee, and hindering him in his gate [gait]; also, a scruple, doubt, fear, difficulty, care, trouble of conscience; also, a scruple, a weight amounting unto the third part of a dram;' Cot.— Lat. scrupulum, acc. of scrupulus, a small sharp stone; hence, a small stone used as a weight, a small weight; also, a stone in one's shoe, an uneasiness, difficulty, small trouble, doubt. Dimin. of scrupus, a sharp stone. Formed from a base SKRU =  $\checkmark$  SKUR, to cut, appearing in Skt. kshur, to cut, scratch, furrow, khur, to cut, ckhur, to cut; see Shear. Der. scrupul-ous, from F. scrupuleux, 'scrupulous,' Cot., from Lat. scrupulous; scrupul-ous, terupul-ous, 'scrupul-ous', cot., from Lat. scrupulous; scrupul-ous, terupul-ous, 's SKAR, to cut, scrupul-ous, scrupul-ous, terupul-ous, 'scrupul-ous, 'scrupul-ous', 'scrupul-ous'

SCRUTINY, a strict examination, careful enquiry. (L.) Spelt seruteny, Skelton, Garl. of Laurel, 782; cf. F. scrutine, 'a scrutiny;' Cot. Englished from L. serutinium, a careful enquiry. - Lat. scrutari, to search into carefully, lit. to search among broken pieces. - Lat. scruta, broken pieces, old trash; prob. from the base SKRU, to cut up, for which see Soruple. Der. scrutin-ise, scrutin-eer. And see in-scrut-able.

SCUD, to run quickly, run before the wind in a gale. (Scand.) In Shak. Venus, 301. We also have prov. E. send, a slight rapid or flying shower of rain (Shropshire, and elsewhere); Lowland Sc. scuddin-stanes, thin stones made to skim the surface of water, as an amusement, answering exactly to Dan. skud-steen, a stone quoit. The frequentative of scud is prov. E. stuttle, to walk fast, to hurry along, often used with precisely the same force as scud; the weakened form scuddle, to run away quickly, is given in Bailey, vol. i. ed. 1735. Hence scud is a weakened form of scut or scoot; cf. prov. E. 'to go like scooler, i.e. very quick, East' (Halliwell); and scoot is only another form of shoot. Precisely the same weakening of t to d occurs in Danish, and the nautical term to scud is of Danish origin. - Dan. skyde, to shoot, to push, to shove; skyde i frö, to run to seed; skyde vand, to repel water; skyde over steen (lit. to shoot over the stem), to shoot ahead, i. e. scud along, as an antical term; Dan. skud-, a shooting. used in compounds, as in skud-car, leap-year, skud-steen, a 'scudding-stane;' Swed. shutta, to leap, Swed. dial. skuta, a sledge

SCROLL, a roll of paper or parchment. a schedule.  $(F_{.} - Teut.)^{(2)}$  (Rietz), allied to Swed. skjuta, to shoot, and to Icel. skjota, to shoot, Scroll, formerly also scrowe, is a contraction of scrow-el, a dimin. form with suffix -el) of scrowe or scrowe, the earlier form of the word. The limin. form does not appear to be earlier than about A. D. 1500, but he M. E. scrowe, scrowe, is much older. Palsgrave (A. D. 1530) gives both scrolle and scrowe, and equates both to F. rolle. Fabyan also has both forms: 'He [Rich. II.] therefore redde the scrowle of in Spurrell, is of no value here. Der. scutt-le (3), q. v. SCUFFILE, to struggle, fight confusedly. (Scand.) In Beaum. and Fletcher, Philaster, v. 1. The frequentative form of scuff, preserved in prov. E. scuff, to shuffle in walking, West; Halliwell, – Swed. skuffa, to push, shove, jog; allied to E. shove. + O. Du. schuffelen, to drive on, also, to run away, i.e. to shuffle off; allied to Du. schuiven, to shove. Thus to scuffle is 'to keep shoving about.' See Shuffle, Shove. Der. scuffle, sb., Antony, i. I. 7.

SCULK, SKULK, to hide oneself, lurk. (Scand.) M.E. zeulken, skulken, Pricke of Conscience, 1788; Gower, C. A. ii. 93, l. 4; whence the sb. scolkynge, Rob. of Glouc. p. 256, l. 11. – Dan. skulke, to sculk, slink, sneak; Swed. skolka, to play the truant. Allied to Icel. skolla, to sculk, keep aloof.  $\beta$ . The base is SKULK, extended from SKUL; just as lur-k is from lower. The shorter base occurs in Du. schullen, Low G. schulen, to sculk, to lurk in a hiding-place; from Dan. skiul, Icel. skjól, a place of shelter; see further under Soowl, which exhibits the shorter form.

SCULL (1), the cranium ; see Skull.

SCULL (2). a small, light oar, (Scand.) 'Scull, a little oar, to row with; Sculler, a boat rowed with sculls, or the waterman that manages it;' Phillips, ed. 1706. Also in the phrase 'rowing scull,' Hudibras, pt. i. c. 3, l. 351. We also find 'the old sculler,' i. e. Charon; Ben Jonson, Cynthia's Revels, i. 1 (Cupid's 7th speech). Dryden oddly uses sculler with the sense of 'boat;' tr. of Virgil, Georg. b. iv. L 735. 'Scull to rowe with, awiron; Scullar, bactlier;' Palsgrave.  $\beta$ . To be connected with Lowland Sc. skul, skull, skoll, a goblet or large bowl, which is a Scand. word, viz. Swed. skdl, a base, bowl, one of the scales of a balance (Widegren); Icel. skdl, a base, bowl, one of the scales of a balance (Widegren); Icel. skdl, a bowl, a hollow, dish of a balance; Dan. skaal, a bowl, cup. (The change of vowel is remarkable, but occurs again in Skull, q. v.)  $\gamma$ . Richardson, without authority, defines a scull as 'a boat,' and so connects 'boat' with the idea of 'shell,' or hollow vessel; this can hardly be right. Every rowing man knows the essential difference between sculls and oars to consist in this, that the blade of the scull is kollowed out, as it were, and slightly curved, whilst the oar-blade is much flatter; oars for sea-boats are quite flat. We may at once explain scull from Icel. skdl, a hollow; Swed. skdlig, 'concave, hollow,' Widegren. Thus a scull is an oar with a slightly concave blade, like the dish of a balance. See Scale (2). Der. scull, verb; scull-er, as above.

BCULL (3), a shoal of fish. (E.) In Shak. Troilus, v. 5. 22. M. E. sculle, Prompt. Parv. A variant of Shoal, g. v.

SCULLERY, a room for washing dishes, and the like. (E.) The word is really E., though the suffix y is French; this suffix is added by analogy with pantry, buttery (really bottlery), so as to denote the place or room where the washing of dishes went on. Sculler is a remarkable alteration of swiller, i.e. a washer, from the verb swill, to wash, A.S. swilian; see Swill. This is proved by the history of the word, in which two changes took place: (1) from swiller to squiller; and (2) from squillery to scullery. 1. We find occasional squiller; and (2) from squillery to scullery. change of orig. initial sw to squ, due perhaps to an Eastern dialect. Levins writes squaine for swain. Another clear instance is in the M. E. swelter (allied to mod. E. sultry), spelt squaltryn in the Prompt. Parv., p. 471; and on the very same page we have: 'squyllare, dysche-wescheare, Liza;' i. e. squiller for swiller. 2. Again, in squirrel; and by the same change, squillery would become scollery or scullery (for the change from sco to scu observe 'scome, or scum' on p. 449 of the same). β. For further examples, note: 'How the squyler of the kechyn;' Rob. of Brunne, Handlynge Synne, l. 5913 (in Spec. of Eng. ed. Morris and Skeat, p. 61). 'The pourvayours of the buttlarye [buttery] and pourvayours of the squylerey; Ordinances and Regulations of the Royal Household, 4to, 1790, p. 77; 'Ser-geaunt-squylloure,' ibid. p. 81; cited in Halliwell. 'All suche other as shall long [belong] unto the squyllare; Rutland Papers, p. 100; also in Halliwell. Moreover, Rob of Brunne tells us that the squyler above mentioned 'meked hymself ouer skyle [exceedingly] Pottes and dysshes for to swele,' i. e. swyle, swill, as required by the rime; 1. 5828. There is, in fact, no doubt as to the matter. Y. The change from swiller to squiller or sculler in the dialect of the East of England was obviously caused by the influence of Dan. skylle, Swed. skölja, to wash, rinse, Icel. skola, skyla, to wash. If (as seems most likely) these words are cognate with A. S. swilian, the form of the base must be SKWAL or SKWIL, as in Swed. squala, to gush, Norw 8. We may further suppose that the chafrom swillery or squillery to scullery was helped out by some confusion  $\overset{\textcircled{}}{}$  afflicted with it; an E. adaptation, probably, of the Low Lat. medical with O. F. escuelle (from Lat. sculela), a dish; so that a scullery term scorbutus; see Soorbutio. Also scurvi-ly, -ness. SCUTCH, to dress flax; see Sootoh. place for washing them. SCULLION, a kitchen menial. (F.,-L.) In Shak. Haml. ii. 2. 616. 'Their smooked scolions faces, handes, and feete;' Barnes, Works, p. 341, col. 2. 'Scoulyon of the kechyn, sonillon;' Palsgrave. This word has undoubtedly been long understood as if it were connected with scullery, and the connection between the two words in the popular mind may have influenced its form and use. But it is impossible to connect them etymologically; and Wedgwood well says that 'it has a totally different origin,' which he points out. - F. escouillon, 'a wispe, or dishclout, a maukin or drag, to cleanse or sweepe an oven;' Cot. 'In the same way malkin, mawkin, is used both for a kitchen-wench and for the clout which she plies;' Wedg-B. The F. escouillon is the same as escouvillon, Cot. The wood. latter form answers to Span. escobillon, a sponge for a cannon; formed with suffix -on (Lat. -ionem) from escobilla, a small brush, dimin. of scoba, a brush, broom, which is cognate with Ital. scopa, a broom, a birch-tree. - Lat. scopa, used in pl. scopa, thin twigs, a broom of twigs.  $\gamma$ . The lit. sense of scopa may be 'cuttings, from  $\checkmark$  SKAP, to cut, hew; see Capon. The word scullery is of different twigs. origin; see above.

SCULPTURE, the art of carving figures. (F.,-L.) ' M. E. sculpture, Gower, C. A. ii. 83, 1. 2. - F. sculpture, for which Littre cites nothing earlier than the 16th century; but it must have been in earlier use. - Lat. sculptura, sculpture ; cf. Lat. sculpturus, fut. part. of sculpere, to cut out, carve in stone; allied to scalpere, to scratch, grave, carve, cut.  $-\checkmark$  SKARP, extended from  $\checkmark$  SKAR, to cut. SCUPPER, a hole in the side of a ship to carry off water from the deck. (F.) Scuppers, the holes through which the water runs off the deck; Coles, ed. 1684. So named because the water appears to be spit out from them. -Q. F. escopir, escupir, to spit out; now obsolete, but once widely spread ; see Burguy. It appears also in the Span. and Prov. escupir; Walloon scuipa; Wallachian scuipire (Burguy).  $\beta$ . The root is not known; as it can hardly be corrupted from Lat. exspuere, Burguy suggests a Celtic root, as seen in Gael. cop, Irish cuip, froth, foam; to which the Lat. ex, out, must, in that case, have been prefixed. ¶ We might rather connect it with Du. schoppen, to scoop away, met een schup weg schoppen, from schup, a scoop, shovel, or spade (Sewel), but for two objections: (1) that the action of shoveling away is not what is meant; and (2) that the Dutch word for scupper is spiegat (G. speigat, Swed. spygatt). Now the Swed. spygatt is 'spit-hole,' from spy, to spit; and G. speigat is the same, from speien, to spit; names which seem to be mere translations from the O. F. name now lost (except in E.) Cf. G. speiröhre, F. scutiforme, 'fashioned like a scutcheon, shield-fashion ;' Cot. -Lat. scuti-, for scuto-, crude form of scutum, a shield ; and form a, form, shape; see Escutcheon and Form.

SCUTTLE (1), a shallow basket, a vessel for holding coal. (L) M. E. scotille. 'Hec scutella, a scotylle;' Wright's Vocab. i. 257, col. 1. - A. S. scutel, a dish, bowl. 'Catinus, scutel;' Wright's Voc. i. 290, col. I. - Lat. scutella, a salver or waiter; dimin. of scutra a tray, dish, or platter, also spelt scuta. Prob. allied to scutam. a shield. Der. coal-scuttle. Doublet, skillet.

SCUTTLE (2), an opening in the hatchway of a ship. (F.-Span., - Teut.) 'Scuttles, square holes, capable for the body of a Span., - Teut.) man to pass thorough at any hatch-way, or part of the deck, into any room below; also, those little windows and long holes which are cut out in cabbins to let in light;' Phillips, ed. 1706. And in Cotgrave. -O.F. escoutilles, pl., 'the scuttles, or hatches of a ship; th'ouvertures or trap-doors, whereat things are let down into the hold; 'Cot. Mod. F. écoutille; Span. escotilla, escotillan, 'a hole in the hatch of a ship, also the hatch itselfe,' Minsheu.  $\beta$ . The word appears to be Spanish; and we find another form in escotadura, the large trapdoor of a theatre or stage (Neuman). Another sense of escotadura is the sloping of a jacket or pair of stays; and the form of the word is such as to be due to the verb escotar, to cut out a thing so as to make it fit, to slope, to hollow out a garment about the neck (a different word from Span. escotar, to pay one's reckoning, for which see Scotfroe). The origin sense is 'to cut a hole in a garment to admit the neck,' from the sb. escote, the sloping of a jacket, a tucker such as women wear above the bosom. This sb. is derived, as Diez points out, from the Teutonic; cf. Goth. shawls, the hem of a garment, Du. school, the lap, the bosom, G. schooss, the same; so that the orig. sense of Span. escote is 'a slope to fit the bosom,' a hole for the neck. y. Similarly the A.S. sceat (cognate with Goth. skauts) answers to the 'sheet' of a sail, exactly corresponding to Span. escota, the sheet of a sail. See Sheet. Der. scuttle, verb, to sink a ship by cutting scuttles or holes in it.

SCYTHE, a cutting instrument for mowing grass. (E.) The intrusion of the letter e is due to false spelling; it should be sythe or sithe. Spelt sythe in L. L. L. i. 1. 6 (first folio, ed. 1623). M.E. sithe, P. Plowman, C. iv. 464; syle, Havelok, 2553. - A.S. side, sile, a scythe; 'Falcastrum, sile,' Wright's Vocab i. 85, 1. 3. The A.S. side is put for signe (a form actually found in the Epinal gloss), and the long i is due to loss of g; it means ' the cutting instrument,' from the Teut. base SAG, to cut =  $\sqrt{SAK}$ , to cut. See Saw(1), Section. Fick, iii. 314. + Du. zeis. + Icel. sigör, sigö, a sickle. + Low G. seged, segd, also seed, seid, a kind of sickle; Brem. Wörterbuch. From the same root we have O. H. Skt. swa, one's own self, Lat. se; and Lat. swus, one's own. Dor. se-cede, se-clude, se-cret, se-cure, sed-ition, se-duce, se-gregate, se-lect, se-parate; and see sever.

SEAMSTRESS, SEMPSTRESS, a woman who sews seams. (E.; with F. suffix.) 'Seamster, and Seamstress, a man or woman that sows, makes up, or deals in linnen-clothes;' Phillips, ed. 1706. Only seamster is given in Minshen, ed. 1637. The suffix -sss is a F. fem. suffix, F. -esse (from Lat. -issa, Gk. -toga), as in princ-ess, martem. sumx, r. -esse (from Lat. -essa, GR. -100a), as in princ-ess, mar-chion-ess. M. E. semster, Destruction of Troy, ed. Panton and Donaldson, l. 1585. - A. S. seámestre. We find: 'Sartra, seámestre,' and 'Sartra, seámestre;' Wright's Vocab.i. 74. [Whence sámestres, Diplomatarium Ævi Saxonici, ed. Thorpe, p. 568, l. 10.] Formed from A. S. seám, a seam, by the addition of the A. S. suffix -estre, explained under Spinster. See Seam.

SEAR, SERE, withered. (E.) Spelt sere, Spenser, Shep. Kal. Jan. 37. M. E. seer ; spelt seere, Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 18, l. 25; seer, Rom. Rose, 4749. - A. S. seár, sere; only preserved in the derived verb; see below. + O. Du. sore, dry (Oudemans); zoor, 'dry, withered, or seare; 'Hexham. + Low G. soor, dry; Brem. Wört.  $\beta$ . The A. S. ea is for Teut. au, and r prob. stands for s, as is so often the case; this brings us to a base SAUS, from the  $\sqrt{SUS}$ , to dry, preserved in Skt.  $\rho usk$ , to become dry, to be withered, whence  $\rho uskka$ , dried up, withered; see Benfey, who remarks that  $\rho usk$  is for susk, and that for orig. sus,  $\rho$  being put for s. by the assimilating influence of sk. From the same root is Gk. aver, to parch, averypos, dry, rough, whence E. austers. The Zend Asua, to dry, proves that sas is the root; Curtius, i. 400. ¶ It is quite a mistake to connect E. sear (from root SUS) with Gk. enpos T It is (from root SKA); the resemblance, such as it is, is quite accidental. Der. sear, verb, to dry up, cauterise, render callous, Rich. III, iv. 1. 61, M. E. seeren, Prompt. Parv., A.S. searian, to dry up, to wither or pine away, Ælfred, tr. of Orosius, iv. 6. 14. SEARCH, to seek, examine, explore. (F., -L.) M. E. serchen Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 268, last line but one; better spelt erreken, for which Stratmann refers to Lydgate, Minor Poems, 150, Mandeville's Travels, p. 315. - O.F. cercher (Burguy); mod. F. seson, seison, saison; mod. F. saison, 'season, due time;' Cot. Cf. Span. sazon, Port. sazão, sezão; O. Prov. sadons, sasos, sazos (Bartsch). - Low Lat. sationem, acc. of satio, a season, time of year, occurring A. D. 1028 (Ducange). The same as Lat. satio, a sowing, planting, Verg. Georg. i. 215, ii. 319 (hence, the time of sowing or spring-time, which seems to have been regarded as the season, par excellence). - Lat. satus, pp. of severe, to sow. β. Serere appears to be a reduplicated form, put for sesere or si-se-re; from 🖌 SA, to sow, weakened form SI; see Sow (1). ¶ Besides the word season, we also find Span. estacion, used in the sense of 'season' or time as well as 'station;' and Ital. stagione, 'a season or time of the yeere,' Florio. These are, of course, from Lat. stationem, acc. of statio, a station, hence applied, we must suppose, to the four stations, stages, or seasons of the year; see Station. And it is extremely probable that the use of this word affected and extended the senses of season. Scheler would derive season also from Lat. stationem, but Diez and Littré argue to the contrary, and we ought to keep the Span. words estacion and sazon quite distinct. I have been informed that the prov. E. season is still occasionally used in Kent in the sense of 'sowing-time,' which is really a strong argument in favour of the derivation front sationem. And see Ducange. Der. season, verb, SECOND, next after the first, the ordinal number corresponding to two. (F.,-L.) M. E. second; spelt secounde, Wyclif, John, iv. 54; secunde, Rob. of Glouc. p. 282, l. 15. Not a very common word, as other was usually employed instead, in early time; second being the only ordinal number of F. origin. F. seeret (fem. secrete, Burguy), 'secret;' Cot. - Lat. secretus, secret; orig. pp. of secensere, to separate, set apart. - Lat. se, apart; and errnere, to separate, sift; see Se- and Concern. SECRETARY, orig. a private amanuensis, confidant. (F., = L.)

The sense of the word is now much extended; it is frequently used where little privacy is intended. In Shak. Hen. VIII, ii. 2. 116, iv. 1. 102. Palsgrave has: 'Secretarye, secretayre;' secretarye also occurs in a 15th-century poem called The Assemble of Ladies, st. 49, pr. in Chaucer's Works, ed. 1561, fol. 259, col. 1. - F. secretaire, 'a secre-tary, clerk : Cot. - Low Lat. secretarium, acc. of secretarius, a confidential officer; cf. Lat. secretarium, a secret place, consistory, conclave. - Lat. secret-us, secret; with suffix -arius; see Secret. Dor. secretary-ship ; secretari-al.

SECT, a party who follow a particular teacher, or hold particular principles, a faction. (F.,-L.) It is tolerably certain that the sense of the word has been obscured by a false popular etymology which has connected the word with Lat. secare, to cut; and it is not uncommon for authors to declare, with theological intolerance and in contempt of history, that a sect is so called from its being 'cut off' from the church. But the etymology from secare is baseless, and un-deserving of serious mention. M. E. secie, used convertibly with sufe (= suite) in P. Plowman, C. viii. 130, B. v. 495; see my note on the line. Both sects and suite are here used in the sense of 'suit of clothes.' - F. secte, 'a sect or faction ; a rout or troup ; a company of one (most commonly bad) opinion ; ' Cot. - Low Lat. secta, a set of people, a following, suite ; also, a quality of cloth, a suit of clothes ; also, a suit or action at law; Lat. secta, a party, faction, sect, lit. 'a follower.' - Lat. sec- (as in sec-undus), base of sequi, to follow, with Aryan suffix ia. Cf. Gk. έπέτης, a follower, attendant, from ξπομαι, I follow. See Sequence. Der. seci-ar-y, Hen. Named from Sedan, a town in France, N.E. of Paris; first seen in England, A.D. 1581; regularly used in London, A. D. 1634 (Haydn). Evelyn speaks of 'sedans, from hence [Naples] brought first into England by Sir Sanders Duncomb;' Diary, Feb. 8, 1645. Cf. F. sedan, cloth made at Sedan (Littré).

M.K. semen, Chaucer, C.T. 10283.-A.S. séman, geséman, to satisfy, conciliate; Grein. Hence the idea of 'suit,' whence that of 'appear from the related adj. seemly, which is rather Scand. than E.; see Seemly. + Icel. sæma, put for soema, to honour, bear with, conform to; closely related to same, adj., becoming, fit, and to soma, to beseem, become, befit.  $\beta$ . A reduplicated form of saw; from the action of two men sawing wood (where the motion is up and down). or sawing stone (where the motion is to and fro). See Saw. 'to burn;' which explains the connection with Goth. souths, sauds, a burnt-offering, sacrifice, Mark, xii. 33. β. From the Teut. base SUTH, to boil, orig. to burn; Fick, iii. 326; allied to the Teut. base SWATH,

The same as Low Lat. sacire, to take possession of another's property .- O. H. G. sazzan, sezzan (put for sazjan), to set, put, place, hence, to put in possession of; mod. G. setzen, cognate with E. SELAH, a pause. (Heb.) In Ps. iii. 2; and elsewhere in the psalms. The meaning of the word is unknown, and cannot be certainly explained. Gesenius takes it to indicate a pause, and connects it with Heb. salah, to rest. See Smith, Dict. of the Bible.

SELDOM, rarely, not often. (E.) M. E. seldom, P. Plowman, A. viii. 124; selden, B. vii. 137; selde, Chaucer, C.T. 1541.-A.S. seldan, seldon, seldum, seldom; Grein, ii. 426.  $\beta$ . The A.S. seldum is formed with an adverbial suffix -um which was orig. the inflectional ending of the dat. plural; just as in hwil-um, mod. E. whil-om, lit. 'at whiles' or at times, wundr-um, wondrously, lytl-um, little, micl-um, much, and the like; see March, A. S. Gram. § 251. This form easily passed into seldon or seldan, just as A. S. onsundr-on, asunder, stands for an earlier form on sundrum. Or we may regard the by-form seld-an as due to a different case ending, such as the ordinary oblique case-ending of weak adjectives, perhaps a dat. sing., as in to-ede-an, moreover. In this view, seldom is for seld-um, dat. pl., while seld-an is a dat. sing.  $\gamma$ . This takes us back to an adj. seld, rare, only found as an adverb. <sup>4</sup> Fat folc wundrab pees be hit seldost gesing '= the people wonder at that which it most seldom sees; Ælfred, tr. of Boethius, cap. xxxix. § 3; where seldost is the superl. form of the adverb. We also find such compounds as seld-cub, rare, seld-sine, seldom seen; Sweet, A.S. Reader. + Du. zelden, adv. + Icel. sjaldan, adv., seldom. + Dan. siclden, adv. + Swed. sällan (for süldan), adv. + G. selten; O. H. G. seldan. 8. All these are adverbial forms from a Teut. adj. SELDA, rare, strange, appearing in A. S. seld (as above); Dan. adj. pl. sielten, rare; Swed. süll- in the comp. säll-sam, rare; Goth. silda- in comp. silda-leiks, wonderful; G. selt- in seltsam, strange. Fick, iii. 328; where it is pointed out that the base SIL appears in Goth. ana-sil-an, to become silent, Mark, iv. 39, and in Lat. sil-ere, to be silent; the idea of 'silence' being closely connected with those of astonishment, wonder, and rarity. See Silent.

SELECT, choice. (L.) In Shak. Haml. i. 3. 74. - Lat. selectus, select, chosen; pp. of seligere, to choose. - Lat. se-, apart; and legere, to choose. See Se- and Legend. Der. select-ness; also select, verb, Cor. i. 6. 81; select-ion, sb., from Lat. acc. selectionem.

SELLF, one's own person. (E.) M. E. self, sometimes used in the sense of 'same' or 'very;' dat. selue; 'right in the selue place '= just in the very place, Chaucer, C. T. 11706. – A.S. self, also seolf, silf, siolf, sylf, self; Grein, ii. 427, where numerous examples are given, + Du. zelf. + Icel. sjalfr; old form sjalfr. + Dan. selv. +Swed. sjelf. + Goth. silba. + G. selbe, selb-st.  $\beta$ . All from a Teut. base SELBA, self; Fick, iii. 329. The origin is unknown; but perhaps SELBA is for SE-LIB-A, where se is the same as Lat. se, Skt. sva, one's own self, and lib- is the same as in the base of Goth. laiba, a remnant, bi-laib-jan, to be left. If this be right, the orig. sense is 'left to oneself.' Der. self-denial, self-evident, selfexistent, self-possession, self-righteous, self-same, self-sufficient, self-willed. Also self-ish, not an old word; self-ish-ness, Butler, Hudibras, pt. i. c. 2. l. 1052. Also my-self, A.S. min self, where min is the possessive pron. of the 1st person; thy-self, A. S. pin self, where pin BENATE, a council of elders. (F., = L.) M. E. senat; spelt a burning, a roasting, G. schwadem, steam. See Fick, iii. 361. Der. Dis the possessive pron. of the second person; him-self, where the A.S. phrase is he self, nom., his selfes, gen., him selfum, dat., hine selfne, acc. (see Grein); her-self, due to A. S. hyre selfre, dat. fem.; &c. For the use of these forms in M. E. and A. S., see examples in Stratmann and Grein. Also selv-age, q. v.

SELL (1), to hand over or deliver in exchange for money or some other valuable. (E.) M. E. sellen, Wyclif, Luke, xii. 33; sillen, other valuable. (E.) M. E. sellen, Wyclif, Luke, xii. 33; sillen, Matt. xix. 21. – A. S. sellan, sillan, syllan, to give, hand over, deliver; Grein, ii. 420. + Icel. selja, to hand over to another. + Dan. sælge. + Swed. sälja. + M. H. G. sellen; O. H. G. saljan. + Goth. saljan, to bring an offering, to offer a sacrifice. B. All from a Teut. base SALYAN, to offer, deliver, hand over. This is a causal form, derived from the sb. which appears in E. as Sale, q. v. y. The Teut. base of sale, sb., is SALA, a handing over, surrender, delivery; Fick, iii. 319. Allied to Lithuan. sulyti, to proffer, offer, pa-sula, sb.,

SELL (2), a saddle. (F., -L.) In Spenser, F. Q. ii. 2. 11, 3. 12. M. E. selle, a seat, Wyclif, 2 Macc. xiv. 21. -O. F. selle, 'a stool, a seat, also, a saddle; 'Cot. - Lat. sella, a seat. Put for sed-la, from sedere, to sit ; see Settle (1), and Sit.

SELVAGE, SELVEDGE, a border of cloth, forming an edge that needs no hem. (Du.) In Exod. xxvi. 4, xxvi. 11; spelt seluege in the edit. of 1551. It merely means self-edge, but it was borrowed from Dutch. 'The self-edge makes show of the cloth;' Ray's Proverbs, ed. 1737. - O. Du. selferge, the selvage (Kilian, cited by Wedgwood); from self, self, and egge, edge. The more usual Du. word is zelfkant, for selfkant. 'Egge, an edge, or a selvage; kant, the edge, brinke, or scame of anything; de zelfkant, the selvage of cloth; Hexham. See Self and Edge.

SEMAPHORE, a kind of telegraph. (Gk.) A late word, not in Todd's Johnson, and little used. It was once used for a telegraph worked with arms projecting from a post, the positions of the arms giving the signals. Coined from Gk.  $\sigma \hat{\eta} \mu a$ , a sign; and  $\phi op \dot{a}$ , a carrying, from  $\phi \dot{e} \rho e \nu$ , to bear, carry, cognate with E. Bear, vb. SEMBLANCE, an appearance. (F., = L.) M. E. semblaunce, Rom. of the Rose, 425.= O.F. semblance, 'a semblance, shew, seeming;' Cot. Formed, with suffix -ance (= Lat. -antia) from sembler, 'to seem, or make shew of; also, to resemble;' Cot.= Lat. simulare, to assume the appearance of, simulate; see Simulate. Cf. re-semblance

SEMI-, half. (L.) Lat. semi-, half; reduced to sem- before a vowel. + Gk. hu-, half. + A. S. sam-, half; as in sam-wis, half wise, not very wise; Grein, ii. 388, 390. + Skt. sámi, half; which Benfey considers = sámya, old instrumental case of sámya, equality, from sama, even, same, equal, like cognate with E. Samo. Thus semidenotes 'in an equal manner,' referring to an exact halving or equitable division; and is a mere derivative of same. Doublet, hemi-

SEMIBREVE, half a breve, a musical note. (Ital.,-L.) From Ital. semibreve, 'a semibriefe in musike;' Florio, ed. 1598. - Ital. semi-, half; and breve, a short note. See Somi- and Brove. ¶ Similar formations are seen in semi-circle, semi-circumference, semicolon, semi-diameter, semi-fluid, semi-quaver, semi-tone, semi-transparent, semi-vocal, semi-vowel; all coined words, made by prefixing semi-, and presenting no difficulty.

SEMITAL, relating to seed. (F.,-L.) Sir T. Browne has seminality, sb., Vulg. Errors, b. vi. c. 1. § 2.-F. seminal, adj. of seed; 'Cot.-Lat. seminalis, relating to seed.-Lat. semin-, stem of semen, seed. - Lat. base se-, appearing in ze-ui, pt. t. of serere, to sow; and suffix -men = Aryan suffix -man. Servere is cognate with E. Sow, q. v. Der. semin-ary, q. v. Also semin-at-ion (rare), from Lat. semin-atio, a sowing, which from seminare, to sow, derived from semen. SEMINARY, a place of education. Lat. sem-per is for sama-per, where sama is 'same,' as in the prefix semi-; and per is 'through,' the same word as the prep. per; see Semi- and Per-. The sense of semper is, accordingly, 'the same through,' i. e. always the same, lasting in the same condition. SEMPSTER, SEMPSTRESS, the same as Seamstress, q.v.

SENARY, belonging to six. (L.) The senary scale (scale by sixes) is a mathematical term. - Lat. senarius, consisting of six each. -Lat. seni, six each; for sex-ni. - Lat. sex, six, cognate with E. six; see Six acc. of senatus, the council of elders. - Lat. sen-, base of sen-ex, old, sen-ium, old age; with pp. suffix -atus; so that sen-atus = grown old. B. From the base SANA, old; whence Vedic Skt. sana, old (Benfey), O. Gk. Svos. old; Goth. simeigs, old, simista, eldest; Irish and Gael. sean, W. hen, old. See Fick, i. 225, 793. See Sonior. Der. senat-or, M. E. senat-our, Chaucer, C. T. 5430, 5464, from O. F. senatour (Littré), from Lat. acc. senatorem; altered to senator to make it like the Lat. nom. case. The theoretical Teut. form is SANTHYAN, Fick, iii. 319; this is a weak causal verb, 'to make to go,' from the strong verb SINTHAN (mt. + SANTH) to go to the strong verb SINTHAN (pt. t. SANTH), to go, to travel, of which numerous traces remain, viz. in O. H. G. sinnan (for sindan), to go, go forth, mod. G. sinnen (pt. t. sann) only in the metaphorical sense ' to go over in the mind,' to reflect upon, think over, just as in the case of the related Lat. sentire, to feel, perceive; Icel. sinni (for sinthi), a walk, journey, also a time; Goth. sinth, a time; A.S. sio (for sinth), a journey, a time, whence stillian, to travel (Grein), M. Span. senescal, Ital. siniscalco, a seneschal, steward. The orig, signification must have been 'old (i.e. chief) servant,' as the etymology is undoubtedly from the Goth. sins, old (only recorded in the superl. sin-ista, eldest), and skalks, a servant. The Goth. sins is cognate with Lat. sen-ex, old. The word mar-shal is a similar compound. See Senior and Marshal.

SENNA, the dried leaflets of some kinds of cassia. (Ital., - Arab.) Spelt sona in Phillips, ed. 1706; the older name is somy or sonie, which is a F. form, from O. F. sonne (Cot.) Minsheu's Span. Dict. has 'son, seny; ed. 1623.- Ital. sona (Florio). - Arab. sona, senna; Palmer's Pers. Dict., col. 361; Rich. Dict. p. 851. SENNIGHT, a week. (E.) Spelt senygas in Palsgrave; a contraction of seven night; see Seven and Night.

SEINSIE, a faculty by which objects are perceived, perception, discemment.  $(F_{..}-L_{.})$  It does not appear to be in early use; Palsgrave gives sensualness and sensualyte, but not sense. Levins has sensible and sensual, but also omits sense. Yet it is very common in Shakespeare. 'And shall sensine things be so sencelesse as to resist sonce?' Sir P. Sidney, Arcadia, poem ix. 1. 137; ed. Grosart, ii. 25.-F. sons, 'sence, wit;' Cot.- Lat. sonsum, acc. of sonsus, feeling, sense. Let sense, belt the sense, point of sense to be sense, for the sense  $\beta$ . From the Aryan base SANT, to direct oneself towards, whence also not only G. sinnen, to think over, reflect upon, but also Aryan SENTA, a way, and E. send; see Bend. See Fick, i. 703. Der. sense-less, sense-less-ly. sense-less-ness; sens-ible, Gower, C. A. iii. 88, from F. sensible, \*sensible,' Cot., from Lat. sensibilis; sens-ibl-y, sensible-ness, sensibil-i-ty. Also sens-it-ive, from F. sensitif, 'sensitive,' Cot.; sens-it-ive-ly, sens-it-ive-ness; sens-at-ion, Phillips, from Lat. sensatio\*, a coined word from Lat. sensatus, endued with sense ; sens-at-ion-al, sens-at-ion--al-ism. Also sens-or-i-um, from late Lat. sensorium, the seat of the senses (White); sens-or-i-al. And see sens-w-al, sent-ence, sent-i-ment. From the same source we also have as-sent, con-sent, dis-sent, re-sent; in-sens-ate, non-sense, pre-sent-i-ment, scent.

senaki, Layamon, 25388.-F. senat, 'a senat;' Cot.-Lat. senatum, 🏵 SENSUAL, affecting the senses, given to the pleasures of sense. (L.) In Levins; Palsgrave has sensualness and sensualyte (sensuality) in his list of sbs.; and sensuall in his list of adjectives. From Late Lat. sensualis, endowed with feeling ; whence sensualitas, sensibility (White). Formed (with suffix -alis), from sensor-, crude form of sensus, sense; see Sonse. Der. sensual-ly; sensual-i-ty, from F. sensualité, 'sensuality,' Cot.; sensual-ness, sensual-ise, sensual-ism, sensual-ist. Also sensu-ous, a coined word, used by Milton; see Rich. and Todd's Johnson.

SENTENCE, an opinion, maxim, decree, series of words containing a complete thought. (F.,-L.) M. E. sentence. Ancrea Riwle, p. 348, l. 14 .- F. sentence, 'a sentence,' Cot. - Lat. sententia, a way of thinking, opinion, sentiment. Put for sentientia*, from the stem of the pres. part. of sentire, to feel, think ; see Sonso. Der. sentence, vb., Meas. for Meas. ii. 2. 55 ; sententi-ous, As You Like It, v. 4. 60, from F. sententieux, 'sententious,' Cot., from Lat. sententiosus ; sententi-ous-ly, -ness. Also sentient, feeling, from stem of pres. part. of sentire, to feel.

SENTIMENT, thought, judgment, feeling, opinion. (F.,-L.) M.E. sentement, Chaucer, Prol. to Legend of Good Women, 1. 69. [Afterwards conformed to a supposed Lat. form sentimentum*, not used.] = O. F. sentement, 'a feeling;' Cot. Formed as if from Lat. senti-mentsum *, a word made up of the suffix -mentum and the verb senti-re, to feel. See Sonso. Dor. sentiment-al, sentiment-al-ly, sentiment-al-ism, -ist.

SEINTINEL, one who keeps watch, a soldier on guard. (F.,-Ital., -L.?) Spelt centonell, Spenser, F. Q. i. 9. 41; sentinel, Macb. ii. 1. 53. - F. sontinelle, 'a sentinell, or sentry;' Cot. - Ital. sontinella, a watch, a sentinell, a souldier which is set to watch at a station; Florio. Cf. Span. centinela, a sentinel.  $\beta$ . The word is certainly of Ital. origin; and it does not seem possible to derive it from anything but Ital. sentina, 'a sinke, a priuie, a companie or filthe packe of lewde rascals, also, the pumpe of a ship;' Florio. The most likely account is that it is equivalent to Lat. sentinator, one who pumps bilge-water out of a ship, from sentina, bilge-water, or the hold of a ship. It is, indeed, quite possible for the word to have arisen as a naval word, afterwards transferred to military affairs. The special sense may be due to the constant attention which a ship's pump requires; the man in charge of the pump, if the ship is leaky, must not quit his post. The origin of sentina is uncertain. ¶ Sometimes explained from Lat. sentire, to perceive ; as if a sential meant a watcher, scout; but this cannot be right, as it does not account for the -in-. Derived by Wedgwood from O. F. sentine, a path (Roquefort), due to Lat. semica, a path; this does not belp us; for the word is Italian, not French. See Sentry. [†] SEINTRY, a sentinel, soldier on guard. (F.,-Ital.,-L.?) Spelt sentrie, in Minsheu, ed. 1627; senteries, pl., Milton, P.L., ii. 412; sentry in Cotgrave, s.v. sentinelle. There is no trace of such a form in F. or Ital.; it can only be an E. corruption of sentinel, which was probably understood (in E. popular etymology) as being due to F. sentier, a path; an idea taken from the sentinel's beat. [Sentier is an extension from O. F. sente, a path, which is from the Lat. sentia, a path l. Sen Sentier is a path.] See Sentinel. ¶ Wedgwood refers us to O.F. senterst, a path (Roquefort), and takes this to be the real etymology. There are difficulties every way, but the difficulties are least if we take sentinel as the orig. word, and sentry as a corruption. The Ital. sentinella, a sentinel, is quite separate from sentiero, a path. Der. sentry-box. [7]

SEPARATE, to part, divide, sever. (L.) We should have expected to find separate first used as a pp., in the sense 'set apart;' but I do not find that such was the case. Levins, Shakespeare, and Minsheu recognise only the verb, which occurs as early as in Tyndale, Workes, p. 116, col. 2; see Richardson. - Lat. separatus, pp. of separare, to separate. - Lat. se, apart; and parare, to provide. ar-range. Cf. Lat. separ, adj., different, separate. See So- and Parade, Pare. Der. separate, adj., from pp. separatus ; separate-ly ; separat-ion, from F. separation, 'separation,' Cot. ; separat-ism, separat-ist. Doublet, Also separ-able, from Lat. separabilis; separabl-y.

SEPOY, one of the native troops in India. (Pers.) 'Sepoys (a corruption of sipaki, Hindostance for a soldier), the term applied to the native troops in India; ' Haydn, Dict. of Dates. The word is, however, a Persian one. – Pers. sipáki, 'a horseman, one soldier; however, a Persian one. - Pers. sipan, 'a norseman, one source; properly an adj., 'military, belonging to an army;' Rich. Dict. p. 807. - Pers. sipah, supah, an army; sipah, supah, sopah, an army; id. pp. 807, 808. If The Pers. a being sounded as E. au in maul, the spelling sepoy gives the right sound very nearly. SEPT, a clan. (F., - L.) It is chiefly used of the Irish clans. Spenser has 'the head of that sept;' and again, 'whole nations and septs of the Irish;' View of the State of Ireland, Globe ed., p. 611, col x. 'The Irish man. tearmeth anis one of the English sept'Ac.' of every sept ' [of the Irish]; Fuller's Worthies; Kent (R.) 'All of the old Irish septs of Ulster; ' Clarendon, Civil Wars, iii. 430 (R.) Wedgwood says: 'a clan or following, a corruption of the synony-mous seet.' He cites from Notes and Queries (2nd Series, iii. 361, May 9, 1857), two quotations from the State Papers, one dated A.D. 1537, which speaks of 'M'Morgho and his kinsmen, O'Byrne and his septe,' and another dated A.D. 1536, which says 'there are another sects of the Berkes and divers of the Irishry towards Sligo.' Wedgwood adds : 'The same corruption is found in Prov. cepte. "Vist que lo dit visconte non era eretge ni de lor cepte" = seeing that the said viscount was not heretic nor of their sect ; Sismondi, Litt. Provenç. 215.' This is doubtless the correct solution, esp. when we consider (1) that seet used to have the sense of 'a following;' and (a) that the change from k to p is not uncommon; cf. Gk. wirrew, Skt. pack, to cook, with Lat. coquere. See Sect. Doublet, sect.

SEPTEMBER, the ninth month. (L.) M.E. Septembre, Chaucer, On the Astrolabe, pt. i. § 10. l. 3. It seems to be meant for the Latin, not the French form; the other months being mostly named in Latin .- Lat. September, the name of the seventh month of the Roman year. - Lat. septem, seven, cognate with E. seven; and the suffix -ber, SEPTENARY, consisting of seven. (L.) In Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, iv. 12. 12. A mathematical term. - Lat. septemarius, consisting of seven. - Lat. septēni, pl., seven apiece, by sevens ; put for septem-ni. - Lat. septem, seven ; with Aryan suffix -na. See Seven. SEPTEINNIAL, happening every seven years, lasting seven years. (L.) Used by Burke ; see Todd's Johnson. Formed, with suffix -al, from Lat. septenni-um, a period of seven years. - Lat. septenni-s, adj., of seven years. - Lat. sept-, for septem, seven; and annus, a year. See Sovon and Annual. Der. septennial-ly.

SEPTUAGENARY, belonging to seventy years. (L.) In Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. iii. c. 9, § 4, last line. - Lat. septuagenarius, belonging to the number seventy. - Lat. septuageni, seventy each; distributive form of septuaginta, seventy. - Lat. septua-, due to septem, seven; and -ginta = -cinta, short for decinta, tenth, from decem, ten. See Seven and Ten. Der. septuagenari-an. So also septuagesima, lit. seventieth, applied to the Third Sunday before Lent, about 70 days before Easter; from Lat. septuagesima (dies), fem. of septuagesimus, seventieth, ordinal of septuaginta, seventy. Also septua-gint, the Greek version of the Old Testament, said to have been made by 70 translators; used by Burnet (Johnson).

SEPULCHRE, a tomb. (F., -L.) M.E. sepulcre, in early use; O. Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, ii. 95, l. 11. - O. F. sepulere, later sepulchre, 'a sepulcher, tomb;' Cot. - Lat. sepulcrum (also ill-spelt sepulchrum), a tomb. - Lat. sepul-, appearing in sepul-tus, pp. of sepe*lire*, to bury; with suffix -erum (Aryan -ka-ra?). β. It is probable that the orig. sense of sepelire was 'to honour' or 'to shew respect to;' it answers to Vedic Skt. saparya, to worship, a denom. verb from a lost noun sapas*, honour. This sb. is from Skt. sap, to honour, worship. The reference is to the respectful rites accom-panying burial. Der. sepulchral, from F. sepulchral, 'sepulchral, panying burial. Der. sepulchr-al, from F. sepulchral, 'sepulchral,' Cot.; also sepult-ure, Rob. of Glouc. p. 166, l. 12, from F. sepulture, sepulture, a burying,' Cot., from Lat. sepultura, burial, due to pp. sepultus.

A. The peculiar use of this word, in mod. E., is due to a mistake. The orig. sense is merely an enclosure, and it was sometimes so used. 'I went to the Ghetto [in Rome], where the Jewes dwell as in a suburbe by themselues. . I passed by the Piaza Judea, where their seraglio begins; for, being inviron'd with walls, they are lock'd up every night; 'Evelyn, Diary, Jan. 15, 1645. We find it in the modern sense also: 'to pull the Ottoman Tyrant out of his seraglio, from between the very armes of his 1500 concubines; Howell, Foreign Travel (1642), sect. ix; ed. Arber, p. 45. - Ital. servegito, 'an inclosure, a close, a padocke, a parke, a cloister or secluse;' Florio, ed. 1598.  $\beta$ . There was at that date no such restricted use of the Ital. word as our modern sense indicates. Cotgrave, indeed, translates O. F. serrail by 'the palace wherein the great Turk mueth up his concubines; yet he also gives servail d'un Auis, the bolt of a door, which is the older sense. y. The Ital. serraglio is formed with suffix -aglio (Lat. -aculum) from the verb serrare, 'to shut, lock, inclose;' Florio. Cf. Low Lat. seracula, a small bolt. - Low Lat. serare, to bar, bolt, shut in. - Lat. sera, a bar. bolt. - Lat. serere, to join or bind together; see Series. B. It is certain that the modern use of straglio was due to confusion with Pers. (and Turkish) saráy or strái, 'a palace, a grand edifice, a king's court, a straglio;' Rich. Dict. p. 821. It is equally certain that the Pers. word is not the real source of the Italian one, though frequently thought to be so by those who contemn the suffix -aglio as needing no explanation, and do not care to investigate the old use of the word in Italian. See Serried.

SERAPH, an angel of the highest rank. (Heb.) Spenser has seraphins, Hymn of Heavenlie Beautie, I. 94. The A. V. has seraphin, Isa. vi. 2; this is the form of the Hebrew plural, out of which has been evolved the E. sing. seraph. - Heb. seráphím, seraphs, exalted ones. 'Gesenius connects it with an Arabic term meaning high or exalted; and this may be regarded as the generally received etymology;' Smith, Dict. of the Bible. Or else (see Addenda) from Heb. sáraph, to burn. Der. seraph-ic, seraph-ic-al, seraph-ic-al-ly.

Skt. svar, splendour, heaven; and see Solar. See Curtius, ii. 171. Der. serene-ly, -ness; seren-i-y, from F. serenité, 'serenity,' Cot., from Lat. acc. serenitatem. Also seren-ade, in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674, from F. serenade (Cot.), which from Ital. serenata, 'music given under gentlewomens windowes in a morning or euening,' Florio; properly pp. of Ital. serenare, 'to make cleere, faire, and lightsome, to looke cheerfullie and merrilie,' id. Milton uses the Ital. form serenate, P. L. iv. 769. Hence serenade, verb. SERF, a slave attached to the soil. (F., -L.) A late word; in Ash's Dict., ed. 1775. - F. serf, 'a servant, thrall;' Cot. - Lat. seruum, acc. of seruus, a slave ; see Serve. Der. serf-dom, a coined word, with E. suffix -dom.

SERGE, a cloth made of twilled worsted or silk. (F.,-L.,-Chinese?) Now used of stuff made of worsted; when of silk, it is called silk serge, though the etymology shews that the stuff was orig. of silk only. In Shak. 2 Hen. VI, iv. 7. 27. - F. serge, 'the stuff called serge;' Cot. - Lat. serica, fem. of sericus, silken; we also find series, neut. pl., silken garments. - Lat. Serieus, of or belonging to the Seres, i. c. F. sérieux), omitted by Cotgrave, but recorded by Palsgrave, and in use in the 14th cent. (Littré). - Low Lat. seriosus, serious; Ducange. - Lat. serius, grave, earnest.  $\beta$ . Root uncertain; the long e in serius induces Fick to compare it with G. schwer (O. H. G. swári), weighty, heavy; from a root SWAR; see Fick, i. 842. Der. serious-ly, -ness.

SERMON, a discourse on a Scripture text. (F.,-L.) M. E. sermoun, serman ; in early use ; see Old Eng. Miscellany, ed. Morris, p. 186, title. The verb sermonen, to preach, occurs in O. E. Homilies, i. 81, l. 14.-F. sermon, 'a sermon' Cot.-Lat. sermonem, acc. of  $\beta$ . Root uncertain; but it seems sermo, a speech, discourse, reasonable to connect it with A. Also sett-ee, a seat with a long back (Todd's Johnson), of which the origin is by no means clear; it seems to be an arbitrary variation of the prov. E. settle, used in the same sense, with a substitution of the suffix -se. for -le; this suffix (= F. -é, Lat. -atus) is freely used in English, as in refer-ee, trust-ee; but it makes no good sense here. See Settle (1).

SETON, an artificial irritation under the skin. (F., -L.) 'Seton, is when the skin of the neck, or other part, is taken up and run thro' with a kind of pack-needle, and the wound afterwards kept open with bristles, or a skean of thread, silk, or cotton,' &c.; Phillips, ed. 1706. - F. seton, in use in the 16th cent. ; Littré cites 'une aiguille à seton enfilee d'un fort fil'=a needle with a seton, threaded with a strong thread; where seton is a thick thread. Formed from a Low Lat. seto * (acc. setonem), derived from Lat. seta, a bristle, thick stiff hair, which in Low Lat. also meant silk (Ducange). See Satin.

E. setel, setil. 'Opon the setil of his mageste' = upon the seat of His majesty, i.e. The set of From A SAD, to sit; see Sit. Der. settle (2). Doublet, sell (2). SETTLE (2), to fix, become fixed, adjust. (E.) Two distinct words have been confused; in the peculiar sense 'to compose or adjust a quarrel,' the source is different from that of the commoner verb, and more remote. A. M. E. setten, trans. to cause to rest, intrans. to sink to rest, subside. 'Til be semli sunne was setted to reste'=till the seemly sun had sunk to rest, Will. of Palerne, 2452. Him thoughte a goshauk . . . Setlitk on his beryng' = it seemed to him that a goshawk settles down on his cognisance (?), King Alisaunder, 484; and see l. 488. - A.S. setlan, to fix. 'Setla) se-mearas' = the mariners fix (or anchor) their vessels (Grein). - A.S. setel, a seat. Cf. A. S. setl-gang, the going to rest of the sun, sunset, Grein, ii. 432. Thus the lit. sense of settle is 'to take a seat' or 'to set as in a fixed seat. See Soltlo (1). B. At the same time, the peculiar sense 'to settle a quarrel' appears to have been borrowed from M. E. saytlen, sahtlen, saustlen, to reconcile, make peace, P. Plowman, B. iv. 2 (footnote). 'Now sagked, now strife' = now we make peace, now we strive; Pricke of Conscience, 1470. Sayled = appeased, reconciled, Allit. Poems, ed. Morris, B. 230, 1139. - A. S. sahtlian, to reconcile; 'gode men . . . sahtloden heom' = good men reconciled them; A.S. Chron. an. 1066; MS. Laud 636, ed. Thorpe, i. 337; see also p. 384, l. 19. – A.S. sakt, reconciliation; A.S. Chron. ed. Thorpe, i. 385, l. 2. – A.S. sacan, to contend, strive, dispute; from the particular application to disputes at law, the sb. sakt came to mean the adjustment of a dispute, the result of a suit. This verb also gave rise to E. Sake, q. v.  $\beta$ . That these two verbs were actually confused, we have evidence in the fact that, conversely, the M. E. saytlen, to reconcile, was also used in the sense of subside or become calm. 'he se sajtled therwith' = the sea subsided; Allit, Poems, ed. Morris, C. 232. We even find the intermediate form sattle; 'Muche sorge henne sattled ypon segge Ionas' = much sorrow then settled on the man Jonah; id. C. 409. Der. settl-er; settle-ment, with F. suffix -ment, SEVEN, a cardinal number, six and one. (E.) M. E. seven, seven, P. Plowman, B. iv. 86. The final -s is prob. the mark of a pl. form; both forms occur. - A. S. seofon, also seofone, seven; Grein, ii. 437; the final -s marks the plural, and is unoriginal. + Du. zeven. + Icel. sjö, sjau. + Dan. syv. + Swed. sju. + Ö. H. G. sibun, G. sieben. + Goth. sibun. + Lat. septem. + Gk. isrá. + W. saila ; Gael. seachd ; Irish seacht. + Russ. seme. + Lithuan. septyni. + Skt. saptan. β. All from Aryan SAPTAN, seven; origin unknown. Dor. sevenfold, A. S. seofon-feald; seven-teen, A. S. seofon-tyne, from seofon, seven, and tyn, ten; seven teen th, A. S. seofon-teoba, but formed by analogy, by adding -th to seventeen ; seven-ty, A. S. hundseofontig (by dropping hund, for which see Hundred); seven-ti-etk. Also seven-tk, formed by adding -th; A. S. seofoda.

SEVER, to separate, cut apart. (F., -L.) 'I sever, I departe thynges asonder, Ie separe; 'Palsgrave. M. E. severen, Gawain and the Grene Knight, 1797.-O. F. severer (Burguy). Cf. Ital. severare, sevrare. - Lat. separare, to separate ; see Separate. Der. sever-al, sever-al-ly, of which Sir T. More has severally, Works, p. 209 h; from O. F. several, Low Lat. separate, a thing separate or a thing that separates (Ducange); as if from a Lat. adj. separatis*. Also sever-ance; dis-sever; dis-sever ance; cf. O. F. dessevrance (Burguy). Doublet, separate.

SEVERE, austere, serious, strict. (F., -L.) In Shak. Oth. ii. 3. 101.-O.F. severe, 'severe,' Cot.; mod. F. severe.-Lat. severus, severe ; orig. reverenced, respected (of persons), hence serious, grave (in demeanour). β. Supposed to stand for sev-ërus, formed (like dec-örus from dec-us) from a base seu (sev), honour; see Curtius, ii. 218. Der. severe-ly; sever-i-ty, from F. severité, 'severity;' Cot. SEW (1), to fasten together with thread. (E.) Pronounced so.

M. E. sowen, P. Plowman, B. vi. 9; more commonly sewen, id. C. ix. 8; Wyclif, Mark, ii. 21. – A. S. siwian, Mark, ii. 21; Gen. iii. 7. + So, wy chi, mark, it. 21. - A. S. Shoran, Mark, it. 21; Geu. it. 7. +Icel. syja. + Dan. sys. + Swed. sy. + O. H. G. sinwan, siwan. + Goth. sinjan. + Lat. suere. + Lithuan. suit. + Russ. shite. + Skt. siv, to sew; whence shitra, thread.  $\beta$ . All from the  $\sqrt{SIW}$ , SU, to sew; Fick, i. 220. Der. sew-er, sew-ing; also seam, q. v. SEW (2), to follow; the same as Sue, q. v.

SEWER (1), an underground passage for water, large drain. (F.,-L.) Frequently spelt store, which represented a common pronunciation; still preserved in Shore-ditch = sewer ditch, in London.  $^{a}$ Spelt sure, Troil. v. 1. 83, ed. 1623. Formed with suffix er from the verb sew, to drain, to dry. 'Sewe ponds' = drain ponds, Tusser's Husbandry, cap. 15, § 17 (E. D. S.); p. 32. Note also serve, sb., as in the towne sinke, the common serve? Nomenclator, ed. 1585, p. 391; cited in Halliwell, s. v. seugh. Short for essence, the first syllable being dropped. - O. F. essuier, esuer, to dry (Burguy); gen. used in the sense ' to wipe dry,' but the true etym. sense is to drain dry, deprive of moisture, as in English. Cot. has essuier, 'to dry up.'-Lat. exsuccare, exsucare, to deprive of moisture, suck the juice from. - Lat. ex, out, away; and sucus, juice, moisture, from the same root as Lat. sugere, to suck, and E. suck; see Suck. sugere, to suck, and E. suck; see Suck. B. From the O. F. verb essuier (mod. F. essuyer) was formed the O. F. sb. essuier, a duct for water (Burguy), the very same word as E. server, which may thus have been borrowed directly. The sense to wipe' (which is the commonest meaning of F. essayer) plainly appears in M. E. serv, to wipe the beak of a hawk, used by Juliana Berners (Halliwell); and this proves clearly that the initial syllable of essayer was dropped in Earlier W. at the part of the server was dropped in the server. English. We do, however, find prov. E. assue, drained of milk, said of a cow, which is rather the very F. essuyé than put for a-sew = a-dry. Der. sewer-age; also sew-age, formed directly from the verb sew.  $\P$  The F. suffix age in these words is another indication of the F. origin of sew and sewer. The derivation sometimes suggested from W. sych, dry (cognate with Lat. siccus), will not explain the diphthong. Siccus and succus are exactly opposed in meaning, and are from different roots. [†] SEW ER (2), the officer who formerly set and removed dishes, tasted them, &c. (E.) In Halliwell. Baret (1580) has: 'The Sewer of the kitchin, Anteambulo fercularius; The Sewer which lasieth the meate, Escuyer de cuisine.' 'Seware, at mete, Depositor, dapifer, sepulator; 'Prompt. Parv., p. 454. On the same page we have: 'Sewyn, or sette mete, Ferculo, sepulo;' and: 'Sew, cepulatum.' A. It is therefore clear, that, in the 15th century. A. It is therefore clear, that, in the 15th century, the word sew-er was regarded as being formed from the verb to sewe, which was again derived from the sb. sew, not uncommon in the sense of 'pottage;' see Halliwell. The orig. sense of sew is simply 'juice,' whence it came to mean sauce, boiled meat, juicy messes, and the like; Chaucer, C.T. 10381.-A.S. seaw, juice; A.S. Leechdoms, ed. Cockayne, i. 128, ll. 12 and 16. Cognate with Skt. sava, juice, from su, to express Soma juice, squeeze out. B. The above seems the true etymology; E. Müller suggests the O.F. sewer, of which the sole trace I can find is 'Sewer, écuyer' in Roquefort; and seeing that the word is common in English, it is remarkable that it should hardly appear in O. F., if it be a F. word. Perhaps Roquefort borrowed the notion from Cotgrave, who gives 'sewer' as one meaning of O.F. escuyer, an esquire; and I suspect that this alleged O. F. sewer is merely the English word, explained for the benefit of Frenchmen. If Sewer were F., it could only be equivalent to su-er, i. e. a follower, from O. F. sevre, suire, Lat. sejui (see Sue); which would ill satisfy all the conditions.

SEX, the distinction between male and female, characteristics of such a distinction. (F., -L.) In Shak. Temp. iii. 1. 49. - F. sexe, 'a sex, or kind;' Cot. - Lat. sexum, acc. of sexus, sex. B. Per-B. Perhaps orig. 'a division;' from secare, to cut. Der. sex-u-al, a late word, from Lat. sexu-alis, formed with suffix -alis from sexu-, crude form of sexus; sex-u-al-ly, sex-u-al-i-ty.

SEXAGENARY, belonging to sixty. (L.) In Phillips, ed. 1706.-Lat. sexagenarius, belonging to sixty.-Lat. sexageni, sixty each ; distributive form from sexaginta, sixty. - Lat. sex, six ; and rinta, put for -cinta, short for decinta, tenth, from decem, ten. See Six and Ton. Der. sexagenari an, Phillips.

SEXAGESIMA, the second Sunday before Lent. (L.) So called because about the sixtieth day before Easter. In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674; and earlier, in Prayer-books. - Lat. sexagesima, lit. sixtieth; agreeing with dies, day, understood. Fem. of sexa gesimus, sixtieth. Put for sexagentimus*; ordinal form from sexaginta, sixty. See Sexagenary. Der. sexagesim-al.

SEXENNIAL, happening every six years, lasting six years. (L.) In Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. Formed, with suffix -al, from Lat. sexenni-um, a period of six years .- Lat. sex, six; and annus, a year (becoming envi- in composition). See Six and Annals. Der. sexennial-ly.

SEXTANT, the sixth part of a circle. (L.) Chiefly used to mean an optical instrument, furnished with an arc extending to a sixth part of a circle. But in earlier use in other senses. 'Sextant, a coin less than that called quadrant by the third part . . the sixth part of any measure ;' Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674.-Lat. sextantstem of sextans, the sixth part of an as, a coin, weight. Formed with suffix -ans (like that of a pres. part. of a verb in -ars) from sear-, stem of searces, sixth, ordinal of sear, six. See Six. Der. from sext-us) sext-ile, Milton, P. L. x. 659; also sextu-ple, q. v.

SEXTON, a sacristan; see Sacristan. [†] SEXTUPLE, sixfold, having six parts. (L.) 'Whose length ... is sextuple unto his breadth;' Sir T. Browne, Vulg. Errors, b. iv. c. 5. Coined from sentu-s, sixth, just as quadru-ple is from quadru-6 12. (used for quartus) with the sense of fourth. The suffix -ple answers to Lat. -plic-, stem of -plex, as in du-plex, com-plex. See Quadruple and Sextant.

SHABBY, mean, paltry. (E.) Merely a doublet of seabby, by the usual change of A.S. se to E. sk. The earliest quotation appears to be: 'They were very kabby fellows, pitifully mounted, and worse armed;' Lord Clarendon, Diary, Dec. 7, 1688. Cf. "They mostly had short hair, and went in a skabbed condition;" A. Wood, Athen. Oxon. Fast. ii. 743 (Todd). We find shabbyd for scabbed in P. Plowman, C. x. 204. See Scab. Der. skabbi-ly, shabbi-ness.

SHACKLE. a fetter, chain to confine the limbs, clog. (E.) SHAUKLE, a letter, chain to connne the limbs, clog. (2.) M. E. schakkyl. schakle, Prompt. Parv.; pl. scheakeles, Ancren Riwle, p. 94, l. 25. – A. S. secacul, a bond; Ælfric's Gloss, near beginning; Wright's Vocab. i. 16, col. 2. Put for an older form scacul. + Icel. skökwil, the pole of a carriage. + Swed. skakel, the loose shaft of a carriage. + Dan. skagle, a trace (for a carriage). + O. Du. schahel, 'the links or ringes [read link or ring] of a chaine;' schahelen van een net, 'the masches [meshes] of a net;' Hexham. β. The orig. sense is a loose band or bond, hence a trace, single link of a chain, loose-hanging letter. Evidently named from its shaking about, as distinct from a firm bond. From A. S. sceacan, scacan, to shake; with suffix -ul, from Aryan -ra. See Shake. So also Icel. skökull is from skaka; and Dan. skagle from skage, to shift, orig. to shake; cf. Swed. dial. skak, a chain, link (Rietz). Der. skackle, verb, M. E. schahlen, Prompt. Parv. SHAD, a fish. (E.) 'Like bleeding skads;' Beaum. and SHAD, a fish. (E.) 'Like bleeding shads;' Beaum. and Fletcher, Love's Cure, Act ii. sc. 2 (Clara). 'And there the eel and shad sometimes are caught; ' John Dennys, Secrets of Angling (before A. D. 1613); in Eng. Garner, ed. Arber, i. 171. 'A shade, a fishe, aron; 'Levins. - A.S. sceadda, a kind of fish; Monasticon Anglicanum, i. 266, 45 and 46 (Bosworth). Bosworth explains it by skate, but it is clearly mod. E. shad. The shad and skate are very different, and it is not certain that the names are related. Cf. prov. G. schade, a shad (Flügel). We also find Irish and Gael. sgadan in the sense of 'herring;' W. ysgadan, pl. herrings. The Irish for [†] skate is sgat.

G. scato (gen. scatewes), shadow. + Goth. skadus. + Irish and Gael. sgath, shadow, shade, shelter. + Gk. σκότοι, σκοτίο, darkness, gloom. β. All from & SKA, to cover ; whence also Skt. chiajú, shade, Gk. σκία, shade, σκη-νή, a shelter, tent, and E. sky. See Fick, i. 805; Curtius, i. 206. And see Scene, Sky. SHAFT, an arrow, smoothed pole, column, cylindrical entrance to a mine. (E.) The orig. sense is 'shaven' rod, a stick smoothed into the shape of a spear-pole or an arrow. M. E. shaft, an arrow, Chaucer, C. T. 1364; Parl. of Foules, 179. – A. S. sceaft, a shaft of a spear, dart; Grein, ii. 403. Modern; F. shako or schako (Littré). - Hungarian csako (pron. skako), a cap, shako; see Littré and Mahn's Webster. Spelt ssákó, and explained as a Hungarian cap, in Dankovsky's Magyar Lexicon, ed. 1833, p. 900. He supposes it to be of Slavonic origin, not a real Magyar word.

SHALE, a rock of a slaty structure. (G.) A term of geology, borrowed (like gneiss, quartz, and other geological terms) from German. - G. schale, a shell, peel, husk, rind, scale; whence schal-gebirge, a mountain formed of thin strata. Cognate with E. shale, a shell, Shak. Hen. V, iv. 2. 18, which is merely another spelling of scale; see Scale (I). Der. skal-y. Doublet, scale (I).

SHALL, I am bound to, I must. (E.) M.E. skal, schal, often with the sense of 'is to;' Chaucer, C. T. 733; pt. t. sholde, scholde, shulde (mod. E. should), id. 964. - A. S. sceal, an old past tense used as a present, and thus conjugated ; ic sceal, pu scealt, he sceal ; pl. sculon, sculun, or sceolun. Hence was formed a pt. t. scolde, or sceolde, pl. sceoldon. The form of the infin. is sculan, to owe, to be under an properly 'I am ready to,' I am willing to; but the orig. sense of compulsion is much weakened in the case of the first person, though its force is retained in thou shalt, he shall, they shall. The verb fol-Its force is retained in two wait, we shall, they shall. The verb fol-lowing it is put in the infin. mood; as, is seeal gán = I must go; hence the mod. use as an auxiliary verb. + Du. ik zal, I shall; ik zowde, I should; infin. zwilen. + Icel. skal, pl. skuism; pt. t. skyldi, skyldu; infin. skuiu. + Swed. skall; pt. t. skuile; infin. skola. + Dan. skal; pt. t. skuide; infin. skuile. + G. soll, pt. t. sollie; infin. skola. + Dan. b being lost, as in Dutch). + Goth. skal, pl. skuism; pt. t. skuida; infin. skuidas.  $\beta$ . All from Teut. base SKAL, to owe, be in debt, b being lost, as in duch. be liable; a sense which is clearly preserved in A.S. scyld, guilt, i.e. desert of punishment, G. schuld, guilt, fault, debt. We also find Lithuan. skelu, I am indebted, skilli, to owe, be liable. See Fick, iii. y. Probably further allied to Lat. scelus, guilt, and Skt. skhal, to stumble, err, fail.

SHALLOON, a light woollen stuff. (F.) 'Shalloon, a sort of woollen stuff, chiefly used for the linings of coats, and so call'd from Chalons, a city of France, where it was first made ;' Phillips, ed. 1706. We find chalons, i.e. a coverlet made at Chalons, even in Chancer, C.T. 4138. = F. Chalons, i.e. a coverier induct at chalons, even in Chalons, i.e. a A138. = F. Chalons, or Chalons-sur-Marns, a town in France, 100 miles E. of Paris. 'Sa scule robe ... était de ras de Chalons;' Scarron, Virg. iv. (Littré, s. v. ras, § 9). Chalons takes its name from the tribe of the Catalauni, who lived in that neighbourhood. [+]

SHALLOP, a light boat. (F., - Span.) In Spenser, F. Q. iii. 7. 27.-F. chaloufe, 'a shallop, or small boat;' Cot.-Span. chalupa (also Port. chalupa), 'a small light vessel, a long boat,' Neuman. Minsheu's Span. Dict., ed. 1623, has chalupa, 'a flat-bottomed boat.' β. It is usual to derive F. chaloupe, Span. chalupa, from Du. sloep, a sloop. It is obvious that the derivation must run the other way, and that Du. sloep is a contraction from chaloupe, and is no true Du. word. From what language chalupa is borrowed, has not yet been discovered; but we may easily guess that it was brought by the Span. and Port. navigators from some far distant region, either American or E. Indian, and denoted one of those light canoes seen in the Pacific ocean and in other distant seas. We find the longer form schaluppe mess; also shame-faced, q. v. And see sham.

as above. Shag tobacco is rough tobacco; cf. Shakespeare's 'fet- $\overset{\otimes}{}$  even in German, meaning a jolly-boat or yawl as well as a sloop; locks shag and long;' Venus, 295. SHAGREEN, a rough-grained leather, shark's skin (F.-) an old word in our own language. The Ital. form is scialappen.

Doublet, sloop, q. v. SHALLOT, SHALOT, a kind of onion. (F., - L., - Gk.) Added by Todd to Johnson; it is also spelt eschalor. - O. F. eschalor. eschalotte, 'a cive or chive,' i.e. a kind of onion; Cot. Mod. F. échalote. The form eschalote is a variant, or corruption, of O.F. escalogne, a shallot; Roquefort. - Lat. ascalonia, a shallot; fem. of Ascalonius, adi, belonging to Ascalon. 'Ascalonia, little onions or scalions, taking that name of Ascalon, a city in Jury;' Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xix. c. 6. - Gk. 'Asrálar, Ascalon, one of the chief cities of the Philistines, on the W. coast of Palestine; Smith, Class. Dict.

See Joshua, xiii. 3; &c. [+] SHALLOW, not deep. (Scand.) M. E. schalows. Schold. or schalowe, not depe; Prompt. Parv. p. 447; Trevisa, iii. 131, 1.7; schald, Barbour, Bruce, ix. 354. Not found in A. S., the nearest related word being A. S. sceolk, sceol, oblique, appearing in sceol-igede, squint-eyed, Elfric's Grammar, ed. Zupitza, p. 36. The orig. scene is oblique, sloping, shelving, used with reference to a sea-shore: on approaching a sloping shore, the water becomes shallow, the bank shelves down, and often a shelv and appears. 'The shore was shelvy and shallow;' Merry Wives, iii. 5. 15. The verb to shelve is a derivative from shallow; see Shelve.  $\beta$ . The words sheal and shallow are really the same, both being adaptations from Icel. skjálgr, oblique, wry, which was modified in two ways: (1) by shortening the vowel, and change of g to w, giving M. E. scholowe; and (2) by loss of g. giving schol, or (with excrescent a) schold. Allied words are Swed. dial. shjalg, oblique, slant, wry, crooked: G. scheel, schel, oblique, squint-eyed, schielen, to be awry; also Gk. σκολιόs, crocked, awry, σκαληνόs, uneven, scalene, σκολλόs, crock-legged. See Scalene. Der. shallow-ness. And see shoal (2), shelve.

SHALM, the same as Shawm, q.v.

SHAM, to trick, verb; a pretence, sb. (E.) Sham, pretended, false; also, a fam, cheat, or trick; To sham one, to put a cheat or trick on him; 'Phillips, ed. 1706. 'A meer sham and disguise;' Stillingfleet, vol. iv. ser. 9 (R.) 'They. . found all this a sham;' Dampier's Voyages, an. 1688 (R.) We find also the slang expression 'to sham Abraham' = to pretend to be an Abraham-man, or a man from Bedlam hospital; see Abraham-men in Nares, and in Hotten's Slang Dictionary. To sham appears to be merely the Northern E. form of to shame, to put to shame, to disgrace, whence the sense 'to trick' may easily have arisen. Sham for shame is very common in the North, and appears in Brockett, and in the Whitby, Mid-Yorkshire, Swaledale, and Holderness Glossaries (E. D. S.) • Wheea's sham is it' = whose fault is it? Whitby Gloss. Cf. Icel. shomm, a shame, outrage, disgrace. See Shame. [+] SHAMBLE, to walk awkwardly. (Du., -F., -Ital., -L.) A

See Scamper, of which scamble is just a doublet, the frequentative suffixes -er and -le being equivalent. Cf. skimble-skamble, wandering, wild, confused, 1 Hen. IV, iii. I. 154. Doublet, scamper.

SHAMBLES, stalls on which butchers expose meat for sale; hence, a slaughter-house. (L.) 'As summer-flies are in the shambles, Oth. iv. 2. 66. Cf. Skt. a singular confusion with face, due to the fact that shame is commonly expressed by the appearance of the face; see Face. We find shame-fastness in Spenser, F.Q. iv. 10. 50; shame-faced in Shak, Rich. III, 1. 3. 142, where the quarto ed. has shame juite in Suak. Int. Int. schame fast, shame juit (hancer, C. SHAMMY, SHAMOY, a kind of leather. (F., -G.) So called because formerly made from the chamois. 'Shamois, or Chamois, a kind of wild goat, whose skin, being rightly dressed, makes our true Shamois. leather; 'Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. 'Shamoy, or Shamoy-leather, a sort of leather made of the skin of the Shamoys; 'Phillips, ed. 1706. - F. chamois, 'a wilde goat, or shamois; also the skin thereof dressed, and called ordinarily shamois leather; 'Cot. Cf. F. chamoiser, to prepare chamois leather; Littré. See Chamois. ¶ Taylor professes to correct this etymology, and, without a word of proof, derives it 'from Samland, a district on the Baltic, with which it has but two letters, a and m, in common. There is no difficulty, when it is remembered that skamoy-leather could only have been prepared from the chamois at first; other skins were soon substituted, as being cheaper, when a larger demand set in. SHAMPOO, to squeeze and rub the body of another after a hot bath; to wash the head thoroughly with soap and water. (Hindustani.) A modern word; the operation takes its mane from the squeezing or kneading of the body with the knuckles, which forms a part of it, as properly performed. - Hind. chámpná; (1) to join, (2)

A nasalised form from Teut. base Skakk, the shank, leg.  $\beta$ . A nasalised form from Teut. base SKAK, to shake; as shewn by Low G. schake, the leg, shank; Bremen Wörterbuch. The shanks are the 'runners' or 'stirrers.' The A.S. sceacan meant not only to shake, but also to flee away, use one's legs, escape, Gen. xxxi. 27; ' )á scoté he on niht' = then he ran away (lit. shook) by night; A.S. Chron. an. 992. We still say to stir one's stumps, i. e. to run; also, to shog off. See Shake. Der. skink-er, nun-cheon.

SHAPE, to form, fashion, adapt. (E.) Formerly a strong verb. M. E. skapen, schapen; pt. t. skoop, Chaucer, C. T. 16690; pp. skapen, skape, id. 1227. A. S. sceapan, scapan, for which we commonly find scippan, sceppan, scyppan, which is really a weak form (= Goth. skapjan or ga-shapjan). But the verb is strong, with pt. t. scop, scoop, and pp. scapen, sceapen. + Icel. skapa, pt. t. skop. + Swed. skapa. + Dan. skabe. + G. schaffen, to create; pt. t. schuf, pp. geschaffen.  $\beta$ . The strong and weak forms are intermixed; thus G. schaffen is also weak, like Goth. gaskapjan. All from Teut. base SKAP, to form, make, Fick, iii. 331; which is doubtless connected with the base SKAB, to shave, i. e. to make things in wood, bring into shape by cutting. See Shave. SHARK, a voracious fish, hound-fish. (L., ? - Gk. ?) The his-tory of the word is not clear. It occurs in Shak. Macb. iv. I. 24; but not in Levins or Palsgrave; nor is it old. The M.E. name is hound fish, Alexander and Dindimus. ed. Skeat, 1. 164. Holland, tr. of Pliny, speaks ' of hound-fishes and sea-dogs; ' b. ix. c. 46. It is gen. supposed to be derived from Lat. carcharus, a kind of dog-fish; perhaps there was an intermediate O. F. form, now lost. = Gk. sap xapias, a kind of shark; so called from its sharp teeth. = Gk. sap Der sheaf, verb, As You Like It, iii. 2, 113; sheaf-y.

karkara, hard, karkata, a crab. Der. shark-ing, voracious; greedy, prowling; one of the Dramatis Personse of Love's Cure (by Beaum. and Fletcher) is 'Alguazeir, a sharking panderly constable;' shark up=to snap up, Hamlet, i. 1. 98. And hence shark = a sharper, as a Go Some connect the last word with G. schurke. a slang term. rogue; but without any attempt to explain the difference of vowels. Sewel's Du. Dict. has : 'schurk, a shark, a rascal ;' but this is merely a translation, not an identification.

Jamieson has also sheil, shielling, sheelin; spelt shieling in Campbell, O'Connor's Child, st. 3. Connected in the Icel. Dict. with Icel. skáli, Norweg. skoale, a hut; but it seems better to derive it from Icel. skjól, a shelter, cover, Dan. skjul, a shelter, Swed. skjul, a shed, shelter; or from Icel. skýli, a shed, shelter, skýla, to screen, shelter, skyling, a screening. These words are from the  $\checkmark$  SKU, to cover; sheeling can answer to Icel. 4; on the other hand, we have Icel. skjóla, a pail or bucket, called in Scotland a skiel or skeel, which guides us to the right equivalent at once.

SHEAR, to cut, clip, shave off. (E.) M. E. scheren, sheren, pt. t. schar, shar, pp. schoren, now contracted to shorn; Chaucer, C. T. 13958. – A. S. scded, scdet, sceid, a sheath ; Grein, ii. 399.+ Du. scheede. + Icel. sheidir, fem. pl. + Dan. skede. + Swed. skida. + G. scheide.  $\beta$ . All from a Teut. type SKAIDA, orig. 'that which separates,' applied to the husk of a bean or pea, as in Swed. skida, which also means 'a husk, pod, shell.' Since such a husk has two sides, we see why the Icel. skeidir is only used in the plural; and these sides of a case must be separated before a knife or sword can be introduced, if the material of the scabbard is at all loose. y. The form SKAIDA is regularly see Shed (1). Der. sheathe, verb, Macb. v. 7. 20, spelt shethe in Palsgrave, and prob. the verb and sb. were once pronounced alike;

E. scheden, to pour, and scheden, to part (Ormulum, 1309), and com-pares the former with O. Friesic schedda, only used in the sense 'to shake a man violently.' S. sceidan, scadan, to part, separate, distinguish (hence, to scatter); pt. t. scéd, sceéd, pp. sceáden; scáden; a strong verb; Grein, ii. 398. [The vowel of the mod. E. word has been shortened, as in red from A. S. read, bread from bread, and head from heafod. From the Teut. base SKID, to part, separate. Cf. Lithuan. skëdu, I part, separate. But it does not seem to be related to Lat. scindere ; rather to cædere ; see Fick, iii. 815. Der. shedd-er. [†]

SHED (2), a slight sheller, hut. (E.) Merely another form of shade. It appears to be a Kentish form, like O. In the same work, p. 95, l. 28, we find ssed (= shed) for shade; also ssede, p. 97, l. 1; and ssed in the sense of 'shadow,' p. 137, l. 15. See Shado. Doublet, shade. [†]

'On clémer seylam befeold '= enfolded in a clean sheet; Gospel of Nicodemus, c. xiii, ed. Thwaites, p. 6. The sense of 'bosom' is due to the use of sevier to signify the fold of a garment. It is closely allied to A. S. scent, a much commoner word, meaning (1) a projecting corner, an angle, a nook of ground, (2) fold of a garment; ii. 405.  $\beta$ . The orig. sense is 'projection,' or 'that which shoots out, then a corner, esp. of a garment or of a cloth ; after which it was extended to mean a whole cloth or sheet. The weight is about half an ounce; the value about half a crown. -Heb. sheyel, a shekel (weight). - Heb. shaqal, to weigh. [Both ees are short.

SHEKINAH, SHECHINAH, the visible glory of the Divine presence. (Heb.) Not in the Bible, but in the targums; it signifies the 'dwelling' of God among His people. - Heb. shekinik, dwelling, the presence of God. - Heb. shakan, to dwell.

'Sheld. flecked, party-coloured;' Coles' Dict., ed. 1684, Sheld in this case is just the same as M. E. sheld, a shield; and the allusion is, probably, to the ornamentation of shields, which is doubtless of great antiquity. The A.S. scyld or seild is a shield; but is also used, in a curious passage, to denote a SHELF, a ledge, flat layer of rock. (E.) M. E. schelfe, shelfe; pl. shelves, Chaucer, C. T. 3211. – A. S. scylfe, a plank or shelf; Grein, ii. 416. + Low G. schelfe, a shelf, Bremen Worterbuch; allied to schelfern, to scale off, peel. Cf. Lowland Sc. skelve, a thin slice, skelve, to separate in laminæ (Jamieson); Du. schelpe, a shell; G. schelfe, a husk, shell, paring; schelfen, schelfern, to peel off. Closely allied to shell and scale; the orig. sense is 'a husk,' thence a flake, slice, thin board, flat ledge, layer. See Shell. The Gael. sgealb, a splinter, or (as a verb) to split, is from the same root. ∏ We occasionally find shelf, not only in the sense of a layer of rock, but in the sense of 'sand-bank' or 'shoal.' Dryden speaks of 'a shelfy coast' as equivalent to 'shoaly ground;' tr. of Virgil, Æn. v. 1125, 1130. He adds that Æneas 'steers aloof, and shuns the shelf 1. 1132. There is confusion here with the verb to Shelve, q. v. Cf.

SHELLC, a scale, husk, outer covering, a bomb. (E.) M. E. schelle, shelle; P. Plowman, B. v. 528; Gower, C. A. iii. 76, l. 8. – A. S. scell, scyll; Grein, ii. 399. + Du. schel. + Icel. skel. + Goth. skalja, a tile; Luke, v. 19. B. All from a Teut. base SKALA skalja, a tile; Luke, v. 19. or SKALYA, Fick, iii. 334; from  $\checkmark$  SKAL (for SKAR), to separate, hence to peel off; see Skill. And see Scale (1). Der.

shell-fish, -work; shell, verb; shell-y. SHELTER, a place of protection, refuge, retreat, protection. (E.) This curious word is due to a corruption of M. E. sheld-trume, a body of troops used to protect anything, a guard, squadron. The corruption took place early, possibly owing to some confusion with the word sequadron (of F. origin), with which it seems to have been assimilated, at least in its termination. Thus sheld-trume soon became scheldtrome, sheltrome, sheltrone, sheltroun, the force of the latter part of the word being utterly lost, so that at last -roun was confused with the common suffix -er, and the word shelter was the B. See examples in Stratmann, s. v. schild. To which result. add: schildrum, Barbour's Bruce, xii. 429; scheltrone, sheltron, sheltrun, Allit. version of Destruction of Troy, 3239, 5249, 5804, 10047; Morte Arthure, ed. Brock, 1813, 1856, 1992, 2106, 2210, 2922. It occurs also in Trevisa's description of the battle of Hastings, and was quite a common word, well known from Aberdeen to Cornwall. Loss of the true form caused loss of the true sense, so that it came to mean only a place of protection, instead of a body-guard or squadron. But a sense of its derivation from shield still survives in our manner of using it. - A. S. scild-truma, lit. a shield-troop, troop of men with shields or selected for defence, occurring in a gloss (Leo); compounded of A. S. seild, a shield, and truma, a band of men, Jos. xi. The word truma does not appear to be a mere modification of the Lat. turma, but is allied to A.S. trum, firm, getrum. a cohort, band of men (Grein); and to E. trim. See Shield and Trim. [†]

SHELVE, to slope down, incline downwards gradually. (Scand.) We speak of a shelving shore, i. e. a shallow or sloping shore, where the water's depth increases gradually. 'The shore was shelvy and shallow;' Merry Wives, iii. 5. 15. We have shelving in Two Gent. of Verona, iii. 1. 115, which is explained by Schmidt as 'projecting like a shelf.' It is certainly not connected with shelf, except by confusion, and in popular etymology; see note appended to Shelf. Note O. Ital. stralare, to shelve or go aside, aslope, awry, Florio (late edition, cited by Wedgwood). The -w stands for an older guttural, appearing in Icel. skelgjask, to come askew, where the suffix sk (for sik, oneself) is merely reflexive. And this verb is formed, by vowel-change, from Icel. skjalgr, wry, oblique, squinting formed, by vowel-change, from Icel. skjalgr, wry, oblique, squinting (hence sloping); which is the source of the difficult words Shallow and Shoal. So also Swed. dial. skjalgäs, skjälgäs, to twist, become crooked, from skjalg, crooked (Rietz); O. Swed. skjælg, oblique, awry (Ihre); M. H. G. schelch, awry, oblique. The intermediate form appears in O. Du. schelue, one who squints or looks awry (Kilian). See further under Shallow. Thus the orig. sense is 'to go awry; hence to slope. SHERD, SHARD, a shred, fragment. (E.) Commonly in the  $\frac{1}{2}$  skifte (the same).

For the double spelling, cf. clerk with Clark as a proper name, Derby and Darby, &c. M. E. scherd, scherde, Prompt. Parv. p. 445.-A. S. sceard, a frag-ment; 'calle pá sceard'=all the fragments, Ælfred, tr. of Boethius, c. xviii. § 1 (b. ii. pr. 7). Lit. 'a broken thing ;' from A. S. sceard, adj. broken, Grein, ii. 404, evidently a participial formation from the same root as scears, a share, and sceran, to shear. So also Icel. shard, a notch, shard, shared, diminished; M. H. M. E. shereve, shereve, Chaucer, C. T. 361. – A. S. scir-geréfa, a shire-reeve. In Ælfric's Glossary we find: 'Consul, geréfa;' also 'Pro-consul, under-geréfa;' also 'Prætor, burk-geréfa;' and 'Preses, scir-geréfa;' Wright's Vocab. i. 18. – A.S. scir, a shire; and geréfa, a reeve, officer; see Shire and Reeve. Der. sheriff-ship, sheriff-dom. Also sheriff-al-iy, generally written shrievaly, spelt shrevaly in Fuller, Worthies of England (R.); the suffix is F., as in common-al-iy. Dryden has the extraordinary adj. shriev-al, The Medal, 14.

SHERRY, a wine of Spain. (Span., - L.) Formerly sherris, 2 Hen. IV, iv. 3. 111. The final s was dropped, from a fancy that it was the pl. ending, just as in the case of pea for pease, &c. So called from the town of Xeres, in Spain, whence it was brought. There are two towns of that name; but the famous one is Xeres de la Frontera, in the province of Sevilla, not far from Cadiz. The Spanish x is a guttural letter (like G. ch), and was rendered by sh in English, to save trouble.  $\beta$ . Dozy shews that Xeres = Lat. Casaris, by loss of the syllable -ar-, much as Casar Augusta became, by contraction, Saragossa; see Dozy, Recherches sur l'histoire et la ilitérature de l'Espagne, Leyden, 1860, i. 314. Casaris is the gen. case of Lat. Casar. Der. sherris-sack, i. e. dry sherry, 2 Hen. IV, (is 3. 104; see Sack (3). [†] SHEW, the same as Show, q.v. SHIBBOLETH, the criterion or test-word of a party. 'Shide, a billet of wood, a thin board, a block of wood; still in use;' Halliwell. Spelt shyde in Palsgrave. M. E. shide, schide, Gower, C. A. i, 314, 1.7; Delemense D. in test A. S. scide, billet of wood is the shift of the solution of the shift of the solution of P. Plowman, B. ix. 131.-A. S. scide, a billet of wood, in a gloss (Bosworth); whence scid-weall, a fence made of palings, Wright's Vocab. i. 37, note 2. + Icel. skið, a billet of wood. + G. scheit, the same, Cf. Lithuan. sköda, a splinter.  $\beta$ . From the Teut. base same, Cf. Lithuan. skida, a splinter. B. From the Teut. base SKID, to cleave; see Sheath and Shed. Fick, iii. 335. Thus the orig. sense is 'a piece of cleft wood, a log, billet.' Doublet, skid. SHIELD, a piece of defensive armour held on the left arm. (E.) BHIGHD, a piece of defensive armour need on the left arm. (E.) M. E. schelde, skelde, Chaucer, C. T. 2506. – A. S. scild, scild, scild, a shield; Grein, ii. 407. + Du. schild. + Icel. skjöldr, pl. skildir. + Dan. skjöld. + Swed. sköld. + Goth. skildus. + G. schild.  $\beta$ . All from a Teut. type SKELDU, a shield; Fick, iii. 334. The root is doubtful; it seems reasonable to connect it with shell and scale, as denoting a thin piece of wood or metal. Fick suggests a connection with Icel. shella, shalla, to clash, rattle, from the 'clashing of shields' so often mentioned; cf. G. schelle, a bell, allied to schallen, to resound. Y. Either way, the form of the base is SKAL, meaning either (1) to cleave, or (2) to resound.  $\P$  It is common to connect shield (A.S. sceld) with Icel. skjól, Dan. skjul, a shelter, protection; this gives good sense, but is certainly wrong, as shewn by the difference of vowel-sound; the Icel. shjol (for as shewn by the difference of vowersound, the term  $s_{skewla}$  is being from the  $\checkmark$  SKU, to cover; Fick, iii. 337. Hence this suggestion must be rejected. The word really derived from Icel. skjoi is Sheal, q.v. Der. shield, verb, K. Lear, iv. 2. 67; shield-bearer; shield-less. Also shel-ter, q.v., shill-ing, q.v.

SHIFT, to change, change clothes, remove. (E.) The old sense was 'to divide,' now completely lost. M.E. schiften, shiften, to divide, change, remove. In the Prompt. Parv. p. 446, it is explained by 'part asunder,' or 'deal,' i.e. divide, as well as by 'change.' 'Hastilich he schifte him '= hastily he removed himself, changed his place, P. Plowman, B. xx. 166. And see Chaucer, C.T. 5686. - A.S. sciftan, scyftan, to divide; 'beo his scht gescyft swide rihte '= let his property be divided very justly; Laws of Cnut (Secular), § 71 ; in Thorpe, Ancient Laws, i. 414, l. 1. + Du. schiften, to divide, separate, turn. + Icel. skipta (for skifta), to part, share, divide; also to shift, change; so that the mod. use of shift is prob. Scandinavian. + Swed. shifta, to divide, to change, shift. + Dan. shifte (the same).  $\beta$ . The sense of 'divide' or 'part' is the

(the same); which is formed from the base SKIF appearing in Icel. skifa, to cut into slices, and Icel. skifa, a slice. The last sb. is cognate with G. scheibe, a slice, particularly used in the sense of a slice of a tree, hence a disk, wheel; Du. schijf, a slice, disk, quoit, wheel; Dan. stive, Swed. skifva, a slice, disk; prov. E. shive, a slice (Halliwell); and the technical E. sheave, a wheel of a pulley. The base is SKIF, to slice into pieces; and when we compare this with G. scheiden, to part, from a base SKID, and Icel. shilja, to part, from a base SKIL, we see that SKI-F, SKI-D, and SKI-L are all extensions, with much the same meaning, from the Aryan & SKA, to cut, whence also VSKAR, to shear; see Shear. And see Shiver (2). ¶ It is necessary to remark that the Icel. skipta is merely the Icel. way of writing skifta; hence the base is SKIF (as above), and there is no connection (except an ultimate one) with Icel. skipa, to ordain. Der. skift, sb., a change, Timon, i. 1. 84; esp. a change of linen, and commonly restricted to the sense of chemise ; shift-less ; shift-y.

SHILLING, a silver coin worth 12 pence. (E.) M.E. shilling, shillyng; P. Plowman, B. xii. 146. – A. S. scilling, scylling, Luke, xv. 9. + Du. schelling. + Icel. skillingr. + Dan. and Swed. skilling. + Goth. skilliggs (for skillings). + G. schilling.  $\beta$ . The suffix -ling is a double diminutive, the same as in A. S. foord-ling (or foord-ing), is chilling. a farthing. The base is clearly SKIL, to divide, as in Icel. skilja, to divide; see Skill.  $\gamma$ . The reason for the name is not certain; Ihre suggests that the old coins were marked with a cross, for the convenience of dividing them into four parts, as suggested by the A.S. name for  $\delta$  ling, a fourth part or farthing. It is more likely that the word merely meant 'a thin slice' of metal, just as the A.S. styca, a mite (Mark, xii. 42), merely means a 'bit' or 'small piece.' 8. The derivation from SKIL is strongly supported by the occurrence of Swed. skiljemynt, Dan. skillemynt, in the sense of 'small change' or 'small money;' and by the occurrence of numerous other derivatives from the same base.

SHIMMER, to glitter, shine faintly. (E.) M.E. shimeren; whence shymeryng, Chaucer, C.T. 4295, spelt shemering in Tyrwhitt. -A.S. separation (better scientian), given in Bosworth, but without a reference. However, it is merely the frequentative form of sciman, or scimian, to shine, Luke, xvii. 24 (Lindisfarne MS.), and Grein, ii. 408. – A S. scima, a light, brightness, Grein, ii. 408; Grein also gives scima, a dawning light, dawn, faint light; perhaps the words are the same. From the base sei- of sci-nan, to shine; see Shine. + Du. schemeren, to glimmer; cf. schim, a shade, ghost. + Swed. shimra, to glitter. + G. schimmern, to glimmer; from O. H. G. sciman, to shine, scimo, a bright light. And cf. Icel. skimi, skima, a gleam of light, Goth. skeima, a torch or lantern.

SHIN, the large bone of the leg, front of the lower part of the leg. (E.) M. E. shine; dat. shinne, Chaucer, C. T. 388; pl. shinnes, id. 1281. – A. S. scina; 'Tibia, scina;' Wright's Voc. i. 65; 'Tibia, scyne, obbe scin-bán' [shin-bone]; id. 71. + Du. scheen. + Swed. sken-ben, shin-bone. + Dan. skinne-been, shin-bone. + G. schiene; O. H. G. scina, scena.  $\beta$ . Origin uncertain; but note the use of G. schiene, a splint, an iron band, Dan. skinne, the same, Dan. hiulskinne, the tire of a wheel. It is probable that shin and skin are SHINE, to gleam, beam, glow, be bright. (E.) M. E. schinen, Shinen; pt. t. schone (better schoon), Wyclif, Matt. xvii. 2, pl. shinen (with short i), Gower, C. A. iii. 68, l. 5; pp. shinen (rare). -A. All from Teut. base SKI, to shine; Fick, iii. 335. Cf. Skt. khyá, to become known; of which the orig. signification was prob. ' to shine;' Benfey, p. 248. Der. shine, sb., Timon, iii. 5. SHINGLE (1), a wooden tile. (L.) Formerly a common word; a shingle was a piece of wood, split thin, and cut into a square shape; used like modern tiles and slates, esp. for the fronts of houses. M. E. shingle; spelt shyngil, K. Alisaunder, 2210; hence "shyngled shippe," P. Plowman, B. ix. 141. A corrupt pronunciation for shindle or shindel, as shewn by the corresponding G. schindel, a shingle, splint. [Both E. shingle and G. schindel are non-Teutonic words.]-Lat. scindula, another spelling of scandula, a shingle, wooden tile.—Lat. scindere, to cut, cleave, split; pt. t. scidi (base SKID); the sb. scandula being from the base SKAD, to cut, an extension of  $\checkmark$  SKA, to cut. So also Gk.  $\sigma_{KU} \delta d \lambda a \mu os$ , a splinter, from  $\sigma \kappa i \zeta \epsilon i \nu$  (=  $\sigma \kappa i \delta$ -y  $\epsilon i \nu$ ), to cleave, allied to  $\sigma \chi a \zeta \epsilon i \nu$  (=  $\sigma \kappa a \delta$ -y  $\epsilon i \nu$ ), to slit. Cf. Skt. chhid, to cut.

orig. one, the word being formed from the sb. appearing in Icel.<sup>20</sup> SHINGLE (2), coarse round gravel on the sea-shore. (Scand.) skipti (for skifti), a division, exchange, shift, Swed. and Dan. skifte I find no early use of the word. Phillips, ed. 1706, notes that shingles is 'the name of a shelf or sand-bank in the sea, about the Isle of Wight;' which is a confused statement. E. Müller takes it to be the same word as the above, with the supposition that it was first applied to flat or tile-shaped stones; but there can be little doubt that Wedgwood rightly identifies it with Norw. sing! or singling, coarse gravel, small round stones (Aasen); and that it is named from the crunching noise made in walking along it, which every one must have remarked who has ever attempted to do so. Cf. Norw. singla, to make a ringing sound, like that of falling glass or a piece of money (Aasen); Swed. dial. singla, to ring, rattle; singel-skälla, a bell on a horse's neck, singel, the clapper of a bell, (Rietz). The verb single is merely the frequentative of Swed. dial singe, Swed. singea, Icel. syngja, to sing; see Sing.  $\P$  The change from s to sk appears again in Shingles, q. v. [†] SHINGLES, an eruptive disease. (F., -L.) 'Skingles, how to be cured;' Index to vol. ii of Holland's tr. of Pliny, with numerous references. It is a peculiarity of the disease that the eruption often encircles the body like a belt, for which reason it was sometimes called in Latin zona, i. e. a zone, belt. Put for sengles, pl. of the old word sengle, a girth. - O. F. cengle, 'a girth;' also spelt sangle, 'a girth, a sengle; 'Cot. Mod. F. sangle. - Lat. cingulum, a belt, girdle. - Lat. cingere, to surround; see Cincture. Cf. the old word surcingle, a long upper girth (Halliwell).

SHIP, a vessel, barge, large boat. (E.) M. E. schip, ship; pL shippes, Chaucer, C. T. 2019. – A.S. scip, scyp, pl. scipu; Grein, ii. 409. + Du. schif. + Icel. skip. + Dan. skib. + Swed. skepp. + Goth. skip. + G. schiff; O. H. G. scif.  $\beta$ . All from Teut. type SKEPA, a ship; Fick, iii. 336; from the European  $\checkmark$  SKAP, to shave. dig. hollow out, which is related rather to E. shave than to E. shape, though, as these words are closely allied, it does not make much difference.  $\gamma$ . The etymology is clearly shown by the GL ardyos, a digging, trench, anything hollowed out, the hull of a ship, a ship; from  $\sigma_{K}\dot{\alpha}\pi\tau\epsilon_{V}$ , to dig, delve, hollow out. See Shave, Socop. Der. thip, verb, Rich. II, ii. 2. 42; shiptor; shiptoard, ship-broker, -chandler, -man, -master, -mate, -ment (with F. suffix -ment); ship-money, -wreck, -wright, -yard; shipp-ing. And see equip. Doublet (of shipper), skipp-er, q. v.

SHIRE, a courty, division of land, (E.) M. E. schire, shire; Chaucer, C. T. 586. – A. S. scir, A. S. Chron, an. 1010. It can hardly be derived directly from the verb sceran, to shear, but rather from a base SKIR parallel to  $\checkmark$  SKAR, to shear. It is doubtless allied to Share, with the same sense of division. See Share, Shear; and observe other derivatives from VSKI, to cut, appearing Dor. sher-if, put for shire-reve, see in E. sheath, shingle (1), &c. sheriff; also shire-mote, for which see meet.

SHIRK, to avoid, get off, slink from. (L.) Better spelt shere, which appears to be merely the same word as shark, to cheat, swindle; see Nares. Abp. Laud was accused of fraud in contracting for licences to sell tobacco; and it was said of him, 'that he might have spent his time much better . . . than thus sherking and raking in the tobacco-shops;' State-Trials, 1640, Harbottle Grimstone (R.) See Shark. So also clerk as compared with Clark, a proper name; M. E. derk = mod. E. dark; M. E. berken, to bark, &c.; also mod. E. shirt from M.E. sherte.

SHIRT, a man's garment, worn next the body. (Scand.) M. E. schirte, shirte, also sherte, shurte. Spelt shirte, Havelok, 768; sherte, Chaucer, C. T. 1566; shurte, O. Eng. Homilies, ed. Morris, ii. 139, 1. 16. – Icel. skyrta, a shirt, a kind of kirtle; Swed. shjorta; Dan. shiorte. + G. schurz, schürze, an apron; cf. schürzen, to tuck up. β. So called from its being orig. a short garment; from Icel. shorta, to come short off, lack, skortr, shortness; se: Short. Der. shirt-ing, Stuff for making shirts. Doublet, skirt. SHITTAH-TREE, SHITTIM-WOOD. (Heb.) Shittim is a plural form, referring to the clusters of groups of the trees; we find shittim-wood in Exod. xxv. 10, &c. The sing. shittak-tree only occurs once, Isaiah, xli. 19. - Heb. shitták, pl. shittim, a kind of acacia. The medial letter is teth, not tau. [†] SHIVE, a slice; SHEAVE, a pulley; see Shift, Shiver (2).

SHIVER (1), to tremble, shudder. (Scand.) Spelt shewer (= shever) in Baret (1580). This word seems to have been assimi-lated to the word below by confusion. It is remarkable that the M.E. forms are distinct, viz. (1) cheueren or chiueren (chiveren), to tremble. and (2) sheueren or shiueren, to splinter. Whereas the tremble, and (2) sheueren or shiueren, to splinter. latter word truly begins with sh, the present word is alliterated with words beginning with ch, and is spelt with ch, appearing as chimeren, cheueren, and chiuelen. 'Lolled his chekes; Wel sydder than his chyn, pei chiueled for elde' = his cheeks lolled about, (hanging down) even lower than his chin; and they shivered through old age; P. Plowman, B. v. 193 (where other MSS. have skyweleden, chemerid).

'Achilles at the choice men chouser for anger' = Achilles shivered  $\overset{6}{\oplus}$  4114, 4235; but the sb. was prob. also used, and is the more original (shook) with anger at those choice men; Destruction of Troy, 9370. 'And I have chiuseride for chele' = and I have shivered with cold; counter; Cot. Whence chopser, 'to give a shock.' id. = O. H. G. (shook) with anger at those choice men; Destruction of Troy, 9370. 'And I have chineride for chele' = and I have shivered with cold; Morte Arthure, 3301. 'The temple-walles gan chinere and schake;' Legends of the Holy Rood, p. 144, l. 386. 'Chymeres in yse' = to shiver in ice; O. Eng. Miscellany, p. 177, l. 142.  $\beta$ . The persist-ence of the initial ch is remarkable; and takes us back to an earlier form kiveren (kiveren). This I suppose to be merely a Scand. form of E. quiver ; cf. Icel. kona for E. queen, Icel. kykna as a variant of kvikna, to quicken. See Quiver. y. The form kiveren is fre-quentative; the orig. word is prob. to be found in Icel. kippa, to pull, snatch. kippast vio, to move suddenly, quiver convulsively; Norw. and Swed. dial. kippa, to snatch, twitch with the limbs, quiver convulsively (Aasen, Rietz). Cf. also Norw. kwppa, to slip suddenly, shake allied to more for the number of the subscripts. shake, allied to prov. E. quappe, to quake, quabbe, a quagmire, and to E. Quaver, which is also related to Quiver, already mentioned above. If the resemblance to O. Du. schooveren, 'to shiver, or shake' (Hexham), appears to be accidental. The Du. Aniveren, to shiver, really comes nearer to the E. word.

SHIVER (2), a splinter, small piece, esp. of wood. (Scand.) The verb to shiver means to break into shivers or small pieces; the sb. being the older word. A skiver is a small piece, or small slice; gen. now applied to wood, but formerly also to bread. M. E. shiver (with u = v); 'And of your white bread [bread] nat but a shiver;' Chaucer, C. T. 7422. The pl. seifren, shivers, pieces of wood, is in Layamon, 4537; spelt sciuren (= scivren), id. 27785. B. Shiver is the dimin. of shive, a slice; 'Easy it is of a cut loaf to steal a shive,' B. Shiver is Titus Andron. ii. 1. 87. Spelt 'a sheeve of bread ;' Warner's Albion's England (R.) 'A shine, or shiner, Segmen, segmentum;' Baret (1580). This shive is the same as the technical E. word sheave, a pulley, orig. a slice of a tree, disc of wood. - Icel. skifa, a slice ; cf. skifa, to cut into slices. Cf. Du. schiif, Dan. shive, Swed. shifva, G. scheibe, a slice; all mentioned s. v. Shift. Y. The base is Scand. SKIF or SKIB, to slice, cut into thin pieces; and, on comparing this with G. scheiden, to part, from a base SKID, and Icel. shilja, to part, from a base SKIL, we see that SKI-B, SKI-D, and SKI-L are all extensions from the Aryan & SKA, to cut, whence also & SKAR, to shear (see Shear), and Teut. base SKAB, to shave (see Shave). 8. Or we may simply regard the base SKIB as a weaker form of SKAB, to shave ; it comes to much the same thing. The G. schiefer, a slate, a splinter, is a related word, from the same base. Der. shiver, verb, M. E. :chiueren, shiueren, Chaucer, C. T. 2607; shiver-y, easily falling into fragments.

SHOAL (1), a multitude of fishes, a troop, crowd. (L.) Gen. applied to fishes, but also to people. 'A shole of shepeheardes;' Spenser, Shep. Kalendar, May, l. 20. The same word as M.E. scole, a school, hence, a troop, throng, crowd. Thus the word is not E., but of Lat. origin. See School. B. The double use of the word appears as early as in Anglo-Saxon; see scolu, (1) a school, (2) a multitude, Grein, ii. 410. So also Du. school, a school, a shoal; and the sailors' phrase 'a school of fishes,' given by Halliwell as a Lin-colnshire word. So also Irish sgol, a school, also, 'a scule or great quantity of fish.' Der. skoal, verb. Chapman, tr. of Homer's Iliad, b. xxi. l. 191. Doublet, school. [†] SHOAL (2), shallow; a sandbank. (Scand.) Property an adj.

meaning 'shallow;' and, indeed, it is nothing but another form of skallow. Spelt shole, adj., Spenser, On Mutability, c. vi. st. 40. Spelt schold, with excrescent d, in the Prompt, Parv., which has: 'Schold, or schalowe, noste depe.' The excrescent d is also found in Lowland Sc. schald, shallow, also spelt schawd. 'Quhar of the dik the schawdest was' = where was the shallowest part of the dike, Barbour's Bruce, ix. 354; where the Edinb. MS. has shaldest. The true Sc. form is shaul; as 'shaul water maks mickle din,' Sc. proverb, in Jamieson. The forms shaul, shoal result from the loss of a final guttural, which is represented by ow in the form shallow. - Icel. shjalgr, oblique, awry; hence applied to a sloping or shelving shore. Cf. Swed. dial. shjalg, oblique, slant, wry, crooked; O. Swed. skælg, oblique, transverse (Ihre). B. Ihre remarks that O. Swed. shalf is a contracted form of shal-ig; i.e. the suffix is the same as A. S. -ig (E. -y) in stan-ig, ston-y. The base shift, shal-, shal-, is the same as O. Du. scheel, sakew or asquint, Hexhan G. scheel, schel, oblique, Gk. σκολιόs, crooked, σκέλλοs, crook-legged. Cf. Gk. σκοληνόs, un-even. See Shallow, Soalene. Hence the use of shoal as a sb., meaning (1) a shallow place, from its sloping down; or (2) a sandbank, from its sloping wp. It has the former sense in Hen. VIII, iii. 2. 437; the latter in Macb. i. 7. 6. Der. skoal, verb, to grow shallow; skoal-y, adj., Dryden, tr. of Virgil, Æn. v. 1130; skoal-i-ness. SHOAR, a prop; the same as Shore (2). SHOCK (1), a violent shake, concussion, onset, offence. (F., – scoc, M. H. G. schoe, a shock, shaking movement; cited by Fick, iii. 329. Cf. Du. schok, a shock, jolt ; schokken, to jolt, agitate, shake ; Icel. skykkr, a jolt, only used in dat. pl. skykkjum, tremulously. From a Teut. base SKOKA, SKOKYA, Fick, iii. 329; evidently a derivative from SKAK, to shake; see Shake. Der. shock, verb.

M.E. shokken, as above ; shock-ing. Doublet, shog, q. v. SHOCK (2), a pile of sheaves of corn. (O. Low G.) 'A shocke of corne in the field; 'Baret (1580). M.E. schokke, Prompt. Parv. Perhaps an E. word, but not found in A.S. However, it is found in O. Du. schocke, 'a shock, a cock, or a heape,' Hexham; whence schocken, 'to shock, to cock, or heape up.' So also Swed. skock, a crowd, heap, herd. The orig. sense must have been a heap violently pushed or tossed together, from O. Du. schocken, Du. schokken, to jolt, move, agitate, shock, shake; and the word is doubtless allied to Shock (1). Similarly sheaf is formed from the verb show.  $\beta$ . A shock generally means 12 sheaves; but G. schock, Dan. skok, Swed. skock mean threescore or 60.

SHOCK (3), a rough, shaggy-coated dog. (E.) A not uncom-mon name for a dog. Spelt shough in Macb. iii. 1. 94. 'My little shock;' Nabbes' Bride, 1640, sig. H (Halliwell). Shock-headed is rough-headed, with shaggy or rough hair. It is supposed to be a variant of Shag, q. v.

SHODDY, a material obtained by tearing into fibres refuse woollen goods (E.) Prob. so called from being, at first, the waste stuff shed or thrown off in spinning wool (Chambers). Cf. M.E. schode, division of the hair, Chaucer, C. T. 2cO; Lowland Sc. shoad, a portion of land. – A.S. sceadan, to shed, divide; see Shed. TAnother similar material is called musico; perhaps 'mixture,' from A.S. gemang, a crowd, lit. a mixture; allied to mingle.

SHOE, a covering for the foot. (E.) M. E. scho, shoo, Chaucer, C. T. 255; pl. shoon, schon, shon, Will. of Palerne, 14, Havelok, 860; also sceos, O. Eng. Homilies, i. 37, l. 4 from bottom. = A. S. sceo, pl. sceos, Ælfric's Gloss., in Wright's Vocab. i. 26, col. 1. We also find pl. gesey, Matt. iii. 11; and gescygian, verb, to shoe, Diplomatarium, p. 616. + Du. schoen. + Icel. skór; pl. skúar, skór. + Swed. and Dan. sko. + Goth. skoks. + G. schuch, O. H. G. scóh, scuoch. B. The Teut. form is SKOHA, Fick, iii. 338. Root unknown; yet it seems reasonable to refer it to  $\sqrt{SKA}$  or SKU, to cover; see Shade, Der. shoe, verb, K. Lear, iv. 6. 188; shod (for shoe-d); Sky. shoe-black, -horn.

SHOG, to shake, jog, move off or away. (C.) 'Will you shog off?' Hen. V, ii. 1. 47. 'I shogge, as a carte dothe,' i. e. jolt; Pals-Strave. - W. ysgogi, to was, stir, shake; ysgog, a quick motion, jolt. Allied to E shake; from SKAG, to shake; see Shake, and Jog. ¶ The A.S. sceacar, lit. to shake, was also used in the sense 'to shog off.' or depart; as shewn under the word. [†]

SHOOT, to dart, let fly, thrust forward. (E.) M. E. schotien, shotien, Pricke of Conscience, 1906; spelt scotien, Layamon, 16555. A. S. scólian, to dart, intransitive, as in 'scóligende steorran' = shoot-ing stars, A. S. Chron. an. 744. β. This is merely a secondary ing stars, A.S. Chron. an. 744.  $\beta$ . This is merely a secondary verb, which has taken the place of the primary verb seen in M.E. scheten, sheten, which ought to have given a mod. E. form sheet; Chaucer, C. T. 3926. - A. S. sceotan, to shoot, dart, rush; pt. t. sceat, Chauter, C. 1. 3910. -A. S. scentar, to shoot, dait, this i, p. t. stears, pp. scoten. (The pp. scoten is preserved in shotten herring, a herring that has spent its roe, I Hen. IV, ii. 4. 143.) + Du. schieten, pt. t. schoot, pp. geschoten. + Icel. shjóta, pt. t. shaut. pp. skotinn. + Dan. skyde. + Swed. skjuta. + G. schiessen.  $\gamma$ . All from a Teut. base SKUT, to shoot, answering to an Aryan form SKUD; cf. Skt. shund, to jump or go by leaps, allied to Skt. shand, to jump, jump upwards, ascend; see Scansion. Der. shoot, sb., M. E. schote, Morte Arthure, 3627; off-shoot, q. v.; shoot-er, L. L. L. iv. I. 116; shoot-ing ; and see shot, shut, shutt-le, sheet, scot, scud, shitt-ish, shitt-les. SHOP, a stall, a place where goods are sold. (E) M. E. schoppe, shoppe, Chaucer, C. T. 4420. – A. S. sceoppa, a stall or booth; but used to translate Lat. gazophilacium, a treasury, Luke, xxi. I. Allied to A. S. scypen, a shed for cattle; 'ne scypene his neatum ne timbre) - nor builds a shed for his cattle, Ælfred, tr. of Beda, b. i. c. 1. + Low G. schup, a shed; Brem. Wörterb. + G. schuppen, a shed, covert, cart house; whence O.F. eschoppe, eschope, 'a little β. The E. word might have been borrowed low shop,' Cot. from F., but it seems to have previously existed in A.S.; the word is Tentonic. The form of the base is SKUP, perhaps from  $\checkmark$  SKU, to cover; see Sky. Cf. Gk.  $\sigma\kappa i\pi\sigma s$ , cover, Skt.  $k\cdot k\sigma \rho a$ , night, 'that which obscures.' Der. skop, verb; skop-lift-ing, stealing from shops, for which one T.M. (A) and the verb

SHOAR, a prop; the same as Shore (2). SHOCK (1), a violent shake, concussion, onset, offence. (F., – Teut.) We find only M. E. schokken, verb, to shock, jog, move or throw with violence. Morte Arthure, ed. Brock, 1759, 3816, 3852, the Grene Knight, 2161. – A.S. score, an unauthorised word, given pp. of sceras, to shear. Cf. scores clif (= shorn cliff), a precipice, Alfred, tr. of Gregory's Past. Care, c. 33, l. 4. See Shear, Score. Dor. shore, verb, to set on shore, Wint. Tale, iv. 4. 869.

SHORE (2), SHOAR, a prop, support. (Scand.) M.E. schore. Schore, undur-settynge of a thynge bat wolde falle, Suppositorium; Prompt. Parv. 'Hit hadde shoriers to shoue hit vp' = it (a tree) had props to keep it up; P. Plowman, C. xix. 20. Shorier is a sb. formed from schorien, verb, to under-prop, which (by its form) is a denominative verb from the sb. schore. - Icel. skorda, a stay, prop, esp. under a ship or boat when ashore; whence skorda, verb, to under-prop, shore up; Norw. skorda, skora, a prop (Aasen). Cf. Swed. dial. skåre, a piece of wood cut off, a piece of a tree when split from end to end (Rietz). A shore is a piece of wood shorn or cut off of a required length, so as to serve as a prop. Derived from shor-, base of shorinn, shorn, pp. of Icel. shera, to shear; see Shear. We find also Du. schoor, a prop, schoren, to prop. Thus the word is closely allied to Shore (1). Der. shore, verb.

SHORE (3), a corruption of Sewer, q. v.

SHORT, curt, scanty, not long, cut down, insufficient. (E.) M.E. schort, short, Chaucer, C. T. 748. – A.S. sceort, short, Grein, ii. 407. Cf. Icel. shorta, to be short of, to lack, shortr, shortness, want; O. H. G. scorz, short. B. The Teut. base is SKORTA, short, Fick, iii. 338. Apparently formed, with Aryan suffix -ta, from ✓SKAR, to cut; see Shear. Cf. Lat. curtus, curt, short, Gk. relow, to shear, from a VKAR, to cut, which is prob. the same root SKAR with a loss of initial s. From the Lat. curtus were borrowed Icel. kortr, G. kurz, E. curt. Der. short-ly, adv., M. E. shortly, Chaucer, C. T. 717, from A. S. sceortlice; short-ness; shortcoming, -kand, -sight-ed, -wind-ed. Also short-en, verb, cf. M. E. shorten, Chaucer, C. T. 793, A. S. sceortian (Bosworth); where, however, the mod. final -en does not really represent the M. E. suffix -en, but is added by analogy with M. E. verbs in -nen, such as waknen, to waken; this suffix -en was at first the mark of an intransitive verb, but was made to take an active force. The true sense of shorten is 'to become short;' see Waken. Doublet, curt.

SHOT, a missile, aim, act of shooting. (E.) M. E. schot, shot, a missile, Chaucer, C. T. 2546. - A. S. ge-sceot; 'nim bin gesceot' = take thy implements for shooting; Gen. xxvii. 3. - A.S. scol., stem of pp. of scedam, to shoot; see Shoot. + O. Fries. skol, a shot. + Icel. skot, a shot, a shooting. + Du. schot, a shot, shoot. + G. schoss, schuss, a shot. Fick, iii. 337, gives the Teut. form as SKUTA. The same word as scot, a contribution; see Scot-free. Der. shot, verb, to load with shot; shott-ed. Doublet, scot (see scot-free).

SHOULDER, the arm-joint, joint in which the arm plays. (E.) M. E. shulder, shuldre, Havelok, 604. - A.S. sculder, sculdor, Gen. ix. 23. + Du. schouder. + Swed. skuldra. + Dan. skulder. + G. schulter. Root unknown. Dor. shoulder, verb, Rich. III, iii. 7. 128; shoulderblade, -belt, -knot.

SHOUT, a loud outcry. (Unknown.) Spelt shoute, showte in Palsgrave. M. E. shouten, Chaucer, Troil. ii. 614. The origin is unknown; and the etymologies offered are unsatisfactory. 1. Wedgwood calls it 'a parallel form to hoot.' 2. E. Müller thinks that 8. Webster and shout may be the cry of a scout, to give warning. 3. Webster and others suppose a connection with shoot, but do not explain the 4. May we compare it with Icel. skúta, skúti, a taunt? diphthong. 4. May we compare it with Icel. shúta, shúti, a (The Icel. shúta means to jut out.) Der. shout, sb., shout-er.

SHOVE, to push, thrust, drive along. (E.) M.E. shouen, schouen; 'to shoue hit vp'=to prop it up; P. Plowman, C. xix. 20. This is a rare verb, of a weak form; the usual strong verb is schouven, shouwen (with latter u=v), Chaucer, C. T. 3910; pt. t. shof (printed showe in some editions), id. Parl. of Foules, 154; pp. shouen (showen), shoue, id. C. T. 11593. - A. S. scoftan, weak verb, Ælfred, tr. of Gregory's Pastoral Care, p. 168, l. 11; the usual strong verb is scifan, pt. t. sceaf, pl. scufon, pp. scofen, Grein, ii. 412 + Du. schuiven. + Icel. skufa, skyfa. + Dan. skuffe. + Swed. skuffa. + G. schieben, pt. t. schob, pp. geschoben; O. H. G. sciuban. + Goth. skiuban. β. All from a Teut. base SKUB; Fick, iii. 338. Allied to Skt. kshubh, to become agitated; the causal form signifies to agitate, shake, impel; hence kshobha, agitation, kshobhana, shaking. Thus the primary sense was 'to shake' or 'push.' Der. shove, sb; shovegroat, a game in which a groat (piece of money) was shoved or pushed about on a board; also show-sl, q. v.; sheaf, q. v.

SHOVEL, an instrument with a broad blade and a handle, for shoving and lifting; a sort of spade. (E.) M. E. schouel (with u= v). 'With spades and with schoueles;' P. Plowman, B. vi. 192. = A. S. scoft; 'Trulla, scoft,' Wright's Voc. i. 289. = A. S. scof-, base of pp. of scular, to shove; with suffix -1 (Aryan -ra). + G. schaufel. See Shove. Der. shovel, verb, Wint. Tale, iv. 4. 469. Also shovel-er, a kind of duck, Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. x. c. 40. [+] by Somner. The orig. sense is 'edge,' or part shorn off; from scor-en, <sup>A</sup> explain. (E.) Show is the older spelling; sometimes show is used to pp. of scoren clif (= shorn cliff), a precipice, denote the verb, and show for the sb., but without any difference of Alfred, tr. of Gregory's Past. Care, c. 33, l. 4. See Shear, Score. C. T. 9380; P. Plowman, B. i. 2. - A. S. sceawian, to look, see, behold; the later sense is to make to look, point out. 'Seconiso }a lilian' = behold the lilies; Luke, xii. 27. + Du. schonwen, to inspect, view. + Dan. skue, to behold. + Goth. skawjan in comp. usskawy to awake. + G. schauen, to behold, see.  $\beta$ . All from  $\checkmark$  SKAW (from SKU), to see, perceive; Fick, iii. 336. From the same root are Lat. cauere, to be careful, take care, orig. to look about ; Skt. kovi, wise ; Curtius, i. 186. Der. show, sb., M. E. schewe. Prompt. Parv.; show-bill; shew-bread, Exod. xxv. 30; show-y, Spectator, no. 434; show-i-ly; show-i-ness; shee-n; scav-enger. Grein gives A.S. sceawian, with an accent; but cf. the Gothic form.

SHOWER, a fall of rain. (E.) Orig. a monosyllable, like flower. M. E. shour, schour, Chaucer, C. T. I. - A. S. scur, Grein, ii. 414. + Du. schoer. + Icel. shur. + Swed. shur. + Goth. shure, a storm; skura windis, a storm of wind, Mark, iv. 37. + G. schamer; O. H. G. scúr. β. All from Teut. base SKU-RA, Fick, iii. 336. Perhaps the orig. sense was a thick dark cloud, rain cloud, from its obscuring the sky; cf. Lat. obscurus, and see Sky. If so, the root is / SKU, to cover; cf. O. H. G. scur, G. schauer in the sense of a pent-house or shelter, and note that sky is from the same root. Der. shower, verb, Hen. VIII, i. 4. 63; shower-y.

SHRED, a strip, fragment, piece torn or cut off. (E.) The vowel is properly long, as in the variant screed (Halliwell). M.E. The shrede, Havelok, 99. – A. S. sereade, a piece, strip. 'Sceda, screade,' also 'Presegmina, præcisiones, sereadan' (plural); Wright's Vocab. . 46, col. 2, and p. 40, col. I; whence A.S. screadian, to shred. + Icel. skrjóðr, a shred. + O. Du. schroode (Kilian); whence schrooder, 'a lopper or pruner of trees,' Hexham. + G. schrot, a piece, shred, block; whence schroten, to graw, cut, saw.  $\beta$ . All from a Test, base SKRAUD, a strengthened form of SKRUD, for which see Shroud. Der. shred, verb, M. E. shredden, Chaucer, C. T. 8103.

A.S. screddian; also scroll, q.v. Doublet, screed. SHREW, a scold, scolding woman. (E.) M.E. shrees, schrewe, adj., wicked, bad; applied to both sexes. The Wife of Bath says her fifth husband was 'the moste shrewe,' the most churlish of all; Chaucer, C. T. 6087. Cf. P. Plowman, B. x. 437; Prompt. Parv. Spelt screwe, Polit. Songs, ed. Wright, p. 153, l. 13; which explains mod. E. serew, a vicious horse. - A.S. seredina, a shrew-mouse; 'Mus araneus, seredina;' Wright's Vocab. i. 24, col. 1. Somner explains scredina as 'a shrew-mouse, which, by biting cattle, so envenoms them that they die,' which is, of course, a fable. But the fable is very old; the Lat. name araneus means ' poisonous as a spider;' and Aristotle says the bite of the shrew-mouse is dangerous to horses, and causes boils ; Hist. Anim. viii. 24. In Italy the hardy shrews are venomous in their biting;' Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. viii. c. 58. β. Hence I would interpret A.S. screene as 'the biter,' from the Teut. base SKRU, to cut, tear, preserved in mod. E. shred and shroud, as well as in scruple and scrutiny; see those words. Cf. Skt. kshur, to scratch, cut, make furrows; kshure (Gk. Eupów), a rasor; and note the connection of rat with Lat. radere, rodere. The sense of 'biter' or 'scratcher' will well apply to a cross child or scolding woman. The M.E. schreuen, to curse, whence E. be-shrew, is merely a derivative from the sb., with re-¶ Wedgwood refers to ference to the language used by a shrew. a curious passage in Higden's Polychronicon, i. 334. The Lat. text has mures nocentissimos, which Trevisa translates by well schreined mys – very harmful mice. The prov. G. scher, schermans, a mole, is from the more primitive form of the same root, viz the  $\sqrt{SKAR}$ , to cut. Der. shrew-d. be-shrew ; also shrew-ish. Com. Errors, iii. 1. 2; shrew-ish-ly, -ness; also screw (2).

SHREWD, malicious, wicked; cunning, acute. (E.) The older sense is malicious, mischievous, scolding or shrew-like, as in Mids. Nt. Dr. iii. 2. 323, &c. M. E. schrewed, shrewed, accursed, depraved, wicked ; 'schrewed folk' = wicked people, Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. i. c. 4, l. 398; cf. schreuednesse, wickedness, id. l. 401. Schreued is lit. 'accursed,' pp. of schreuen, to curse, beshrew; Chaucer, C. T. 14532, 14533; and the verb is formed from the M. E. adj. schrowe, evil, malicious ; see Shrew. Der. shrewd-ly, -ness.

SHREW-MOUSE, an animal like a mouse; see Shrew

SHRIEK, to screech, cry aloud, scream. (Scand.) A doublet of screeck. Spenser has skriek, F. Q. vi. 5. 8; but also serike, vi. 5. 18. Baret (1580) has scriek. M. E. skriken, Chaucer, C.T. 15406 (Group B. 4590); where other spellings are schrichen, schriken. See Soreech. Der. shriek, sb., Macb. iv. 3. 168. Also shrike, q. v. Doublet, screech.

SHRIEVALTY, sheriffalty; see Sheriff.

SHRIFT, SHRIVE ; see Shrove-tide.

SHRIKE, the butcher-bird. (Scand.) Named from its shrill cry. - Icel. skrikja, a shrieker; also, the shrike or butcher-bird. - Icel. BHROUD, a garment, the dress of the dead. (E.) The word skrikja, to titter, but properly to shriek; see Shriek, Screech. Cf. A.S. scric; prob. borrowed from Scand. 'Turdus, scric;' Wright's Vocab. i. 281, col. 1; also p. 29, col. 1. BHROUD, a garment, the dress of the dead. (E.) The word had formerly the general sense of garment, clothing, or covering. M. E. skroud, sckroud, P. Plowman, B. prol. 2; skrud, Havelok. 303. - A.S. scrúd, a garment, clothing, Grein, ii. 412. + Icel. skrúð, the SHRILL, acute in sound, piercing, loud. (Scand.) M. E. skril, schril; pl. skrille, Chaucer, 15401; also skirle, in Levins and Palsgrave. The same word as Lowland Sc. skirl, a shrill cry; skirl, to cry shrilly. Of Scand. origin. - Norweg. skryla, skræla, to cry shrilly; skræl, a shrill cry (Aasen). Cf. Swed. dial. skræla, to cry loudly, said of children (Rietz); A. S. soralletan, to make a loud outcry (Grein). Also Low G. schrell, shrill; Bremen Wörterbuch; prov. G. schrill, shrill, schrillen, to sound shrill (Flügel). β. From a base SKRAL, a strengthened form of Teut. base SKAL, to make a loud noise, ring, whence not only G. schallen, to resound, schall, an echo, but also M. E. schil, skil, shrill. We find the adv. skulle, shrilly (with various readings schille, schrille), in P. Plowman, C. vii. 46. The base SKAL is well represented by the Icel. strong verb shjalla, skella, pt. t. skall, pp. skolinn; and by the G. schallen. *, pt. t. scholl*, pp. schollen*, ongue, said of a hound; and note the E. derivative scol-d; see Boold. Der. skrill-y, skrill-ness.

SHRIMP, a small shell-fish. (E.) M. E. shrimp, Chaucer, C. T. 13961. Cf. Lowland Sc. serimp, to straiten, pinch; serimp, scanty; 'scrimpit stature'=dwarfish stature, Burns, To Jas. Smith, l. 14. We may call it an E. word; but, instead of scrimpan, we find A.S. scrimman, used as equivalent to scrincan, to shrink, A.S. Leechdoms, ii. 6, l. 15. Shrimp is just a parallel form to shrink; and it is probable that parallel Teut. forms, SKRIM and SKRIN, existed, as well as the longer forms SKRIMP and SKRINK.  $\beta$ . Rietz makes no doubt that there was an O. Swed. skrimpa, a strong verb, as well as a shorter form skrina. Traces of O. Swed. skrimpa occur in Swed. skrumpen, Dan. skrumpen, shrivelled; and we may certainly infer the existence of an old Teut. base SKRAMP\*, to pinch, whence a strong verb was formed, with infin. scrimpan \*, pt. t. scramp \*, pp. scrumpen \* Hence, by loss of initial s, we have the Teut. base KRAMP (Fick, iii. 49), and the E. crimp, cramp, crumple; whence lastly, by loss of initial c, we have rimple, old form of ripple, and rumple. See y. Even in English we Crimp, Cramp; and see Shrink. have clear traces of the same strong verb, since (besides skrimp) we find prov. E. skrammed, benumbed with cold, prov. E. skrump, to shrug, shrink, and scrump, to double up. So also G. schrumpel, a wrinkle, schrumpfen, to shrink.

SHRINE, a place in which sacred things are deposited, an altar. (L.) M. E. schrin; dat. schryne, K. Alisaunder, 1670. – A. S. scrin, the ark (of the covenant), Jos. iii. 8, iv. 7. – Lat. scrinium, a chest, box, case. Root uncertain. Der. en-skrine.

SHRINK, to wither, contract; to recoil. (E.) M. E. shrinken, to contract, draw together; pt. t. shronk, Chaucer, tr. of Boethius, b. i. pr. I, l. 38; pp. shrunken, Gower, C. A. i. 98, l. 27.–A. S. serincan, pt. t. scrane, pp. scruncen, to contract, shrivel up; chiefly in comp. for-scrincan, pt. t. forscrane, Mark, iv. 6. + O. Du. schrinken, 'to grow lesser or to shrinke,' Hexham. And cf. Swed. shrynka, a wrinkle; shrynkla, to wrinkle, to rumple.  $\beta$ . From a Teut. base SKRANK (SKRAK), to shrivel, wrinkle, draw together; parallel to the base SKRAMP, appearing in Bhrimp, q. v.; and see Scraggy. Further allied to Shrivel, and prob. to Shrug.  $\gamma$ . Perhaps the orig. sense was to bend or twist together; so that, by loss of final s, we may attribute cringe, cringle, crinkle, crank, to the same root; just as crimp, cramp, crumple belong to the root SKRAMP.

SHRIVE, to confess; see Shrove-tide.

Shak. has skrivel SHRIVEL, to wrinkle, crumple up. (Scand.) up, Per. ii. 4. 9. It does not seem to appear in Middle English. It is a frequentative form, with the usual suffix -el, from the base shriv-, skrif-, from an older skrip- or skrap-, of which we have a clear instance in the O. Northumbrian screpa, to pine away, lit. to shrink or shrivel. In Mark, ix. 18, where the Lat. text has arescit (A.V. pineth away), the A. S. version has forserine), the Lindisfarne MS. has serines", and the Rushworth MS. screpes. B. This is rather Scand. than E., and we find allied words in Norweg. skrypa, to waste, skryp, skryv, adj., transitory, frail (Aasen); Swed. dial. skryvp, to shorten, contract, skryp, weak, feeble, not durable (Rietz); Swed. skröplig, feeble, Dan. skröbelig, infirm, Icel. skrjøpr, brittle, frail (from a base y. Probably from the Tent. base SKRAMP, for which skrup). see Shrimp; we may perhaps suppose shrivel (for shriple) to result from shrimp by loss of m; cf. Lowland Sc. scrimp, to straiten, scrimpit, diminished. 8. It is worth noting that we not only have such words as Lowland Sc. scrimp, to straiten, scrumple, to wrinkle, and E. shrimp, shrivel, but (without initial s) E. cramp, crimp, crumple, and again (without initial c) E. rumple, rivel; where rivel and shrivel mean much the same.

SHROUD, a garment, the dress of the dead. (E.) The word had formerly the general sense of garment, clothing, or covering. M. E. skroud, schroud, P. Plowman, B. prol. 2; skrud, Havelok. 303. -A.S. scrud, a garment, clothing, Grein, ii. 412. + 1 cell. skrud's, the shrouds of a ship, furniture of a church; Norweg. skrud, dress, ornament; Dan. and Swed. skrud, dress, attire.  $\beta$ . Closely allied to Skred (as shewn under that word), and the orig. sense was a shred or piece of cloth or stuff, a sense nearly retained in that of windingsheet. Chapman has skroud in the very sense of shred or scrap of stuff, tr. of Homer's Odyssey, b. vi. l. 274. Moreover, a skred is a piece roughly cut off; cf. G. schrot, a cut, a piece, schroten, to cut, saw; allied to Lithuan. skroidii, skroid, a worn-out fur coat or skin.  $\gamma$ . And further allied (see Schmidt, Vocalismus, i. 172) to O. H. G. scriistan, scriindan, to burst, split, G. schrund, a rift, from the Teut. base SKRAND, to become brittle; Fick, iii. 339. Cf. also Goth. dis-skreitan, to tear to shreds, rend, dis-skriinan, to be rent apart; Skt. krintana, cutting, krit, to cut; all to be referred to the widespread  $\checkmark$  SKAR, to cut. Der. skroud, verb, A. S. scrjdan, Matt. vi. 30; en-skroud. Also skrouds, s. pl., K. John, v. 7. 53, part of the rigging of a vessel.

rigging of a vessel. SHROVE-TIDE, SHROVE-TUESDAY, a time or day (Tuesday) on which shrift or confession was formerly made. (L. and E.) Skrove-tide is the tide or season for shrift; Skrove-tuesday is the day preceding Ash Wednesday or the first day of Lent. Shrove is here used as a sb., formed from skrove, the pt. t. of the verb to skrive ; except in the two above compounds, the sb. invariably takes the form skrift. β. The verb to skrive (pt. t. skrove, pp. skriven) is M. E. schriven, skriven, of which we find the pt. t. skrof, skroof in P. Plowman, B. iii. 44 (footnote), and the pp. shriven in Chaucer, C. T. 7677.-A.S. serifan, to shrive, to impose a penance or compensation, y. But although to judge; pt. t. scraf, pp. scrifen; Grein, ii. 411. it thus appears as a strong verb, it does not appear to be a true Teut. word. It was rather borrowed (at a very early period) from Lat. scribere, to write, to draw up a law, whence also G. schreiben (also conjugated as a strong verb), to write. The particular sense is due to the legal use of the word, signifying (1) to draw up a law, (2) to impose a legal obligation or penalty, (3) to impose or prescribe a penance; see Bosworth. See Scribe. B. The sb. shrift, is M.E. skrift (dat. skrifte), P. Plowman, C. xvil. 30, A.S. scrift, confession, Laws of Æthelred, pt. v. § 22, pt. vi. § 27, in Thorpe, Anc. Laws, i. 310, 322; and just as the A.S. verb serifan is due to Lat. scribere, so A.S. scrift is due to the Lat. pp. scriptus. The Icel. skript or skrift, Swed. skrift, Dan. skrifts, shrift, are all borrowed from A.S.

SHRUB (1), a low dwarf tree. (E.) M. E. shrob, schrub, P. Plowman, C. i. 2. - A. S. scrob, a shrub; preserved in Scrob-scir, Shropshire, A. S. Chron. an. 1094, Scrobbes-byrig, Shrewsbury (lit. Shrubs-bury), id. an. 1016, Scrobbes-byrig-scir, Shrewsburyshire, the older name of Shropshire, id. an. 1006. We also find the form scrybbe, a shrubbery, Diplomatarium Ævi Saxonici, ed. Thorpe, p. 525, l. 22. We also have the place-name Wormwood-scrubbs, near London. + Norweg. skrubba, the dwarf cornel-tree (Aasen). β. Cf. also prov. E. shruff, light rubbish wood, scroff, refuse of wood; the allusion is, I suppose, to the stunted mode of growth, shrub being from the Teut. base SKRAMP, to contract, noted under Shrimp; and see y. In confirmation of Shrivel. Cf. prov. E. shrump, to shrink. the relation of shrub to shrimp, we find a complete parallel in the relation of prov. E. scrog, a shrub or stunted bush, to shrink; see Soraggy, Shrug, Shrink. S. I believe scrub to be also closely Scraggy, Shrug, Shrink. related, as shewn under that word, but to refer to a later use, and to be, in fact, a mere derivative. Der. shrubb-y; shrubb er-y, a coined word, by the analogy of vin-er-y, pin-er-y, and the like. Also scrub, q. v. SHRUB (2), a drink made of lemon-juice, spirit, sugar, and water. (Arab.) Chiefly made with rum. In Johnson's Dict. – Arab. shirb, shurb, a drink, a beverage. – Arab. root shariba, he drank; Rich. Dict. p. 887. Doublet, syrup. And see sherbet. SHRUG, to draw up, contract. (Scand.) In Temp. i. 2. 367;

SHRUG, to draw up, contract. (Scand.) In Temp. i. 2. 367; Cor. i. 9. 4. Generally used of drawing up the shoulders, but the true sense is to shrink. 'The touch of the cold water made a pretty kind of skrugging come over her body;' Sidney's Arcadia, b. ii (R.) 'Shruggyn, Frigulo;' Prompt. Parv. – Dan. skrugge, skrukke, to stoop; skruk-rygget, humpbacked; Swed. dial. skrukka, skruga, to huddle oneself up, to sit in a crouching position, allied to skrinka, to shrink (Rietz); see Shrink. Cf. Icel. skrukka, an old shrimp; and see Soraggy. Observe the proportion; skrug : skrink :: skrub : skrimp. SHUDDER, to tremble with fear or horror. (O. Low G.) 'Alas I they make me skoder;' Skelton, Colin Clout, 68. M. E. skoderen, schuderen; pt. t. schoderide, Morte Arthure, 2106; pres. part. schudrinde, Seint Margaret, ed. Cockayne, p. 15, 1. 12. [Not found in A. S.; but see Soud.] It is a frequentative verb, formed with the usual suffix -er from the Teut. base SKUD, to shake, appearing in Q.

Saxon shuddian. 'Shuddiat it fan iuwun skóhun' = shake it [the dust] & SHY, timid, cautious, suspicious. (Scand.) from your shoes; Heliand, 1948. O. Du. schudden, ' to shake or to tremble,' Hexham ; he also gives 'schudden een boom, to shake a tree. schudden van koude, to quake for colde; schudden het hooft, to shake or nod ones head; schudderen, to laugh with an open throate that his head shkes.' + O. H. G. scutiár, G. schüter, to shoot corn, pour, shed, discharge; schüttern, to shake, tremble, quake. Perhaps the Teut. base SKUD is allied to SKUT, to shoot; Fick, iii. 338. Der.

shudder, sb. SHUFFLE, to push about, practise shifts. (Scand.) • When we have shuffled of [pushed or shoved aside] this mortal coil;' Hamlet, iii. 1. 67. Merely a doublet of Souffle, and the frequentative of shove; but of Scand., not E. origin, as shewn by the double f. The sense is 'to keep pushing about,' as in 'shuffle the cards.' seems to have taken up something of the sense of shiftiness, with which it has no etymological connection.] See Scuffle, Shove.

Der. shuffle, sb.; shuffl-er. SHUN, to avoid, keep clear of, neglect. (E.) M. E. shunien, shonien, P. Plowman, B. prol. 174. – A. S. scunian, not common except in the comp. on-scunian, to detest, refuse, reject, Gen. xxxix. 10. In Ps. lxix. 2, ed. Spelman, the Lat. revereantur is translated by an oracian, with the various readings sconnyn, forwandian, and scunian. The pp. gescunned is in Diplomatarium Ævi Saxonici, ed. Thorpe, p. 318, last line. The orig. sense is 'to flee away' or 'hurry off;' allied words are Icel. skunda, skynda, Dan. skynde, Swed. skynda sig, to hasten, Dan. skynda, Swed. skynda sig. to hasten, hurry, speed; O. H. G. scuntan, to urge on. See Schooner. Der. shun-less, Cor. ii. 2. 116; schoon-er. Also shun-t, q. v.

SHUNT, to turn off upon a side-rail. (Scand.) As a word used on railways, it was borrowed from prov. E. shunt, to turn aside. But the word itself is old. M. E. shunten, to start aside, Gawayn and the Grene Knight, 1902; schounten, schownten, schonten, schunten, Morte Arthur, 736, 1055, 1324, 1759, 2106, 2428, 3715, 3816, 3842; ikunt, Destruction of Troy, 600, 729, 10377, 10998. 'If at 3e shap 30w to shount' = if ye intend to escape; Alexander (Ashmole MS.), 2143; and see Ancren Riwle, p. 242, note d. B. Shunten stands for shunden, being easier to pronounce quickly. The orig sense is to speed, hasten, flee, escape. - Icel. skunda, to speed ; see further under Shun SHUT, to fasten a door, close. (E.) M. E. shutten, shitten. 'To close and to shutte;' P. Plowman, B prol. 105. 'The jatis weren schit' = the gates were shut; Wyclif, John, xx. 19. - A. S. scyttan, to shut; 'sero, ic scytte sum loc obbe hæpsige,' i.e. I shut a lock or hasp it; Ælfric's Grammar, ed. Zupitza, p. 220. To shut a door was to fasten it with a bolt or sliding bar, called a shuttle or shittle (see Shuttle), which took its name from being shot across. We still say 'to shoot a bolt.' The A.S. scyttan stands for scut-ian (by the usual change from u to y); derived from scut, base of the plural of pt. t. of sceotan, to shoot ; see Shoot. + Du. schutten, to shut in, lock up; schut, a fence, screen, partition, O. Du. schut, an arrow, dart (Hexham); from schieten, to shoot. + G. schützen, to protect, guard, shut off water; schutz, a guard, sluice, flood-gate, O. H. G. schuz, a quick movement; from schiessen, O. H. G. sciozan, to shoot. Der. shutt-er ; shutt-le, q. v.

SHUTTLE, an instrument for shooting the thread of the woof between the threads of the warp in weaving. (E.) In Job, vii. 6. So called from its being shot between the threads. 'An honest weaver . As e'er shot shuttle;' Beaum. and Fletcher, The Coxcomb, Act v. sc. 1. Also spelt shittle; in Palsgrave, 'shyttell for a wevar.' M. E. schitel; spelt scytyl, Prompt. Parv. p. 447, also schetyl, id. p. 470, 1. 2. The same word as M. E. schitel, a bolt of a door, similarly named from its being shot across. Schyttyl, of sperynge [sparring, barring], Pessulum; Prompt. Parv. The A.S. form would be scyttel, but we only find the longer form scyttels, pl. scyttelsas, in the sense of bar of a door. 'Sceota) ha ysenan scyllelsas' [misprinted scyllelas in Bos-worth] = shoot the iron bolts; Gospel of Nicodemus, ed. Thwaites, c. xxvii. β. The word scyttels (= scyt-el-sa) is formed with the double suffix -el-sa from scut, base of the pl. of the pt. t. of scectars, to shoot; see Shut, Shoot. Shuttle is the same word, but without the suffix -sa. + Dan. skytte, skyttel, a shuttle; Swed. dial. skyttel, sköttel;

cf. Swed. skotspole, a shuttle, lit a shot spool. Der. skuttle-cock, q.v. SHUTTLE COCK, a piece of wood or cork stuck with feathers, used as a plaything. (E.) Spelt skyttelcocke in Palsgrave; skuttelcock, Spenser, Mother Hubbard's Tale, 804. Prob. called cock from being stuck with feathers and flying through the air. [Not shuttlecork, as Todd fancies, contrary to evidence and probability; for they were most likely at first made of wood, and struck with a wooden battledore.] Called shuttle from being shot backwards and forwards like a weaver's shuttle; in fact, the shuttle-cock seems to have succeeded an older plaything called simply shuttle or shittle. 'Schytle, chyldys game, Sagitella;' Prompt. Parv. See further under Shuttle; and see Skittles.

In Shak. Meas. iii. 2. 138; v. 54. M. E. skyg, scrupulous, careful to shun (evil), Allit. Poems, B. 21. It is rather a Scand. than an E. word ; we also find M. E. schey, skey, shy, (said of a horse), Prompt. Parv. p. 444 : spelt second (also of a horse), Andren Riwle, p. 242, 1. 9; answering to the rare A. S. sosóh, timid, Grein, ii. 405. – Dan. sky, shy, skittish; Swed. skygg, skittish, starting, shy, coy; Swed. dial. sky, the same (Rietz). β. Prob. allied to M. H. G. schick, schick, mod. G. schen, timid, shy, and O. H. G. sciukan, to frighten, or (intransitively) to fear, shy at, whence (through the French) we have E. eschere. Der. shy-ly, shyness; sky, verb; and see eschew, skew. [†] SIB, related. (E.) In Spenser, F. Q. iii. 3. 26. See further under Gossip. Der. gos-sip.

SIBILANT, making a hissing sound. (L.) We call s and z 'sibilant' letters. Bacon has 'sibilation or hissing sound ;' Nat. Hist. § 176.-Lat. sibilant-, stem of pres. part. of sibilare, to hiss.-Lat. sibilus, adj. hissing; formed from a base SIB or SIP which is probably imitative of a whistling sound. Cf. Russ. sopiete, to pipe, to snore; and E. sip, sup. Der. sibil-at-ion.

SIBYL, a pagan prophetess. (L., - Gk.) Shak. has both Sidyl and Sybilla; Oth. iii. 4. 70; Merch. Ven. i. 2. 116. Cotgrave has: 'Sybille, Sybill, one of the 10 Sybillae, a prophetesse.' The word was rather borrowed directly from Lat. than through the F., being known from Virgil. - Lat. Sibylla, a Sibyl; Virgil, Æn. vi. 10. - Gk. Zigula, a Sibyl. Origin uncertain; see Max Müller, Lectures, 8th ed. i. 109.

Der. sibyll-ine, adj.; from Lat. Sibyllinus. [†] SICK, affected with disease, ill, inclined to vomit. (E.) M.E. sik, sek; pl. seke, Chaucer, C. T. 18. – A.S. seće; John, xi. 1. + Da. ziek. + Iccl. sinkr. + Dan. syg. + Swed. sjuk. + G. sieck. + Goth. sinks.  $\beta$ . All from a Teut. form SEUKA, ill; from the Teut. base SUK. to be sick or ill, appearing in the Goth. strong verb siukan, to be ill, pt. t. sauk, pp. sukans. Fick, iii. 325. Cf. Sigh. Der. sick-ness, A.S. seocnes. Matt. viii. 28; sick-en, verb (intrans.) Macb. iv. 3. 173. (trans.) Hen. VIII, i. 1. 82; sick-isk, -ly, -ness; sick-ly, adj., M. E. sekly, Will. of Paleme, 1505; sick-li-ness, Rich. II, ii. 1. 142.

SICKER, SIKER, certain, secure. (L.) Siker is a well-knowa Lowland Sc. word. M. E. siker, Chaucer, C. T. 11451; Layamon, 15092. Not a Teut. word at all, but borrowed from Lat. securus: see Boouro. The O. Fries. siker, sikur, Du. zeker, G. sicker (O. H. G. sickur), Swed. säker, Dan. sikker, W. sicr, are all borrowed from the Latin, which accounts for their strong likeness in form to one Doublets, secure, sure. another.

SICKLE, a hooked instrument for cutting grain. (L.) M.E. sikil, Wyclif, Mark, iv. 29. - A. S. sicol, Mark, iv. 29. - Lat. secula, a Latin ; the truly English words from the same root are some (1), scythe, and sedge. SIDE, the edge or border of a thing, region, part, party. (E) M. E. side, syde, P. Plowman, B. prol. 8; Chaucer, C. T. 560. - A.S. - Dr. zide. + Icel. side. + Dan. side. + β. All from a Teut, base SIDA, a side, Fick, iii. 313. It is probable that the orig. sense was 'that which hangs down' or 'is extended,' as it certainly seems to be closely connected with A. S. std, long, wide, spacious, M. E. siid, spelt syyd in the Prompt. Parv., but now obsolete ; Icel. stor, long, hanging down. Der. side-board, Milton, P. R. ii. 350; side-box, one-sid-ed, many-sid-ed, side-saddle, side-ways, side-wise, sid-ing. Also side, verb, Cor. i. 1. 197, iv. 2. 2; side-ling, side-long, adv., Milton, P. L. vi. 197. M. E. sideling, sidlinges, spelt sydlyngs, Morte Arthur, 1039, where the suffix -ling or -long is adverbial, as explained under Headlong. Hence sidelong, adj. Also a-side, q. v., be-side, q. v. Also side-s-men, officers chosen to assist a churchwarden, Blount, Nomolexicon, where a ridiculous explanation from synods-men (1) is attempted, quite unnecessarily; see Notes and Queries, 5 S. xi. 504. They were also called side-men or guest-men; Halliwell.

SIDERBAL, starry, relating to the stars. (L.) Milton has ideral, P. L. x. 693. Phillips, ed. 1706, has sidereal, siderean. sideral, P. L. x. 693. Sideral is from Lat. sideralis, and is a correct form; sidera-al is coined from Lat. sideralis, and is a correct form; sidera-al is coined from Lat. sidera-us, adj. All from sider-, crude form of sidua, a constellation, also, a star. Root uncertain; see Silver. Der. (from Lat. sidus) con-sider.

SIEGE, a sitting down, with an army, before a fortified place, in order to take it.  $(F_{\cdot, -} L_{\cdot})$  The lit. sense is merely 'seat;' see order to take it.  $(F_{.} - L_{.})$  The lit. sense is merely 'seat;' see Trench, Select Glossary. We find it in this sense in Shak. Meas. iv. 2. 101; Spenser, F. Q. ii. 2. 39. M. E. sege. (1) a seat, Wyclif, Matt. xxv. 31; (2) a siege. Barbour's Bruce. iv. 45, ix. 332. In Ancren Riwle, p. 238, l. 1, sege means 'a throne.' = O. F. siege, masc., a seat, throne: mod. F. siége. (Probably there was also a form sege, like Norman F. secle for siècle in Vie de St. Auban, 1051.) Cf. Ital. sedia, fem., seggio (for sedio), masc., a chair, seat.  $\beta$ . Scheler remarks that these words cannot be immediately from Lat. sedes, but are rather fisilentia, silence, a being silent. - Lat. silent., the stem of pres. part. from a verb sieger \*, suggested by assieger, to besiege, answering to Low Lat.assediare (Ital. assediare); cf. Ital. assedio, asseggin, a siege, blockade. Again, Low Lat. assediare is from a sb. assedium, formed (with prep. ad) in imitation of the Lat. obsidium, a siege. y. In any case, the derivation is ultimately from Lat. sedere, to sit, cognate with E. Sit, q. v. Der. be siege. [+] SIENNA, a pigment used in painting. (Ital.) Raw sienna and burni sienna are the names of two pigments, made from earth, and properly from earth of Sienna, which is the name of a place in Tuscany. due S. of Florence.

SIEVE, a strainer for separating coarse particles from fine ones. (E.) M. E. sive, Chaucer, C. T. 16408; ser-sove, a hair-sieve, Liber (E.) M. E. stor, Chauter, C. 1. 10406; Mersove, a har-sive, Liber Cure Cocorum, ed. Morris, 7 (Stratmann). – A. S. sife; 'Cribra, vel cribellum, sife; 'Wright's Vocab., i. 83, col. 1; spelt sibi in the 8th cent., id. ii. 105, col. 1. + Du. zeef. + G. sieb, M. H.G. sip.  $\beta$ . 'The name may prob. be taken from the implement having orig. been made of sedge or rushes; 'Wedgwood. Cf. North of Eng. seave, a rush (Brockett); which is Icel. sef, sedge, Swed. söf, Dan. siv, a rush. Not to be connected with A. S. sikan, seon, to filter, G. seiken; nor with A.S. sipan, to sip. A sieve is properly for dry articles. Der.

sif-t, q. v. SIFT, to separate particles as with a sieve. (E.) M. F. siften, Chaucer. C. T. 16409; sive (= sieve) being in the line above. - A. S. siftan, syftan, Exod. xii. 34. - A.S. sifte, a sieve. + Du. ziften, to sift, zift, a sieve; from zeef, a sieve. See Sieve.  $\beta$ . We also find  $\beta$ . We also find Dan. sigte, to sift, sigte, sb., a sieve or riddle; Swed. sikta, to sift, sikt, a sieve; Icel. sikta, sigta, to sift. But these are from some different source : perhaps from Icel. siga (pp. siginn), to let sink, let slide down, let drop.

SIGH, to inhale and respire with a long deep breath. (E.) M.E. sighen, sizen, siken ; in P. Plowman, B. xviii. 263, we have syked, with various readings sizede, sizhede ; also syhede, sizte, id. C. xxi. 276. -A. S. sican, to sigh; Ælfred, tr. of Orosius, ii. 8; ed. Sweet, p. 92, A. S. stean, to sigh; β. Ired, it. of Orsids, it. of ed. Sweet, p. 94, l. 35. It is a strong verb; pt. t. side, pp. siden; with a frequentative form siccettan, to sigh, sob. β. Prob. of imitative origin; cf. A. S. swogan, to sound; E. sough, sob; Swed. sucha, Dan. suche, to sigh, groan. Perhaps related to Sick, q. v. Der. sigh, sb., W. F. is of the constant of the source of the source SILK, the delicate, soft thread produced by certain caterpillars, and the stuff woven from it. (L., - Gk., - Chinese?) M. E. silk, Chaucer, C. T. 10927. – A. S. seole (put for sile, just as meole = mile), silk. 'Bombix, seole-wyrm; Sericum, seole; 'Wright's Vocab. i. 40, col. 1. Cf. Icel. silki, Swed. silke, Dan. silke ; all of which, like A. S. seole, are mere adaptations of Lat. sericum, silk, by the common change of r into l.  $\beta$ . Lat. sericum is the next. of Sericus, of or belonging to the Seres. – Gk. Siper, pl., the name of the people from whom the ancients first obtained silk; gen. supposed to be the Chinese. Professor Douglas writes: 'The Lat. Seres and Sericum' are probably derived from the Chinese word for silk, which is variously pronounced se (English e), sei, sai, sai, sz', &c. ; see Williams, Chin. Dict. p. 835.' Cf. The base is SUL, put for an older SWAL, as shewn by the Icel. svill, G. schwelle; so that the derivation is from the Teut. base SWAL, to swell (Fick, iii. 327, 363); from the 'swell' or 'rise' in the doorway caused by the bar or beam used as a sill or threshold; see Swell. Similarly, a rising of the sea is called a swell; cf. G. schwellen, to raise, einen Bach schwellen, to cause a brook to rise by means of a wooden dam across it. y. The connection with Lat. solea, the sole of the foot, is doubtful, as it is not easy to connect this with the Teut. base. ¶ Not to be confused with A. S. syl, a pillar, column, in Ælfred, tr. of Orosius, b. i. c. 1. § 4; this is quite a different word, with a different sense, though possibly connected; it answers to G. saule, a pillar. Der. ground-sill, q. v.

SILLABUB, SYLLABUB, a mixture of wine with milk and sugar. (E. and Scand.) Spelt sillibub in Minsheu, ed. 1627, who de-rives it from swilling bubbles. But the form is corrupt, a better form being sillibouk. 'Sillibouke or sillibub, Laict aigre ;' Sherwood, index to Colgrave. Cotgrave gives: 'Laict aigre, whay; also, a sillibub or merribowke.' Halliwell gives 'sillybout, a sillabub,' as a Lincolnshire word. It is obvious that a corruption from bouk to bub is easy, whereas a change from bub to bouk is phonetically impossible. We may therefore assume sillibouk as the older form, at the same time noting that another name for it is merribouk. Cf. 'merrybouks, a cold posset, Derbyshire;' Halliwell.  $\beta$ . The prov. E. bouk is a well-known word for 'belly;' Mr. Peacock notes bouk as the Lincolnshire form; so that merri-bouk = 'merry belly,' presumably from the exhilarating effects of the wine in the mixture, in contradistinction to small beer or belly-vengeance, as it is commonly termed (Halliwell). Bouk is from Icel. bukr, the belly; see Bulk (2).  $\gamma$ . The meaning of silly-bouk is not certainly known; but, as the word is Northern, we might suppose silly-bouk to be a parallel form to merry-bouk, assigning to silly the sense of 'lean, meagre,' as in Jamieson, or weakly, infirm, as in Brockett. It might then denote the unsubstantial nature of the drink, as regards its sustaining powers. 8. A derivation from swillbouk or swell-bouk is more probable; the loss of the w can be justified by supposing a Scand. origin, as in the curious Icel. sylgr, a drink, a beverage, allied to Icel. sulla, to swill; see Swill. The O. Du. swelbuyck, 'a drie or a windie dropsie,' Hexham, is worth notice; from

All from a Teut. base SALA, SALYA, good, happy, fortunate; Fick, iii. 320. Allied to O. All from  $\checkmark$  SAR, to preserve; see Serve. Der. silli-iy, -ness.

BILT, sediment, sand left by water that has overflowed. (Scand.) M. E. silte, badly spelt eilte. 'Cilte, soonde [sand], Glarsa; 'Prompt. Parv. p. 77. Formed with the pp. suffix -t from the verb sile, to drain, filter, strain. 'And sithere syle it thorowe a hate clathe' = and then strain it through a hot cloth; MS. Lincoln A. i. 17, fol. 281; Halliwell. -Swed. sila, to strain, filter, sil, a filter. Here the l is an addition, as we also find Icel. sia, to filter, Dan. sie, to filter (Dan. si, a filter); words cognate with A. S. sikan, to filter. B. For some account of A.S. sikan, see Leo and Ettmüller; the k is dropped in the compounds distendae, straining out, Matt. xxiii. 24 (Rushworth MS.) and uissionde, oozing out, Ælfred, tr. of Orosius, b. i. c. 7. Thus we see that Swed. sila stands for sik-la, with a lost guttural; so that prov. E. sile, to filter, has a long i.  $\gamma$ . Further, the A.S. sikan, cognate with O. H. G. sikan, G. seiken, is a mere variant of A. S. sigan, Icel. sign, to let drop, let fall, sink; this is a strong verb, from the Teut base SIG, to let drop, equivalent to Aryan  $\gamma$  SIK, to let drop, as in Skt. sick, to sprinkle, discharge, let drop, Gk. lapada, moisture.

SILVAN, SYLVAN, pertaining to woods. (L.) 'All sylvan offsprings round;' Chapman, tr. of Homer, Od. xix. 599. [The spelling with y is false, and due to the habit of spelling Lat. silva with y, in order to derive it from Gk.  $\delta\lambda\eta$ , a wood, with which it is (at most) only cognate.] - Lat. silvanus, belonging to a wood, chieffy used of the wood-god Silvanus. - Lat. silva, a wood. + Gk.  $\delta\lambda\eta$ , a wood. The relationship of the Lat. and Gk. words is doubted by some, and the root is uncertain; see Curtius, i. 466. Der. (from Lat. silva) savage, q.v.

Perhaps named from its whiteness; cf. Lithuan. suidus, bright, Lat. sidus, a star. Der. silver, verb; silver-ing; silver-ling, a small piece of silver, with double dimin. -l-ing (as in duck-l-ing), Isaiah, vii. 23, also in Tyndale's version of Acts, xix. 19, and Coverdale's of Judges, ix. 4, xvi. 5, the A. S. form being sylfring, Gen. xlv. 22; silver-smith; silver-y. Also silver-n, adj., in some MSS. of Wyclif, Acts, xix. 24, A. S. sylfren, Gen. xliv. 2.

SIMILAR, like. (F, -L.) In Minsheu, ed. 1627, and in Cotgrave. -F. similaire, 'similar;' Cot. As if from Lat. similaris\*, extended from simil-is, like, by the suffix -aris. Allied to simul, together, Gk.  $\&\mu a$ , together, and E. same; from the Aryan base SAMA, the same; see Bame. Der. similar-iy, similar-i-ty; also simile, q. v., simili-tude, q. v. SIMILITUDE, a comparison, parable. (F., -L.) M. E. similitude, Chaucer, C. T. 10894; Wyclif, Luke, vii. 4. - F. similitude, 'a similitude;' Cot. - Lat. similitudinem, acc. of similitudo, likeness. -Lat. similis, like; see Similar.

SIMIOUS, monkey-like. (L.) Coined from Lat. simia, an ape. Cf. L. simus, Gk. σιμόs, flat-nosed.

SIMMER, to boil gently. (E.) Formerly also simber (see Richardson) and simper. Halliwell cites: 'Simper, to simmer, East; also 'the creame of simpering milke, Florio, p. 189,' which is wrong as regards the edit. of 1598, and prob. refers to a later edition. 'I symper, as lycour dothe on the fyre byfore it begynneth to boyle;' Palsgrave. A frequentative form, with the usual suffix -er, and with excressent p or b in some authors, from a base SIM, probably imitative of the slight sound of gentle boiling. Cf. Dan. summe, G. summen, Swed. dial. summa, to hum, to buzz; Swed. surra, susa, to buzz, to whistle, purl.

SIMINEL, a kind of rich cake. (F., -L.) See Simmel in Halliwell. M. E. simmel, Prompt. Parv.; simenel, Havelok, 779. - O. F. simenel, bread or cake of fine wheat flour; Roquefort. - Low Lat. siminellus, bread of fine flour; also called simella; Ducange. B. Here

Morris, p. 89, l. 7. -F. simonie, 'simony, the buying or selling of spiritual functions or preferments;' Cot. -Low Lat. simonie; Ducange. Named from Simon Magus (Gk.  $\Sigma(\mu\alpha\sigma)$ ), because he wished to purchase the gift of the Holy Ghost with money; Acts, viii. 18.– Heb. Shim'on, Simon, lit. hearing, obedience; one who hears. -Heb., root shima', he heard. Der. simoni-ac, simoni-ac-al.

SIMOOM, a hot, poisonous wind. (Arab.) See Southey, Thalaba, b. ii, last stanza, and the note. – Arab. samüm, a sultry pestilential wind, which destroys travellers; Rich. Dict. p. 850. So called from its poisonous nature. – Arab. root samma, he poisoned; samm, poisoning; id. p. 847.

SIMPER, to smile sillily or affectedly, to smirk. (Scand.) 'Yond simpering dame;' K. Lear, iv. 6. 120. 'With a made countenance about her mouth, between simpering and smiling; 'Sidney, Arcadia, b. i (R.) Cotgrave explains F. cogvine by 'a begger woman, also a cockney, simperdecockit, nice thing.' We find traces of it in Norweg. semper, fine, smart (Aasen); Dan. dial. semper, simper, 'affected, coy, prudish, esp. of one who requires pressing to eat : as, she is as semper as a bride;' Wedgwood. Also O. Swed. semper, one who affectedly refrains from eating.  $\beta$ . All these are formed (with a suffix -er which appears to be the same as the E. suffix -er of the agent) from a base SIMP, which is a nasalised form of SIP. Without the nasal, we find O. Swed. sipp (also simp), a woman who affectedly refuses to eat (lhre); Swed. sip, adj., finical, prin; Dan. sippe, a woman who is affectedly coy (Molbech). And note particularly Low G. sipp, explained in the Bremen Wörterbuch as a word expressing the gesture of a compressed mouth, and affected pronunciation; a woman who acts thus affectedly is called Jumfer Sipp, Miss Sipp, and they say of her, 'She cannot say sipp.' Also Low G. den Mund sipp trekken, to make a small mouth; De Brunt sitt so sipp, the bride sits so prim. y. This appears to be only a particular use derived from the verb to sip, meaning to take a little drink at a time, hence, to be affected over food, to be prim and coy. See Sip. 8. We find also prov. G. are most likely borrowed from Low German, as the true High G. z answers to E. t. Der. simper, sb.

SIMPLE, single, elementary, clear, guileless, silly. (F., -L.) In early use. M.E. simple, The Bestiary, 1. 790; in O. Eng. Miscellany, ed. Morris. - F. simple, 'the Bestiary, 1. 790; in O. Eng. Miscellany, ed. Morris. - F. simple, 'simple; 'Cot. - Lat. simplicem, acc. of simplex (stem simplic-), simple; lit. See Same and Ply. Der. simple-ness, simpl-y. Also simples, s. pl., simple herbs; whence simpler, simpl-ist, both in Minsheu, ed. 1627. Also simplici-i-ty, Mids. Nt. Dr. i. Hence simplific-i-tion. Also simple-ton, q.v. SIMPLETON, a foolish fellow. (F., -L.) 'A country farmer

SIMPLETON, a foolish fellow.  $(F_{.,-}-L_{.})$  'A country farmer sent his man to look after an ox; the simpleton went hunting up and down;' L'Estrange (Todd's Johnson). Formed with the F. suffx -on (= Lat. acc. -onem) from F. simplet, masc., simplete, fem, a simple person (Littré). Cotgrave only gives the fem. simplette, 'a little, simple wench, one that is apt to believe, and thereby soon deceived.' These are formed from simple, simple, with the dimin. suffix -et or -ette. Thus simple-t-on exhibits a double suffix -t-on, which is very rare; yet there is at least one more example in the old word musk-et-oon, a kind of musket, F. mouspa-et-on. BIN, wickedness, crime, iniquity. (E.) M. E. sinne, synne; pl. synnes, Wyclif, Matt. ix. 2, 5, 6. - A. S. syn, sinn, senn; gen., dat., and acc. synne; Grein, ii. 518. + Du. zonde. + Icel. synd, older form synd. + Dan. and Swed. synd. + G. sunde, O. H. G. suntja, B. Thus the E. sin stands for sind, and the A. S. word sundia. has lost a final d. All from Teut. base SUNDYA, a fem. form; Fick, iii. 326. It is the abstract sb. answering to Lat. soms (stem sonti-), sinful, guilty; and Curtius refers this (along with Icel. samer, true, very, Goth. sunja, the truth, sooth) to the AAS, to be; remarking that 'the connection of son(1)s and sonticus with this root has been recognised by Clemm, and established (Studien, iii. 328), while Bugge (iv. 205) confirms it by Northern analogies. Language regards the guilty man as the man who it was;' Gk. Etym. i. 470. This is a very likely view; cf. Skt. satya (for sant-ya), true, from sant (for as-ant), being; and even in English, the A.S. sindon, syndon, they are, comes near to sind \*, synd \*, of which sin or syn is an abbreviated form. See Sooth. Dar. sin, verb, M. E. sinnen, is an abbreviated form. See SOOLD. Der. sin, verd. M. L. sinnen, but also singen, sungen, sinegen (see P. Plowman, A. ix. 17, B. viii. 22, C. xi. 23), from A. S. syngian, gesyngian, Grein, ii. 519, which forms probably stand for syndian\*, gesyndian\*, being derived from synd\*, orig. form of A.S. syn. Also sin-ful, A.S. synfull (Grein); sin-ful-ly, sin-ful-ness; sin-less, A.S. synleds; sin-less-ly, sin-less-ness; sinn-er, sin-offering. SINCE, after that, from the time that, past, ago. (E.). Since is written for sins, to keep the final s sharp (voiceless); just as we write pence for pens, mice for mys, twice for twies, and the like. Again, sins is an abbreviation of M.E. sithens, also spelt sithence in later English, with the same intention of shewing that the final s was voiceless. Sithence is in Shak. Cor. iii. I. 47; All's Well, i. 3, 124; sithens in Spenser, F. Q. i. 4. 51.  $\beta$ . Next, the word sithen-s arose from the addition of -s or -es (common as an adverbial ending, as in need-s, twi-es, thri-es) to the older form sithen, which was sometimes contracted to sin. We find sipen, Havelok, 399; sithen, Wyclif, Luke, xiii. 7; sin, Chaucer, C. T. 5234, and see numerous y. Lastly, sithen or siben examples in Stratmann, s. v. sibban. is for sippen, the oldest M. E. form, whence were made sipen, sitthen, sithen-es, sithen-s, as well as (by loss of -n or -en) sithe, seppe, sith, and (by contraction) sin or sen. - A. S. sibban, sibbon, sybban, seobban, sioboan, after that, since (very common), Grein, ii. 445. This siooan is a contraction from sid dan, put for sid dam, after that; where bám, that, is the dat. case masc. of the demonstrative pronoun used as a relative, for which see Them, That. The A.S. sid, after, used as a prep., was orig. an adv. with the force of a comparative. We find sit, after, later, both as adj. and adv., Grein, ii. 444. [Not the same word as A.S. sto, journey, time (Grein, ii. 443), which is cognate with Goth. sinth, discussed under Sond.] This A. S. sio is cognate with Goth. seithus, late, whence the adv. seithu, late, Matt. xxvii. 57, John, vi. 16; also with G. seit, O. H. G. sit, after. The G. seit-dem, since, is exactly the A.S. sid-dan; in Gothic we find a somewhat similar compound in the expression ni thana-seiths, no longer, Mark, ix. 8. Other allied words are Icel. senin, slow, late, Lat. se-ro, late ; see Fick, iii. 312.

SINCERE, true, pure, honest, frank. (F., -L.) 'Of a very sincere life; 'Frith's Works, p. 117, last line. -O. F. sincere, syncere, 'sincere;' Cot. Mod. F. sincere. -Lat. sincerus, pure, sincere. 8. The origin of Lat. sincerus is doubtful; perhaps it means 'wholly separated,' and we may take sin- to be the same as in sin-guli, one by one, sim-plex, single-folded, sem-el, once, sim-ul, together, for which see Simple, Same ; whilst -cerus may be from cer-nere, to separate, for which see Discorn. Some connect it with cera, wax; putting sincerus = sine cerá, which is unlikely. Der. sincere-ly; sincer-i-ly, from F. sincerité, 'sincerity,' Cot., from Lat. acc. sinceritatem.

SINCIPUT, the fore-part of the head, from the forehead to the top. (L.) In Phillips, ed. 1706. Used as distinct from occiput, the back part of the head. The lit. sense is 'half-head.' - Lat. sinciput, half a head; contracted from somi-, half; and coput, the head, cognate with E. head. See Semi- and Head. And compare Megrim.

SINDER, the correct spelling of Cinder, q.v. 'Thus all in flames I sinder-like consume;' Gascoigne, Dan Bartholomew; Works, i. 117

SINE, a straight line drawn from one extremity of an arc or sector perpendicular to the radius at the other extremity. (L.) In Phillips, ed. 1706. Englished from Lat. sinus, a bosom, properly a curve, fold, coil, curl, esp. the hanging fold of the upper part of a toga. The use of the word in the math. sense is fanciful, and would better apply to the arc itself. Probably the sine was regarded SINECURE, an ecclesiastical benefice without the cure of souls, salary without work. (L.) One of them is in danger to be made a sine cure; Dryden, Kind Keeper, Act ii. sc. 2. Englished from Lat. sine curá, without cure of souls. - Lat. sine, prep. without, lit. 'if not,' compounded of si, if, and ne, not; and curá, abl. case of cura, cure; see Cure. Der. sinecur-ist, one who holds a sinecure.

SINEW, a tendon, that which joins a muscle to a bone. (E.) M. E. sinew; spelt synewe, Prompl. Parv. - A. S. sinu, seonu, sionu, a sinew; Grein, ii. 439. + Du. zenuw. + Dan. sene. + Swed. sena. + G. sehne; O.H.G. senawa, senewa, senuwa. And cf. Icel. sin, a sinew. pl. sinar.  $\beta$ . The Teut, base is SINWA, a sinew; Fick, iii. 321. The lit. sense is 'a band,' or that which binds; from a root SIN, to bind, appearing (according to Fick) in Lettish sinu, I bind, and in Skt. si, to bind, a verb of the fifth class, making I pers. pres. sinomi, I bind. y. Fick suggests that Skt. snava, a tendon, sinew, is the same word, and stands for sin-áva, the short i being dropped; if so, the A.S. form explains the Sanskrit. But the Skt. snava may be related to E. nerve, snare. Der. sinew, verb, 3 Hen. VI, ii. 6. 91; sinew-y, L. L. L. iv. 3. 308.

SING, to resound, to utter melodious sounds, relate musically or in verse. (E.) , The orig. sense is simply to ring or resound. 'We hear this fearful tempest sing;' Rich. II, ii. 1. 263. M. E. singen, pt. t. sang, song, pl. sungen, pp. sungen, songen; Chaucer, C. T. 268, 1511, 3332. – A. S. singan, pt. t. sang, pl. sungen, pp. sungen; Grein, ii. 452. + Du. zingen, pt. t. zong, pp. gezongen. + Icel. syngja, pt. t. saung, söng, pp. sunginn, + Dan. synge, + Swed. sjunga, + Goth. siggwan (written for singwan). + G. singen.  $\beta$ . All from a base SANGW or SANG; Fick, iii. 316. Prob. an imitative word, like ring, used orig. of the clash of weapons, resonance of metals, and the rush of a missile through the air. Fick connects it with SAG, to say, which may also be right, without interfering with its imitative origin. See Say. Der. sing-er, in place of the A.S. sangere (which would have given a mod. E. songer); see Songstress. Also sing-ing, sing-ing-master, sing-song; singe. And see Song. SINGE, to scorch, burn on the surface. (E.) For senge. M.E. sengen; spelt seengyn, Prompt. Parv.; senge, Chaucer, C. T. 5931. The curious pp. seind occurs, as a contraction for sengid; Chaucer, C. T. 14851. – A. S. sengan, to singe, burn; occurring in the comp. besengan, Ælfred, tr. of Orosius, ii. 8. § 4; A. S. Leechdoms, ed. Cockayne, ii. 184, l. 18. In Matt. xiii. 6, the Lindisfarme MS. has besenced (for besenged), scorched, burnt or dried up. The A.S. sengan stands for sang-ian \*, causal of singan (pt. t. sang), to sing. Thus the lit. sense is 'to make to sing,' with reference to the singing or hissing noise made by singed hair, and the sound given out by a burning log; see Sing. + Du. zengen, to singe, scorch; causal of zingen, to sing. + G. sengen, to singe, scorch, parch, burn; causal of singen, to sing. Cf. Icel. sangr, singed, burnt.

SINGLE, sole, separate, alone. (L.) 'So that our eye be single; Tyndale's Works, p. 75, col. 1. He refers to Matt. vi. 22, where the Vulgate has simples, and Wyclif has simple. - Lat. singulus, single, separate, in late Latin; in classical Latin we have only the pl. singuli, one by one. B. Singuli stands for sin-culi or sim-culi, with double suffix as in homun-cu-lus. The base sim- is the same as in sim-plex, and is allied to E. same ; see Simple, Same. Der. single, verb, L. L. L. v. 1. 85; singl-y; single-ness, Acts, ii. 46; single-heart-ed, single-mind-ed; also single-stick, prob. so called because wielded by one hand only, as distinguished from the old quarter-staff, which was held in both hands. And see singul-ar. [+] sinistr-ous, sinistr-al. SINK, to fall down, descend, be overwhelmed; also, to depress, (E.) We have merged the transitive and intransitive forms in one; as subtending the half-arc or 'curve' cut off by a chord; it being properly, we ought to use sink intransitively, and the trans. form very necessary to distinguish between the half-arc and whole arc, should be sench or senk; cf. drink, drench. 1. M. E. sinken, intrans. SINOPLE.

SINGULAR, single, alone, uncommon, strange. (F., -L.) M.E. singuler; Gower, C. A. iii. 184, l. 11. 'A singuler persone' = an individual, Chaucer, Tale of Melibee, Group B, l. 2626.-F. sin-gulier, 'singular, excellent;' Cot.-Lat. singularis, single, separate. Formed with suffix -aris from singul-i, one by one; see Single. Der. singular-ly; singular-i-ty, from F. singularité, 'singularity, excellence,' Cot., from Lat. acc. singularitatem.

SINISTER, on the left hand, inauspicious, evil. (L.) Not from F., but from Lat., like dexter. Common as an heraldic term. 'Some secret sinister information;' Sir T. More, Works, p. 1447 b. - Lat. sinister, left, on the left hand, inauspicious or ill-omened, as omens on the left hand were supposed to be. ¶ But it must be noted that this is a Greek notion, due to the Greeks turning to the North, and having the West (unlucky quarter) on their left; the true Roman notion was, originally, that sinister meant lucky, because their augurs, turning to the South, had on their left the East. Root uncertain. Der.

sanc, pl. suncon, pp. suncen; Grein, ii. 451.+Du. zinken.+Icel. sokkva (for sonhva), pt. t. sokk (for sonk), pp. sokkinn. + Dan. synke. + Swed. sjunka. + G. sinken. + Goth. sighwan, sigghwan (written for sinkwan, singhwan). β. All from the Teut. base SANKW or SANK; Fick, iii. 318. This is a nasalised form of a base SAK, perhaps corresponding to Aryan  $\sqrt{SAG}$ , to hang down; but this is not very clear. 2. The true trans. form appears in the weak M. E. sencken, not common, and now obsolete. 'Hi bisenckeð us on helle' = they will sink us into hell; O. Eng. Homilies, i. 107, l. 18. - A. S. sencan, to cause to sink ; 'bisenced on sees grund' = caused to sink (drowned) in the bottom of the sea, Matt. xviii. 6. For sancian \*, formed from sanc, pl. t. of sincan, to sink. Cf. Goth. sagehvan, causal form of sigghwan. This verb still exists in Swed. sänka, Dan. sænke, G. senken, to immerse. Der. sink-er. Also sink, sb., a place where refuse water sinks away, but orig. a place into which filth sinks or in which it collects, Cor. i. 1. 126.

SINOPLE, green, in heraldry. (F., -L., -Gk.) English heralds call green vers; the term sinople is rather F. than E. It occurs as early as in Caxton, tr. of Reynard the Fox: 'of gold, of sable, of siluer, of yelow, asure, and cynope, thyse sixe colowrs;' ed. Arber, p. 85. - F. sinople, 'sinople, green colour in blazon;' Cot. - Low Lat. sinople, signifying both reddish and greenish (Littre). - Lat. sinople, a kind of red ochre, used for colouring. - Gk. σινωπίε, also σινωπική, a red earth found in Cappadocia, and imported into Greece from Sinope. - Gk. Σινώπη, Sinope, a port on the S. coast of the Black Sea. SINUS, a bay of the sea, &c. (L.) Phillips, ed. 1706, gives: Sinus... a gulph or great bay of the sea.... In anatomy, sinus is taken for any cavity in or between the vessels of an animal body. In surgery, it is when the beginning of an imposthume or ulcer is narrow, and the bottom large, &c. - Lat. sinus, the fold of a garment, a bay, the bosom. a curve; &c. Root uncertain. Der. sinu-ous; 'a scarfing of silver, that ran sinuously in works over the whole caparison, Chapman, Mask of the Middle Temple, § 5; from F. sinuöux, intricate, crooked, full of hollow turnings, windings, or crinkle-crankles, Cot.; from Lat. sinuosus, winding, full of curves. Hence sinuos-i-iy, from F. sinuosité, a hollow turning or winding; Cot. Also sinu-ate, with a waved margin (botanical); sinu-at-ion; in-sinu-ate, in-sinu-a'-ion. Doublet, sine.

SIP, to sup or drink in small quantities, to taste a liquid. (E.) M. E. sippen, Chaucer, C. T. 5758. It answers to an A. S. syppan*, not found. but equivalent to supian*, a regular formation from sup. stem of the pl. of the pt. t. of supra, to sup; see Sup. The lit. sense would thus be 'to make to swallow,' or 'cause to sup;' whence it would easily acquire its present sense. + O. Du. suppen, 'to sip, to sup, to tast little by little,' Hexham; from O. Du. zuppen, Du. zuppen, to sup. Der. sip, sb., Chaucer, Annelida, 196; sipp-er. And see sipper. SIPHON, a bent tube for drawing off liquids. (F.,  $-L_{.,} - Gk$ .) In Phillips, ed. 1706. - F. sipkon, ' the cock or pipe of a conduit,' &c.; Cot. (He notes its use by Rabelais.) - Lat. siphonem, acc. of sipho, a siphon. - Gk. σίφαν, a small pipe or reed; allied to σιφλόν, hollow.

Perhaps allied to sibilare, to whistle, pipe; see Sibilant. SIPPET, a little sip, a little sop. (E.) Properly, there are two separate words. 1. A little sip. 'And ye wyll gyue me a syppet Of your stale ale;' Skelton, Elinour Rummyng, 367. This is the dimin. of sip; with suffix -et, of F. origin. 2. A little sop, a piece of sopped toast. 'Green goose I you are now in sippets;' Beaum. and Fletcher, Rule A Wife, iv. I, last line. This is the dimin. of sop, with wowl-change and the same dimin cuffix with vowel-change and the same dimin. suffix.

SIR, SIRE, a respectful title of address. (F., - L.) Sire is the older form. M. E. sire, as in 'Sire Athure,' Layamon, 22485.-F. sire, 'sir, or master;' Cot. Formed from Lat. :enior, nom., lit. older; the F. seigneur being due to the accus. seniorem of the same word. It is now well established that the Lat. senior produced an O.F. senre, of which sire is an attenuated form; the same word appears in the curious form sendra in the famous Oaths of Strasburg, A.D. 842; see Bartsch, Chrest. Française, col. 4, l. 17. See Littré, Scheler, and Diez.  $\beta$ . The last remarks that the word is prob. of Picard or Northern origin, since Picard sometimes puts r for ndr or nr, as in terons for tiendrons, tere for tendre.  $\P$  It may be added that this word gave the old French etymologists a great deal of trouble; the word was even written eyre to make it look like the Gk. supros, a lord! The Prov. sira, sire, Span. ser, Ital. ser, are merely borrowed from French; so also Icel. sira; see Sirrah. Doublets, senior, seignior, senior, signor; though these really answer only to the acc, form seniorem. [4] SIREN, a fabulous nymph who, by singing, lured mariners to

pt. t. sank, pp. sunken, sonken. The pt. t. sank is in P. Plowman, B. 6684. But we took the mod. E. word immediately from the Latin. xviii. 67. This is the original and strong verb. - A. S. sincan, pt. t. | Spelt siren, Com. of Errors, iii. 2.47. - Lat. siren. - Gk. osiphy, a nymph on the S. coast of Italy, who enticed seamen by the magic sweetness of her song, and then slew them. At first the sirens were but two in number; Homer. Od. xii. 39, 167. It also means a wild bee, a singing-bird.  $\beta$ . Usually derived from  $\sigma \epsilon_1 \rho t_1$ , a cord, rope, as if they enticed mariners by pulling them; this is rather a bad pun than an etymology. It is more likely that the word is connected with συριγέ, a pipe; and that both σειρ- and συρ- are from the of SWAR. to sound, whence Skt. stri, to sound, Vedic Skt. to praise; so that the sense is 'piper' or 'singer.' Cf. Russ. sviriele, a pipe, reed, G. surren, to hum, buzz, E. swar-m; see Swarm. [+]

SIRLOIN, an inferior spelling of Surloin, q.v. SIRNAME, a corruption of Surname, q.v. SIROCCO, a hot, oppressive wind. (ltal., - Arab.) In Milton, P. L. x. 706. - Ital. sirocco, 'the south-east wind ;' Florio. Cf. Span. siroco. - Arab. shary, the east; Rich. Dict. p. 889. The etymology is well discussed in Devic, Supp. to Littre, who remarks that the introduction of a vowel between r and q, when the Arabic word was borrowed by European languages, presents no difficulty. Or there may have been some confusion with the closely-allied word sharing, rising (said of the sun). The Eastern wind in the Mediterranean is hot and oppressive. - Arab. root sharaga, (the sun) arose; Rich. Dict. p. 889. See Saracen.

SIRRAH, a term of address, used in anger or contempt. (Icel., -F.,-L.) Common in Shak. Temp. v. 287; &c. Schmidt remarks that it is never used in the plural, is used towards comparatively inferior persons, and (when forming part of a soliloguy) is preceded by ak; as 'ak, sirrak; 'As You Like It, iv. 3, 166; 'ak, sirrak, quotk-a,' 2 Hen. IV, v. 3, 17; cf. Romeo, i. 5, 31, 128. Minsheu has: ' Sirra, a contemptuous word, ironically compounded of Sir and a, ha, as much as to say ak, sir, or ah, boy.' Minsheu is not quite right; for, though the word is a mere extension of sir or sire, the form is Icelandic. Levins writes serrha, and translates it by Lat. heus and io. It is also spelt sirrha in Holland, tr. of Pliny, b. xxxv. c. 10 (in a story of Apelles), ed. 1634, p. 538, l. 7 from bottom. – Icel. stra, sirrah, a term of contempt; formerly sir, in a good sense; borrowed from F. in the 13th cent. - F. sire, sir; cf. Prov. sira; see Sir. ¶ Some suggest Irish sirreack, poor, sorry, lean, which has nothing to do with the matter. SIR-REVERENCE, save your reverence. (L.) In Shak. Com. Errors, iii. 2. 93. See Save reverence in Nares, who shews that it was used also in the form save-reverses and save-your-reverses the latter is in Romeo, i. 4. 42. 'This word was considered a saf-ficient apology for anything indecorous;' Nares. A translation of Lat. salvá reverentiá, reverence to you being duly regarded. - Lat. saluá, fem. abl. of saluus, safe; and reverentiá, abl. of reverentia, reverence ; see Safe and Reverence.

SIRUP, another spelling of Syrup, q. v.

SISKIN, a migratory song-bird. (Dan.) Mentioned in a tr. of Buffon, Nat. Hist., London, 1792, ii. 90. The Carduelis spinus; also called aberdevine; also Fringilla spinus. – Dan. sisgen, a siskin. Cf. Swed. siska, a siskin.; Norweg. sisk or sisik (Aasen). The word means 'chirper' or 'piper;' from Swed. dial. sisa, a verb used to express the noise made by the wood-grouse (Rietz). Cf. Du. sisen, to hiss, Lincolnsh. siss, sissle, to hiss (Peacock); Swed. dial. sistre, Swed. syrsa, a cricket; Polish czyż, a canary.

SISTER, a girl born of the same parents with another. (Scand.) M. E. suster, Chaucer, C. T. 873; rarely sister, syster, as in Prompt. Parv., and in Genesis and Exodus, ed. Morris, 766. It is extremely remarkable that the Scand. form sister has supplanted the E. form suster. - Icel. systir; Swed. syster; Dan. söster. + A.S. sueesster, swuster (whence M. E. suster); Grein, ii. 509. + Du. zuster. + Goth. swistar. + G. schwester; O. H. G. suester, swister. + Russ. sestra. B. The Teut. forms are all from the base SWESTAR, Fick, iii. 360. Further related to Lithuan. sesse (gen. sesseres) ; Lat. soror (for older sosor); Skt. svasti. sosor); Skt. swasti. Y. Etymology uncertain; perhaps it means 'she who pleases or consoles;' cf. Skt. swasti, joy, happiness; Max Müller, Essays, i. 324. Der. sister-hood, -like, -ly; sister-in-law. Also cou-sin, q.v.

SIT, to rest on the haunches, rest, perch, brood. (E.) M. E. sitten, pt. t. sat; pl. seten, Chaucer, C. T. 10406 (where Tyrwhitt prints saten); pp. seten, siten, id. 1454 (where Tyrwhitt prints sitten). = A.S. sittan, pt. t. set, pl. seton, pp. seten; Grein, ii.  $454. + Dn. zitten. + Icel. sitja, pt. t. sat, pp. setinn. + Dan. sidde. + Swed. sitta. + Goth. sitan. + G. sitzen; O. Also (from Teut. SAT) set, settle (1); settle (2), in some senses; also seat, dis-seat, un-seat; and see saddle.

SITE, a locality, situation, place where a thing is set down or fixed. (F.,-L.) 'After the sile, north or south ;' Chaucer, On the Astro-labe, pt. ii. c. 17. l. 24. - F. sile, sit. 'Sit, a site, or seat ;' Cot. -Lat. situm, acc. of situs, a site. - Lat. situs, pp. of sinere, to let, suffer, permit, of which an older meaning seems to have been to put, place. Root uncertain ; the form of the root should be SI or SA. The Lat. ponere (= po-sinere) is certainly a derivative of sinere. Der. situ-ate, situ-ation (see below); also the derivatives of ponere, for which see ¶ We frequently find the odd spelling scite. Position.

Plowman, B. xiv. 300, now altered to sixth by analogy with four-th, seven-th, eigh-th, nin-th, ten-th, just as fif-th is altered from A. S. fif-ta. Also (from Lat. sex) sex-agenarian, sex-agesima, sex-ennial, sex-tant, sex-tuple.

SIZAR, a scholar of a college in Cambridge, who pays lower fees than a pensioner or ordinary student. (F., -L.) Spelt sizer in Todd's Johnson. There was formerly a considerable difference in the social rank of a sizar, who once had to perform certain menial offices. At Oxford the corresponding term was servitor, defined by Phillips as 'a poor university scholar that attends others for his maintenance.' Probably one of his duties was to attend to the sizings of others. 'Size is a farthings worth of bread or drink, which scholars in Cambridge have at the buttery, noted with the letter S., as in Oxford with the letter Q. for half a farthing, and Qa. [Quadrans] for a farthing. And whereas they say in Oxford, to battel in the buttery-book, i.e. to set down on their names what they take in bread, drink, butter, cheese, &c., in Cambridge they call it a sizing :' Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. The word size is also in Minsheu, and is a mere abbreviation of assize, i.e. quantity or ration of bread, &c. 'Assise of bread, i.e. setting downe the price and quantity of bread;' Minsheu, ed. 1627. See Assise, and Size (1).

SIZE (1), an allowance or ration of food; hence, generally, magnitude. (F., -L.) 'To scant my sizes,' K. Lear, ii. 4. 178; see Sizar. Size is merely short for assize, M. E. assise, the usual old word for an allowance, or settled portion of bread, &c. doled out for a particular price or given to a dependent. We even find it used, at # very early period, almost as a general word for provisions. 'Whan ther comes marchaundise, With corn, wyn, and steil, othir [or] other assise ; ' K. Alisaunder, 7074. Hence size came to mean dimension, magnitude, &c., as at present; also bulk, as in Merry Wives, iii. 5.

12. For the etymology, see Assize. Der. siz-ar, q. v. [†] SIZE (2), weak glue, a stiffening gluey substance. (ltal., = L.) In Minsheu, ed. 1627. Hence blood-sized, rendered sticky with gore; Two Noble Kinsmen, i. 1. 99; 'o'er-sized with coagulate gore,' Hamlet, ii. 2. 484. Cotgrave has: 'assiste à dorer, size to gild with, gold size.' It is not a F. word, but borrowed, like some other painters' terms, from Italian. - Ital. sisa, 'a kind of syse or glew that painters vse; Florio, ed. 1598. And Ital. sisa is an abbreviation of assisa, 'size that painters vse; also, an assise or manner; also, a liverie, a guise or fashion, an assise or session; ' id. He also gives assisare, 'to sise, to sesse, to assise, to sute well;' and assiso, 'seated, situated.' Assisa is the verbal sb. from assisare, which in its turn is from assiso, pp. of assidere, to situate. The sense is 'that which makes the colours lie flat,' so that, in Florio's phrase, they 'sute well.' The Ital. assidere is from Lat. assidere, to sit at or near. - Lat. ad, near; and sedere, to sit, cognate with E. Sit. We speak of 'making a thing sit,' which is just the idea here required. ¶ Thus tize (2), size (1), and assize are all, really, the same word. See Size (1), and Assize. [†]

SKAIN, SKENE, SKEIN, a dagger, knife. (Irish.) Skain, a crooked sword, or scimetar, used formerly by the Irish;' Halliwell. He cites the expression 'Iryshmen, armed ... with dartes and shaynes' from Hall, Hen. V, fol. 28. 'Carrying his head-peece, his sheare, or pistoll;' Spenser, State of Ireland; Globe ed., p. 631, col. 2. - Irish (and Gael.) sgian, a knife. + W. ysgian, a slicer, scimetar; cf. ysgi, panion in arms, comrade, Romeo, ii. 4. 162; but see Skein. SKATE (1), a large flat fish of the ray family. (Scand., - L.) Spelt scate in Levins, ed. 1570. M. E. scate, Prompt. Parv .- Icel. skata, a skate; Norweg. skata (Aasen). - Lat. squatus, also squatina, a kind of shark, skate. Cf. Irish and Gael. sgat, a skate. ¶ The A. S. sceaddo is perhaps a shad, not a skate. SKATE (2), SCATE, a frame of wood (or iron) with a steel ridge beneath it, for sliding on ice. (Du.) Properly, the word should be skates, with a pl. skateses; the final s has been mistaken for the pl. suffix, and so has dropped off, just as in other words; see Pea, Sherry, Cherry. Spelt scheets in Evelyn's Diary, Dec. 1, 1662; sheates in Pepys' Diary, same date. 'Scate, a sort of pattern, to slide upon ice;' Phillips, ed. 1706. Cotgrave explains O. F. eschasses by 'stilts, or scatches to go on;' here scatches is merely another form of skateses; 'the point in which stilts and skates agree is that they are both contrivances for increasing the length of stride,' Wedgwood. - Du. schaatsen, 'skates,' Sewel; where en is the pl. suffix, so that the word itself is schaats; as in 'schaatsryder, a skates-slider;' Sewel [misprinted schaarsryder by an obvious error]. O. Du. schnetsen, 'skates [with] which they slide upon the yce in Holland;' Hexham, ed. 1658. (Hence also is derived F. échasse, O. F. eschasse, a stilt). β. The etymology of Du. schaatsen is obscure; but as we not unfrequently meet with a substitution of t for k, it is probably from the Low G. schake, a shank, leg, the same word as E. shank, which inserts the nasal sound n; see Shank. Note the Low G. phrase de schaken voort teen, to go swiftly, lit. ' to pull one's shanks out ; ' and A. S. sceacan, scacan, to shake, to go swiftly, to flee; see Shake, Y. If this be right, we have, from from which E. shank is derived. the Teut. base SKAK, to shake, go swiftly, the Low G. schake, a 'swift-goer,' leg, or shank ; whence O. Du. schaetsen (for schaeksen) might have been formed with suffix -s (-sa) and vowel-change. And as to the sense, the words scatches and skates merely mean 'shanks,' i. e. contrivances for lengthening the leg. The Low Lat. scacia, scatia, both meaning a stilt, shew the interchange of c and t, and are borrowed from the Low German. ¶ The Dan. sköite, a skate, is prob. borrowed; the Swed. word is skridsko or skid (see Skid).

SKEIN, SKAIN, a knot of thread or silk. (C.) Generally defined as 'a knot of thread or silk,' where probably 'knot' means a quantity collected together; a skein is a quantity of yarn, folded and doubled together. 'Layde downe a skeyne of threde, And some a skeyne of yarne;' Skelton, Elinor Rumming, 310. M. E. skeyne, Prompt. Parv. A household word of Celtic origin. - Irish sgainne, a flaw, crack, fissure; a skein or clue of thread. Cf. Gael. sgeinnidh, flax or hemp, thread, small twine.  $\beta$ . I think we may explain skein as meaning in the first instance 'a break 'or 'flaw;' whence the meaning might easily be extended to so much yarn as is contained in each piece, from break to break. Irish sgainim, I split, cleave, burst; Gael. sgain, to burst asunder, rend apart. - SKAN, longer form of A SKA, to cut; cf. Skt. khan, to dig, to pierce. O. F. escaigne, 'a skain,' Cot., is of Celtic origin. Den ¶ The Der. (perhaps) shains-mates, companions in winding thread, companions, Romeo, ii. 4. 162; but see Skain. This solution is advocated in Todd's Johnson, which see; and cf. the phrase 'as thick [intimate] as inkle-weavers,' i. c. weavers of tape.

SKELETON, the bony frame-work of an animal. (Gk.) See Trench, Select Glossary. Spelt skeleton, seeleton in Blount's Gloss., ed. 1674. - Gk. oneheror, a dried body, a mummy; neut. of oneheros, dried up, parched. - Gk. enéhle (for onéh-yw), to dry, dry up, parch. Der. skeleton-key.

SKEPTIC, the same as Sceptic, q. v.

SKEPTCH, a rough draught of an object, outline. (Du., = Ital., = CLV In Dhilling of 1706. 'To make a sketck;' Dryden, L.,-Gk.) In Phillips, ed. 1706. 'To make a sketch;' Dryden, Parallel between Painting and Poetry (R.) Not used much earlier. - Du. schets, 'a draught, scheme, model, sketch ;' Sewel. [The E. shetch is a mere corruption of the Du. word, and stands for skets.] The same word as G. skizze, a sketch; which was prob. borrowed from the Dutch, who, as being fond of painting, introduced the term from the Italian. At any rate, both Du. schets and G. skizze are from Ital. schizzo, 'an ingrosement or first rough draught of anything; Florio. = Lat. schedium, an extemporaneous poem, anything hastily made. = Lat. schedium, an extemporaneous poem, anything hastily made. = Lat. schedius, adj., made hastily. = Gk.  $\sigma\chi\epsilon\delta ios$ , sudden, off-hand, on the spur of the moment ; also near, close to. Cf. Gk.  $\sigma\chi\epsilon\delta ios$ , near, hard by, lit. 'holding to.' These words, like  $\sigma\chi\epsilon\sigma s$ , habit, state, oxe-re-sos, retentive, are from the Gk. base oxe-, to hold, appearing in Gk.  $\sigma_{\chi \in ir}$  (=  $\sigma_{\chi} \in e_{ir}$ ), 2 aorist infin. of  $\ell_{\chi \in ir}$ , to hold, and B. Thus scheme and sketch, the in E. sche-me. See Scheme. meanings of which are by no means remote, are from the same root, but by very different paths. Der. sketch, verb ; sketch-y, sketch-i-nes" SKEW, oblique, wry. (O. Low G.) 'To look shew, or a-skew, along; ' Phillips. ' To show, linis oculis spectare; ' Levins, ed. 1570. 'Our service Neglected and look'd lamely on, and shew'd at;' Beaum. and Fletcher, Loyal Subject, A. ii. sc. 1 (Putskie). 'This shew'd-eyed carrion;' id., Wild-goose Chase, iv. 1 (Mirabel). M.E. shewen, to turn aside, slip away, escape; Morte Arthure, ed. Brock, 1563. Of O. Low G. origin; cf. O. Du. schouwen, 'to avoid or to shunne,' also spelt schungen. Hexham : Low G. schouen, schuwen, to avoid. + O. H. G. sciuhen, M. H. G. schiuken, to avoid, get out of the way, G. scheven, to shun, avoid; derived from the adj. appearing as M. H. G. schiech, schich, G. schev, shy, timid. B. Thus skew is really the schiech, schich, G. schen, shy, timid. verb corresponding to the adj. shy; to skew or skue is to shy as a horse, to start aside from, hence, to move obliquely. The allied Icel. phrase d ská suggested the E. askew as an adverb; see Askew; and hence skrue came to be used (in place of the pp. skrue'd) as an adjective.  $\gamma$ . Other closely related forms are seen in Icel. ii skd, adv., askew, skddr. askew, skeifr, askew, oblique; Dan. skiev, oblique, whence skieve, to slope, deviate, swerve; Swed. skef, oblique, whence skefva, to skew, skefva med ögonen, to skew with the eyes, to look asquint; Du. scheef, oblique, G. schief. 8. From the base SKIU. which from & SKU, to move, fly, swerve; cf. Skt. chyu (for original schyn, Benfey), to move, depart, fly, swerve; Goth. shewjan, to go along, Mark, ii. 23. The orig. sense has reference to motion side-ways; see further under Shy, Eschew. Der. a-skew, q. v. Also skew-bald.

SKEWBALD, piebald. (Hybrid; O. Low G. and C.) In Halliwell. It means marked or spotted in a skew or irregular manner. From Skew and Bald, q. v. And cf. pie-bald. SKEWEB, a pin of wood or iron for holding meat together.

(Scand.) In Dryden, tr. of Homer, b. i. l. 633. Skewer is a by-form of prov. E. shiver, a skewer (West); cf. shiver-wood, dogwood, of which skewers are made; Halliwell. And shiver is really an older and better form of shiver, a splinter of wood, dimin. of Icel. shifa, Swed. skifua, a slice, a shive; see Shiver (2). The form skiver exactly corresponds to Dan. and Swed. skifer, a slate; O. Du. scheversteen, 'a slate or a slate-stone,' Hexham; similarly named from its being sliced into thin flakes. Doublet, shiver (2). Der. skewer. verb.

SKID, a contrivance for locking the wheel of a carriage. (Scand.) Halliwell gives: 'skid-pan, the shoe with which the wheel of a car-riage is locked.' Ray has: 'To skid a wheel, rotam sufflaminare, with an iron hook fastned to the axis to keep it from turning round upon the descent of a steep hill; Kent.' The latter sense is merely secondary, and refers to a later contrivance; the orig. skid was a kind of shoe placed under the wheel, and in the first instance made of wood. [The word shid is merely the Scand. form of M.E. schide, a thin piece of wood; see Shide.] - Icel. shid, a billet of wood; also, a kind of snow-shoe; Swed. skid, 'a kind of scate or wooden shoe on which they slide on the ice," Widegren. + A. S. seide, a billet of wood; whence seide-weall, a wall of railings, Wright's Vocab. i. 37, col. 2; note 2. + G. scheit, a log, billet of wood. + Lithuan. skéda, a splint, splinter; derived from skédu, I cleave.  $-\sqrt{SKID}$ , to separate; see Sheath, Shed (1). Closely allied to sheath. A skid forms a schauth for the lower part of the wheel. SKLIFF, a small light boat. (F., -M. H. G.) 'Olauus fied in a litle skiffe;' Hackluyt's Voyages, vol. i. p. 14. And in Minsheu.-F. esquif, 'a skiffe, or little boat,' Cot.-M. H. G. skif, schif, G. schiff, a ship; cognate with E. Ship, q.v. Der. shiff, verb, to cross in a skiff, Two Noble Kinsmen, i. 3, 37. Doublet, ship.

SKILL, discernment, discrimination, tact. (Scand.) M. E. skil. gen. in the sense of 'reason,' Ancren Riwle, p. 204, l. 22; skile, id. p. 306, l. 17.- Icel. skil, a distinction, discernment; cf. skilja, to part, separate, divide, distinguish. + Dan. skiel, a separatioh, boundary, limit; cf. stille, to separate. + Swed. stäl, reason; cf. stilja, to separate.  $\beta$ . From  $\checkmark$  SKAL, to separate, divide, orig. to cleave, as appears by Lithuan. skelti, to cleave. This is from 🖌 SKAR, to shear; see Shear. And see Shell, Scale, Shilling. Der. skilful, M. E. skilfulle, Rob. of Brunne, tr. of Langtoft, p. 311, l. 17; skil-ful-ly, skil-ful-ness; skil-less, Ormulum, 3715; skil-ed, i. e. en-dowed with skill, Rich. III, iv. 4. 116. Also skill, verb, in the phr. it skills not = it makes no difference, Tam. Shrew, iii. 2. 134; from Icel. skilja, to separate, which is frequently used impersonally, with the sense 'it differs.'

SKILLET, a small pot. (F., -L.) In Othello, i. 3. 273. Spelt skellet, Skelton, Elinour Rumming, 250. Halliwell explains it as a small iron or brass pot, with a long handle. - O. F. escuellette, 'a little dish;' Cot. Dimin. of O. F. escuelle, a dish. - Lat. scutella, a salver; dimin. of scutra, scuta, a tray, dish, platter; prob. allied to scutum, a shield. Doublet, scuttle (1). (1) The Suffolk word scherm-ita, fencing, schermire, schermare, to fence, schermo, a defence, scherming a thin brass perforated implement used for skimming arms; also O.F. escarm-ie, answering to Ital. scherm-ita. The squint or leer; 'Phillips, ed. 1706. It seems first to have been used milk (Moor, Nall), perhaps acquired its peculiar sense from confusion chiefly as a verb. 'To shue, or walk skuing, to waddle, to go sideling with the Icel. skilja, to separate; but the sense of 'dish' will suffice. as the orig. skimmer must have been a simple dish. The odd fancy in Phillips, that a skillet is derived from Low Lat. skeletta, a little bell [from Du. schel, a bell], on the ground that skillets are made of bell-metal, is to be rejected. Othello's helmet can hardly have been made of bell-metal, and a skillet is usually of brass or iron.

SKIM, to clear of scum, to pass lightly over a surface. (Scand.) 'Skim milk ;' Mids. Nt. Dr. ii. 1. 36. A variant of scom ; the change of vowel from u to i(y) is precisely what we should expect; but we only find a change of this character in the cognate G. schummen, to skim, from schaum, scum. - Dan. shumme, to skim; from shum, scum; Swed. skumma mjölk, to skim milk, from skum, scum. Note also Irish sgem-im, I skim; from sgeim, foam, scum. See Scum. ¶ We find a similar vowel-change in dint, M. F. dunt; in fill, derived from full ; in list, verb, from lust, sb.; in trim, verb, from A. S. tram; Dor. skimmer ; skim-milk, i. e. skimmed milk. &c.

SKIN, the natural covering of the body, hide, bark, rind. (Scand.) M. E. skin, Chaucer, C. T. 3809; bere-skin or beres skin, a bear-skin, id. 2144. Not an early word; the A.S. scinn is very rare, and borrowed from Norse. - Icel. skinn, a skin; Swed. skinn; Dan. skind. B. Referred by Fick to Teut. type SKENDA, a skin (iii. 331). The Icel. shine may stand for skind, by the assimilation common in that language; so also the Swed. skinn. The d is preserved in G. schinden, to skin, flay, O. H. G. scintan, scindan, sometimes a strong verb, with pt. t. schant, pp. geschunden, shewing that the base takes the form SKAND, which is prob. an extension from  $\sqrt{SKA}$ , to cut. Cf. Skt. chio, to cut. Perhaps allied to shin, q.v. Cf. also W. cen, skin, peel, scales; ysgen, dandriff. Der. skin, verb, Hamlet, iii. 4. 147; skin-deep ; skinn-er ; skin-flint, a miser who would even skin a flint, if possible ; skinn-y, Macb. i. 3. 55 ; skinn-i-ness.

SKINK, to draw or serve out wine. (E.) Obsolete. Shak. has under-skinker, 1 Hen. IV, ii. 4. 26. Dryden has skinker, tr. of Homer, ander-seiner, i rich. 1v, it. 4.20. Dryden has seiner, tr. of homer, b. i. l. 803. The verb is fully explained under Nunchion, q. v. SKIP, to leap lightly, pass over quickly. (C.) M. E. skippen, Chaucer, C. T. 3259; King Alisaunder, 768; pt. t. skipte, P. Plow-man, B. xi. 103. Of Celtic origin. - Irish sgiob, to snatch, found in the pp. sgiobika, snatched away, also used in the sense of 'active;' cf. sgiob, sb., a snatch; also sgobaim, I pluck, pull, whip, bite; Gael. sgiao, to start or move suddenly; to snatch or pull at anything. sgoo, to snatch, pluck, bite, twitch; W. ysgipio, to snatch away, ysgip, a quick snatch, eipio, to snatch, whisk away, cip, a quick pull. [It may be added that the E. word skipper, a master of a ship, is spelt sgioboir in Irish; shewing the likeness in sound between E. skip and Irish sgiob.]  $\beta$ . The above Thus the orig. sense is to snatch, jerk, twitch. words bear a remarkable likeness to Skt. kship [standing for ship], to throw, move quickly, impel, whence hshipra, adj. quick. Cf. also Icel. stoppa, to spin like a top, whence stoppara-kringla, a top, North E. scopperil spinner, a tectotum (Whitby Glossary), named from its skipping about. - & SKAP, to throw; cf. Skt. iskap, to throw;

Fick, i. 234. Dor. skip, sb., skipp-ing-rope. •SKIPPER, the master of a merchant-ship. (Du.) 'In ages pass'd, as the skipper told me, ther grew a fair forrest in that channel where the Texel makes now her bed;' Howell, Famil. Letters, vol. i. let. 5, dated from Amsterdam, April 1, 1617. Thus Howell picked up the word in Holland. - Du. schipper, 'a marriner, a shipper, a saylour, a navigatour;' Hexham. Formed, with suffix -er (= E. -er) of the agent, from Du. schip, cognate with E. Ship, q.v. So also Dan. skipper, from skib; Swed. skeppare. from skepp. SKIRMISH, an irregular fight, contest. (F., -O. H. G.)

Also spelt scrimmage; and even scaramouch is but the Ital. form of the same word. M. E. scarmiske, a slight battle, Chaucer, Troil. ii. 934. v. 1507; whence the verb to scarmisk, Romance of Partenay, 2079. Spelt scarmoge, Spenser, F. Q. ii. 6. 34. - 0. F. escarmoucke, 'a skirmish, bickering; Cot.  $\beta$ . The change of vowel, from scarmist to skirmish, was due to the fact that we already had in our language the related M. E. skirmen, to fence or skirmish; the pt. t. skirmen is from occurs very early, in Layamon, 8406. This M. E. skirmen is from O. F. eskermir (Burguy), later escrimer, 'to fence, or play at fence, also, to lay hard about him;' Cot. - O. H. G. scirman, M. H. G. schirmen, to defend, fight; especially, to defend oneself with a shield. -O. H. G. scirm, schirm, G. schirm, a shield, screen, shelter, guard, defence. y. The etymology of the G. schirm does not seem to defence. be known. It thus appears that the orig. sense of shirmisk is 'to fight behind cover,' hence to take advantage of cover or slight shelter in advancing to fight. 8. Diez and Scheler shew clearly that the F. escarmoucke, Ital. scaramsuccia, are due to O. H. G. sherman, which is a mere variant of scirman. The ending of Ital. scaramuccia is a mere suffix; we find also Ital. scherm-ugio, a skirmish, attempt to explain Ital. scaramuccia from O. H. G. scara, a troop (G. Doutside plank of a piece of timber, when sawn into boards;' Ray, schaar), and O.F. musser, to hide, is quite wrong. Der. skirnush. verb, as above; skirmisk-sr. Doublets, scrimmage, soaramouck. [+] SKIRT, the part of a garment below the waist, edge, border, margin. (Scand.) This is a doublet of shirt, but restricted to the sense of the lower part of the shirt or garment. Spelt skort, Hall's Satires, b. iv. sat. i. 1. 28. M.E. skyrt. 'Skyrt of a garment, Trames;' Prompt. Parv. - Icel. skyrta, a shirt, a kind of kirtle; Swed. skjorta, Dan. skiorte, a shirt. β. The cognate G. schurz has the sense of 'apron;' and special attention was called to the lower part of the shirt by the etymological sense, which signifies 'a short garment;' see Shirt. And see remarks on Kirtle. The general sense of 'edge' comes from that of 'lower edge,' or place where the garment is cut short. Der. shirt, verb, Milton, P. L. v. 282.

SKITTISH, frisking, full of frisks, said of a horse or unsteady person, fickle. (Scatd.) 'Unstaid and shiftish in all motions else;' Tw. Nt. ii. 4. 18. 'Some of theyr shyttyshe condycyons;' Fabyan's Chronicle, an. 1255-6, ed. Ellis, p. 339. Formed from the verb to skit, a Lowland Sc. word, meaning 'to flounce, caper like a skittisk horse,' Jamieson. Of Scand. origin. We find nearly related words in Swed. skutta, to leap, Swed, dial. skutta, skötta, to leap, Swed, dial. skylla, to go a-hunting, to be idle, skylla, to run to and fro; all of which (as Rietz says) are mere derivatives from Swed. skjuta, to shoot. To skit is a secondary verb, of Scand. origin, from the verb to shoot; and means to be full of shootings or quick darts, to jet k or jump about; hence the adj. shittish, full of frisks or capers. See further under Shoot.  $\beta$ . We may also note Swed. skytt, Icel. skyti. skytja, skytta, Dan. skytte, an archer, marksmen (lit. 'a shooter'), whence the verb to skit also means 'to aim at' or reflect upon a person. 'Skit, verb, to reflect on;' E. D. S. Gloss. B. 1; A. D. 1781. This explains the sb. skit, 'an oblique taunt,' Jamieson. Vigfusson notices E. skit with reference to Icel. skiti, skitia, skæting, a scoff, taunt; perhaps these also may be referred to the same prolific Teut. base skut. ¶ The sumame Skeat, M.E. skeet, swift, in King Alisaunder, 5637, Icel. skjötr, swift, fleet, is likewise from Icel. skjöta, to shoot; and is closely related.

SKITTLES, a game in which wooden pins are knocked down by a ball. (Scand.) Formerly keels or kayles or kails; see Kails. Also kettle-pins or skittle-pins. Todd cites: 'When shall our kittle-pins return again into the Grecian skyttals?' Sadler, Rights of the Kingdom, 1649, p. 43. Halliwell gives kettle-pins, skittles. 'The Grecian skyttals' is an invention, evidently suggested by Gk. onvrázy, a stick, staff, from which Sadler probably imagined that skittles was 'de-rived,' in the old-fashioned way of 'deriving' all English words from Latin and Greek. As hittle-pins never came from Greek, there is no reason why it should be expected to 'return' to it. B. From comparison of skittles with kittle-pins, we may infer that the old name was skittle pins, i.e. pins to be knocked down by a skittle or projectile. Skittle is, in fact, a doublet of shuttle, signifying, originally, anything that could be shot or thrown; thus the M. E. schitel meant the bolt of a door. Cf. M. E. schytle, a child's game, Lat. sagitella, Prompt. Parv.; though there is a doubt whether this refers to skittles or to skuttle-cock. Y. Skuttle is the English, but skittle the Scand. form. - Dan. skyttel, a shuttle, Swed. dial. skyttel, sköttel, a shuttle; skuttle-cock. Norweg. skutel, (1) a harpoon, (2) a shuttle; Icel. skutill, an implement shot forth, a harpoon, a bolt or bar of a door .- Icel. skut-, base of pl. of pt. t. of the strong verb skjóta, to shoot, cognate with E. Shoot, q. v. And see Shuttle. Also see Skittish.

SKUE, old spelling of Skew, q. v.

SKULK, the same as Sculk, q. v.

SKULL, SCULL, the bony casing of the brain, the head, cranium. (Scand.) M. E. skulle, sculle, Chancer, C. T. 3933; spelt schulle, Ancren Riwle, p. 296, l. 4; scolle, Rob. of Glouc. p. 16, l. 17, Named from its bowl-like shape; the same word as Lowland Sc. skull, skoll, a bowl to hold liquor, goblet (Jamieson). – Icel. skul, a bowl; Swed. skål, a basin, bowl; Dan. skaal, a bowl, cup. See further under Scale (1). Der. scull (2), q. v.; also skull-cap.

SKUNK, a N. American quadruped. (N. American Indian.) Modern ; imported from N. American. 'Contracted from the Abe-naki seganku;' Webster. Abenaki is a dialect of the Algonquin race of N. American Indians, spoken in Lower Canada and Maine.

SKY, the clouds, the heavens. (Scand.) M. E. skie, skye, in the sense of ' cloud ;' Chaucer, Ho. of Fame, iii. 510. Used in the mod. general sense, King Alisaunder, 318 .- Icel. ský, a cloud; Dan. and Swed. sky, a cloud. Cf. A. S. scúa, scúwa, a shade, Grein, ii. 412; Icel. skuggi, shade, shadow. All from the SKU, to cover; whence also scu-m, show-r, hide, and ob-scu-re; Fick, iii. 337. Cf. Skt. shu, to cover; Lat. ob-scu-rus. Dor. shy-blue, -lark, -light, -rocket, -sail; shy-ward, toward the sky. Also shy-ey, adj., Meas. for Meas. iii. I. 9.

SLAB (1), a thin slip or flat piece of stone or wood. (Scand.) Now gen. used of stone; but formerly also of timber. 'Slab, the North-Country Words, ed. 1691. Also used of pieces of tin; Ray, Account of Preparing Tin. 'Saue slab of thy timber for stable and stie; 'Tusser, Husbandry, sect. 17, st. 35. (E.D.S.) M. E. slab, rare; but we find the expression 'a slab of ire,' i. e. a piece of iron, in Popular Treatises on Science, ed. Wright, p. 135, l. 141. Cf. also Prov. E. slappel, a piece, part, or portion, given as a Sussex word in Ray's South-Country Words. The word is rather Scand. than E., and means 'a smooth piece;' being connected with North E. slape, smooth, which is borrowed from Icel. slepr, slippery. The word (pt. t. slapp), to slip; see Slip. We use the very same idiom when we speak of a slip or thin slip, meaning a slice. This is confirmed by the Norweg. sleip, adj., slippery, smooth; whence sleip, sb., a smooth piece of timber for dragging anything over, chiefly used of a row of pieces of timber laid down as the foundation of a road (Aasen). B. This Norweg. word explains not only slab, but sleeper, well known as a name for a block of wood on which the rails of a railway rest. So named, not from being always asleep, but from forming a slape or smooth foundation. So also the Norfolk slaper, sleeper, the stump of a tree cut off short. M. E. slepir, slippery (Halliwell). The Swed. of a tree cut off short, M. E. slepir, slippery (Halliwell). of a tree cut on short, M. E. suppr, suppr; (railiweii). The Swed. slöpa means a sledge; from its slipping along.  $\gamma$ . We may also note that the O. Du. slippen means 'to teare, or cut in peeces, to slit,' as well as 'to slip;' Hexham. Hence slab = that which is cut smooth, a smooth slip. ¶ Mahn refers us to W. llab, a slip, stripe, stroke, strip, evidently allied to W. llabio, to slap; which does not much help us, and prob. belongs to slap rather than to slip. A slab is an outside plank, because it only need be smooth on one side. [†] SILAB (2), viscous, slimy. (C.) 'Make the gruel thick and slab;' Macb. iv. I. 32. 'Slabby, sloppy, dirty;' Halliwell.-Irish slab, slaib, Gael. slaib, mire, mud left on the strand of a river; Gael. slaibeach, miry. Cf. Icel. slepja, slime. See Slop. SLABBER, to slaver, to let the saliva fall from the mouth, to make wet and dirty. (O. Low G.) The forms slabber, slobber, slubber, are mixed up. Slubber (q. v.) is the Scand. form. Again, we have also the form slaver; this appears to be a modified and, as it were, a more 'genteel' form of slabber. It is best to treat these four forms all together. Shak, has slobbery, wet and foul; Hen. V, iii. 5. 13; also slubber, to sully, Oth. i. 3. 227; slubber, to do carelessly and negligently, Merch. Ven. ii. 8. 39. 'Her milke-pan and creame-pot so slabbered and sost' [dirtied]; Tusser's Husbandry, April, sect. 48, st. 20. (E. D. S.) M. E. slaberen. 'Then come sleuthe al bislabered' = then came Sloth, all be-slabbered; P. Plowman, B. v. 392; where another MS. has byslobred. [Also slaveren; 'His mouthe slavers,' Pricke of Conscience, 784; see Slaver.] Not found in A.S. A frequentative form, with the usual suffix -er, from an infin. slabben. - O. Du. slabben, beslabben, to slaver; een slabbe, or slab-doech, a child's bib, or slavering clout [where doeck = G. tuck, cloth]; Hexham. Hexham also gives stabben, 'to lappe as dogges doe in drinking, to sup, or to licke; with the frequentative slabberen, 'to sup up hot broath.' Low G. slabben, to lap, lick; whence slabbern, beslabbern, to let fall drops in drinking, to slaver; also slubbern, to lap, sip. + G. schlabbern, schlabben, to lap, to slaver, slabber ; schlabberig, slabby, slobbery; cf. schlabbe, the mouth of animals, in vulgar language, as being used for lapping up. Probably allied to Gael. and Irish slaib, mud, mire, Irish slabaire, a dirty person; see Slab (2), Slop.  $\beta$ . The form of the base appears to be SLAB, or SLAP; probably a related form to Aryan LAB, LAP, to lick; see Lap. Cf. prov. E. slap, to eat quickly, lick up food. y. Or it is quite possible that slabber, like slab (1), is related to slip and slop (1). We have distinct traces of two Teut. roots, SLAP, to lick, and SLAP, to slip, which were probably orig. identical. Doublets, slaver, which slip, which were probably orig. identical. Doublets, slaver, which is a Scand. form; so also is slubber. SILACK, lax, loose. (E.) M.E. slak. 'With slake paas' = with slow pace; Chaucer, C. T. 2903 (Group A, 2901). - A. S. sleac, slack, slow, Grein, ii. 455. 'Lentus, vel piger, sleac; 'Wright's Vocab. i. 49, col. 2; 74, col. 1. + Icel. slakr, slack; whence slakna, to slacken, become slack. + Swed. and Dan. slak. + Provincial G. schlack, slack (Flügel); M. H. G. slach, O. H. G. slak. β. All from a Teut. base SLAKA, slack; Fick, iii. 358. This answers to an Arvan base SLAG SARG which appears to be represented by an Aryan base SLAG, SARG, which appears to be represented by Skt. srij, to let flow, let loose, connected with sri, to flow, from  $\checkmark$  SAR, to flow; see further under Slag. It seems probable that the Aryan base LAG, loose, is the same as SLAG with the loss of words. Der. slack-ly, slack-ness. Also slack, verb, Oth. iv. 3. 88, spelt slacke in Palsgrave; of which slake is a doublet; see Slake. Also slack-en, properly 'to become slack,' though often used in the trans. sense; the M.E. form is sleknen (Stratmann). Also slag, q. v., slug, q. v., slouch, q. v. SLAG, the dross of metal, scoria. (Swed.)

is Swedish. - Swed. slagg, dross, dross of metal, slag; järnslagg, dross of iron; slaggvarp, a heap of dross and cinders (Widegren). So called from its flowing over when the metal is fused; cf. Icel. slagna, to flow over, be spilt, slag, slagi, wet, dampess, water penetrating walls. B. Slag is a weakened form of slack, loose, orig. fluid; see Slack. This is clearly shewn by G. scklacke, 'dross, slacks, sediment,' Flügel; schlackenofen, furnace to melt scoria; schlackenstein, stone coming from scoria (i.e. slag); schlackern, to trickle, rain heavily, to become slack; schlack, slack, drossy, sloppy. So also Low G. slakke, scoria; Bremen Wörterbuch. Even in the Prompt. Parv., we find M. E. slag synonymous with slak, in the sense of muddy. Y. This helps out the derivation of slack, as it shews that the orig. sense of slack was 'fluid;' cf. Skt. srij, to let loose, let flow, effuse, shed. See Slack. Der. slagg-y. SLAKE, to slacken, quench, mix with water. (E.) To slake or slack lime is to put water to it, and so disintegrate or loosen it. Quick-lime, taken as it leaves the kiln, and thrown into a proper quantity of water, splits with noise, puffs up, produces a large dis-engagement of vapour, and falls into a thick paste;' Weale, Dict. of Terms in Architecture, &c. Slake is an older spelling than slack, of which it is a doublet. M. E. slaken, to render slack, to slake. 'His wrappe for to slake;' Will. of Palerne, 728; spelt slakie, Laya-mon, 23345, later text. = A. S. sleacian, to grow slack or remiss; found in the comp. deleacian, Elfric's Homilies, i. 610, 1. 16, ii. 98, 1. 15. - A. S. sleac, slack; see Slack.  $\beta$ . There is also a M. E. slekken, to quench, extinguish, Prompt. Parv. This is from A. S. sleccan, Grein, ii. 455, which is nothing but a doublet of sleacian, with vowel-change consequent on the loss of i + Icel. slökva, to slake; which, however, was orig. a strong verb, with pp. slokinn; still it is from the same Teut. base SLAK. + Swed. slücka, to quench, put out, allay, slack ; from slak, slack.

SLAM, to shut with violence and noise. (Scand.) Orig. a Northern word. 'To slam one, to beat or cuff one strenuously, to push violently; he slamm'd to the door; North; 'Gross's Provincial Glossary, ed. 1790. – Norweg. slemba, to smack, bang, bang or slam a door quickly; also spelt slemma, slamra; Swed. dial. slämma, to slam, strike or push hastily, to slam a door (Aasen, Rietz); Icel. slamra, slambra, to slam. Cf. Swed. slamra, to prate, chatter, jingle; slammer, a clank, noise. To slam is to strike smartly, and is closely related to Slap; see Slap. Note prov. E. slam-bang, slap-bang, violently; Halliwell.

SLANDER, scandal, calumny, false report, defamation. (F., -L., -Gk.) A doublet of scandal, as will appear. M. E. sclandre, Chaucer, C. T. 8598; sclaundre, Wyclif, Matt. xiii. 41; K. Alisaunder, 757. -O. F. esclandre, 'a slander;' Cot. The oldest F. form was scandele, whence proceeded the forms escandele, escandle, escandre (Burguy); and lastly, by insertion of l, the form esclandre. - Lat. scandalum; see Scandal. Der. slander, verb, M. E. sclaundren, Wyclif, Matt. xiii. 21; slander-er; slander-ous, from O. F. esclandreux (Cot.); slander-ous-ly. Doublet, scandal.

SLANG, low, vulgar language, a colloquial and familiar mode of expression. (Scand.) Not in early use. In the Slang Dict., the earliest known instance is given as follows. 'Let proper nurses be assigned, to take care of these babes of grace [young thieves] ... The master who teaches them should be a man well versed in the cant language commonly called the slang patter, in which they should by all means excel; 'Jonathan Wild's Advice to his Successor; London, J. Scott, 1758. The same book gives: 'Slang, to cheat, abuse in foul language; Slarg-whanger, a long-winded speaker; also, out on the slang, to travel with a hawker's licence; slang, a watchchain, a travelling-show.<sup>4</sup> The word is derived from slang, pt. t. of the verb to sling, i. e. to throw, cast. This is shewn by Wedgwood, following Aasen; E. Müller thinks it unsatisfactory, but actual reference to Aasen's Norwegian Dict. ought to settle the matter; I cite the most material statements.  $\beta$ . We find, for example, Norweg. sleng, a slinging, also an invention, device, stratagem; also, a little addition, or burthen of a song, in verse and melody; ettersleng (lit. after-slang), a burthen at the end of a verse of a ballad; slenga, to dangle (which shews why slang sometimes means a watch-chain); slengja, to sling, cast, slengja kjeften (lit. to sling the jaw), to use abusive language, to slang; slengjenamn, a nickname (lit. a slangname), also, a name that has no just reason ; slengjeord (lit. a slangword), an insulting word or allusion, a new word that has no just reason, or, as Aasen puts it, fornærmelige Ord eller Hentydninger, nye Ord som ikke have pogen right Grund. It is difficult to see how a membered; 'Cot. 'Esclecké, dismembred, rent, or torn from; id. more exact and happy definition of a slang word could be given. He also gives esclické, dismembered; and esclicher is the same as The use of slang in the sense 'to cheat' reminds us of Icel. slyngr, esclicer, whence E. slice; see Slice.
